In the evening I went to another similar meeting, still more excited, and prolonged till late. A new leader had charge of this, and seemed to control it by the motion of his hand, which he kept constantly in action, like the baton of an orchestra-leader—waving, beckoning, and pointing. It was accompanied by such appeals as this: "There's a poor trembling soul down in the body of the house there. Rise up! Confess Christ!" And up got the boy or girl, as the case might be, and poured out a stream of set phrases, sometimes with feeling, sometimes without; and often with a storm of "Amen's" from all around. "It doesn't take long to rise and say that you love God. There's time for a hundred of you to do it! Only submit!" This was the burden of the song. "Submit! Give it up!" This meant in all cases, "Get up and talk!" The possibility of any silent communion with God; that there could be any self-consecration not proclaimed instantly on the housetop—this seemed an utterly rejected and exploded theory. A more entire extinction and disappearance of all that impressed even unbelievers, in Friends' Meeting, I cannot imagine. And I had only the melancholy consolation of discovering afterwards, in private conversation, that many of the most honored Friends were impressed precisely as I was by the exhibition, but felt themselves helpless in withstanding the current. "We are taking up" (said one of these) "the poorest parts of Methodism, just as the Methodists are laying them down." "It was a scene" (said another) "that would have disgusted John Wesley."

T. W. H.

In answer to inquiries concerning the late "Index troubles," we must refer to the advertisement of "The Inside History of the Index Association," published on another page. It is our wish to print nothing more on the subject, and we have no time to write private letters about it; but whoever wants to know the painful story will find it in this pamphlet.

The "Rip Van Winkle" of Mr. Morse, referred to elsewhere by Rev. John W. Chadwick in an extract we quote from the Liberal Christian, is an artistic work of real and striking merit, which transports the imagination into a world made permanently enchanting by the genius of Washington Irving and Joseph Jefferson. It is enclosed in a handsome frame about eighteen by twenty-four inches, and makes a charming ornament for the parlor or study wall. The price is $15.00. Address S. H. Morse, 25 Bromfield Street, Boston.

Party politics are likely to receive a staggering illustration in this State this fall. Butler has set his will upon being Governor. Grant backs him now as he did two years ago. But the Republican press is now, as it was then, bitterly opposed. How "anti-Butler" journals can give him the least support under any circumstances is a moral mystery. But for all the opposition they can this year muster, he is likely to receive the republican nomination. The adverse opinion of Sumner and Wilson would have no effect, were it given. Sumner is out of the traces entirely, and Wilson's influence has tapered down to an imperceptible point. Butler's confidence in his ability to take the nomination this time is amply justified. But will he be elected at the polls? Will the press that has dealt out to him such unmerciful justice tame down and advise the people to swallow the dose? And if it does, will the honest, intelligent voting population fall into party lines and "vote the straight ticket"? It is hard to believe that the sober-minded, virtuously disposed citizens of the Bay State will do this thing.

I don't know that it matters very much (to come down to hard pan) who the particular man we are to call "governor" may chance to be. All governors have this to discredit them: they are as "matter out of place." My interest in the affair centres in noting the demoralizing effects of party politics, and it is doubtful if there can be any other. For the sake of having "a government," individuals are enticed from their loyalty to themselves, and thus is treason enthroned in its worst form in the very citadel of our humanity. "Don't stand out on your private conviction. 'For populi, vox Dei!'" The sum of truth in this old motto is twisted all out of it.

Well, we shall see. My own suspicion is that, if Butler is put on the course, the Democratic and Liberal organizations will take advantage of the situation and pronounce for a man who will enlist also a sufficient number of the better class of the Republicans to elect him, permitting the "Essex District" to confine Butler to Congress.

I WISH TO COPY the closing page of an exceedingly interesting article by Ruskin, published in the Contemporary Review, entitled Home, and its Economics.

"No man ever became, or can become, largely rich merely by labor and economy. All large fortunes (putting treasure-trove and gambling out of consideration) are founded either on occupation of land, usury, or taxation of labor. Whether openly or occultly, the landlord, money-lender, and capital employer gather into their possession a certain quantity of the means of existence which other people produce by the labor of their hands. The effect of this impost upon the condition of life of the tenant, borrower, and workman, is the first point to be studied,—the results, that is to say, of the mode in which Captain Roland fills his purse.

"Secondly, we have to study effects of the mode in which Captain Roland empties his purse. The landlord, usurer, or labor-master does not and cannot himself consume all the means of life he collects. He gives them to other persons, whom he employs for his own behoof—growers of champagne; jockeys; footmen; jewellers; builders; painters; musicians, and the like. The diversion of the labor of these persons from the production of food to the production of articles of luxury is very frequently, and at the present day very grievously, a cause of famine. But when the luxuries are produced, it becomes a quite separate question who is to have them, and whether the landlord and capitalist are entirely to monopolize the music, the painting, the architecture, the land-service, the horse-service, and the sparkling champagne of the world.

"And it is generally in these days becoming manifest to the tenants, borrowers, and laborers, that instead of paying these large sums into the hands of the landlords, lenders, and employers, for them to purchase music, painting, etc. with, the tenants, borrowers, and workers had better buy a little music and painting for themselves; that, for instance, instead of the capitalist employer's paying three hundred pounds for a full length portrait of himself, in the attitude of investing his capital, the united workmen had better themselves pay the three hundred pounds into the hands of the ingenious artist for a painting, in the antiquated manner of Leonardo or Raphael, of some one more religiously or historically interesting to them; and place it where they can always see it. And again, instead of paying three hundred pounds to the obliging landlord for him to buy a box at the opera with, whence to study the refinements of music and dancing, the tenants are beginning to think that they may as well keep their seats to themselves, and therewith pay some Wandering Willie to fiddle at their own doors, or bid some gray-haired minstrel "Tune, to please a peasant's ear,

The harp a king had loved to hear."

"And similarly the dwellers in the hut of the field and the garret of the city are beginning to think that, instead of paying half-a-crown for the loan of half a fire-place, they had better keep their half-crown in their pockets till they can buy a whole one.

"These are the views which are gaining ground among the poor; and it is certainly vain to endeavor to repress them by equivocations. They are founded on eternal laws; and although their recognition will long be refused, and their promulgation, resisted as it will be, partly by force, partly by falsehood, can only be through incalculable confusion and misery, recognized they must be eventually; and with these three ultimate results: that the usurer's trade will be abolished utterly; that the employer will be paid justly for his superintendence of the cultivation of land when he is able to direct it wisely; that both he, and the employer of mechanical labor, will be recognized as beloved masters, if they deserve love, and as noble guides when they are capable of giving discreet guidance; but neither will be permitted to establish themselves any more as ceaseless conduits through which the strength and riches of their native land are to be poured into the cup of the formation of its capital."

I SEE THAT MR. TOWNE has signified his purpose in the columns of the Christian Union to "stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free." But as this quotation in his mouth does not refer to "Jesus of Nazareth," must not the readers of Mr. Beecher's paper either be the innocent victims of a delusion, or, like others of us, extremely puzzled?

THE CHRISTIAN REGISTER this week is largely devoted to the commencement exercises of the Cambridge Divinity School. I notice Mr. Lowe's address to the Alumni, in which he discusses what it is that goes into the making of a true and successful Christian minister. But there is Collyer, who appears to have had about as much success as any. Ask him. He will point with satisfaction to his "horseshoe." Since Unitarianism professedly has no "body of doctrine" to teach, why is not a good secular education as good an outfit as a young man need have? Knowledge—all he can muster. And then, if he have a knack at knowing the world, he can minister to some purpose. Mr. Lowe proposes that the students shall go, during vacations, and learn the art of pastoral duties from some settled pastor. But won't it be humdrum and routine? Native wit, if the man have it, will save him with his "flock." There is no substitute—I speak in behalf of those who have yet to endure clerical ministrations, and hope for the day when the people will no longer "flock" as sheep to a shepherd.

I PERCEIVE THAT one of the graduates said, "Other men say beautiful things; Jesus lived beautiful things." The remark is not new; but how utterly without foundation! Jesus is not honored by this wholesale slander of the rest of mankind. Thousands of souls, I doubt not, have lived and died whose lives were as beautiful as his. What's the use of worshipping one man so blindly! If God has had but one well-to-do moral son in this world's whole history, it would seem as though there must be some taint in the original blood for which he was responsible. Let us think better things.

I SEE THAT at some meeting of the week Dr. Hedge and William Gannett had some discussion as to the comparative value of the terms "Christianity" and "religion." Dr. Hedge thought that religion was a partiality, but Christianity embraced a good deal outside—was identical with humanity. Gannett thought the word religion alone was broader, deeper, and truer. It is not easy to see the force of Dr. Hedge's remark, when we know that Christianity names a sect, and religion is a common term among all people. But Christian people will insist that their private cup holds more than the ocean.

THIS MORNING Mr. Alger gave his farewell discourse. He retires from the Music Hall Society, and will, as I judge from his remarks, hereafter devote himself to studies and the literature of those questions that may be classed more specifically under the head of Social Science. His discourse indicated this direction. He said: "Looking into the past, we see the race divided into five classes, kings, priests, warriors, distributors and producers, and everywhere we behold the first two using the second two to oppose the fifth, and prevent them from having their due share of rank in the social polity." How this state of things might be changed and an equitable, harmonious social state be inaugurated, was ably portrayed. The attendance was large, and very appreciative.

THIS HAS BEEN a "farewell" day generally with the churches—vacation begins, and preachers and people are remanded to the ministrations of Nature. A happy release. Dr. Bartol is reported as bringing his work to an end for vacation with fitting words. I quote a sentence or two: "One seer answering the message from heaven in his inmost soul is worth more than all your synods and conventions. Be strong in yourself, and no great name shall have the disposal of you." "I answer the ridicule of the sceptic by pointing to the overflowing beauty of the world. That beauty inspires faith. There wouldn't have been so much of us if there wasn't to be more. So go on with courage and faith. Noble action is the passion of our being. Fresh experience is immortality."

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but hereafter no space will be spared to Errata.

N. B.—Articles for this department should be SHORT, and written only on one side of the sheet.

N. B.—Illegibly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.

N. B.—No responsibility will be assumed for returned manuscripts.

FREE RELIGION AND FREE TRADE.

EDITOR OF INDEX:—

In your issue of March 8, you say: "The increasing audacity of the Catholics of this country is well illustrated in the attempt to exempt certain Catholic books from United States duties. It is inconceivable that the request shall be granted. Yet stranger things of the kind have happened, especially in New York. Let the Committee on Ways and Means be watched closely."

Please reconsider the position you here take, if indeed you are the unbiased champion of freedom. Why not admit all books free? If the Catholics can get their books admitted free, perhaps the Protestants will bestir themselves to get their religious books also admitted free. Then others will move, until by and by we shall have justice for all. Is it a reason for refusing justice to a part that we cannot leave it for all?

Think you Free Religion can thrive exceptionally, where freedom in other matters pertaining to the individual is not tolerated?

The national tariff is a burden. It is a tax of the most exorbitant proportions, levied for other purposes than national revenue. I do not ask that THE INDEX discuss the question; but in the name of freedom I protest that the advocate of Free Religion is committed not to oppose freedom of trade.

Being a Free Religionist, I am also a FREE TRADER.

MILWAUKEE, March 10, 1873.

[The wrong we deprecated was the partiality of exempting Catholic books from duty while Protestant books had to pay it. The State should know no distinction of creed, and permit none in the execution of the laws. As to the relative merits of the Protective and Free Trade policies, no question was raised, and neither side was endorsed. The fact is that, while our instincts incline us to favor freedom in trade as in everything else, we are patiently waiting for wisdom enough to pick our way through the tangled jungle of this vexed subject.—ED.]

EVIL INFLUENCE OF ORTHODOXY UPON MIND AND MORALS.

BY CHARLES K. WHITTLE.

I said in a former article that young people who accept the doctrines and adopt the mode of life recommended in Orthodox prayer-meetings usually suffer, as the natural consequence thereof, a complete arrest of mental development, and also a deterioration or perversion of both the mental and the moral faculties. To understand how this comes about, we must look at the new influences brought to bear upon them, and the new ideas by which their speech and action must thenceforth be directed, under penalty of being stigmatized as "backsliders."

1. Arrest of mental development. When a man gets possessed of the belief that every human being, by God's express appointment, is exposed to a future of everlasting and remediless misery, and that the one great, predominant duty of life is to get oneself and others saved from that doom, of course all other human interests are dwarfed to his eye in comparison with this. Assuming that the peril in question is real, and that every soul not "saved" after his fashion is forever "lost," and that such salvation is worth to each soul more than all other values combined, of course his mind leans towards disregard of all other values. The care of the soul being, in his view, "the one thing needful," the body and the mind seem to him trivial in comparison. He must guard both of these against vicious indulgences, since such indulgences are pernicious to the soul also; but, having learned in the prayer-meeting that his body is "vile" and his mind "carnal," he looks upon both these as sources of temptation and danger; and as for deliberately applying his time to the cultivation and development of either body or mind, he would regard this as a waste of time, a selfish neglect of the one great business of urging his fellow-men to attend to their souls. Moreover, he finds that the leaders of the prayer-meeting credit each other with spirituality and saintliness in exact proportion to their exclusive attention to the business of saving souls. He who spends his whole time and thought in this direction is there esteemed the best man, and that course is praised and honored as the wisest course. The reading of the Bible is there described as not only better than any other reading, but as advantageously taking the place of all other reading. In the dialect of those people, all things not spiritual (that is to say, not bearing on the soul's salvation) are classed together as "worldly." Art, science, and literature come under this denunciation; and though nothing is said directly against them, the new convert is made to feel that his choice of "the better part" must so occupy him with affairs of the other world as to leave neither leisure nor interest for mere mental cultivation. His mind, in fact, is usually sacrificed to the supposed interests of his soul, and gains no further exercise or development of its special powers after he has yielded to the prayer-meeting influence.

But arrest of mental development is not the only evil in these cases. There is likely to be also—

2. Deterioration or perversion of the intellectual faculties. The things which the young convert is required to believe are often flagrantly inconsistent with reason, and often contradictory one to the other. If he is bold enough to allege such discrepancy as a reason for doubting, or to point out that sundry of their propositions are unproved as well as improbable, he is taken to task for his reliance on "carnal reason." But in fact such difficulties are rarely expressed and rarely felt. The young convert is usually uncultured and pliable. Believing his prayer-meeting teachers to be good, he jumps to the conclusion that they are wise also; and so he promptly accepts as true whatever they tell him. Or, if any particular point of doubt rises in his mind, they assure him that this is a suggestion of "the great adversary of souls," and let him know that doubt, in matters of this sort, is to be rebuked and repelled, instead of being solved, in a "worldly" way, by examination of evidence. Thus he comes to feel a confident reliance on their assertion as proof of the matter in question; and on the beliefs and usages of the church to which they introduce him as uncontestedly sound and correct. And thus his mind, getting less and less accustomed to decide matters by reason and evidence, and more and more accustomed to rely on assertion and tradition, loses the power of appreciating argument and evidence. A very brief conversation with a young proselyte of this class will usually show that he can neither understand the position of the intelligent person who answers him, nor understand the fact that he is answered. But this perversion of mind through the prayer-meeting influence is usually accompanied by another mischievous result, namely—

3. Deterioration or perversion of some of the moral faculties. Take, for instance, truthfulness, in regard to which I will cite the testimony of two Orthodox witnesses.

The Advocate quotes the following from Prof. Blackie's Essay on Christianity:—

"It has become almost a proverb that the zeal of Christian theologians stands divorced, not only from charity, but from truth; of all disputants, men of the clerical profession are the most unfair—so much so that among churchmen as a class candor is scarcely a commendable virtue."

Commenting upon this extract, The Advance says (Dec. 19):—

"There is too much truth in the accusation. Certainly each side in a religious controversy usually retires disgusted with the lack of candor and fairness in the other. This is owing to a dogmatical self-conceit, which arrogates all truth, learning, and logic to one's own side; to a failure to place oneself sympathetically in the position of the opponent, so as to see things with his eyes; to an ambition to get the seeming victory, involving the temptation to evade the real merits of arguments in cases of difficulty; to a limitation of thought and reading to one's own side of a question; and to a restriction of acquaintance and fellowship to those who are of the same opinion."

The habit of uncandid and untruthful speech, acknowledged by these writers to be common among clergymen, is notoriously common among those imitators of clergymen who direct and conduct the prayer-meetings of the Young Men's Christian Associations. The reasons cited by The Advance in explanation of this unfortunate fact, are, no doubt, real, and largely operative; but the vice in question is mainly attributable to another cause, which that editor does not mention; namely, the fact that the creed which those people receive as true, and which, from the time of its acceptance, is largely effective in moulding their characters, itself contains propositions and assumptions not only untrue, but contrary to reason, dishonoring to God, and often contradictory to each other. For instance, those people are required, as church-members, to believe—

That God is benevolent and beneficent, willing good and doing good continually; and yet that, before creating mankind, he made a lake of fire for the purpose of eternally torturing millions of men and women:

That God is unchangeable; and yet that he will hate and torment hereafter, because they are impenitent sinners, millions of those whom he loved and sought to benefit in this world, in spite of their being impenitent sinners:

That, though God allots blessing and welfare to the repentant and returning sinner here, and wishes every man to turn from evil to good, he has nevertheless appointed that, after this mortal life, no benefit shall follow either repentance or reformation, and that then he will favor and encourage well-doing no more than evil-doing:

That all the contents of the Bible were so dictated and inspired by God as to be infallibly correct; and thus that the imperfections and follies ascribed to him in some parts of that book are just as much his word, and just as much to be believed, as the perfection ascribed to him in other portions of the same book:

That God is just, inflexibly allotting to every sin its deserved punishment; but that his justice is of a character so very peculiar as often to punish the innocent instead of the guilty, to commute the eternal punishment threatened to the latter for a temporary punishment inflicted on the former, and then, in consequence of this arrangement, to accept the guilty as innocent: finally, to cite but one more of these self-contradictions—

That God, writing upon stone his command to the Jews to keep holy the seventh day of the week, by that same expression commanded Christians (who were not to come into existence for centuries after) to keep holy the first day of the week; though he also inspired Paul, the first writer of instruction to the Christians, to discourage all observance of days as holy, and to declare the followers of Jesus "delivered" from such observances.

Here are a few out of many of the absurdities accepted as unquestionable religious truth by the prayer-meeting people. If now we consider what distortion of the intellect and of the moral sense a rational being must suffer before he can accept this mass of self-contradiction and absurdity as true, and defend it as true and right, and urge the belief of it upon other rational beings as a religious duty, we shall see how naturally those persons fail to distinguish the difference between truth and falsehood—how easily they fall into the habit of telling untruths—how venial a lie will seem to them when they utter it in defence of some doctrine or usage of their church—and how hopeless it must be to expect their assent to any counter-proposition merely because it is true. Their "sacred volume" represents God himself as, on one occasion, approving and enjoining a falsehood, and that not for any beneficial purpose, but to lure a human being to destruction. What wonder that believers in this story should themselves take the liberty of violating the truth for an object so important as the upbuilding of their church or their sect? True, they profess to believe that "all liars shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone," but the fact that even this does not deter them from frauds of the pious sort is only one more self-contradiction in a system largely composed of self-contradictions.

When we recognize the fact that the dialect, creed, and usages of a church are such as to confuse and mislead, to some extent, both the mental and moral perceptions of him who becomes pious under its guidance, we shall cease to wonder at the well-known habit of the ministers and members of that class of churches to make false pretences in support of the faith they are trying to propagate. It is a peculiarity of the case we are considering, that, in a vast majority of their utterances of untruth, they are quite unconscious of that fact. Mis-education has done for them, in the particular department in question, just what entire want of education has done for the ignorant rustic. They are unable to distinguish things that differ; unable to distinguish that contradictory statements cannot both be true; unable to see that evidence is necessary to produce conviction; unable to see that a text is not an argument; unable to see why the affirmation of their minister, or of some unknown writer in their tract or scripture, should not prevail against the common sense, the personal experience, the very eyesight of him whom they are exhorting. In short, they cannot realize that any statement favorable to their side can be false, or that anything impugning their doctrine can be true.

Is it needful, for the welfare of the community, as well as of the individuals led astray by this Orthodox faith, that some effort be made to expose the false pretences on which that proselytism is founded?

Refuse to despair. Amelioration is eternally possible, if you will but hope for it, and, hoping, work.

RIP VAN WINKLE.

From Rome to Rip Van Winkle is not so great a leap as might at first appear if we consider what those wise in myths have written for our instruction about Rip's family connections. These wise men would connect him with all the famous sleepers of antiquity—with Siegfried, and Charlemagne, and Olger Danske slumbering in Avalon, and Frederick Barbarossa, and the enchanter Merlin, and St. John at Ephesus, and the Seven Sleepers there, and many others. And all of these stories, say the wise mythologists, took their rise in men's attempts to represent in some impressive manner the long sleep of the earth in winter. It is very likely, but the best meaning of a myth is very seldom its first one. The long nap of Rip Van Winkle in the Catskill gorge is far more significant than any Nature-myth in which it may have had its origin. Its interest is human. It is full of the pathos of change, and of that swift forgetting which consoles the busy generations for their most grievous losses. It rebukes our self-sufficiency and brings home to us our social needs and obligations.

But whither tends all this? To a Rip Van Winkle which Mr. S. H. Morse, formerly editor of the Rationalist, has lately modelled in alto relievo. While Mr. Morse was connected with the Rationalist, he gave himself to that enterprise with a singular devotion and unselfishness; but he knew all the time that, should he fail to make it go, there was ready for him "a garden of refreshment" into which he might retire and find abundant consolation. It would be well if every earnest man were able to transfer his enthusiasm from one pursuit to another with such good results as has already signalized Mr. Morse's return to his original calling. For, without any disparagement of his editorial work upon the Rationalist, it is evident that modelling rather than editing is the —Hant and the main region of his song."

His Rip Van Winkle was, perhaps, suggested to him by the long naps the Rationalist sometimes enjoyed between its periods of activity, and it may prophesy that that somewhat intermittent periodical is even now "not dead, but sleeping."

In the meantime it is a most original and genuine creation. Rip is represented in the first moment he has struggled to his feet. He is looking dreadfully dazed. He has not oriented himself, it is very evident, but he is trying very hard to do so. Sleep has not suspended for him the ordinary processes of life. He has grown old faster in his sleep than men do who wake every morning. His flesh has dried up till he is almost a skeleton. You can see how stiff he is, how his joints ache, and his limbs totter, and his thin hands tremble. Mr. Morse, unlike Mr. Rogers, in his Rip Van Winkle groups, has not attempted to model at the same time Rip Van Winkle and Mr. Jefferson. He had realized what Mr. Jefferson himself must realize, that no artifice can enable this great actor to look the part of Rip after his resurrection with entire satisfaction. He would have to "take off his flesh and sit in his bones" in order to do this; and Mr. Jefferson's flesh is not of the sort that can be put on and off at pleasure. Nor can Mr. Jefferson eliminate at will the merry twinkle of his eye. And we can fancy that when he sees this "counterfeit presentment" of his hero he must do some injury to the Tenth Commandment by coveting his rival's leanness and transparency.

Mr. Morse has also made an excellent head of Mr. Greeley, and he is now engaged upon a head of Theodore Parker.—Rev. J. W. Chadwick, of Brooklyn, N. Y.

A LUDICROUS but disgraceful story is told of the president and directors of one of the Paris railways. While the Board was sitting, a shareholder of the company abruptly entered and gave an account of a terrible accident which had taken place on the line, and which was sure to cost the company a good round sum of money in the way of damages and of compensation to passengers. As he proceeded in his narration, director after director slipped out, one by one, and long before he reached its close he was left alone with the president, who, engrossed by the recital he had heard, did not perceive the departure of his directors. When he did notice it, he struck his forehead with his hand, jumped up and ran off, leaving the shareholder still talking. The shareholder was amazed, but he soon discovered the explanation of this strange conduct—they had all run to the Stock Exchange to sell their shares before the intelligence was made public.

SMITH.—The following characteristic letter from Rev. J. Hyatt Smith appears in the Church Union:—

"I lately received a letter of four pages, without signature, earnestly calling upon myself and all my pulpit brethren to discard all form and ceremony of ordinances, and seek and receive the baptism of the Holy Ghost and of fire. The unknown writer lashed the preachers fearfully for not being perfectly holy. Now this letter was rolled up inside of a pamphlet, bound so closely with a long wrapper that the written matter could by no probability be seen, and on the outside package was a one-cent stamp. Four mortal pages, of 'doctrine, reproof, and conviction in righteousness,' and Uncle Sam cheated out of two cents. I think that ought to be denominated tuppenny holiness."

Says John Ruskin: "If a man spends lavishly in his library you call him mad, a bibliomane. But you never call one a horse-maniac, though men ruin themselves every day by their horses; and you do not hear of men ruining themselves by their books. We talk of food for the mind as of food for the body. Now a good book contains such food inexhaustibly; it is provision for life, and for the best part of us; yet how long most people would look at the best book before they would give the price of a large turbot for it—though there have been men who have pitched their stomachs and bared their backs to buy a book, whose libraries were cheaper in the end than most men's dinners are."

Advertisements.

GENERAL NOTICE.

On Aug. 8, 1872, I contracted for the two best advertising pages of THE INDEX for the current year. "No advertisements objectionable to the editor to be taken." For terms apply to ANNA K. BUTTS, 30 Dey St., New York. No improper advertisements, no advertisements of patent medicines, and no advertisements known to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be hereafter admitted into THE INDEX. All advertisements accepted before this date will be allowed to run their time.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

Toledo, O., June 21, 1873.

THE INSIDE HISTORY

OF THE INDEX ASSOCIATION.

By FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

This is a handsomely printed pamphlet of 54 pages, containing the full explanation of the recent "INDEX troubles" which was submitted to the stockholders of the Index Association at their Second Annual Meeting, June 7, 1873. It is hoped that every one who has read the statements of the other side will in fairness read this also. PRICE (postpaid), 25 cents. Address the Author, Toledo, Ohio.

A CHEAP OFFER!

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.

The INDEX TRACT NO. 7, "Compulsory Education," is out of print, and therefore orders for it cannot be filled at present. But it is intended to reprint it before long, and all parties ordering a COMPLETE SET will be furnished with it without extra charge as soon as reprinted.

Address THE INDEX, Toledo, Ohio.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF LEADING INDEX WRITERS,

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address THE INDEX, Toledo, Ohio.

Free Religious Association.

The Report in pamphlet form, of the ANNUAL MEETING of the FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION for 1872, can be obtained by applying to the Secretary, WM. J. POTTER, NEW BEDFORD, MASS. It contains essays by John W. Chadwick, on "LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA," by C. D. B. Mills, on the question, "DOES RELIGION REPRESENT A PERMANENT SENTIMENT OF THE HUMAN MIND, OR IS IT A PERISHABLE SUPERSTITION?" and by O. B. Frothingham, on "THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY," together with the Report of the Executive Committee, and addresses and remarks by Dr. Bartol, A. B. Alcott, Lucetta Mott, Celia Burleigh, Horace Steaver, Alexander Loe, and others. Price, 35 cents; in packages of five or more, 25 cents each.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

THE GOLDEN AGE.

Every Man and Woman who reads THE INDEX ought to read also The Golden Age, edited by Theodore Tilton. After fifteen years of experience on The Independent, Mr. Tilton two years ago established, in the interest of more liberal thought, The Golden Age, a journal of his own, to which he gives his constant and toll-free attention, and which has already won a national reputation for honesty, courage, and brilliancy. Probably no other journal in America is so widely quoted from, both by those who agree, and those who disagree with it. Unlike any other weekly paper, either in America or England, it is unique and original in appearance, in thought, and in style. It abounds in brief and spicy paragraphs—shot like swift arrows hitting the mark. Its editorial discussions cover the whole field of current topics—whether religious, political, literary, social, or industrial. It does not pretend, or seek, or want to agree with its readers, or with the general popular opinion. It indulges in the luxury of free speech. It has a mind of its own, and is sometimes wrong—which makes it all the more novel, for it is almost the only journal of the American press that is ever wrong. But whether right or wrong, it is always good natured, and ever believes in fair play. It would be happy to make the acquaintance of the readers of THE INDEX; and though The Golden Age is in no sense a rival to THE INDEX, and does not undertake to do such a work as Mr. Abbot has embarked upon, yet it is fighting a battle for free thought in religion, and free speech in politics, and is conscientiously dedicated to the promotion of whatever helps forward the Emancipation of the Human Mind. Anybody who subscribes for Mr. Tilton's paper will get something to think about, and more than the money's worth. Enclose three dollars in an envelope (before you forget it), and address

THE GOLDEN AGE, Box 2348, New York City.

Cultured Free Thought.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society. It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAHAM W. STEVENS and many able and distinguished contributors.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister and every thinking church member should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly expositor of the difference between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Professor MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America,—that such a journal should have been started and powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany, though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your Index with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX, Drawer 35, Toledo, Ohio.

NEW INDEX TRACT.

A STUDY OF RELIGION: THE NAME AND THE THING.

BY F. E. ABBOT.

As the entire edition of THE INDEX for March 8 (No. 167), with the exception of a small number reserved for binding, has been already exhausted, the above lecture can only be supplied in tract form. See advertisement of INDEX TRACTS. PRICE 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address THE INDEX, Toledo, Ohio.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. ABBOT, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," in a letter to the Editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used:—"I have now 'Truths for the Times,' and I send them from my inmost heart; and I agree almost every word." New Edition. PRICE 10 cents; 12 copies, $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. PRICE—5 cents; 12 copies, 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. PRICE—10 cents; 12 copies, $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. PRICE—10 cents; 12 copies, $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. ARTHUR B. BRADFORD, opposes the Proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. PRICE—10 cents; 12 copies, $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by PARKER PILLSBURY, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. PRICE—10 cents; 12 copies, $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. PRICE—5 cents; 12 copies, 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. PRICE—5 cents; 12 copies, 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. PRICE—5 cents; 12 copies, 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. ABBOT. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from 5 to 100 copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. PRICE—10 cents; 12 copies, $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two Essays by FRANCIS W. NEWMAN and F. E. ABBOT. PRICE—10 cents; 12 copies, $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. NEWMAN, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. PRICE—5 cents; 12 copies, 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and The Thing, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. PRICE—10 cents; 12 copies, $1.00.

Address THE INDEX, Drawer 35, Toledo, Ohio.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO., BANKERS,
LEROY, MINNESOTA.

Money loaned on short time, or for a term of years, on unimproved improved farms, at 12 per cent. per annum, interest net. Interest payable annually. All expenses for abstract of title and recording mortgage paid by borrower. We collect and remit to any part of the U. S. free of charge.

REFERENCES—First National Bank, McGregor, Iowa; Gilchrist & Co., McGregor, Iowa; First National Bank, Austin, Minnesota; City National Bank, Chicago, Illinois; Allen, Stevens, & Co., New York City.

Write for a Price List to J. H. Johnston.

Breech-Loading Shot Guns, $40 to $400. Double Shot Guns, $8 to $150. Single Guns, $3 to $20. Rifles, $8 to $75. Revolvers, $6 to $25. Pistols, $1 to $25. Gun Material, Fishing Tackle, &c. Large discounts to dealers or clubs. Army Guns, Revolvers, etc., bought or traded for. Goods sent by express C. O. D. to be examined before paid for.

Theodore Parker's Writings.

A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion..... $1.50
Sermons of THEISM, ATHEISM, and Popular Theology..... 1.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings..... 1.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional sermons, 2 vols..... 3.00
The above sent post paid on receipt of price by

BUTTS & DINSMORE.

36 DEY STREET, NEW YORK.

JESUS OF NAZARETH;

OR,

A TRUE HISTORY

OF THE

Man Called Jesus Christ,

EMBRACING

HIS PARENTAGE, HIS YOUTH, HIS ORIGINAL DOCTRINES AND WORKS, HIS CAREER AS A PUBLIC TEACHER AND PHYSICIAN OF THE PEOPLE.

ALSO,

THE NATURE OF THE GREAT CONSPIRACY AGAINST HIM; WITH ALL THE INCIDENTS OF HIS TRAGIC DEATH, GIVEN ON SPIRITUAL AUTHORITY, FROM SPIRITS WHO WERE CONTEMPORARY MORTALS TO JESUS WHILE ON THE EARTH.

By Paul and Judas,

THROUGH

Alexander Smyth, Medium,

of Philadelphia, by the spirits taking possession of him about one hour in every twenty-four, usurping all his powers, giving a continued series of well connected scenes, presenting scenery, characters, and personages, dialogue and actions in their regular order and succession, embracing all the most important personages and the incidents which occurred during the sojourn of Jesus while upon earth. There was probably no book ever written in which such perfect life-pictures occur; every city and country village, every river, brook, and mountain, and scenery in general, is so vividly portrayed that an actual journey through the country could hardly be more interesting. The characters in this unexampled drama are so faithfully portrayed, that as you are introduced to each in turn, you seem well acquainted and delighted with your company, and the many points of interest you are called to visit. The book is replete with interest from beginning to end, and had already passed through several editions when the plates were entirely destroyed in the Great Fire. Since then we have had a very great demand for the work from our subscribers and the trade. The edition about to be issued will be far superior in mechanical appearance to any of its predecessors and we shall print a large edition to enable us to supply standing orders and all new demands.

18 mo. 35¢; paper, cloth bound.

Price $2.00; postage free.

*For sale wholesale and retail by the Publishers, the Religio-Philosophical Publishing House, Adams St. & 5th Av., Chicago.

N. B.—When you order, say you saw this in THE INDEX.

NOTICE.

The following numbers of THE INDEX for 1873 can no longer be supplied on orders: Nos. 167 (March 8), 169 (March 22), 170 (March 29), 171 (April 5).

$5 to $20 per day! Agents Wanted! All classes of working people, of either sex, young or old, make more money at work for us in their spare moments of all the time than in anything else. Particulars Free. Address G. Stinson & Co., Portland, Me.

LOUIS BLACK,

194 Jefferson Ave., Detroit, Michigan.
MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN,
INVENTOR AND PROPRIETOR OF
Black's Patent Interchangeable Spectacles, and Self-Adjusting Spring Eye Glasses. Importer of all kinds of Optical Goods. The best Spectacles fitted to the Eyesight so as to improve it.

ARITHMETICAL CARDS & GAMES
Cards and Games entirely new. With them the drill of mental arithmetic is made a mere pastime; besides innumerable games can be played. Just the thing for Teachers and Pupils for instruction, and for everybody for amusement. Agents wanted everywhere. One pack, with book of instructions, sent postpaid on receipt of fifty cents. Address P. H. BATESON, Proprietor, Drawer 90, Toledo, Ohio.

HISTORIC AMERICANS,

BY THEODORE PARKER.

Edited by O. B. Frothingham.

Containing lectures treating of FRANKLIN, WASHINGTON, ADAMS, and JEFFERSON. Of these lectures three were delivered as addresses, and made no slight sensation from the boldness and freedom with which the speaker treated his subjects, and the original and novel views which he took of their characters. Will be mailed post paid on receipt of the price, $1.50, by

BUTTS & DINSMORE,

36 DEY STREET, NEW YORK.

A GREAT OFFER.—Horace Waters & Son, 451 Broadway, New York, will dispose of 100 Pianos and Organs of first-class makers, including WATERS', at extremely low prices for cash, or part cash, and balance in small monthly payments. New 7-Octave first-class Pianos, all modern improvements, for $275 cash. Organs, $55 to $75. Double-Reed Organs, $100; 4-stop, $110; 6-stop, $125 and upward. WATERS' CONCERTO PIANO ORGANS are the most beautiful in style and perfect in tone ever made. The Concerto Stop is the best ever placed in any Organ. It is produced by a third set of reeds peculiarly voiced, the effect of which is most charming and soul-stirring, while its imitation of the human voice is superb. Terms liberal. Illustrated Catalogues mailed for one stamp. A liberal discount to Ministers, Churches, Sunday-Schools, Lodges, etc.

AGENTS WANTED.NOW READY!

THE

BOUND INDEX FOR 1872

(VOLUME III).

In addition to many other attractions, it contains the full course of free religious lectures delivered at Horticultural Hall, Boston, last winter, which were published in full nowhere else. A limited number only for sale. Price $2.50, and 75 cents postage. If postage is not prepaid by the purchaser, the volume will be sent by express at his expense. Address

THE INDEX,DRAWER 38,
TOLEDO, OHIO.The Emerson Method,
For Reed Organs.

Lessons, Scales, Studies, Voluntaries, Interludes, Songs, Quartets, and large Collection of Choice Organ Music. By L. O. Emerson and W. S. B. Matthews, gentlemen of high musical culture, who have produced a thorough excellent method, filled with music which cannot fail to make the progress of the learner most agreeable, as it is sure to be rapid. Price $2.50.

THE RIVER OF LIFE.

The Publishers announce the near completion of this charming: SABBATH SCHOOLS, SONG BOOK, to which more than Thirty of the very best writers and composers contribute. It will appear in July. Send orders early. Specimen pages free. Retail price, 45 cts.

The Organ at Home,
FOR REED ORGANS $2.50

Clarke's Dollar Instructor for Reed Organs.

Clarke's " " for Piano-forte.

Clarke's " " " Violin.

Dealers will bear in mind these popular books, which will sell with the best.

O. Ditson & Co., C. H. Ditson & Co.,
BOSTON, 711 BROADWAY, N. Y.LADIES!

THE
Eureka Machine Twist,
50 and 100 Yard Spools,
AND THE
Eureka Button-Hole Twist,
10 Yard Spools,
ARE THE BEST IN USE.
For Sale at all Trimming Stores.

Iron in the Blood

THE PERUVIAN SYRUP is a Tonic and Enriches the Blood, Tones up the System, Builds up the Broken-down, Cures Female Complaints, Dropsy, Debility, Haemorrhages, Dyspepsia, &c. Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy from weak, sickly, suffering creatures, to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial. Caution.—Be sure you get the right article. See that "Peruvian Syrup" is blown in the glass. Pamphlet free. Send for one, SETH W. FOWLE & SONS, Proprietors, Boston, Mass. For sale by druggists generally.

New Edition Nearly Ready.

MR. FROTHINGHAM'S NEW BOOK.

The Religion of Humanity,

By O. B. Frothingham.

Contents.

- I. Tendencies.
- II. God.
- III. Bible.
- IV. Christ.
- V. Atonement.
- VI. Power of Moral Inspiration.
- VII. Providence.
- VIII. Moral Ideal.
- IX. Immortality.
- X. Education of Conscience.
- XI. The Soul of Good in Evil.
- XII. The Soul of Truth in Error.

One vol., 12 mo. $1.50. Sent free on receipt of price. Address the Publishers.

BUTTS & DINSMORE,

36 DEY STREET, NEW YORK.

THE LIBERAL CHRISTIAN

FOR 1873.

HENRY W. BELLOWES, EDITOR.

Will endeavor, not only to maintain its present reputation as

ONE OF THE BEST WEEKLY JOURNALS OF

Religion, Literature, Science, and Art

Now published in this country, but to fulfill, more completely than ever before, its part of the work of supplying the American people with the

Best Thought on the Highest and Most Vital Themes

Of both general and particular interest, in all departments of human life. To this end, special arrangements have been entered into with able writers and correspondents to keep the columns of THE LIBERAL CHRISTIAN supplied, during the year 1873, with a pleasant variety of good articles and letters on the most stirring topics of the day.

The several departments of the paper—FELLOWSHIP OF THE SPIRIT; OUR CONTRIBUTORS; SIGNS OF THE TIMES; ORIGINAL AND SELECTED ARTICLES; OUR LITERARY RECORD; EDITORIAL; THE WEEK'S NEWS—ECCLIASTICAL, POLITICAL, AND GENERAL; CORRESPONDENCE; OUR BOYS' AND GIRLS; OUR SCIENTIFIC RECORD; THE FIVE ARTS—will each receive the special care of the gentlemen and ladies under whose charge they have been placed; and no effort will be spared to provide A WEEKLY FAMILY JOURNAL Worthy of the Patronage of American Homes, and of the Enlightened Nineteenth Century.

Price of Subscription, $3 per Annum, Payable in Advance.

Upon application by letter, specimen copies will always be sent free.

Jos. N. Hallock, Publisher,

P. O. Box 6605.

114 Nassau Street, New York City.

THE COMMONWEALTH

LIFE GENTLEMEN of standing and ability (either in professional or mercantile pursuits) are desired in all parts of the country to represent this reliable company. Our plans of Insurance are simple, popular, and honest.
Address 178 Broadway,
NEW YORK.

Are You Going to Paint?

THEN USE

The Averill Chemical Paint.

THE HANDIEST AND MOST DURABLE EXTERIOR PAINT.

Costs Less, and will Outwear any other.

Gen. G. R. Smith, Sudalla, Mo., writes:—"Two coats of 'Averill' covered better, and looked finer, than three coats of Lead and Oil, with a coat of varnish thereon. I would not again use Lead and Oil were it given to me."

Levi Shaw, Trustee of the Society of Quakers, Mt. Lebanon, writes:—"The buildings painted with the Averill White Paint some three and a half years since, I have examined, and found it retaining the gloss nearly if not quite as well as when first put on. It is the best paint we have ever used."

Sample card of beautiful colors, and recommendations from owners of the finest residences in the country, furnished free, by the
AVERILL CHEMICAL PAINT CO.,
32 Burling Slip, New York, and 115 Superior St., Cleveland, O.

CHRISTIANITY

AND

MATERIALISM;

The Doctrines of the one and the Principles of the other Presented in Contrast.

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Under the above heading this talented and popular exponent of Materialism presents an exhaustive review of the fundamental doctrines of Christianity, and opposes thereto in brilliant contrast the basic principles of Materialism. The author's name is to the many who have heard his lectures, a sufficient guarantee of the excellence of this work.

The Publishers, desirous of obtaining for an important publication a wide circulation, have fixed the price per copy at 15 cents; discounts on large orders. It is printed on tinted paper, in pamphlet form, and bound handsomely in covers. The edition, being limited, buyers will do well to send in their orders at once. Address the Publishers.

BUTTS & DINSMORE,36 DEY STREET,
New York.

THE

BOSTON INVESTIGATOR,

THE OLDEST REFORM JOURNAL IN THE UNITED STATES.

Is published

EVERY WEDNESDAY,

At

84 WASHINGTON STREET,

BOSTON, MASS.,

By JOSEPH P. MEREDITH.

EDITED BY HORACE BEAVER.

Price, $3.50 per annum. Single Copies, seven Cents. Specimen Copies sent, on receipt of Two-Cent Stamp to pay the postage.

The "INVESTIGATOR" is devoted to the liberal cause in Religion; or, in other words, to all Universal Mental Liberty. Independent of discussions, discarding superstitious theories of what power can be known, it devotes its columns to things of this world alone, and leaves the next, if there be one, to those who have entered the unknown shores. Believing that it is the duty of mortals to work for the interests of this world, it confines itself to things of this life on earth. It has just entered its 43d year, and asks for a support from those who are fond of sound, reasoning, good reading, a useful Family Journal, of science, art, and a useful Family Journal, for six months or one year; and if you are not satisfied with the way the "INVESTIGATOR" is conducted, we won't ask you to continue with us any longer.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Five Cents.

VOLUME 4.

TOLEDO, OHIO, JULY 19, 1873.

WHOLE No. 186.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; J. Gallion, Vice President; P. A. Loifgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries; E. K. Thomas, Treasurer.
BOSTON, MASS.—J. S. Rogers, President; A. Davis, J. W. Smith, Vice Presidents; J. P. Titcomb, O. A. Bacon, Secretaries; J. A. J. Wilcox, Treasurer; R. H. Ranney, F. W. Clarke, H. B. Storer, Executive Committee.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; J. E. Curtis, Vice President; A. Giddings, Secretary; E. Wood, Treasurer; L. B. Crowell, M. A. Giddings, D. D. Holmes, Executive Committee.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; L. Magenhimer, Vice President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary; Wm. Fischer, Treasurer; A. C. Stowe, C. G. Hoadly, R. P. Thomson, Executive Committee.
TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; B. Bruner, Vice President; E. B. Beckley, Secretary; A. W. Harbaugh, Treasurer; L. Westover, J. Bruner, W. Krause, Executive Committee.
VIRKLAND, N. J.—L. Bristol, President; E. Dickinson, E. B. Duffey, Vice Presidents; E. G. Blaisdell, Secretary; S. M. Clute, Treasurer; John Gage, D. A. Russell, E. G. Blaisdell, D. L. Butler, A. C. Bristol, P. T. W. Campbell, Executive Committee.
JUNCTIONVILLE, ILL.—J. W. Eastman, President; Jos. H. Smith, Vice President; Isaac Baldwin, Treasurer; S. L. Easley, Secretary.
OLATHE, KAN.—S. E. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary; J. N. Haws, B. Panoost, P. Julien, Executive Committee.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary; J. W. Watkins, Treasurer.

Seeming and Being.

BY A. W. STEVENS.

Of all the sad experiences that belong to our lot as mortals, I know of none so pathetic as the coming to find how many and great illusions there are in this life. It would seem that we begin in an illusion, and pass on from one to another throughout our whole career. That which appears to be is what we are first struck with—only later we learn what really is.

By nature we are all romancers. The youth in us makes us expectant and hopeful, and capable of fine and happy delusions. Slowly, and led by the hand of experience, we approach realities, and discover the nude fact. Before this, we dwell in the midst of shows—pleased with everything, understanding nothing. Like the spider, we spin out of our own conceits the gossamer web that makes us see all things through a glamour and beautiful mist. Experience discovers us in this childhood home of fascination, approaches us wandering idle and happy in the midst of this Vanity Fair, where all things please and nothing instructs, and with her, stern but kind, we go forth and learn to know things as they are.

What a romancer the boy is! His imagination is an airy steed, on which he ardently rides through all the fields of fiction. When the fit of fancy is fairly on him, nothing is beyond his power to create: he stands a magician surrounded by obedient materials. At a wave of his wand the old house of his youth becomes a castle, whence he a knight sallies forth to deeds of high enterprise; or, if his turn be nautical, the house is a broad-canvassed and gally-penned ship, in which he sails over all seas to all lands, and fights many a naval battle for love and fame and victory. How ruthless yet inevitable is the fate which recalls him from such delightful enterprises in the realms of imagination, to the common, prosaic duties of school and work!

The infant, even, in the mother's arms is an earlier victim of illusion. It thinks the whole world a pretty toy for it to play with. According to its childish fancy, nothing therein is opposing to it, nothing unyielding, nothing harmful; but all is bright and beautiful and agreeable. As soon as it can prattle, it asks for anything and everything to be given it, expecting nothing to be refused; no, not even the high-hung moon and stars, thinking them to be as nigh and as apprehensible as the readiest plaything to its hand. The first lesson that child really learns is that it is deceived by appearances. All is not bright and beautiful and agreeable; much is here that is opposing and unyielding and even awful. It must be careful what it touches, what it tastes, how it appropriates things; it must learn that some things are far, others near, some are attainable, others not; it must learn, indeed, that everything has a show and a substance, an appearance and a reality, and that it is necessary to distinguish between these. In learning this, the child comes upon some hard lessons, and struggles with them not always with emotions of pleasure and satisfaction.

The youth sits in his native door-yard, and looks out to that point where the horizon line touches the blue crest of a range of hills: beyond that boundary which his daily vision has become so acquainted with lies (he says to himself) the great, grand world he has never seen—lies life; active, eventful life. How attractive it is to him; how full of glad and surprising and glorious experiences he feels it must be; how many prizes it holds out, and no blanks can he permit himself to discover among them! There is fame, there is wealth, there is power, there is happiness: how he longs to hasten away from home, and cross those hindering hills that stand between him and greatness, and find place and opportunity and success in the wide, inviting world! He departs at last from his native circumstances; the horizon line lifts and goes before him, and leads him to the great, grand world. Does he find it so great and grand as he expected? That was his illusion, which now he wakes from. Success is not easy he finds; so hard is it that it eludes him most times—he grasps at a prize and gets a blank. The world buffets him; life is stern to him. He discovers that there is not much spare sympathy among men; that somehow every man looks out for himself, and expects every one else to do so. His illusion vanishes. Or, perhaps, it shifts to the other quarter now, and rests upon the old home. In his present disappointment he remembers that; and all the attractions that once allured him to the world now turn and dwell over the spot where he was cradled. Thenceforward for a long time his heart thinks of the past, not of the future; and memory is the sweet consoler of present disappointment.

The young man who stands on the threshold of his manhood, who is nearly ready to pass through the open door which admits him into business, into politics, into society, into friendship, into marriage, dwells in an illusion concerning every one of these. He looks on them from without, not from within. He sees them as they appear, not as they really are. In every one of them, whatever else he meets, he meets with some disappointment; not one of them is exactly what he imagined it to be. In business he finds rivalries and competitions, more than he expected, which quickly push him aside unless he resists with a determined and persistent effort. He finds long days and years of hard work and close confinement, and many embarrassments, losses, failures, which crush him down unless there is in him a brave, hopeful heart, and an indomitable purpose. He thought, in his innocence, that the conduct of business was always honorable; that all business men were honest. He learns by experience that this is not so. He learns that the commercial standard of morality is several degrees lower than the absolute standard; and that many things are countenanced in business, and considered quite indispensable, which are not strictly just and right. His illusion gradually breaks away; he comes to understand the business world just as it is. The reality disappoints him not a little; but he gradually looks for comfort in conformity, and lets down his own standard to that of the commercial community. Or, if the divine spark will not so easily be quenched, he summons his own virtue, resists the demoralizing tendencies of business relations, and strives to reform them by administering his own affairs in rigid consistency with principle.

The young man's illusion about politics is that they open up to him an honorable pathway to fame, and give him a noble opportunity to serve his country in the spirit of patriotism, and likewise to serve himself. He looks from a distance at the councils of his nation, and thinks that there he might learn to understand and practise statesmanship; there he might earn a just distinction in the championship of the rights of the people, and of every cause that goes to make a people happy, prosperous, and good. It takes not long for this illusion to be dispelled. When he comes to understand politics as they really are, he finds that instead of being a school of statesmanship, they are a school of partizanship; instead of teaching him how he can serve his country, they show him how he can enrich and empower himself at his country's expense; instead of setting before him honorable ambitions and noble uses, they lead him to personal jealousies, petty intrigues, and wholesale corruption. Again he seeks to be consoled by adapting himself to circumstances, and allowing his banner of individual purity to be dragged down by his associations. Or, again, spurred by the high spirit within, he bears that banner aloft still higher, with the determination to make his dream a reality, his illusion a fact.

In his isolation and obscurity, the young man looks towards what is called society, with great desire; for he thinks could he enter its charmed circle, he should find real refinement, true culture, perfect manners, pure companionship. Those who are in this circle he envies, and sighs for the time when it shall open and take him in. It does so at last. He is in. He is a member of society, and he sees it as it is. Does he find it what he expected? Some refinement, some culture, some excellence of manners and companionship he finds, surely. But are these all he finds? Vulgar selfishness, concealed ignorance, artificial politeness, polished insincerity, genteel frivolity,—these also and foremost he discovers in society. Underneath its splendor and ornamentation he finds inanity and vapidty. In many places it sounds hollow; and when it is not in full dress it looks attenuated and ghostly. The young aspirant for social distinctions sadly learns that they are often gained upon no sound basis of merit,—that the aristocracies are made up by leaving out of them the best people. As his illusion about society gets dispelled, he comes to respect himself more and it less; that is, unless it captures him both soul and body, and makes him as silly and insipid as itself.

It is not possible also but the growing man should have his illusion about marriage. The sentiment of love lends a coloring to its objects, than which none is so bright and strong. In domesticity he looks to find his highest felicity. The home draws its hallowed line about a spot, whereon he imagines the supreme delights and satisfactions of life are found. Nothing is glided with so soft a radiance or set in so pure a halo, to the eyes of the ardent, growing man, as that event in the future, which he hopes will crown all hope and fulfil all expectation, by giving to him the object of his soul's pure passion for a life possession, and a home where he may place it as the brightest jewel in a crown, surrounded by paler glowing gems, that all together shall be his most priceless wealth of love and happiness, out-valuing the rest of earth. But, as he grows observing, and his acquaintance with society deepens, he sees how the homes of many others are formed; he marks how certain marriages are made, and what comes of them. He is astonished to discover upon what frivolous pretexts, from what base motives, in what an unwholesome spirit, some of these domestic relations are sought for and established. With amazement and pain he beholds how the sacred name of marriage is invoked to further and cover designs that are politic, mercenary, sensual, selfish, and terribly heartless; how mothers connive to dispose of daughters, and fathers of sons, in exchange for an establishment, a fortune, a mere living, encumbered with a fop or a flirt, a knave or a fool, a man or a woman of light head and little heart,—yet each party full of sly arts and petty tricks to deceive the other, and bring about a mutual connection empty of love and honor. With increasing amazement and pain, he looks into those homes where beings have been brought together without mutual adaptations, attractions, affinities, faiths—married by caprice, lust, folly, fashion, pride, despair—and sees how slight the happiness, how great the misery there; how incongruous, inharmonious, unnatural are the relations that hold such beings together, and constitute such homes. And when he observes all this in regard to marriage, he begins to think that he may have had some inadequate and immature notions about it. It dawns upon him that marriage is an institution of love and not of law; that it has its primary reason for being, not in any written, conventional compact or social allowance, but in the unspeakable, unobtainable instincts and desires of the soul; that it is not obligatory upon or desirable to any but such as are drawn to it by internal, inevitable attraction, and as are given to it from the purest motive and finest spirit. And as he shall enter into marriage himself, and learn what it is by experience, he shall come to realize that it offers not joys and pleasures alone, but grave responsibilities and great duties as well; that it calls for self-sacrifice even more than it allows self-indulgence; that it weaves care, anxiety, grief, disappointment with other lighter and pleasanter experiences; that its use and end are, not to make us happy merely, but to make us magnanimous and noble, to raise us into a fine manhood and womanhood, to make us not more a part of another, but more of ourselves, to fuse not two into one, but to make each of the two a more complete person.

One other illusion the young man has, and that is in connection with religion. Every imaginative, enthusiastic, earnest youth is religious. He muses upon the unknown; he dreams about the unseen; the mystery of life impresses him, and the greater mystery of the universe fills his soul with awe. He questions concerning God, and concerning himself. He looks into infinity, and does not withdraw his gaze, though he knows he cannot fathom it with his perception. His own origin and destiny are wonderful to him; he hopes, he fears—he rejoices, he despairs. Baffled in his own thinking, he turns to others; his religious and moral nature are growing, and they long for confidence, for sympathy, and guidance. He naturally looks to the Church, and to those who are in it, for all these. The Church-people, he assures himself, are wise in all such matters; they are good also; they can instruct and help him. He does not dare to think that he is worthy to be one of them, though he hopes to be sometime, perhaps; in the meantime he expects great assistance from them in the solution of his questions, the relief of his doubts, the satisfaction of his longings.

This earnest young soul seeks the light and warmth of the Church, and for a time not a little satisfaction does it find there. The Church is not altogether useless. It does meet some of the wants of the young, and is quite attractive and helpful to them for a season. But the Church does not educate, does not develop; it only pleases and comforts. The earnest youth, however, wants more than to be pleased or even comforted. He wants light, liberty, inspiration, sincerity. The Church knows not how to satisfy a mind thoroughly roused; a persistent inquirer upsets its composure entirely. For doubts it has opiates, but no wholesome tonics. If the questioner will not take a "Thus saith the Lord," and have done with it, the Church knows not how to treat his case. But the earnest youth questions searchingly and deeply; he questions what he is told is unquestionable. He is amazed to find that the Church has but one answer to all his inquiries, and that the Bible—which is itself a riddle, guessed differently by almost every Christian. He finds that his persistent search for the truth offends the Church; it is angry with him because it cannot answer his questions, or because he will not stay answered. Professing to be wise, it is really ignorant; and it treats him coldly because he cannot accept its ignorance for wisdom. He goes out of the door he came in at, and finds that the high-road to truth leads by and beyond the Church.

But not only is the Church an intellectual disappointment to the earnest youth, but a moral one as well. While there are many excellent men and women in the Church, whose pure and noble lives have blessed and do still bless the world, its system of morality rests on a false basis; it has a tendency to make people moral in a very unthorough and superficial manner. The commandment of the Church is to do, not to be. It says: "Conform! observe!" Men mark, and heed well what streets the Church puts upon ordinances and ceremonies and formulas, saying that if these be done, and these be kept, and these be accepted, salvation is secure. Men mark, I say, this teaching of the Church; they do conform, they do observe, they do accept, and—they call themselves Christians and think their whole duty is done. Hence the Church is full of Christians who are very unchristian-like—who are not half so good, not half so much like the master, as some outside. Salvation being offered on such easy terms, men bid freely. Religion, they find, is no hindrance to any commercial transaction they wish to engage in; and as it is rather respectable than otherwise, they take it in large instalments, pay the price demanded, and become "religious" men; that is, church-members. Quite dumbfounded, therefore, the earnest youth is to find that among prominent and active supporters of the Church are notorious stock-gamblers, bank-defaulters, railroad swindlers, political tricksters, and commercial gradgrinds of all sorts. His quick conscience that prompts to utter loyalty to justice, honor, and integrity; his ardent soul that makes him ready for any sacrifice for these, and full of desire to attain to spotless goodness,—these are shocked by the low moral and spiritual tone of the Church, and he turns away disappointed and disgusted, feeling that if religion be not something nobler, better, and purer than this, he wants none of it.

Thus one illusion after another holds its place and cheat before us, and makes us its victim as we pass on through life. One after another it is our necessity to outgrow them all, leaving behind the show and gaining the substance, learning to be deceived no longer by appearances, but learning at last to understand and accept realities.

I have said that the stern, the pathetic part of our experience was this unlearning our illusions, this awakening to the fact of our deception, and slow gathering of conviction that we ought to be deceived no longer. So indeed it is; but it is also the ennobling part of our experience. We gain wisdom slowly, as the fruit gains ripeness. But how glorious the autumn mellowness of Nature! How great, too, the privilege to grow wise by any means! Illusions are harmless if we do not dwell in them beyond our time. Who would miss in the child that charming simplicity, that wonder-eyed innocence, which is its facile capacity to be deceived? Who would miss in the youth its faculty of imagination, of dreaming, of painting everything on the background of the future in high colors? Certainly nobody who loves what is natural. The only danger that attaches to illusions is that we be not willing to outgrow them and cast them off when the time comes for us to face realities. To retain an illusion a moment after we discover it is an illusion; to deliberately choose a fiction for a fact, an appearance for a reality, and suffer this choice to get lodgment in our moral sense,—this is our unpardonable sin, this our deepest possible damnation. Whatever it costs us to exchange an illusion for a reality, we must pay the price and make the transfer.

And those who are able to do this must all the more do it because so many are not able, or fail to do it. How large a multitude are directly engaged—whether consciously or unconsciously—in a systematic effort to keep up the appearances of things, and make it seem that they are devoted to realities! But all this time they are of necessity permitting realities to escape them. Appearances have the most glitter about them, they make the most show, because they are external and superficial, and the first to engage the eye. Therefore the heedless and thoughtless many are content with them. One or the other—the appearance or the reality—they must have. They make the choice which is to them the easier. How few who are not more anxious about their reputation than about their character! Yet character is ten thousand times more important and valuable than reputation. Character is the thing itself; reputation is only the name of the thing. Character is the reality; reputation the appearance.

When our transactions become serious, we must not deal in counterfeit coin; let then our currency be hard, honest realities. We must be content with simple being, however little our being amounts to, and not strive to eke out our substance with a show. We must be willing to be taken for just what we are, and not desire to be thought otherwise—letting our character be our support, and not our reputation. So fast as it may be necessary, we must unlearn our illusions, and press through all seeming until we arrive at solid being. Indulgence in illusions is the pastime of children, not the business of mature years. When we arrive at the age of reason, we should resent all attempts to deceive us—to put us off with fiction in place of fact, with plausibility in place of demonstration—as insulting alike to our intelligence and our conscience. Because we are rational beings capable of apprehending truth, we want to know, we must know, what is, not what seems; we desire to become acquainted with realities, not with appearances; we are filled with hatred of shams, and are deeply in love with what is genuine!

The only place for us to stand at any time is on our two feet, upon the solid ground of principle, turning policy entirely out of doors. We are never sure we stand quite firm until we get this perpendicular position; we are never quite trustful and respectful of ourselves until we are in this upright attitude. Whatever other illusion we delight in, let us never take pleasure in any which obscures to us the truth, which begets our vision of the right, which juggles and palters with our moral sense. Let us be entirely sincere, and reduce our characters and our lives to realities as fast as possible. Let us be that which cannot be misunderstood, our genuineness being so apparent. Let us be that which cannot be dissipated with objections, with sneers, or with violent opposition. Let us be that which commands respect if not sympathy, which secures trust and confidence, if not personal attachment and allegiance. Though men do not agree with us, do not believe with us, do not take our side, yet let us be so honest, sincere, straight-forward, and true, that they can but give us credit for these things, and have some deep faith in us because of them. And whatever, in our most rapt moments, we dream of the True, the Beautiful, and the Good, let us in our wakeful hours strive greatly to make our brightest dream a fair reality. Thus shall we pursue what is best, and sometimes overtake it; thus shall we lift our actual into closer harmony with our ideal!

The parts of a truth often lie so far apart, it is difficult to get a complete view of it.

[Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1872, by P. E. Anson, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.]

PAUL GOWER.

A RATIONALISTIC STORY

ENGLISH AND AMERICAN LIFE.

CHAPTER XXIII.—(Concluded.)

When, at length, the long voyage drew towards a close, it was curious to mark the effect on the tempers and dispositions of the passengers. We were wonderfully good-humored and jocular, inclined to exchange promises of looking each other up afterwards, in case we visited one another's destination; disposed to compliment the captain, and even to think the best of the ill-conditioned mate, who was less surly than usual, though he always responded discouragingly to the questions put to him as to what day and hour we should reach New York. Of course the Americans aboard became exceedingly patriotic. Some sanguine individuals appeared in their shore-going clothes, in which they were hardly recognizable, after the shabbiness of the voyage. Everybody was brisk and talkative, and in the best of tempers. And at last, one beautiful evening—shall I ever forget it?—there came sailing out of the sunset a little pilot-boat, with a great number seven painted on her canvas, which we crowd to the side of the vessel to see, as if it brought us a message from heaven. Rapidly nearing us, it puts aboard a pilot—whom nobody would suspect to be such, as he is dressed in black with a chimney-pot hat on—and makes off again. And that night we all love each other like brothers: everybody invites everybody else to drink; there's an immense deal of conviviality and singing, and Dick, Harry, and I are fetched to join it while pacing the deck together, under the bright stars, having a pipe and talking of home and America.

Next morning we are up betimes, to find ourselves becalmed off a low, long island. A fine steamer, with all its machinery on deck, wants to tow us up to New York; but the captain and ours can't agree about terms, so it splashes off again, very much to our dissatisfaction. We lie to till noon, grumbling, when a breeze springs up, enabling all hands to get joyfully to work to win our own way through the Narrows—a strait so named at the entrance to New York harbor. It is delightfully warm—almost sultry—though there is snow on the shores of Staten Island, with its neat white villas, verandahed hotels, trees and gardens; all of which are unspeakably pleasant and refreshing to sea-wearied eyes. We pass the Quarantine-station, where a whole fleet of vessels is riding at anchor—ah! more than one of them sports the bonnie red cross of St. George!—and where a doctor comes aboard to put us through the form of an examination. There are more islands—one with a fort to it like a gigantic pork pie—ferry-boats, steamers, vessels of all kinds; and at the confluence of two great rivers, diverging to the right and left, a busy city. And our voyage is ended.

I shall reserve my impressions of New York for another letter, this having reached a pretty decent length already. (Mind you retaliate in something like fair proportion.) At present I am delighted with almost everything—as would probably be the case if I had landed in Kamtschatka, after five weeks of salt water. New York is very bright and amusing, but I don't think much of it as a city, after London. Broadway isn't more than half as wide as Regent street; the Bowery has no trees in it worth mentioning, and the Park, as they call it (which I can see from my window), won't compare in size and beauty with many of our squares. The houses and shops have innumerable signs and windows; the telegraph-wires run along the streets; the people are uncommonly well-dressed but considerably uncivil; and the ladies delight in "stunning" colors. I don't think I have seen a shabby person anywhere, or been thanked or spoken pleasantly to by anybody whom I've had occasion to buy anything of, since my arrival.

I was, as you know, to report myself to your admired Mr. Wheeler, who had undertaken to consign me to New Orleans; however, on calling at his office I found him temporarily out of town, and a letter from my father, which seems likely to involve a change of plan. He tells me that he is on his way to New York—will be here in the course of a week. So I have nothing to do but amuse myself and await his arrival, which I naturally look forward to with a great deal of interest and curiosity.

And now, darling, good-bye for the present, and God bless you! Only he knows when we shall meet again, and I could be sad if I did not try to avoid thinking of it—but the time will come and make amends for all. Holding steadfastly to that belief, I shall keep on loving and hoping. Does it need that I should tell you that I retain none but the kindest feelings towards you?

that I will never permit myself to doubt or distrust you, even for a moment?—or fancy that anything can come between us to mar our mutual trust and reliance on each other? Perhaps this separation, though hard to endure, may yet teach us a better estimate of our true selves; and of that affection which, I am persuaded, will one day constitute our perfect, abiding happiness. Then, dearest, we shall smile at past mistakes, and wonder how they could ever have troubled us; recognizing their extreme impotence and triviality, when compared with the love that knows no change nor alloy till it passes from earth to heaven. Again God bless you, and farewell! Write to me immediately, directing us at the beginning of this letter: yours will be forwarded if I have left New York. Regards to Mills, Frank, Tib, and all friends who care to inquire about

Yours faithfully,

PAUL COWER.

P. S. We saw Harry Franklin off for Canada yesterday evening; he wouldn't stay any longer. I shall correspond with him regularly. I did my best to persuade Dick to write to you, or to your father; and he made a beginning, but filled up the rest of the sheet with caricatures of Yankee faces—which I inclose, appropriating it for that purpose. The faces are capital—I wish I could have got him to illustrate this letter. He is in excellent health and spirits; has already ascertained that your brother Tom is at Cincinnati, Ohio—a long way from here—and talks of going thither, when, as the Americans say, he feels like it. I shall be sorry to part with him, though he promises to write and to visit me when I am settled in Louisiana. At present New York is the place for him, he says. A final blessing my Kate—I shall kiss the name in the hope that your lips will touch it afterwards—and good-by!

CHAPTER XXIV.

IS MAINLY IN PRAISE OF NEW YORK CITY AND AMERICANS IN GENERAL.

Vivacious New York! Who that has ever sojourned in thee long enough to become acquainted with thy good qualities, as well as thy notorious, patent, widely-bruited bad ones, but retains an agreeable remembrance of the most quick-blooded, most potential, most metropolitan of American cities? Thou hast no equal, though plenty of rivals, on this side of the Atlantic; who talk of thee as good-naturedly as rivals are accustomed to do of each other, all the world over: still, like many a human charmer, thou pleasest, in spite of thy numerous faults, and shalt here be accorded a most unwonted, most unprecedented eulogium. They and others may parade them seriatim, pronouncing thee a miracle of misrule and phenomenal corruption, a dirty, noisy, fast, flashy, bustling, striding, voracious, temporary, rowdyish, hybrid, money-making and money-squandering, unloved and unlovable place, which aspires only to become a kind of Brummagen Paris, and does it very clumsily (all with more or less of truth, the more's the pity!); yet that doesn't prevent thee from being the real capital of the United States, the best city to live in throughout the Great Republic, and in many respects its type and quintessence. As such, accept the praise I have long owed thee, preparatory to my hero's adventures within thy familiar precincts. If there be readers impatient of such an introduction, they have the easy alternative of at once passing to the next chapter.

I know very well that the assertions contained in a recent sentence will be disputed, and especially by Americans—even by many New Yorkers. I am aware that the former are accustomed to inform newly-arrived Europeans that New York is not the United States; that you must go east, west, south, and north, sir, if you want to see the real greatness of this country; that New York, sir, though we own to considerable pride in its power, enterprise, and prosperity (particularly when abroad), is but a bigger sort of Liverpool, a Yankee Tyre; a nineteenth-century Sidon; a prodigious caravansary, market-place, exchange, and railroad terminus, one-half or two-thirds peopled with migratory strangers; the neck of a vast eel-pot; the mouth of that lusty young giant, Uncle Sam, who swallows and assimilates into his corporate system everything that enters it. I admit that its inhabitants, its editors, cry aloud with groanings which cannot be uttered, that it has hitherto been a prey to a self-constituted and practically self-elected oligarchy of soundrels; a coarse and brutal despotism, which while neglecting, or rather insolently ignoring, every office and duty of good government, has, by means of the feeble, most compact organization ever framed, depleted a long-suffering community exactly in the fashion of Victor Hugo's pieuvre, until it has, one servently hopes, insured as well as provoked its own destruction, complete and final. I have read the ingenious strictures of the English Tory press, denouncing the Empire City as that double abomination, a commune or municipality elected by universal suffrage and an Irish republic, and of course the natural outcome and culminating triumph of democratic institutions. All of which I pronounce only one side of the story, and no more entitled to pass current for the whole of it than the separate halves of coins have to be received at their combined valuation.

What are the characteristics of American civilization? It is very magnificent and very new, extravagantly pretentious, mutable, and democratic. Starting with infinitely greater advantages, natural and political, than the Old World affords, it considers nothing in it too high or too grand for it to emulate; nothing too rich or too fine in the way of indulgence. It pulls down rapidly, to build up as rapidly, regarding nothing as final, and exhibiting a splendidly audacious confidence in its future. Its marvellous growth, power, and influence admit of no denial, but in almost every part of it one finds something defective, something that might be bettered: you can neither praise it without considerable deductions, nor censure it without immense admiration. Superficially it puts its best foot foremost and plumes itself on its generally imposing aggregate, ignoring many shortcomings, contradictions, and discrepancies; but at the same time paradoxically submits to have its vices reflected in a magnifying-glass, allowing its virtues to lie modestly hid in the background. It is expansive, incongruous, free-and-easy, and cosmopolitan, containing, like the sheet in the apostle's vision, both the clean and unclean, presented on an equal footing. Lastly it is based on manhood, work, self-reliance, and has a stupendous destiny before it—nothing less than becoming paramount in and taking the leadership of all the world.

All of which I believe of New York City. In fact, a capital will inevitably embody the dominant idea of its inhabitants. Thus London is business-utilitarianism; Paris, pleasure and centralization; New York, prosperous, progressive democracy. Will the reader excuse a not-unwarranted digression on the first and second metropolises that I may the better discriminate the claims of the third?

London—great, grimy London—is the capital of the universe: in power, in earnestness, in everything thorough and weighty in this working-day world, so infinitely superior to all other cities as to dwarf them to insignificance. Without a knowledge of it, only to be gained by a residence of some years, no man's education can be considered complete. Wonderful from its immensity; impressive in proportion to its huge agglomeration of human interests; possessing every variety of society and appliance of civilization; and not so had in respect to parks, monuments, buildings, and atmosphere as is commonly pretended,—there eulogium ends! I am not going to echo that cuckoo-cry of disparagement which, originating partly in unthinking repetition of hygienic sarcasm, partly in that affectation of superiority to national prejudice which most Englishmen feel bound to cultivate, takes no note of the enormous metropolitan improvements effected during the present reign—an era of which it has been well remarked that it "found London a vast province of brick and mortar, and will leave it a great and splendid capital;" but the truth must be confessed. It is neither beautiful nor picturesque, after all, nor hardly to be rendered so; while of grandeur it boasts but a single component—the unavoidable one of size. It is, in fact, a great deal too big and too sombre for liking: you might as well try and get up a personal friendship for its three millions two hundred and odd thousand of inhabitants. In it you are uncomfortably conscious of being an inconsiderable unit of an overwhelming sum total, a bubble on the ocean of life—nobody. To the individual it appears and is the most merciless metropolis in the civilized world: it cares for him no more than the great forces of Nature; your own hopes and fears, troubles and aspirations, seem small and insignificant; you are half ashamed of them. You know that centuries after you are dead and gone and forgotten, this monster microcosm will survive (man may come and man may go, but London lives forever), and resent the unwelcome assurance of your own ephemeralty. It is like watching the revolutions of the great wheel of Time, upon which, with Charles Lamb, you "would fain lay an ineffectual finger." But for his having become synonymous with boredom, you could even find retributory comfort in Lord Macaulay's New Zealander—only his advent is deferred to such a terrible pando post futurum as to deprive you of that meagre satisfaction.

[To be continued.]

Lusignat, who was hung at Morristown, New Jersey, yesterday, for butchering his wife with a knife, "jumped on the scaffold with an elastic bound, laughing and showing his white teeth," says the telegraphic report of his execution. His last words were that he was not afraid to die, and that he was going to see his wife. That depends altogether on the present whereabouts of his late partner, and his destination. Nixon, who was hanged in New York to-day, gave utterance to a blasphemous parallel on the scaffold. His last words are reported to have been: "My Saviour was crucified; this is nothing."—Washington Star, April 5.

The Sanctuary of Superstition.

FINDING JESUS.—Another sea captain said: "I found the Lord Jesus in the attic of my praying mother's house. I had crept up there to be alone in prayer, and Jesus revealed himself to me. I never think of the place or the hour without wanting to shout glory to God in the highest. When I found I was saved myself, I began to spread the tidings of the cross everywhere I went."—N. Y. Observer.

THAT FOOL COPERNICUS.—"I am now advised that a new astrologer has risen, who presumes to prove that the earth moveth and goeth about, not the firmament; the sun and moon, not the stars—like as when one sitteth on a coach, or in a ship that is moved, thinketh he sitteth still and resteth, but the earth and trees do move and run themselves. Thus it goeth; we give ourselves up to our own foolish fancies and conceits. This fool (Copernicus) will turn the whole art of astronomy upside down; but the Scripture sheweth and teacheth another lesson when Joshua commandeth the sun to stand still, and not the earth."—Martin Luther.

PRIDE.—I have been frequently and greatly surprised that Christians will say by mouth and pen "I am proud of," "I feel a pride in," etc. Such expressions by men in a natural state are common and to be expected, because natural; but from the lips or pen of one in a gracious state, a Christian, it is a mistake. They do not mean so; or if they mean what they say, they certainly do not consider what manner of spirit they are of.

Let us appeal to the true standard, the Bible. Is pride once mentioned in the infallible book with commendation, or even with toleration? Is it not branded as an utter abomination to the Lord, causing the infliction of some of the sorest judgments on men and nations? The sin of Sodom was pride, idleness, and fulness of bread; it sent Nebuchadnezzar out seven years to herd with oxen and eat herbs till pride was humbled and he knew better how to behave himself; it caused the angel of the Lord to smite Herod suddenly, so that he was eaten of worms and gave up the ghost; and brought Haman to the gallows he had built for another. It is truly said other sins turn us from God, while pride turns God from us.—Roumanville (Canada) Observer.

SINNERS, SHAM AND REAL.—Christ, the real Savior, came into the world to save real sinners. When Luther was under a bitter sense of sin, he said, "Oh! but my guilt is so great, I cannot believe that Christ can save me." But one who was helping him much, said to him, "If thou wert only the semblance of a sinner, then Christ would only be the semblance of a Savior; but if thou be a real sinner, then thou shouldst rejoice that a real Savior has come to save thee." If we meet with a man who says, "Yes, I am a sinner, I know I am a sinner, but I do not know that I ever did much amiss; I have always been honest and correct!"—such a person has a name to be a sinner, and no more. He is a sham sinner, and a sham Savior would suit him well. But for another who confesses that he has been a grievous transgressor, there is a real Savior. Rejoice, O ye guilty ones, that the Christ of God himself really came with real blood, and presented a real atonement to take away real sins; such as theft, drunkenness, swearing, uncleanness, Sabbath-breaking, lying, murder, and things I need not mention, lest the cheek of modesty should blush; even these can be blotted out by the real Savior, who has come to save the chief of sinners from suffering what is due to their sins. Oh! that we could ring this great gospel-bell till the hills and valleys were filled with its music. May the Lord open men's ears and hearts, that those who hear the glad tidings may accept the Savior who has come to save them!—Spurgeon.

CASH RECEIPTS.

For the week ending July 12, 1874.

David R. Locke, $100; Francis E. Albot, $50; H. A. Markes, $1; C. Brown, Jr., $1.50; F. R. Marvin, $1.83; R. S. Barker, $3; L. T. Osborn, $1; G. R. Dexter, $3; W. C. Kelley, $3; E. C. Miles, $3; G. E. Corbin, $1.50; F. H. Buchanan, $3; E. L. Fiske, 12 cts.; Wm. H. Dyke, $5; W. F. Stevens, $2; Judson A. Gager, $1.00; Roger Sherman, $1; J. A. J. Wilcox, $3; Jacob Beede, $3; H. H. Hatch, $3; J. H. Northrup, $2; Fred Fischer, $1.50; E. G. Blaisdell, $1; Levi Baldwin, $3; C. K. Matthews, $3; L. C. P. Freer, $1.50; Luther S. Dixon, $2.25; Luther Nickerson, 4 cts.; Geo. Hinkhorn, 50 cts.; C. Ropp, Jr., 25 cts.; T. Lees, $2.10; J. R. Hawley, $5.00; Olie B. Squier, $1; Maggie Devor, $1; C. Conos, $3; N. Lonsbury, $3; A. P. Putnam, $3; Geo. H. Stevens, $3; R. F. Underwood, $3; G. P. Delaplane, $3; H. E. Mann, $3; H. W. Gillett, $3; J. K. F. Atlake, $3; A. Trounstein, $3; Wm. Hill, $1; J. W. Patterson, $1.50; Chas. C. Hayes, $1.50; John R. Lewis, $1.50; T. B. Claiworth, $1; Ettie & Lizzie Marshall, $3; Christopher Day, $3; M. S. Severance, $1.50; Annie Lepore, $1.50; J. C. Allen, 40 cts.; Precourt Poor, 25 cts.; J. F. Boyd, 85 cts.; Alfred Warren, 80 cts.; A. L. Richmond, $1.00; J. R. Waddle, $1; C. C. Bues, $1.50; H. Blair, $1; John G. Doering, $3; C. V. Vihuer, $3; H. Heyerman, $1.50; Wm. Hansen, $3; John D. Caldwell, $3; Worthy Putnam, $1; Wesley Best, $3; Chas. J. Seymour, $1; Seth Cole, Jr., 50 cts.; N. G. Knight, 10 cts.; J. D. Thomas, $2.75; Jos. Mellis, 10 cts.; R. Rosenbaum, $3; Thos. B. Rodman, $3; George Allen, $1; N. E. Floyd, 10 cts.; C. H. Doeringer, $1; Geo. News, $1; J. S. 50 cts.; H. Oppenheimer, $3; Dr. Hudson, $1.

The Index.

JULY 19, 1873.

THE INDEX accepts every recuit of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B. No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLING, Editor.
ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS, FROTHINGHAM, THOMAS WENTWORTH, BIGGINSON, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, ROY. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), Rev. MONCURE D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS TO INDEX STOCK.

Mrs. F. W. Christern, New York City, One Share	$100
Rich'd B. Westbrook, Sonman, Pa. " "	100
R. C. Spencer, Milwaukee, Wis., Two " "	200
R. W. Howe, Boston, Mass., One " "	100
Chas. W. Story, " " " "	100

DOLLAR DONATION FUND.

This fund is to be used, first, in meeting any deficiency in current expenses that may result from the recent "Index troubles," and, secondly, in such other ways as the editor shall find most advantageous for the paper. All appropriations will be reported to the Directors.

Acknowledged with thanks for the week ending July 12:—

$1.00 each—R. S. Barker, E. W. Mundy, H. W. Brown, O. Martin, Levi Baldwin, J. W. Sulist, Geo. Thorn, E. T. Cowperthwaite, J. F. Ruggles, E. T. Billings, Ella E. Gibson, A. L. Richmond, Emily Ranney, R. Wilkin, R. Touchton, Wm. F. Perkins; $1.00—Henry Felgi; $5.00—E. W. Meddaugh.

POETRY AND RELIGION.

"Few modern poets are much given to high poetic thought, and most of them eschew utterly high poetic life. And, after all, it is the latter that most surely tells. The poet, like the preacher, succeeds more by example than precept. It is a grander thing, and humanity in the end acknowledges it for a grander thing, to live a heroic poem than to write a book of heroic poetry. To those who never read a line of the Inferno, Dante's magnificent grief, as told by his biographers, makes him poetically, because heroically, immortal. Milton is less spoken of but more revered for his splendid, almost supernatural self-reliance, than for the Paradise Lost. . . . A poet may be very excellent and be very little of a hero. But if he be not a hero, he will never receive that religious reverence which is, hide it as we may, instinctively considered the poet's due. Now Mr. Aubrey De Vere is so far a hero that he has evidently given himself, wholly and willingly, but with a touch of sadness that is visible in all his poems, to two losing causes,—the cause of the old, pure Muse, and the cause of Ireland. For his devotion to the former, we may perhaps think him antiquated; for his devotion to the latter, we may think him unwise. But the devotion is there! Even though we rate him eccentric as the beloved knight of La Mancha, we must yet admit that he is a knight, sans peur et sans reproche, with a spear as straight and a shield as spotless as any De Vere that ever made the vow of chivalry."

Such is the fine thought of the London Spectator, reviewing a recent book of poetry. Seldom is so much high truth incarnated in literary criticism. The poet is but a poetaster, unless he puts his genius as truly into the poem of his life as into the poem of his imagination. Through the rhythm and melody of his verse must be heard the deeper music of a soul that sings the song of the stars; behind the exquisite form and coloring of the vision conjured up by his creative thought must shine the transcendent beauty of an original, inimitable, and magnificent character. The truly divine poem is a rainbow whose arch of glory is but the reflection of a luminary unheeded by the spectator—the arrested and returning radiance of a spirit aflame with unborrowed fire. All poetry that is not mechanism or doggerel is the ideal of a great nature painted on the skies by the hand of Art; and Art is a most base pretender if it reproduces not with pre-Raphaelite exactness a subjective reality more real than the solid crust of the globe.

Instinctively mankind gauge the poet's greatness by the sincerity of his muse,—by the truthfulness to his own best and loftiest dream with which he has expressed himself to the world. They do not forget that every man's life moves far below the inaccessible summit of his aspiration; but neither do they forgive the poet who forbears to point to it. With a tender pity they commiserate his falls in climbing its rugged steps; they excuse his weaknesses and condone his sudden, unpremeditated aberrations of conduct. But they reserve their reverence and admiration for the heroism which persists in climbing, and the grand veracity of genius which pictures life as seen from the imagined heights. They judge the poet's life by the fidelity of his life-aims; and they withhold their permanent veneration, however dazzled for a season, from the trifler whose rhymes are untrue to the sublimest truth he sees because his actions are habitually ordered by a lower law. Poetry is the interpretation of human life in accordance with the canons of eternal beauty; and no man is a poet who would interpret it by any rule less divine. He whose life expresses no fealty to this law of beauty cannot become the seer whose visions shall illustrate it to the world; and this prejudgment of mankind determines unconsciously the degree of abandon with which they surrender themselves to the witcheries of his genius. Suspiciously they listen to them, if infidelity to beauty vitiates his life among men, knowing that the song of Circe converts the human into the bestial; and the fame of that poet is a dying echo who makes not his devotion to the ideal as heroic as his verse. Greater or less than any word is the man behind it: its meaning is what is put into it, not what is brought to it; and thus every word borrows its enduring greatness or littleness from him who spoke it.

The greatest aim of poetry is to clothe truth with beauty, to express in noble images the vague but lofty dreams of the human heart, to utter in tones of melody the inextinguishable aspiration for better things which struggles to be heard even in the harsh and unmusical noises of the commonest career; nay, to make life itself the sublimest work of art by making it a complete expression of the divinest meanings of Nature. He is no poet who cannot comprehend this,—no vates, no "prophet and spokesman" of the gods. The genius which builds grand thought and grand imagination into the temple of a poem that is written in words, is as nothing compared with the genius which builds purpose, fidelity, and heroic struggle with circumstance into an epic of invincible virtue. He is the king of artists who finds his materials, not in marbles or pigments or chords or syllables, but in the passions, the motives, the actions of humanity,—in the loves and griefs, the deprivations and temptations and sufferings, of his own heeded or unheeded life. The perfect life—there is no other perfect poem.

How closely, then, is poetry allied to religion! Poetry regards life as expression, religion as the thing expressed; that is the difference, and it is slight. Carry poetry up to its highest attainment, and it makes life religious; carry religion up to its highest attainment, and it makes life poetic. The one looks to semblance, and the other to reality; but no semblance is complete which is unveracious, and no reality is complete which is unrevealed. He alone can seem who is; he alone can be who makes himself manifest. PERFECTION is the aim of poetry and of religion alike,—the latter to make it existent, the former to make it apparent. In its highest development, each must transcend the utmost that is possible to human experience under its actual conditions; each must dream its dream, and bravely work for the impossible; each must enter the world of unfathomable Being, and seek in the finite to touch the Infinite; each must discover the ground of its own existence in the intangible, the inaudible, the invisible. Yes, although the lower manifestations of poetry and religion deal with that which is most real to the senses of the multitude, their higher manifestations deal with that which is purely ideal even to the rarest and most exalted of the few. Man, both on his poetic and his religious side, touches what exists, not in the apparent universe, but in himself alone.

"That type of Perfect in his mind
In Nature can he nowhere find;
He sows himself on every wind."

Yet his failure to find the "perfect" in the universe which he sees, hears, and touches proves only that sight, hearing, and touch cannot compass it; that the very idea of perfection is the offspring of mind alone. Hence the undertone of unutterable pathos which is heard in all exalted poetry; for, dealing with images by its very nature, poetry cannot escape the necessity of sensuous symbolism, and therefore tries without avail to express symbolically that which is forever inexpressible. The same fate lies on religion. All art obeys the same necessity; and religion is the art of living. So long as man is haunted by the ideal of perfection, therefore, his art and his religion must equally aim at the unattainable. Like the hyperbola sweeping towards its asymptote by an infinite curve, they endlessly approach it, but can never reach it.

Religion, in short, is the art of living the highest life; and the highest life is the present triumph of the poetic art. Being thus different aspects of the same fact, the human pursuit of ideal perfection, is it any wonder that religion and poetry are indissoluble? To despise one is to despise both; to reverence one is to reverence both. It is wise, therefore, to fear for the safety of neither. Man will cleave to both until he has learned to dispense with himself.

MASSACHUSETTS INFANT ASYLUM.

An article signed "T. W. H.," which appeared a few weeks ago in THE INDEX, referred to the Report of a Catholic Asylum which, after stating the percentage of deaths, remarked that, if they had not preserved the earthly lives of these children, their eternal salvation was secured by their introduction to the Church.

This spirit is very common in sectarian institutions, and the same consideration prompts to the carelessness of infant life which is so very prevalent. Many a pious person utters a grateful sigh when a child is taken out of the world, as if its departure were an escape from evil and peril.

There is a real evil in this spirit, as affecting hospitals and asylums. In some cases they make no report of the methods or results of their medical treatment, so that the public is unable to judge fairly of their work, besides nothing being contributed in the lack of such reports to the general stock of knowledge on the important questions of health. The influence on individuals is also often prejudicial. The hope of recovery is not allowed its natural influence. A young girl who had been a patient in a hospital of this class, on being asked why she left it, replied: "I did not like to stay; they were all the time talking to me about preparing to die, and I wanted to get well and be married." She certainly chose the better part.

In strong contrast with this spirit is the thoroughly humane and scientific management of the Massachusetts Infant Asylum, an institution established about seven years ago for the express purpose of promoting the preservation of infant life. It was found that under the existing system, which allowed of foundlings and deserted children being sent to the Alms-House, and those of indigent mothers obliged to work for their support often to be placed at board, the mortality was frightful, sometimes rising to as high as ninety-five or six per cent. In fact, the survival of such children beyond the first year was a rare exception.

The Infant Asylum had for its one object to prove that such children could be saved, and could grow up to health and possible usefulness and happiness. It was a new experiment, and all concerned in it had to learn by the hard lessons of experience. The progress towards the desired end has been constant and satisfactory. The Report of the present year says: "The percentage of mortality for the last twelve months was 47.7, while that for this year is 14.3,—which is only a little more than half of the percentage for the most favorable year before this; namely, year before last, when it was 26.6." The most experienced friends of the work thought it would be a great success if the mortality were reduced to fifty per cent.; yet already, in a year when the average mortality of the city is very high, it is reduced to much less than half that amount. Although we can hardly hope for so favorable a result every year, there seems no reason to doubt that the mortality can be kept quite as low as in the community at large.

This result has been obtained by a careful obedience to the laws of science and Nature, as far as they are yet known. Not only are material comforts and skilful medical attendance given to the children,—not only are wet nurses provided, since no art of man can equal Nature's skilful compounding of the food for babes,—but the divine influence of love and tenderness are allowed their full value; and it is found that the babes put out to board often thrive better for the love and petting of the family circle, even without as good sanitary conditions as the Asylum affords.

Such an institution ought to exist in every large city; and we point to this success as proof of what may be accomplished. We have no right to permit such a waste of life as now goes on everywhere. Besides this economy of life, I believe a great moral influence has been exerted upon the unfortunate mothers of these children, many of whom are encouraged and helped to retain the care of their children, who otherwise would have deserted and abandoned them.

The secretary of the Association is Mr. Charles Ware, of Brookline, Mass., who will doubtless be happy to forward copies of the last Report—which is the sixth annual one—to any persons interested in this important subject.

E. D. C.

FREEDOM AND VAGUENESS.

Our very admirable friend William H. Channing, at a recent public meeting in London, is reported to have spoken something in this vein: That, while he would bring all possible emphasis to bear on the word "freedom," his thoughts and affections were more than ever concentrated on the term "Christian;" and it was, in his judgment, more than ever necessary to bring out in clear, noontide brightness "the grand, central truth gathering round the fellowship of the Father and the Son." There was danger, he thought, that the "strong religious sentiment of the community might lose itself in vagueness, and dissipate itself in thin air, because it did not recognize the central reality of the fellowship of the Father and the Son, as the very means of fellowship in the universal family."

I quote from the Christian Register, and shall not hold so excellent a rhetorician as Mr. Channing answerable for the cloudy figure of a "central truth" "gathering round a fellowship." Central truths commonly have others gather round them. It is pleasant to find our friend Channing, whose chief merit hitherto has been brilliancy, not clearness, who has frequently been "dark from excessive bright," coming out on the side of lucidity; but his illustration of it cannot be regarded as fortunate. If there is one doctrine that is not clear, that never has been made clear, that never can from the nature of the case be made clear,—a doctrine that never has been stated except with the caution that it was an ineffable mystery into which angels looked in vain,—it is the doctrine of the "fellowship between the Father and the Son." The doctrine of God in Humanity, the doctrine of a divine Humanity, or of Humanity as itself divine, is infinitely more intelligible. Every departure from that "central doctrine"—the departure of the Arians, the Socinians, the Unitarians—has been a deliverance from the powers of darkness, an exodus from Egypt. It was a relief when it came to humanitarianism; though humanitarianism only disposed of the vagueness that "gathered round" the doctrine of Jesus, but left the problem of God and Humanity unsolved.

Thus far, freedom has been the foe of vagueness in every particular, because it has led the mind out little by little from the region of theology to the region of philosophy, and from the ancient method of philosophy, that of the Scholastics, to the modern method which is scientific. Our critics may say what they will about the vagueness of the Free Religion men—we must still remain unconvinced of it; we must still believe that we seem vague merely because we are comprehensive and have a wide view, because we embrace many details instead of having our horizon occupied by a single object. If there is a word which more than any other (more than "freedom") suggests vagueness, it is the term "Christian." No two sects define it alike. The great sects, Romanism on the one side and Protestantism on the other, define it so differently that their interpretations are hostile. The extreme sects—the Romanists or Calvinists on the one side, and the sentimentalists and transcendentalists on the other—cannot agree on the fundamental terms of definition. The little clique of Unitarians, whose one conspicuous characteristic is their intelligibility, have given up the conundrum and allow every one who is sufficiently interested to claim the name to define Christianity for himself. Not a few are ready to say that the term does not require definition, but is equivalent to goodness, kindness, benevolence,—qualities so long associated with Christianity as to have become identified with it. The term "Christian" is about as vague as the term "Tagan," which is a good word for pulp use, but has no distinct meaning.

The term "Religion," though large and more comprehensive, carries a far more intelligible sense; for it does not, of necessity, imply a system of theology or scheme of dogmatics, but brings up the simple facts of sentiment, which all understand naturally without explanation. When we say "Christian Religion," we are called on to specify what precise thing we mean; we are in the region of complications; we move about among subtleties and snares. We have to define and confine; shut ourselves in, and shut our neighbors out,—and this is a delicate and difficult thing to do, if we do it nicely.

Jesus surely was not vague, when he resolved the Law and the Prophets into love of God and man; brushing away the complicated traditions of the elders, and the intricate casuistries of the doctors, and giving a formula which everybody could understand by the heart, which is the religious organ. The lawyer did not understand it; thought it vague, because so large. "Who is my neighbor?" he asked, and might have continued to ask even after the parable of the Good Samaritan had been related as an illustration. He wanted precision, and would soon have lost himself in complexities.

Now precision in thought is a good thing, and vagueness in thought is a very bad thing; and freedom does run into complexities, and therefore incurs danger of entanglement and confusion. But the method of freedom is hostile to vagueness, because it promotes distinctness of thought in matters whereon thought bears. It resolves the apparently simple into its parts; and the vague is the apparently simple. The phrase "fellowship between the Father and the Son" is apparently simple. But apply thought to it, and it is a nebula of mist. If it should become a galaxy of stars, it would be purely through the agency of freedom. Our admirable friend Channing, and other admirable friends with him, seem to my apprehension to confound the intellectually with the sentimentally simple. They prefer an infinite fire-mist to a firmament gemmed with constellations. The nebula leaves a single impression on the imagination, but the constellations are the clearest to vision.

O. B. F.

"We do not expect to please everybody," editors often say: "there will be always some to find fault." It is a lame sort of self-defence. We do not expect to please anybody—at all times. But every one whom we hope to please at all would rather have us speak exactly as we think, than be obliged to suspect us of politic conformity even to his own opinion.

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but hereafter no space will be spared to E. errors.
N. B.—Articles for this department should be SHORT, and written only on one side of the sheet.
N. B.—Illegibly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.
N. B.—No responsibility will be assumed for unused manuscripts.

THE TREE STILL STANDING.

NEW BEDFORD, Mass., June 27, 1873.

MR. EDITOR:—

The tree does not even waver under Mr. Crane's last blow. If I pay any one less than cost for his products, I certainly do "steal unconsciously." But the purchaser cannot ascertain whether he is paying the exact cost price or not. He therefore buys of him who charges least, supposing that no one will be foolish enough to sell for less than cost and thus ruin himself. "How shall the cost be determined?" asks Mr. Crane. The cost varies with different individuals, and the cheapest wins. Every person must determine for himself the cost of his own products. Any arbitrary rules concerning price interfere with the liberty of the people. These ideas are impracticable, are they? Perhaps so; but in my judgment it is, to say the least, imprudent to pronounce any new idea to be impracticable before it has been fairly tried.

BENJ. R. TUCKER.

LOURDES GROTTO.

"I am the Immaculate Conception," said the phantom to a young girl several years ago in the charming Pyrenees, where a cave had been scooped out in the pleasure-grounds of a castle.

Believers in this story became numerous in the adjacent country, who made this a sort of Mecca for the pious country folk from all parts of France. We have this news given us with fresh accompaniments from the hands of the interested priesthood, how forty thousand pilgrims were there a few days ago, presided over by the very Rev. Bishop of Carcassonne, with all the pomp and circumstance of the Catholic Ritual; and that two hundred banners were in the procession costing a quarter of a million francs, while a great speech was made by the Bishop of Tarbes, with the people continually crying, "Vive la France, vive le Pape!"

All this is sent by telegrams to London, and from thence communicated to a gaping world through the Times.

The Paris Patrie also states "that by command of the ghost or phantom the young Bernadotte girl touched the rock, and forthwith came abundance of water that continues to flow and bless the faithful with its curative properties; that as a consequence magnificent hotels and boarding-houses have sprung up in all directions, and that thousands of miraculous cures of incurable diseases are related."

This cave or grotto, we learn from other reliable sources, is a charming and romantic spot, where the snow-crowned mountains glisten under the noonday sun, while the eagle's-nest of a castle is proudly seated on a basaltic rock overlooking the whole country. A statue of the "Mother of God" is placed in the hollow, at the very spot where the said ghost was seen, with the miraculous fountain at the left of the grating.

And why, my incredulous friend, should this story be untrue? Should the stupendous miracles of Galilee be confined to that day and generation? Is it not fitting that this wonderful demonstration should be made to a child whose purity could not be questioned, instead of to a matured Christian all used up by piousness and indigestion?

So we have here another instance of special interposition to strengthen the faith of devotees, and rivet closer the clerical chains which bind the ignorant and credulous, endorsed by the regularly ordained Bishop of the greatest Christian Church, having in its folds over two hundred millions of people!

We learn from Luke that this immaculate conception was antedated six months in the person of our Elizabeth, and that her husband was so informed while he was burning incense in the temple.

The Angel Gabriel was delegated to impart this information in both instances, with this difference, however; that the older Elizabeth was not personally visited, while Mary saw the angel and had the personal conversation.

The priest Zacharias in the one case conversed with Gabriel, while the carpenter Joseph was notified through a dream of that which was to transpire. However, it was perfectly satisfactory, and all parties interested accepted the situation.

Much curiosity has existed among reflective people why more importance was not attached to the eccentric John, as he was the party who brought Jesus forward, and comes into existence by as great expense of miracle, and with much greater publicity.

John was from a priest's family in good standing among the Jews, regularly serving in the Temple, and his father was speechless, we read, for nine months, until the child was named; while upon the other hand, the son of Mary had not been publicly announced, and was finally born in a stable.

The glorification of Jesus was immediately commenced, we learn, by the angel chorus, and continued by the shepherds, Simeon, Anna the prophetess, and the wise men.

John is only made prominent during two days while preaching and heralding Jesus, baptizing him in the Jordan. We cannot have any doubt that he did his work of advertising well, until he was cut off from his kindred by the dancing daughter of Herodias.

But the divine origin of Jesus must be frequently affirmed, by the renewal of these miraculous presentations as in the case of the Bernadotte girl of the Pyrenees, and they always occur somehow in those countries which look to Rome as their spiritual head.

I really think that John is not appreciated as he ought to be, even among the water-power Baptists. J. E. H.

EXPERIENCE.

How easy to criticise the apparently cowardly position taken by the man who for the time being seems utterly crushed by some one of life's bitterest experiences! How foolish and wrong it seems for him not to accept calmly the inevitable, and rouse into life the noble manhood latent within him!

Mental strain, like physical overwork, may, in spite of heroic endurance, break down even the strongest constitution; still it is essentially a case of self-kill or self-cure, and the wise man sees that the issue must be met.

The absolutely essential medicine is the speedy banishment of all feeling of mere selfish sorrow.

Is it death? Let there arise indomitable resolution manfully applied to the execution of some wise purpose or new and large interest.

Is it love? Let it appear that friendship alone will suffice, as thus only can both be happy.

In our most careless days, when all is sunshine, we are sometimes momentarily depressed, scarce knowing why, but in fact because we are drifting rudderless.

If we may thus be unhappy at a time when everything is fair around us and opportunity for the diversion of thought is abundant, how black is the prospect when suddenly we seem left utterly alone, utterly miserable, without even a wish to live!

Nether God nor man can help you; all sympathy is perhaps worse than thrown away; civil war rages within,—a terrible struggle which must leave you, as a man, nothing or everything. If you have only become more broadly sympathetic, your effort to perfect yourself has succeeded; true humanity has triumphed.

Then all thanks to those noble natures who have taught me in season this greatest, this most blessed, of lessons. J. H. B.

Boston, June 24, 1873.

POISON AS A PRAYER-TEST.

EDITOR INDEX:—

The so-called "Tyndall's Prayer-test" has excited a great deal of discussion, not only in religious but secular and religio-secular papers. Perhaps there is not a single educated family in Christendom but has discussed the subject over the breakfast-table. In fact, among all English-speaking people possessing ordinary education, it has been for some months a fruitful topic of conversation. But it seems to me the "test" is rather far-fetched.

It is simply a question of faith. Matthew, xvii. 20, says: "If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove: and nothing shall be impossible unto you." James, v. 14, 15, says: "Is any sick among you; let him call for the elders of the Church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he has committed sins, they shall be forgiven him." As an instance that prayer to God has power, he (James) gives in verse sixteen of the same chapter the story of Elias, praying first that it might not and then that it might rain; and he was accommodated.

So it is plain enough that faith alone is needed.

"Tyndall's test" is too slow and complex. A shorter way of proving the efficacy of faith is shown in Mark, xvi. 17, 18: "And these signs shall follow them that believe: In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover."

At a glance it may be seen how much simpler this plan is than Tyndall's. The believer has but to "lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."

If this is so, why take the trouble to dedicate a certain ward in a hospital to one form of treatment, and a second to another? Do not try two potholes. If Celestialopathy is the cure-all, why try Terrestrialopathy? The matter is really in a nut-shell, and may be tried at any moment in the year, in any city in the world wherein is one "believer."

The writer is an apothecary (not one of the kind described by Shakespeare, for he weighs nearly two hundred pounds), and he has on several occasions offered to "Christians," including a number of "called ministers," a dose of poison—arsenic, strychnine, or morphine—as a test; and every one of them has refused the tempting potion, notwithstanding Mark, xvi. 18, was read to them before and after the generous offer.

And the worst of it is this: a soul (according to their theory) has been lost in consequence of their refusal. For I have invariably informed each one that, if he would drink the dose offered and suffered no harm, I would believe in his God, Christ, Devil, and Church; would resign my present employment, and devote my whole time, means, and energy towards "converting unregenerate souls to Christ."

But they would none of it, and so my soul is lost! L. G.

TERRE HAUTE, Ind., Jan. 27, 1873.

"THE CHRISTIAN CAUSE IN ASIA."

The N. Y. Herald gives some "extraordinary facts" which it regards as "really encouraging to the Christian cause in Asia."

Let us see what they are and what they really amount to.

1. The Japanese Calendar which has ruled for more than twenty-five centuries has been changed, so that their New Year shall commence with the first, instead of the last, of January, according to the "Christian method."

2. The day is to be divided into twenty-four hours instead of twelve, as before; and the one which corresponds to Sunday is to be observed as a holiday!

3. The 25th day of December is to be "observed as a grand holiday by the Japanese." "Christmas day is to be henceforth held sacred to Trinita, the first Emperor of Japan."

Wonderfully encouraging evidence, indeed, of the "progress of the Christian cause in Asia!"

If observing one day in January rather than another, as New Year's Day,—if reckoning twenty-four hours to the day instead of twelve (as Jesus Christ undoubtedly did),—and keeping Sunday, not as the Sabbath, or as the festival of Christ's resurrection, but simply as "a holiday," and December 25, not as sacred to the memory of Christ, or as the anniversary of his birth, but as "a grand holiday" sacred to the memory of Trinita, a heathen emperor,—if these are, any or all of them together, indicative of Christian progress, then Christianity is an exceedingly easy thing to put on, and "Jordan" can no longer be set down as "a hard road to travel."

The Herald's reckoning reminds me of a man of Jewish birth, who claimed to be a convert to Christianity. His claim was disputed, when he argued it thus: "I work on the Sabbath (Saturday)—I drink, and swear, and eat pork: I can't do these things and be a Jew; if I am not a Christian, what in hell am I?"

Another admirable illustration occurs to us of a like "extraordinary fact," giving like encouragement to Christian hopes.

At a revival meeting, one of the worst men, in all the region round, arose and acknowledged his backslidden condition. He had joined the church twenty years before, he said; but for nineteen of those years he had lived a reckless, godless, profane, intemperate, licentious life. But he had never, he declared, in all this iniquity, entirely given up his Christian hope. There was only one thing that he held on to, as ground for hope; that, notwithstanding his terribly wicked life, he was a Christian at heart—one of God's elect; he never quite forgot his dear Redeemer. In all his dissipation and degradation, he "always remembered how to spell the name of the blessed Jesus—J-a-i-s-u-s."

The preacher dryly observed that such spelling as that was a pretty slender peg to hang a Christian hope on. In like manner the Herald's "wonderful facts" seem to us rather a slim foundation on which to build "encouragement to the Christian cause in Asia." H.

When we begin to divide and unchurch each other on small points, there is no telling where it will stop. The Baptist having excluded the best of us from their communion table are now beginning to try it on each other, and their papers are vigorously discussing whether regular old line Baptists have any right to accept the Lord's invitation to supper, if he should admit Free Will Baptists too. A still further division among the Baptists call themselves Mennonites, and in eastern Ohio these have become arrayed into two irreconcilable parties called the Omish and the Manese; the point of controversy being the wearing of buttons instead of hooks and eyes, while a serious feud is threatened in another quarter upon the question as to the length and split of the coat-tail.—Union Era.

That clerical and lay functions were once combined, the following old-time advertisement will show: "Wanted, for a family who have had bad health, a sober, steady person in the capacity of doctor, surgeon, apothecary, and man-of-wife. He must occasionally act as butler, and dress hair and wigs. He will be required sometimes to read prayers, and to preach a sermon every Sunday. A good salary will be given.—Horne Journal."

The schoolmaster sees the mother's face daguerreotyped in the conduct and character of each little boy and girl. Nay, a chance visitor, with a quick eye, sees very plainly which child is daily baptized in the tranquil waters of a blessed home, and which is cradled in violence and suckled at the bosom of a storm. Did you ever look at a little pond in a sour, dark day in March? How sullen the swampy water looked! The shore pouted at the pond, and the pond made mouths at the land; and how saraggy trees, cold and bare-armed, scowled over the edge! But look at it on a bright day in June, when great rolling clouds, all golden with sunlight, checker the heavens, and seem like a large flock of sheep which the good God is tending in that upland pasture of the sky; and then how different looks the pond—the shores all green, the heavens all gay, and the pond laughs right out and blesses God! As the heavens over the water, so a mother broods over her family, March or June, just as she will.—Theodore Parker.

As we have before stated, the Society of Friends is not growing, numerically, especially the "Orthodox" branch, for the denomination does not make any proselyting attempts. Unlike some of their brethren of another fold, the Friends do not permit the employment of an indolent genius who spends $4,000 per annum in looking for an ineptuous Hebrew who may be willing to improve his worldly condition by means of apostasy; every dollar religiously spent by the Friends is expended for a wise purpose and to the purpose. The consequence is that "Quaker" beggars are as scarce a sight on our or on any other streets, as snow in summer. Neither are there any Quaker "clerical bums," nor Quaker church palaces erected at the cost of a half million dollars. Leaving spiritual points out of the question, the community would be the gainer if the Society of Friends could grow as rapidly in numbers and influence as do some of their contemporaneous religious bodies.—Philadelphia Sunday Republic.

AMUSING INTOLERANCE.—A controversy has arisen of a peculiar kind in the United Presbyterian Church in Edinburgh. A member of that church had declined to partake of the sacrament because ordinary intoxicating wine was used. This sort of scruple is sure to arise when teetotalism flourishes, and it is of such a harmless kind that one should think it would be treated with some indulgence. Unfortunately, toleration is a virtue little understood in Calvinistic Scotland, and the Kirk Session passed the following resolution: "Whereas, Mr. John Macadam has been guilty of an unseemly, offensive, and schismatical act at the communion table in refusing to partake of communion, and notwithstanding prolonged dealings with him he still refuses to act in conformity with his brethren, the session hereby suspend him from the office of the eldership and from full communion with the members of the church." This is a gem in its way. If the heads of the church do not deal with this case in a more sensible way, we shall soon have to announce a new sect of Presbyterians—"The Spiritual Supporters of Unfermented Wine."—London Ecclesiastical.

The Church Journal, an English publication, illustrates its Christian charity in an obituary tribute to the late Mr. Mill, in which it says: "His philosophy, so-called, was thoroughly anti-Christian; his sentiments daringly mischievous and outrageously wild. His death is no loss to anybody, for he was a rank but amiable infidel, and a most dangerous person. The sooner those 'lights of thought,' who agree with him, go to the same place, the better will it be for both Church and State. We can well spare the whole crew of them, and shall hear of their departure, whether one by one or in a body, with calm satisfaction."

But if this be true, why wait for the slow and uncertain hand of Nature to remove all the remaining members of Mr. Mill's mental family? The flesh of heretics and dissenters in these days is no more proof against the physical weapons of Orthodoxy than it was in the glorious time of the Smithfield fires.

It is true that the "dangerous persons," the misbelievers of the "rank but amiable" type of the late Mr. Mill, for whose elimination the Church Journal so devoutly yearns, number, probably, in all Christendom, a good many millions. But that makes them so much the more dangerous, and the fire and sword of theological hate and intolerance cannot commence work upon them too soon.—New Orleans Times.

CHRISTIAN PERSECUTIONS.—The Jews have been persecuted, cruelly maltreated, and outraged, especially in Christian countries, they say; but they always forgot to add which class of people was treated any better. Arabs, Indians, Turks, and Christians were treated in the same manner. The peasants were the beasts of burden, the dogs, the chattel of the nobility, whom they whipped, flogged, mutilated, or killed at pleasure, as it was still the case a few brief years ago in Russia; and the peasants and serfs were orthodox Christians. The heretics and schismatics, tormented and roasted by the thousands, and the Protestants killed by Catholics, were all persecuted Christians. The knights in constant warfare with one another, and the crusaders, together with the flagellants, were also good Christians. Many more Christians than either Jews or Turks were persecuted, tormented, or slain by Christians. The lower classes in Christendom were always treated like outland dogs. Outside of England and Holland, it is not quite a century, that revolutions have commenced to ameliorate the condition of humanity; and since then the Jew, like the peasant, has recovered his rights. These are stubborn facts. Where was the "Religion of Love" all that time? Where was the "Christian civilization" during all these centuries of darkness? It is all vague phraseology. Civilization, the reign of justice and liberty, began with rebellion against the Church and the institutions established or sanctioned by her. Thomas Jefferson and his colleagues understood this well, and insisted upon the separation of State and Church, civil and religious liberty; which in clear words means, to restrain the Church, by the strong arm of justice, from such acts of violence as have always been committed under the holy garb of religion. This only proves that the Church never was and never could be the mother and nurse of modern civilization. She must naturally be intolerant and one-sided, which justice forbids. As long, therefore, as the Church was the supreme power, all classes of people, the Jew included, were persecuted and maltreated. Justice and freedom, in behalf of humanity, have stopped it. One must be stark blind to the facts of history not to see this.—The Liberator.

Many complain of short memory, of forgetfulness; few, however, know that they never learned to keep things in their memory. Whatever we know well and correctly, whatever we have grasped with our reason, is indelible. That which makes but a feeble impression on the mind, vanishes easily. People who never listen, never want to know, never exert their faculties to understand, never had anything in their memory to retain; hence their forgetfulness. One may forget details, but principles are fixed facts forever, if the mind has once grasped them. Those who do not want to know, do not wish to learn, feel no desire to understand, no inclination to become wiser and better, feel at last that their memory fails them; but there was nothing in it from the beginning worthy of retention.—The Liberator.

Isiah B. O'Neill was hanged in Atlanta yesterday, for the murder of Jas. Little, in September, 1871. A variation upon the ordinary gallows speech is quite noticeable in his remarks: "I hope to meet some of you in heaven," was one of his observations, and there was a painful directness in its application. That there were those among the spectators whom he could not expect to meet in heaven proves the low moral grade of many who voluntarily attend a hanging. Even this condemned felon could appreciate their perilous situation.—Brooklyn Eagle.

The farmer who, with his wife, last week called at a photographic gallery to have her taken, being desirous of getting the "life-like expression," observed: "Fasten your mind on something, or else you will laugh and spite the job. Think about early days, how your father got in jail, and your mother was an old scolder, and what you'd have been if I hadn't pitied you! Just fasten your mind on to that!" She didn't have any photographs taken that day.—Chicago Post.

A recent graduate in the Yale Theological Seminary was asked by a fellow theologian, "How he should preach in a community where there were a good many Universalists." "Oh," replied our Amherst boy, "give 'em hell."—Amherst Student.

A grocer asked an artist: "Is sculpture difficult?" The artist replied: "Why, bless you, no. You have only to take a block of marble, a mallet, and a chisel, and knock off all the marble you don't want."

It would only be an act of justice to broil Captain Jack on a gridiron over a slow fire; but to charge him with the authorship of "Betsey and I are Out," is cruelty unworthy of our civilization.—St. Louis Globe.

That bright genius who presides over the destinies of the Danbury News, in view of the approach of Lent, remarked that people in general were hurrying up to get their wickedness all in.

A judge in Indiana threatened to fine a lawyer for contempt of court. "I have expressed no contempt for the court," said the lawyer; "on the contrary, I have carefully concealed my feelings."

Mary F. Eastman says: "The frivolity and pointless talk of which you complain among women are but the rapid buzz of the wheel which has no regulation. It means power running to waste."

Advertisements.

GENERAL NOTICE.

On Aug. 8, 1872, I contracted for the two best advertising pages of THE INDEX for the current year. No advertisements objectionable to the editor to be taken." For terms apply to ANA K. BUTTS, 36 Dey St., New York.

No improper advertisements, no advertisements of patent medicines, and no advertisements known to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be hereafter admitted into THE INDEX. All advertisements accepted before this date will be allowed to run their time.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor. Toledo, O., June 21, 1873.

THE INSIDE HISTORY

OF THE INDEX ASSOCIATION.

By FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

This is a handsomely printed pamphlet of 54 pages, containing the full explanation of the recent "INDEX troubles" which was submitted to the stockholders of the Index Association at their Second Annual Meeting, June 7, 1873. It is hoped that every one who has read the statements of the other side will in fairness read this also. PRICE (postpaid), 25 cents. Address the Author, Toledo, Ohio.

A CHEAP OFFER!

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 cents.

The INDEX TRACT NO. 7, "Compulsory Education," is out of print, and therefore orders for it cannot be filled at present. But it is intended to reprint it before long, and all parties ordering a COMPLETE SET will be furnished with it without extra charge as soon as reprinted. Address THE INDEX, Toledo, Ohio.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF LEADING INDEX WRITERS,

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 35 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50. Address THE INDEX, Toledo, Ohio.

Free Religious Association.

The Report in pamphlet form, of the ANNUAL MEETING of the FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION for 1872, can be obtained by applying to the Secretary, WM. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass. It contains essays by John W. Chadwick, on "LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA;" by C. D. B. Mills, on the question, "DOES RELIGION REPRESENT A PERMANENT SENTIMENT OF THE HUMAN MIND, OR IS IT A PERISHABLE SUPERSTITION?" and by O. B. Frothingham, on "THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY;" together with the Report of the Executive Committee, and addresses and remarks by Dr. Bartol, A. B. Alcott, Lucretia Mott, Celia Burleigh, Horace Weaver, Alexander Loomis, and others. Price, 35 cents; in packages of five or more, 25 cents each.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

THE GOLDEN AGE.

Every Man and Woman who reads THE INDEX ought to read also The Golden Age, edited by Theodore Tilton. After fifteen years of experience on The Independent, Mr. Tilton two years ago established, on the interest of more liberal thought, The Golden Age,—a journal of his own, to which he gives his constant and toll-free attention, and which has already won a national reputation for honesty, courage, and brilliancy. Probably no other journal in America is so widely quoted from, both by those who agree, and those who disagree with it. Unlike any other weekly paper, either in America or England, it is unique and original in appearance, in thought, and in style. It abounds in brief and spicy paragraphs—shot like swift arrows hitting the mark. Its editorial discussions cover the whole field of current topics—whether religious, political, literary, social, or industrial. It does not pretend, or seek, or want to agree with its readers, or with the general popular opinion. It indulges in the luxury of free speech. It has a mind of its own, and is sometimes wrong—which makes it all the more novel, for it is almost the only journal of the American press that is ever wrong. But whether right or wrong, it is always good natured, and ever believes in fair play. It would be happy to make the acquaintance of the readers of THE INDEX; and though The Golden Age is in no sense a rival to THE INDEX, and does not undertake to do such a work as Mr. Abbot has embarked upon, yet it is fighting a battle for free thought in religion, and free speech in politics, and is conscientiously dedicated to the promotion of whatever helps forward the Emancipation of the Human Mind. Anybody who subscribes for Mr. Tilton's paper will get something to think about, and more than the money's worth. Enclose three dollars in an envelope (before you forget it), and address

THE GOLDEN AGE,

Box 2818,

New York City.

Cultured Free Thought.

THE INDEX.

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society. It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAHAM W. STEVENS and many able and distinguished contributors.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister and every thinking church member should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly expounder of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Professor MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America,—that such a journal should have been started and powerfully supported by the best minds of your country, is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany, though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $5.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address

THE INDEX,
Drawer 88, Toledo, Ohio.

NEW INDEX TRACT.

A STUDY OF RELIGION: THE NAME AND THE THING.

BY F. E. ABBOT.

As the entire edition of THE INDEX for March 8 (No. 167), with the exception of a small number reserved for binding, has been already exhausted, the above lecture can only be supplied in tract form. See advertisement of INDEX TRACTS. PRICE 10 cents; 13 copies for $1.00. Address THE INDEX, Toledo, Ohio.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. ABBOT, contains the "Fifty Affirmation" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," in a letter to the Editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used:—"I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I send them from my inmost heart; and I agree almost every word." New Edition. PRICE: 10 cents; 12 copies, $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. PRICE—5 cents; 12 copies, 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. PRICE—10 cents; 12 copies, $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. PRICE—10 cents; 12 copies, $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. ARTHUR B. BRADFORD, opposes the Proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. PRICE—10 cents; 12 copies, $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by PARKER PILLSBURY, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. PRICE—10 cents; 12 copies, $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. PRICE—5 cents; 12 copies, 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. PRICE—5 cents; 12 copies, 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. PRICE—5 cents; 12 copies, 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. ABBOT. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from 5 to 100 copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. PRICE—10 cents; 12 copies, $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two Essays by FRANCIS W. NEWMAN and F. E. ABBOT. PRICE—10 cents; 12 copies, $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. NEWMAN, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. PRICE—5 cents; 12 copies, 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Mindy of Religion: The Name and The Thing, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. PRICE—10 cents; 12 copies, $1.00.

Address

THE INDEX,
Drawer 88, Toledo, Ohio.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO., BANKERS, LEROY, MINNESOTA.

Money loaned on short time, or for a term of years, on unincumbered improved farms, at 12 per cent. per annum, interest net. Interest payable annually. All expenses for abstract of title and recording mortgage paid by borrower. We collect and remit to any part of the U. S. free of charge.

References—First National Bank, McGregor, Iowa; Gilchrist & Co., McGregor, Iowa; First National Bank, Austin, Minnesota; City National Bank, Chicago, Illinois; Allen, Stevens, & Co., New York City.

Write for a Price List to J. H. Johnston.

Breech-Loading Shot Guns, $40 to $300. Double Shot Guns, $5 to $150. Single Guns, $3 to $20. Rifles, $3 to $75. Revolvers, $6 to $25. Pistols, $1 to $8. Gun Material, Fishing Tackle, &c. Large discounts to dealers or clubs. Army Guns, Revolvers, etc., bought or traded for. Goods sent by express C. O. D. to be examined before paid for.

THE WAYS OF WOMEN

In Their Physical, Moral, and Intellectual Relations.

By A MEDICAL MAN. This is unquestionably one of the most remarkable books issued from the American press in many years. A most beautiful specimen of scientific and practical word-painting on themes of vital importance to every woman. A splendid chance for Agents. It makes an elegant 8vo vol. of 400 pp., on tinted paper, superbly bound. Price $2. Sent by mail on receipt of price. For territory and agents' terms, apply to the publisher, JOHN P. JEWETT & Co., 5 Dey St. N. Y.

REAL ESTATE SECURITIES,

paying 8 to 10 per cent. interest, or

Investments in Real Estate

In Chicago and Vicinity,

If judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The old

REAL ESTATE AND LOAN AGENCY

OF

ERNST PRUSSING,

143 Randolph St., - - CHICAGO.

(Established 1853)

Guarantees perfect title and ample security in all its Real Estate Loans.

First-class securities at rates on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge.

Real Estate Investments made on commission and on shares; taxes paid, &c.

Orders of capitalists and real estate owners respectfully solicited.

JESUS OF NAZARETH;

OR,

A TRUE HISTORY

OF THE

Man Called Jesus Christ,

EMBRACING

HIS PARABLES, HIS YOUTH, HIS ORIGINAL DOCTRINES AND WORKS, HIS CAREER AS A PUBLIC TEACHER AND PHYSICIAN OF THE PEOPLE.

ALSO,

THE NATURE OF THE GREAT CONSPIRACY AGAINST HIM; WITH ALL THE INCIDENTS OF HIS TRAGIC DEATH, GIVEN ON SPIRITUAL AUTHORITY, FROM SPIRITS WHO WERE CONTEMPORARY MORTALS WITH JESUS WHILE ON THE EARTH.

By Paul and Judas,

THROUGH

Alexander Smyth, Medium,

of Philadelphia, by the spirits taking possession of him about one hour in every twenty-four, usurping all his powers, giving a continued series of well connected scenes, presenting scenery, characters, and personages, dialogues and actions in their regular order and succession, embracing all the most important personages and the incidents which occurred during the sojourn of Jesus while upon earth. There was probably no book ever written in which such perfect life-pictures occur; every city and country village, every river, brook, and mountain, and scenery in general, is so vividly portrayed that an actual journey through the country could hardly be more interesting. The characters in this unexampled drama are so faithfully portrayed, that, as you are introduced to each in turn, you seem well acquainted and delighted with your company, and the many points of interest you are called to visit. The book is replete with interest from beginning to end, and had already passed through several editions when the plates were entirely destroyed in the Great Fire, since then we have had a very great demand for the work from our subscribers and the trade. The edition about to be issued will be far superior in mechanical appearance to any of its predecessors, and we shall print a large edition to enable us to supply standing orders and all new demands.

12 mo. 256 pages, cloth bound.

Price $2.00; postage free.

*For sale wholesale and retail by the Publishers, the Religio-Political Publishing House, Adams St. & 5th Av., Chicago.

N. B.—When you order, say you saw this in THE INDEX.

$5 to $20 per day! Agents Wanted! All classes of working people, of either sex, young or old, make more money at work for us in their spare moments or all the time than in anything else. Particulars Free. Address G. Stinson & Co., Portland, Me.

LOUIS BLACK,
194 Jefferson Ave., Detroit, Michigan.
MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN,
INVENTOR AND PROPRIETOR OF
Black's Patent Interchangeable Spectacles, and Self-Adjusting Spring Eye Glasses. Importer of all kinds of Optical Goods. The best Spectacles fitted to the Eyesight so as to improve it.

ARITHMETICAL CARDS & GAMES

Something entirely new. With them the drill of mental arithmetic is made a mere pastime; besides innumerable games can be played. Just the thing for Teachers and Pupils for instruction, and for everybody for amusement. Agents wanted everywhere. One Agents' pack, with book of instructions, sent postpaid on receipt of fifty cents. Address P. H. BATESON, Proprietor, Drawer 90, Toledo, Ohio.

Theodore Parker's Writings.

A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....$1.50

Sermons of THEISM, ATHEISM, and Popular Theology.....1.50

Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....1.50

Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional sermons, 3 vols.....3.00

The above sent post-paid on receipt of price by

BUTTS & DINSMORE,

36 DEY STREET, NEW YORK.

HISTORIC AMERICANS,

BY THEODORE PARKER.

Edited by O. B. Frothingham.

Containing lectures treating of FRANKLIN, WASHINGTON, ADAMS, and JEFFERSON. Of these lectures three were delivered as addresses, and made no slight sensation from the boldness and freedom with which the speaker treated his subjects, and the original and novel views which he took of their characters. Will be mailed post paid on receipt of the price, $1.50, by

BUTTS & DINSMORE,

36 DEY STREET, NEW YORK.

A GREAT OFFER.—Horace Waters & Son, 381 Broadway, New York, will dispose of 100 Pianos and Organs of first-class makers, including WATERS', at extremely low prices for cash, or part cash, and balance in small monthly payments. New 7-Octave first-class Pianos, all modern improvements, for $275 cash. Organs, $50 to $75. Double-Reed Organs, $100; 4-stop, $110; 8-stop, $125 and upwards.

WATERS' CONCERTO PARLOR ORGANS are the most beautiful in style and perfect in tone ever made. The Concerto Stop is the best ever placed in any Organ. It is produced by a third set of reeds peculiarly voiced, the effect of which is most charming and soul-stirring, while its imitation of the Human Voice is superb. Terms liberal. Illustrated Catalogues mailed for one stamp. A liberal discount to Ministers, Churches, Sunday-Schools, Lodges, etc.

AGENTS WANTED.

407 Broadway, N.Y.

NEAR Canal St.

BABCOCK

FIRE APPARATUS

EXTINGUISHERS,

HOOK & LADDER TRUCKS,

ENGINES & TANKS.

P. W. PARSONS,

Sec'y.

The Emerson Method,

For Reed Organs.

Lessons, Scales, Studies, Voluntaries, Introductions, Songs, Quartets, and large Collection of Choice Organ Music. By L. O. EMERSON and W. S. B. MATTHEWS, gentlemen of high musical culture, who have produced a thorough excellent method, filled with music which cannot fail to make the progress of the learner most agreeable, as it is sure to be rapid. Price $2.50.

THE RIVER OF LIFE.

The Publishers announce the near completion of this charming SABBATH SCHOOL SONG BOOK, to which more than Thirty of the very best writers and composers contribute. It will appear in July. Send orders early. Specimen pages free. Retail price, 35 cts.

The Organ at Home,

FOR REED ORGANS $2.50

Clarke's Dollar Instructor for Reed Organs.

Clarke's " " for Piano-forte.

Clarke's " " Violin.

Dealers will bear in mind these popular books, which will sell with the best.

O. Ditson & Co., C. H. Ditson & Co.,

BOSTON, 711 BROADWAY, N. Y.

LADIES!

Eureka Machine Twist,

50 and 100 Yard Spools,

AND THE

Eureka Button-Hole Twist,

10 Yard Spools,

ARE THE BEST IN USE.

For Sale at all Trimming Stores.

Iron in the Blood

THE PERUVIAN SYRUP Vitalizes the Blood, Tones up the System, Builds up the Broken-down, Cures Female Complaints, Dropsy, Debility, Humors, Dyspepsia, &c. Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy from weak, sickly, suffering creatures, to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial. Caution.—Be sure you get the right article. See that "Peruvian Syrup" is blown in the glass. Pamphlets free. Send for one. SETH W. FOWLE & SONS, Proprietors, Boston, Mass. For sale by druggists generally.

New Edition Nearly Ready.

MR. FROTHINGHAM'S NEW BOOK.

The Religion of Humanity,

By O. B. Frothingham.

Contents.

- I. Tendencies.
 - II. God.
 - III. Bible.
 - IV. Christ.
 - V. Atonement.
 - VI. Power of Moral Inspiration.
 - VII. Providence.
 - VIII. Moral Ideal.
 - IX. Immortality.
 - X. Education of Conscience.
 - XI. The Soul of Good in Evil.
 - XII. The Soul of Truth in Error.
- One vol., 12 mo. $1.50. Sent free on receipt of price. Address the Publishers,

BUTTS & DINSMORE,

36 DEY STREET, NEW YORK.

THE LIBERAL CHRISTIAN

FOR 1873.

HENRY W. BELLOWS, Editor.

Will endeavor, not only to maintain its present reputation as

ONE OF THE BEST WEEKLY JOURNALS OF

Religion, Literature, Science,

and Art

Now published in this country, but to fulfill, more completely than ever before, its part of the work of supplying the American people with the

Best Thought on the Highest and Most Vital Themes

Of both general and particular interest, in all departments of human life. To this end, special arrangements have been entered into with able writers and correspondents to keep the columns of THE LIBERAL CHRISTIAN supplied, during the year 1873, with a pleasant variety of good articles and letters on the most stirring topics of the day.

The several departments of the paper—FELLOWSHIP OF THE SPIRIT; OUR CONTRIBUTORS; SIGNS OF THE TIMES; ORIGINAL AND SELECTED ARTICLES; OUR LITERARY RECORD; EDITORIAL; THE WEEK'S NEWS—ECCLESIASTICAL, POLITICAL, AND GENERAL; CORRESPONDENCE; OUR BOYS' AND GIRLS; OUR SCIENTIFIC RECORD; THE FINE ARTS—will each receive the special care of the gentlemen and ladies under whose charge they have been placed; and no effort will be spared to provide A WEEKLY FAMILY JOURNAL Worthy of the Patronage of American Homes, and of the Enlightened Nineteenth Century.

Price of Subscription, $3 per Annum, Payable in Advance.

Upon application by letter, specimen copies will always be sent free.

Jos. N. Hallock, Publisher,

P. O. Box 6906.

114 Nassau Street, New York City.

THE COMMONWEALTH

LIFE GENTLEMEN of standing and ability (either in professional or mercantile pursuits) are desired in all parts of the country to represent this reliable company. Our plans of Insurance are simple, popular, and honest.

Address 178 Broadway, NEW YORK.

INS.

CO.

Are You Going to Paint?

THEN USE

The Averill Chemical Paint.

THE HANDSOMEST AND MOST DURABLE EXTERIOR PAINT.

Costs Less, and will Outwear any other.

Gen. Q. R. Smith, Sedalia, Mo., writes:—"Two coats of 'Averill' covered better, and looked finer, than three coats of lead and oil, with a coat of varnish thereon. I would not again use Lead and Oil were it given to me."

Levi Shaw, Trustee of the Society of Quakers, Mt. Lebanon, writes:—"The building painted with the Averill White Paint some three and a half years since, I have examined, and find it retains the gloss nearly if not quite as well as when first put on. It is the best paint we have ever used."

See Sample card of beautiful colors, and recommendations from owners of the finest residences in the country, furnished free, by the

EVERILL CHEMICAL PAINT CO.,

33 Burling Slip, New York,

and 118 Superior St., Cleveland, O.

CHRISTIANITY

AND

MATERIALISM;

The Doctrines of the one and the Principles of the other Presented in Contrast.

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Under the above heading this talented and popular exponent of Materialism presents an exhaustive review of the fundamental doctrines of Christianity, and opposes thereto in brilliant contrast the basic principles of Materialism.

The author's name is to the many who have heard his lectures, a sufficient guarantee of the excellence of this work.

The Publishers, desirous of obtaining for so important a publication a wide circulation, have fixed the price per copy at 15 cents; discounts on large orders. It is printed on tinted paper, in pamphlet form, and bound handsomely in covers. The edition, being limited, buyers will do well to send in their orders at once.

Address the Publishers,

BUTTS & DINSMORE,

36 DEY STREET, New York.

THE

BOSTON INVESTIGATOR,

THE OLDEST REFORM JOURNAL IN THE UNITED STATES.

Is published

EVERY WEDNESDAY,

AT

84 WASHINGTON STREET,

BOSTON, MASS.,

By JOSIAH P. MEXBUR.

EDITED BY HORACE SEAYER.

Price, $3.50 per annum. Single Copies, Seven Cents. Specimen Copies sent, on receipt of a Two-Cent Stamp to pay the postage.

The "INVESTIGATOR" is devoted to the liberal cause in Religion; or, in other words, to Universal Mental Liberty. Independent in all discussions, discarding superstitious theories of what never can be known, it devotes its columns to things of this world alone, and leaves the next, if there be one, to those who have entered its unknown shores. Believing that it is the duty of mortals to work for the interests of this world, it confines itself to things of this life only. It has just entered its 43d year, and asks for a support from those who are fond of sound reasoning, good reading, reliable news, anecdotes, science, art, and a useful Family Journal. Reader! please send your subscription for six months or one year; and if you are not satisfied with the way the "INVESTIGATOR" is conducted, we won't ask you to continue with it any longer.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Five Cents.

VOLUME 4.

TOLEDO, OHIO, JULY 26, 1873.

Whole No. 187.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; J. Gallion, Vice President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries; E. K. Thomas, Treasurer.
BOSTON, MASS.—J. R. Rogers, President; A. Davis, J. W. Smith, Vice Presidents; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries; J. A. F. Wilcox, Treasurer; R. H. Ranney, F. W. Clarke, H. B. Storer, Executive Committee.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; J. E. Curtis, Vice President; A. Giddings, Secretary; E. Wood, Treasurer; L. B. Crowell, M. A. Giddings, D. D. Holmes, Executive Committee.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; L. Magenhelm, Vice President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary; Wm. Fischer, Treasurer; A. C. Stowe, C. G. Hoadly, R. P. Thomson, Executive Committee.
TOLLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; B. Bruner, Vice President; E. M. Beckley, Secretary; A. W. Harbaugh, Treasurer; L. Westover, J. Bruner, W. Krause, Executive Committee.
VIRGANA, N. J.—L. Bristol, President; E. Dickinson, E. B. Duffey, Vice Presidents; E. G. Blaisdell, Secretary; S. M. Clute, Treasurer; John Gage, D. A. Russell, E. G. Blaisdell, D. L. Butler, A. C. Bristol, P. T. W. Campbell, Executive Committee.
JUNCTIONVILLE, N. H.—J. W. Eastman, President; Jns. H. Smith, Vice President; Isaac Baldwin, Treasurer; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
CLATON, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary; J. N. Haws, B. Pancoast, P. Julien, Executive Committee.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary; J. W. Watkins, Treasurer.
BREMEN, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; L. Brown, Vice President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary; C. R. Capin, Treasurer; A. D. Enos, E. O. Barnum, Betsey Brown, Executive Committee.

An Essay on Miracles.

BY DAVID HUME.

There is, in Dr. Tillotson's writings, an argument against the "real presence," which is as concise and elegant and strong as any argument can possibly be supposed against a doctrine so little worthy of a serious refutation. It is acknowledged on all hands, says that learned prelate, that the authority, either of the Scripture or of tradition, is founded merely on the testimony of the apostles, who were eye-witnesses to those miracles of our Savior, by which he proved his divine mission. Our evidence, then, for the truth of the Christian religion is less than the evidence for the truth of our senses; because, even in the first authors of our religion, it was no greater, and it is evident it must diminish in passing from them to their disciples; nor can any one rest such confidence in their testimony, as in the immediate object of his senses. But a weaker evidence can never destroy a stronger; and, therefore, were the doctrine of the Real Presence ever so clearly revealed in Scripture, it were directly contrary to the rules of just reasoning to give our assent to it. It contradicts sense, though both the Scripture and tradition, on which it is supposed to be built, carry not such evidence with them as sense; when they are considered merely as external evidences, and are not brought home to every one's breast by the immediate operation of the Holy Spirit.

Nothing is so convenient as a decisive argument of this kind, which must at least silence the most arrogant bigotry and superstition, and free us from their impertinent solicitations. I flatter myself that I have discovered an argument of a like nature, which, if just, will, with the wise and learned, be an everlasting check to all kinds of superstitious delusion, and consequently will be useful as long as the world endures. For so long, I presume, will the accounts of miracles and prodigies be found in all history, sacred and profane.

Though experience be our only guide in reasoning concerning matters of fact, it must be acknowledged that this guide is not altogether infallible, but in some cases is apt to lead us into errors. One who, in our climate should expect better weather in any week of June than in one of December, would reason justly and conformably to experience; but it is certain that he may happen in the event to find himself mistaken. However, we may observe that in such a case he would have no cause to complain of experience; because it commonly informs us beforehand of the uncertainty, by that contrariety of events, which we may learn from a diligent observation. All effects follow not with like certainty from their supposed causes. Some events are found, in all countries and all ages, to have been constantly conjoined together; others are found to have been more variable, and sometimes to disappoint our expectations; so that, in our reasonings concerning matter of fact, there are all imaginable degrees of assurance, from the highest certainty to the lowest species of moral evidence.

A wise man, therefore, proportions his belief to the evidence. In such conclusions as are founded on an infallible experience, he expects the event with the last degree of assurance, and regards his past experience as a full proof of the future existence of that event. In other cases he proceeds with more caution; he weighs the opposite experiments; he considers which side is supported by the greater number of experiments. To that side he inclines with doubt and hesitation; and when at last he fixes his judgment, the evidence exceeds not what we properly call probability. All probability, then, supposes an opposition of experiments and observations, where the one side is found to overbalance the other, and to produce a degree of evidence proportioned to the superiority. A hundred instances or experiments on one side, and fifty on another, afford a doubtful expectation of any event; though a hundred uniform experiments, with only one that is contradictory, reasonably beget a pretty strong degree of assurance. In all cases, we must balance the opposite experiments, where they are opposite, and deduct the smaller number from the greater, in order to know the exact force of the superior evidence.

To apply these principles to a particular instance, we may observe that there is no species of reasoning more common, more useful, and even necessary to human life, than that which is derived from the testimony of men, and the reports of eye-witnesses and spectators. This species of reasoning, perhaps, one may deny to be founded on the relation of cause and effect. I shall not dispute about a word. It will be sufficient to observe that our assurance in any argument of this kind is derived from no other principle than our observation of the veracity of human testimony, and of the usual conformity of facts to the reports of witnesses. It being a general maxim that no objects have any discoverable connection together, and that all the inferences which we can draw from one to another are founded merely on our experience of their constant and regular conjunction, it is evident that we ought not to make an exception to this maxim in favor of human testimony whose connection with any event seems, in itself, as little necessary as any other. Were not the memory tenacious to a certain degree; had not men commonly an inclination to truth and a principle of probity; were they not sensible to shame when detected in a falsehood,—were not these, I say, discovered by experience to be qualities inherent in human nature, we should never repose the least confidence in human testimony. A man delirious, or noted for falsehood and villainy, has no manner of authority with us. And as the evidence, derived from witnesses and human testimony, is founded on past experience, so it varies with the experience, and is regarded either as a proof or a probability, according as the conjunction between any particular kind of report and any kind of object has been found to be constant or variable. There are a number of circumstances to be taken into consideration in all judgments of this kind; and the ultimate standard by which we determine all disputes that may arise concerning them, is always derived from experience and observation. Where this experience is not entirely uniform on any side, it is attended with an unavoidable contrariety in our judgments, and with the same opposition and mutual destruction of argument as in every other kind of evidence. We frequently hesitate concerning the reports of others. We balance the opposite circumstances which cause any doubt or uncertainty; and when we discover a superiority on any side, we incline to it; but still with a diminution of assurance, in proportion to the force of its antagonist.

This contrariety of evidence, in the present case, may be derived from several different causes: from the opposition of contrary testimony; from the character or number of the witnesses; from the manner of their delivering their testimony; or from the union of all these circumstances. We entertain a suspicion concerning any matter of fact, when the witnesses contradict each other; when they are but few or of a doubtful character; when they have an interest in what they affirm; when they deliver their testimony with hesitation, or, on the contrary, with too violent asseverations. There are many other particulars of the same kind, which may diminish or destroy the force of any argument derived from human testimony.

Suppose, for instance, that the fact which the testimony endeavors to establish, partakes of the extraordinary and the marvellous; in that case, the evidence resulting from the testimony admits of a diminution greater or less in proportion as the fact is more or less unusual. The reason why we place any credit in witnesses and historians, is not derived from any connection which we perceive a priori between testimony and reality, but because we are accustomed to find a conformity between them. But when the fact attested is such a one as has seldom fallen under our observation, here is a contest of two opposite experiences, of which the one destroys the other as far as its force goes; and the superior can only operate on the mind by the force which remains. The very same principle of experience which gives us a certain degree of assurance in the testimony of witnesses, gives us also, in this case, another degree of assurance against the fact which they endeavor to establish; from which contradiction there necessarily arises a counterpoise, and mutual destruction of belief and authority.

I should not believe such a story were it told me by Cato, was a proverbial saying in Rome, even during the lifetime of that philosophical patriot. [Plutarch in Vita Catonis.] The incredulity of a fact, it was allowed, might invalidate so great an authority.

The Indian prince, who refused to believe the first relations concerning the effects of frost reasoned justly; and it naturally required very strong testimony to engage his assent to facts that arose from a state of Nature with which he was unacquainted, and which bore so little analogy to those events of which he had had constant and uniform experience. Though they were not contrary to his experience, they were not conformable to it. [See Note 1.]

But in order to increase the probability against the testimony of witnesses, let us suppose that the fact which they affirm, instead of being only marvellous, is really miraculous; and suppose, also, that the testimony, considered apart and in itself, amounts to an entire proof,—in that case there is proof against proof, of which the strongest must prevail, but still with a diminution of its force in proportion to that of its antagonist.

A miracle is a violation of the laws of Nature; and as a firm and unalterable experience has established these laws, the proof against a miracle, from the very nature of the fact, is as entire as any argument from experience can possibly be imagined. Why is it more than probable that all men must die; that lead cannot of itself remain suspended in the air; that fire consumes wood, and is extinguished by water,—unless it be that these events are found agreeable to the laws of Nature, and there is required a violation of these laws, or, in other words, a miracle to prevent them? Nothing is esteemed a miracle, if it ever happen in the common course of Nature. It is no miracle that a man seemingly in good health should die on a sudden; because such a kind of death, though more unusual than any other, has yet been frequently observed to happen. But it is a miracle that a dead man should come to life; because that has never been observed in any age or country. There must, therefore, be a uniform experience against every miraculous event, otherwise the event would not merit that appellation. And as a uniform experience amounts to a proof, there is here a direct and full proof from the nature of the fact against the existence of any miracle; nor can such a proof be destroyed, or the miracle rendered credible, but by an opposite proof which is superior. [See Note 2.]

The plain consequence is (and it is a general maxim worthy of our attention), "that no testimony is sufficient to establish a miracle, unless the testimony be of such a kind that its falsehood would be more miraculous than the fact which it endeavors to establish: and even in that case there is a mutual destruction of arguments, and the superior only gives us an assurance suitable to that degree of force which remains after deducting the inferior." When any one tells me that he saw a dead man restored to life, I immediately consider with myself whether it be more probable that this person should either deceive or be deceived, or that the fact which he relates should really have happened. I weigh the one miracle against the other; and according to the superiority which I discover, I pronounce my decision, and always reject the greater miracle. If the falsehood of his testimony would be more miraculous than the event which he relates, then, and not till then, can he pretend to command my belief or opinion.

[To be continued.]

NOTES.

Note 1. No Indian, it is evident, could have experienced that water did not freeze in cold climates. This is placing Nature in a situation quite unknown to him; and it is impossible for him to tell a priori what will result from it. It is making a new experiment, the consequence of which is always uncertain. One may sometimes conjecture from analogy what will follow; but still this is but conjecture. And it must be confessed that, in the present case of freezing, the event follows contrary to the rules of analogy, and is such as a rational Indian would not look for. The operations of cold upon water are not gradual, according to the degrees of cold; but whenever it comes to the freezing point, the water passes in a moment from the utmost liquidity to perfect hardness. Such an event, therefore, may be denominated extraordinary, and requires a pretty strong testimony to render it credible to people in a warm climate; but still it is not miraculous, nor contrary to uniform experience of the course of Nature in cases where all the circumstances are the same. The inhabitants of Sumatra have always seen water fluid in their own climate, and the freezing of their rivers ought to be deemed a prodigy; but they never saw water in Moscow during the winter, and therefore they cannot reasonably be positive what would there be the consequence.

Note 2. Sometimes an event may not in itself seem to be contrary to the laws of Nature, and yet if it were real it might, by reason of some circumstances, be denominated a miracle; because in fact it is contrary to these laws. Thus if a person claiming a divine authority should command a sick person to be well, a healthful man to fall down dead, the clouds to pour rain, the winds to blow; in short, should order many natural events which immediately follow upon his command,—these might justly be esteemed miracles, because they are really, in this case, contrary to the laws of Nature. For if any suspicion remain that the event and command concurred by accident, there is no miracle and no transgression of the laws of Nature. If this suspicion be removed, there is evidently a miracle, and a transgression of these laws; because nothing can be more contrary to Nature than that the voice or command of a man should have such an influence. A miracle may be accurately defined, a transgression of a law of Nature by a particular volition of the Deity, or by the interposition of some invisible agent. A miracle may either be discoverable by men or not. This alters not its nature and essence. The raising of a house or a ship into the air is a visible miracle. The raising of a feather, when the wind wants ever so little of a force requisite for that purpose, is as real a miracle, though not so sensible with regard to us.

The petition of 3,000 clergymen from the Southern Province for some change in either the rubric or the damnable clauses of the Athanasian Creed, "so that the Creed in its present form shall no longer remain a necessary part of the public worship of the Church of England," has been presented to the Archbishop of Canterbury by the Deans of Canterbury and Chester. The list enclosed fourteen deans, twenty-five archdeacons, one hundred and ninety cathedral dignitaries, eighty-one masters and fellows of college at Oxford and Cambridge, and various other notables. Of these petitioners 2,159 are indifferent as to whether the change be made in the rubric or the damnable clauses, or both; 421 desire the alteration of the rubric only; 218 ask that the use of the Creed be optional; 203 for its entire disuse in public worship; and 292 request that a change be made in the damnable clauses. The two deans who presented the petition wished it to be distinctly understood that a gloss upon the Creed like that adopted concerning the baptismal service by the American bishops, by which its obvious meaning should be officially explained away, and a Pickwickian sense put upon it, would not do at all. The petitioners would be satisfied with less than a modification of the Creed, or a change in the rubric which renders its use obligatory. One would think that a palpable falsehood might be got out of the liturgy of a Christian church without all this fuss; but the ways of ecclesiastical governments are sometimes mysterious.—Independent.

[Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1873, by F. E. ARBOTT, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.]

PAUL GOWER.

A RATIONALISTIC STORY OF ENGLISH AND AMERICAN LIFE.

CHAPTER XXIV.—(Continued.)

Then the brick and mortar of the British Babylon are apt to lie heavy on the soul in another respect: one may easily sojourn in it until he feels as if the world contained nothing else—eternal streets. Leigh Hunt asserts that there is scarcely one thoroughfare, even in the "city" proper, from some part of which a tree may not be discerned; and I do not forget the unrivalled parks, agreeable squares and gardens, and other arboreal delights hid away in unsuspected holes and corners; but despite all these alleviations, there is no disputing the predominance of the almost monopolist builder. We have all read of veritable cockneys of the alums and alleys, who, on their first view of the sea, have mistaken it for green fields, so ignorant were they of external Nature; and cannot doubt that there are thousands of unfortunates in the great metropolis, who live and die in the pitifullest estrangement from the panorama of God's own painting which is spread out beyond that dim pall of smoke closing their horizon—verdant meadows, shining rivers, forests beautiful in alternate shadow and sunlight, and a broad, free ocean, stretching away to fair, far-off countries. In no other capital are you so completely shut off from the works of His hand. Elia's predilections, together with those of Dr. Johnson, entirely ignore this part of the subject; besides they did not live in a London covering an area of six hundred and eighty-seven square miles. Carlyle's encomium of it to Emerson, that "it turns out good men," is high praise—the highest, perhaps, that can be awarded—but beside the present question. It is easier to respect, to admire, to wonder at, than to like, London.

To speak of Paris in its present anomalous condition were irrelevant; but as it was, so it is to be presumed it will be again: defeat, revolution, anarchy even, cannot change the character of a people, or do more than modify and develop their peculiarities. If then, man were but an irresponsible creature, and the gratification of his appetites, tastes, and inclinations the sole aim and end of his existence, the bright and brilliant capital on the banks of the Seine would, in its normal state, be the most delightful place to live in the world. It was not only the most splendid and attractive city in Europe, the Vanity Fair of the nineteenth century, "kept" (like Bunyan's) "all the year long," but also the metropolis of art and wit, the brain of France, which never even during the garish putrescence of that foul Second Empire quite prostituted itself to base uses. But these were notoriously predominant, and so exaggerated that it seemed as if a large class of Parisian authors, journalists, dramatists, and actors, had conspired to revive Phallus-worship as the religion of the nation. I do not need to be reminded, as we were by poor Prevost Paradol, that there was even then (as now) "a reserve of national good sense and national spirit" in the inhabitants of fair Lutetia—nay, of good morals also—though British Philistinism ignored the first and last; but it cannot be denied that, with the majority of them, the idea of self-indulgence dominated all others. Their capital was, par excellence, the glorified shrine of all sensuality, luxury, dissoluteness, and profligacy; their palaces and picture-galleries, theatres and places of public promenade, though the finest extant, served mainly, as Carlyle wrote of the Opera, "but as the vehicle of a kind of service which one judged to be Paphian rather," and "behind the glitter stalked the shadow of Eternal Death." Paris is pagan, recognizing no higher belief than that man ought to amuse himself—and make money that he may amuse himself. Sardinapalus' inscription on his extemporized cities of Onchialus and Tarsus—"Eat, drink, and love; the rest is worth nothing"—sums up an average Parisian's theory of life: a new, flash, brilliantly-lighted boulevard where he can sit, for any number of consecutive hours, over his coffee and petit verre, on the broad, scarcely-dried asphaltum sidewalk, and see the monde pass by, is his ideal of civilization; and one which nations with a better mixture of blood in them than the French, ought to be ashamed of accepting. Rather give us Cheapside at high noon; or even Thames Street! All this without disparagement of the admitted finer qualities of its lively population who wallowed in excesses, even to nausea, under the rule of the third Napoleon, and are now undergoing the bitterest physicking in consequence; though, so far as I see, without any signs of amendment. Their metropolis, though not perhaps the wickedest in Europe—for Rome, Vienna, and Stockholm may dispute that bad pre-eminence—is certainly the most shameless. The fantastic monsters and brutified stone demons whose leering, scowling, grotesque, sleepless faces have, night and day, for so many centuries watched over Paris from the towers of Notre Dame, might be regarded as the city's tutelary genii.

Now New York cannot pretend to vie with London in importance, or with Paris in splendor; and, as already conceded, halts a long way short of what it might, what it ought, to attain to, were it not subject to atrocious chronic misgovernment by relays of the sorriest chronic misgovernment, democracy, and (until recently) endured by a long-suffering community with that astounding patience which is so curious a part of American character. It is wicked enough, Heaven knows! and inevitably so; being both a big city and a seaport, and also the involuntary receptacle of two-thirds of the scum and sediment of the great gulf-stream of emigration, in its progress westwards. It ought to be safer, cleaner, better paved, better lighted, better every way; granted all and several—but what then? Even New York mayors, aldermen, landlords, fires, murders, politicians, rowdies, Irish and other nuisances, human and miscellaneous, cannot spoil the bright, handsome metropolis at the mouth of the Hudson, or do more than alloy its natural, inseparable attractions. They have performed this so energetically, indeed, especially of late, that one is led to hope for their ultimate extinction; that the recent reforms are not merely spasmodic, but indicative of the advent of a new régime, in which men of honor, probity, and intelligence shall assume the responsibilities they have hitherto selfishly neglected, and give New York the government it wants. Then, and not till then, and not until ignorance shall be disfranchised—deprived of the terrible power of voting to its own hurt, and that of the community, by the establishment of some educational qualification (say the capacity to read)—will the Empire City obtain fair play, and deserve a much higher eucomium than that which I am now about to submit to the reader.

Approached by a beautiful bay, and islanded by rivers compared with which the Thames is a sewer and the Seine a canal, the site of New York is absolutely unrivalled: it lies basking on the water like a huge turtle sunning itself—but very far from asleep—and its appearance besseems its location. A brisker, busier, finer city of its size (quite large enough to satisfy anybody's reasonable predilections, with even taking into account its spilling-over of Brooklyn, Williamsburg, Hoboken, and Jersey City) it would be hard to find; it is the only one in the United States which can put in a serious claim to metropolitanism. Boston is half-a-dozen particularly crooked English country-towns rendered ornamental, removed to the seaside, and marching on its environs by means of "caterpillar-bridges." Philadelphia is a big village, built on the plan of a couple of gridirons laid crosswise. Baltimore, though handsome, cannot be voted more than second-rate; and Washington is the dreariest of national failures. But New York, with its houses of bright-red brick, white marble, and "brown stone;" its magnificent wholesale and retail stores, enormous hotels, and railway depôts, fine newspaper offices, churches, banks, and theatres; its marts, wharves, warehouses, and shipping; its suicidal mansard roofs; its streets, reminding one rather of Paris than of London, but being in truth like neither, but distinctly American, and exhibiting a characteristic and almost freakish variety of taste in architecture, which, however questionable, is at any rate pleasanter than the insipid uniformity of both those capitals; with its odd contrasts—"the business quarter finished and substantial, bearing the impress of money-making; the fashionable localities, erected for show, with the legible stamp of the successful millionaire; the mansions of the rich in close proximity with the shanties of the Irish squatter; gorgeous carriages rolling along at one end of an avenue, and at the other geese feeding upon the grass;" with more trees in it than you will find in a month's walk about London (of course excepting the parks, which our shallowness of soil will never allow us to rival); its picturesque, bizarre, irresistible Broadway, striking alike in the grandeur of its buildings, the brilliancy of its coloring, and its bustle and gaiety; its stylish Fifth Avenue, erst the exclusive headquarters of the "upper ten," now half conquered by invading hotels, stores, carriage-warehouses, restaurants, clubs, tailors' and print-sellers' shops, picture-galleries, dancing-academies, and what not; with its broad boulevards (only partially constructed, it is true, but of the goodliest promise—one hundred and fifty feet wide, and with trees on each side); its beautiful Central Park (exceeding Hyde in extent, containing some old forest trees, plenty of huge boulder-rocks, arbors, water, and statues)—New York, with the glorious Hudson ending all its transverse thoroughfares, and telegraph-wires spanning the glad, bright American sky in every direction, entirely unbesmirched by the villainous coal-smoke of the British metropolis, and needing none of the periodical scraping and painting by which the Parisians contrive to keep their show-streets handsome (the by-ones are always shabby enough)—New York has all the requirements of a capital, except perhaps a sufficiency of main thoroughfares, which imperfection, however, American ingenuity is doing its best to remedy; nay, turning to a positive advantage, of which hereafter. Its cheery collective aspect commends itself to the stranger at first sight: coming from Europe he instinctively infers that life must needs be brighter, pleasanter, less compulsorily exacting than in the Old World, though the new civilization be also at high pressure; a conclusion in many respects justified by experience. Viewed beneath its almost too fervid sunshine, which appears as unmitigated by the softening medium of atmosphere as most photographic pictures (the air is more transparent than that of Paris, and presents everything in as sharply-defined outline), it dazzles like a bold, bright beauty, dressed, if not in the best of taste, yet with a breadth of effect and dazzling recognition of color in harmony with her features and semi-tropical complexion.

* From the N. Y. Tripted, condensing the observations of Mr. W. F. Rae (special commissioner of the Daily News, in Westward by Rail—one of the best and most appreciative of books on modern America.

And its social characteristics are appropriate. It is the most free-and-easy of places: nowhere else is the right to "do as you please" (a popular declaration of independence generally intensified in the nervous phraseology of its inhabitants by an inadmissible adjective) so universally recognized or less curbed by authority. In fact, the expression epitomizes the national character—which here demands a paragraph or so in correction of certain European misrepresentations, before I speak of its liveliest development in the shape of the genuine New Yorker.

For Heaven's sake, or at least that of common sense and a mutual understanding, is it not time to have done, at once and for all, with that pernicious nonsense and prejudice which both Englishmen and Americans have too long tolerated, if not cherished, with regard to each other, and which has, instead of the truth about them, substituted in the popular imagination merely the grossest caricatures of their exceptional peculiarities? There is no use shirking the fact, or begging the question by voting the misrepresentation mutual (which I shall speak of presently). Englishmen have assuredly under-estimated Americans to an extent of which they were quite unconscious until the late civil war disclosed the shameful spectacle of a large minority of them—and those arrogating superiority of culture and intelligence—instinctively taking the wrong side and vehemently aiding, abetting, and sympathizing with perhaps the worst cause that ever precipitated its own destruction. In consequence, instead of being as we ought the best of friends, brothers in hopes and aspirations, partners in one great destiny—in fact a single nation—there is, on one hand, a conviction of bitter injustice which it may yet take years to eradicate; and on the other—what shall I say?—a wish to condone the past and do better for the future.

Of course all prejudice originates in ignorance and intolerance; a conceit of our own superiority, and an involuntary assumption that everything which differs from our standard must be wrong. It finds its last exemplification in Leech's pitman: "Bill, 'ere's a stranger—'ave 'arf a brick at 'im." What a deal of brick-throwing has there been between the United States and Great Britain, and to what mischievous purpose; for our very affinities and resemblances have made us more sensitive to the injury! "Of all quarrels, family quarrels are accounted to be the most exacting; and the reason in general why they are so—if the parties were but oftener aware of it—is the same which ought to render them the most forgiving; for it is but affection inverted; affection the more wounded, the more it thinks affection its due."² This honestly describes what of real feeling against Englishmen existed in the best class of Americans anterior to the war; and though, from various causes, there was a quasi-Anglophobia extant among the community, it involved but little animosity except what was infused into it by the Irish, with whom hatred of England is a sine qua non of patriotism. English sentiments partook far more of the nature of ignorance, pure and simple, and misapprehension; both being quite as profound and self-satisfied as those which Frenchmen entertained of their insular neighbors—nay, they even plumed themselves on the prejudice as a mark of genuine British superiority. In fact, both nations had got into a false position towards, a bad habit of disparaging, each other, intensified by the affinities above-mentioned. With the American demagogue, the stump-speaker, the "rowdy" editor, England was always the bet-nor of the great Republic; the hot-bed of Toryism, the paradise of oligarchy, the country of class-legislation—a land which in every respect served as foil to and conflicted with his own, whose glorious mission it was to uphold and develop to the uttermost the doctrine of the Rights of Man. The ascription of all this, enormously inflated by "Runcombe" and "spread-eagleism," provoked the retaliation of English social dislike, sarcasm, and misrepresentation; they lent a willing ear to the superficial and ingenious gentlemen who told them that Americans were a tobacco-chewing, exhorting, whittling race, who wore short, striped trousers, swallow-tailed coats, thick boots, straw hats, and bowie-knives, talked through their noses in the amazing jargon of Halliburton's "Clockmaker," imbibed drinks with strange, slangy names, sat on their shoulder-blades with their feet on mantelpieces, and were, in brief, sordid and offensive and ridiculous ruffians, whose disagreeableness was only relieved by their absurdity. This deplorable rubbish a certain class of exclusives, ingrain Tories and reactionists, had a special interest in fostering—for what a rebuke to them was the giant Republic, what a fatal protest against their very existence, and sure guarantee of their ultimate extinction!—and naturally the feeling permeated downwards. All the uninformed and unthinking, all the snobs and supercilious, the cheap imitators of the aristocracy and gentry among the middle classes, echoed the cry; which few cared to unlearn, and which, kept up by their press and literature in general, prepared the way for worse, until opportunity furnished occasion, revived almost extinct ill-will in Americans, and "undid the healing work of fifty years."³ Fortunately other influences have been at work since the close of the civil war, which first opened English eyes to what they always respect—the power of a possible enemy. A change has now come over both nations. They are discovering that the preposterous Yankee of their imagination is a brave, intelligent, and generous people who fought, not as they supposed for dollars or empire, but for freedom, mankind—nay, the cause of civilization itself; while we are learning that "the brain and heart and muscle of England were at our side," after all; and only "the dress-suit and stomach and digestive apparatus" in opposition. A pity that the latter should have needed all the counter-action of the former to prevent a collision.

A new people, in a New World, "heir to all old civilizations, founders of that new one, which, if all the prophecies of the human heart are not lies, is to be the noblest, as it is the last;" the Americans would be unworthy of their origin and history, to say nothing of their destiny, did they try to be only Englishmen; or attempt to stretch the old wardrobe of forms and habits (which they, themselves, are all the time outgrowing) to the dimensions of their robust national existence. Race, if it be vital, must progress and develop new phases. Forty millions of Americans have a right to differ from a nation in which they fail to see the superiority to themselves, especially when (as happens as often as not) the difference is in their favor. There must be the completest concession of this, before it is possible to arrive at a correct estimate of them. And, besides, the difference is less than the resemblance to Englishmen. "You know," said Thackeray to an American friend, while walking the streets of Philadelphia, "what a virtue-proud people we English are? We think we have got it all to ourselves. Now that which most impresses me here is, that I find homes as good as ours; firesides like ours; domestic virtues as gentle and pure; the English language, though the accent be a little different, with its home-like melodies, and the Common Prayer Book in your families. I am more struck by pleasant resemblances than by anything else." And again the generous novelist wrote from Europe: "You are more tender-hearted, romantic, sentimental than we are. I keep on telling this to our fine people here, and have so belabored your country with praise in private that I sometimes think I go too far. I keep back some of the truth; but the great point to try and ding into the ears of the great, stupid, virtue-proud English public is that there are folks as good as they in America." A statement in the main true, whatever discrepancies (to be suggested in the course of this novel, and generally with native authority) may exist to the contrary; but which Britons seem to find it hard to realize.

[To be continued.]

² James Russell Lowell in The Biglow Papers.

³ Thomas Hughes, at the Boston Music Hall, October, 1870.

⁴ O. W. Holmes, in the Professor at the Breakfast-Table.
⁵ W. B. Reed, of the city in question, author of a pamphlet containing some interesting reminiscences of the great humorist, entitled Humor in Memoriam, and printed privately in 1864.

The Interior says: "The last new religious wonder in New York is the new church of St. Bartholomew. It puts all the fine churches in the city into the shade. It is radiant with gold and crimson. The leading pews were knocked off at auction last week, $4,500 being the leading figure. It would be a burlesque to put over the door of that church—'To the poor the Gospel is preached.' 'Why don't you bid off one of our high pews?' said an earnest vestryman to a New York merchant. 'I bought a farm the other day for less than what you ask for one of those little pews,' was the answer."

The Sanctuary of Superstition.

THE SINNER'S DEATH LEAP.—There is, in a forest in Germany, a place they call the "deer-leap"—two crags about eighteen yards apart; between them a fearful chasm. This is called the "deer-leap," because once a hunter was on the track of a deer; it came to one of these crags; there was no escape for it from the pursuit of the hunter, and, in utter despair, it gathered itself up, and in the death agony attempted to jump across. Of course, it fell and was dashed on the rocks far beneath. Here is a path to heaven. It is plain; it is safe. Jesus marks it out for every man to walk in. But here is a man who says, "I won't walk in that path; I will take my own way." He comes on up until he confronts the chasm that divides his soul from heaven. Now, his last hour has come, and he resolves that he will leap that chasm, from the heights of earth to the heights of heaven. Stand back, now, and give him full swing, for no soul ever did that successfully. Let him try. Jump! jump! He misses the mark, and he goes down, depth below depth, "destroyed without remedy." Men! angels! devils! what shall we call that place of awful catastrophe? Let it be known forever as the SINNER'S DEATH-LEAP.
 —Rev. T. Devitt Thimagne.

NO MIXTURE IN ETERNITY.—In the other world there is all pure love or all pure wrath; all sweet or all bitter; without all pain, or without all ease; without all misery, or without all happiness: not partly at ease, and partly in pain; partly happy, and partly miserable; but all the one or the other. This life is a middle place between heaven and hell; and here we partake of some good and some evil. No judgment on this side hell, upon the worst of men, but there is some mercy mixed with it; for it is mercy that they are yet on this side hell: and no condition on this side heaven but there is some evil mixed with it; for, till we get to heaven we shall have sin in us. In heaven all are good, in hell all are bad; on earth some good, but more bad. In hell misery, without mixture of mercy or of hope: they have no mercy, and that is bad; and they can hope for none, and that is worse. While they be in time, they are pitied. God pities them, and Christ pities them, and good men pity them and pray for them and weep over them; but when time is past, all pity will be past, and they in misery without pity to all eternity. "The same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Holy Lamb; and the smoke of their torment ascendeth forever and ever; and they have no rest day nor night." Then, for the Lord's sake, for your soul's sake, I beseech you, if you have any dread of God, and fear of hell, and desire of heaven—any care whither you must go—take no rest night or day in time, till you have secured your everlasting happy state, that you may have everlasting rest night and day in eternity; or, that you may pass into that eternity where it is always day and no night, and not into that where it shall be always night and never day; and never forget that Jesus is the only door to heaven.

Contributions or stamps, to pay for these insertions in this and 145 other newspapers (which are supposed to have three million readers weekly), will be thankfully received by the Rev. J. W. Carter, 7 Avenue Road, Bow, London, E.
 —Lloyd's Weekly Newspaper (London, Feb. 23, 1873).

An Athol, Mass., man recently had a severe fit of illness, during which he experienced religion. One day during convalescence the minister called, and prayed, followed by the sick man, who then said to the clergyman: "I am not much used to praying, and I don't know as that prayer was exactly grammatical."—Springfield Republican.

CASH RECEIPTS.

For the week ending July 10, 1873.

Jacob Jackson, 75 cts.; C. S. Palmer, 33; Arthur M. Knapp, 33; R. E. Sheffield, 31; Chas. A. Hayden, 31; Lewis D. Jones, 33; Francis Alger, 33; Josiah Gooding, 33; Josephine S. Tilton, 33; A. B. Stanton, 33; M. R. Wilson, 50 cts.; John Mitchell, 50 cts.; J. R. Beverley, 75 cts.; E. L. Bent, 33; Deacon Mundy, 25; C. W. Tennant, 31; Charles A. Norton, 33; T. D. Elliott, 31; Lydia M. Plummer, 31; J. E. Paige, 25 cts.; C. H. Greene, 31; B. A. Underwood, 50 cts.; M. H. Plunkett, 50 cts.; Oliver P. Ives, 31; Julia M. Baxter, 31; Joseph Singer, 33; R. M. Watson, 31; Wm. H. Dwight, 31; W. H. Crowell, 33; Giles A. Adams, 33; W. B. Studley, 33; Jas. McArthur, 33; A. Warren Kelsey, 33; Nath'l Seaver, Jr., 33; Wash. Cross, 33; S. H. Cuddehop, 33; S. G. Finney, 31; F. B. Gregory, 10 cts.; J. H. Sherwood, 50 cts.; T. W. Higginson, 75 cts.; John Briggs, 33; Geo. Eker, 33; Preston Day, 33; D. R. S. Pryse, 31; Mary B. Field, 50 cts.; Geo. Allen, 31; Sara J. Derby, 33; Martin Steffen, 33; Harry Hoover, 31; Daniel Faust, 31; J. T. Dickens, 31; Isaac Betz, 25 cts.; W. E. Lukens, 25 cts.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Postage on this index is five cents per quarter, dating from receipt of the first number, payable in advance at the place of delivery.

Leigh Hunt, in an introductory letter to an American edition of his Poetical Works. Boston, 1857.

The Index.

JULY 26, 1873.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B. No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS BROTHINGHAM, THOMAS WERTWORTH, HINGINSON, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HOLLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, ROY. CHARLES VOTEST (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), Rev. MONCURE D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS TO INDEX STOCK.

Mrs. F. W. Christern, New York City,	One Share	$100
Rich'd B. Westbrook, Sonman, Pa.	"	100
R. C. Spencer, Milwaukee, Wis.	Two "	200
R. W. Howes, Boston,	Mass. One "	100
Chas. W. Story,	"	100

DOLLAR DONATION FUND.

This fund is to be used, first, in meeting any deficiency in current expenses that may result from the recent "Index troubles," and, secondly, in such other ways as the editor shall find most advantageous for the paper. All appropriations will be reported to the Directors.

Acknowledged with thanks for the week ending July 10:—

$1.00 each—Benj. E. Hopkins, Lewis G. Jones, Preston Day, Matt. H. Ellis, B. Brinton, Carl H. Horseb, Mrs. C. H. Horseb, T. L. Smith, E. B. Thomson, L. Everett, J. H. York, Lizzie E. Dorr, Wm. Sterns, S. H. Dame, Joseph Hayes, Helen E. Perkins, Samuel Drew, Mrs. R. Thomson, George Folsom, Z. S. Wallingford; $2.00—Mrs. S. A. Woods; $5.00 each—S. & H. Cole, Sarah Einerson.

"Every great and commanding movement in the annals of the world," says Emerson, "is the triumph of enthusiasm." Yes, but it must be enthusiasm for what is intrinsically "great and commanding." Enthusiasm without ideas cannot lift a pin; give it intelligence, and it lifts the world.

"PEACE ON EARTH."

Is it really possible that the principle of arbitration, as a substitute for war, in the settlement of national quarrels, has made so much headway as seems to be indicated by the action of Parliament on the eighth of July? The motion of Mr. Henry Richard, proposing concerted action by the great powers for the purpose of improving international law, and establishing arbitration as the recognized means for the settlement of differences, is one of the most cheering signs of the time, when the fact is appreciated that such a motion could actually be carried in the House of Commons, even by the casting vote of the Speaker. Four millions of men are kept permanently under arms in Europe, thereby withdrawing from productive industry labor which is estimated as worth $1,250,000,000, and involving an annual taxation of $2,000,000,000, and an annual payment of war debts of $750,000,000 interest. Add to this the depopulating emigration, the embarrassment of national finances, and the incalculable private demoralization which are caused by the enormous military establishments of the European powers, and it will be seen from what mountainous burdens Europe would be relieved by the universal adoption of the arbitration principle. It is too much to hope that the monarchical governments which are based on these military establishments will ever voluntarily adopt a principle which would overthrow them; but it is very clear that sooner or later the people will rise in insurrection against the oppression now entailed on them by the ambition of their rulers. Who wonders at the rapidly growing strength of the Internationals, or the excesses into which they may plunge, when the above facts are candidly considered? Not until arbitration supplants war, will the grinding poverty of the multitudes be relieved, or the world become what it ought to be—the happy home of a race at peace with itself and in earnest for all that tends to elevate its own condition. Speed the day!

THE "CHRISTIAN PARTY."

Right on the heels of a recent triumph of the Christianizers in Pennsylvania, by which a recognition of "God in the Constitution" was carried against active opposition in the Constitutional Convention of that State, comes the announcement of a new "Christian Party" in the State of New York, the object of which is the enactment and enforcement of more stringent Sunday laws, "aimed especially at the Germans." The New York World declares that the temperance and sectarian issues are to be vigorously worked this autumn in that State in behalf of the Republican party, and thus describes three different organizations even now active in the field:—

"1. There is a temperance party charged to work up the temperance question, the leaders of which are looking for office from the hands of the Republican party.

"2. There is a prohibition party organized and at work to enforce this question to the return point; and that, too, is being managed by the Republicans.

"3. In April last there was organized in Albany, under the name of a Christian party, a movement for the enactment of Puritan laws in regard to Sunday, aimed especially at the Germans, who spend that day in recreation. A second meeting in this movement was held in Utica in May, and a call was issued for a State Convention to be held in Syracuse in September. Since the meeting of the temperance and prohibition convention at Albany, at which prominent Republicans and officials in that party promised to carry out and enforce all that the prohibitionists desired, a consultation has been had with the leaders of the Sunday Puritan movement, when it was decided that, in order to hold the German vote with the Republican party this fall, so as to secure success, it was best not to hold the Puritan convention in September, but to work secretly until after election, and then hold the convention in time to operate upon the next legislature. Secret circulars have therefore been sent out to all parties connected with the movement, announcing the programme and the postponement of the State Convention until December."

It is possible that this story is a mere partisan invention, a trick devised for the purpose of detaching the Germans from the Republican party in the autumn elections. If not, it is one more proof of the increasing tendency on the part of politicians to appeal to religious prejudice and intolerance for the sake of carrying their own ends,—one more proof, therefore, of the growing strength of religious prejudice and intolerance in the minds of a formidable portion of the American people. It is not free thought alone which is spreading; bigotry spreads too. The advantage, nay, the necessity, of organizing Liberal Leagues will by degrees force itself on the attention of every one who values the preservation of religious liberty and desires its enlargement. The work of THE INDEX, as a paper devoted not only to the development of liberal thought but also to the organization of liberal forces in society, must be increasingly important as time goes on; and now is the hour to ensure its usefulness hereafter by transplanting it to Boston or New York.

SCIENCE.

The word science has come, in popular usage, to have somewhat of a narrow significance. The word is commonly employed to designate one department of human knowledge,—that of physical or material things. Those who claim that human knowledge embraces, and can embrace, only physical and material things, of course would insist that the word science is not susceptible of any such special significance, but that it designates human knowledge in general. These however would seem to make a vast assumption, and to go ahead of proof. The word science, as commonly used, means physical science; and in this usage I believe that it does, as another says, "represent but one-half of the universe." While waiting for good and sufficient proof to the contrary, I strongly incline to the conviction that only one-half of the universe is physical or material. What the other half is I do not know; but I am just as certain that no one else knows that it is not mental or spiritual.

Now science, in its largest sense, I suppose to mean true knowledge; and in this sense I suppose it to represent not one-half of the universe but the whole of it—physical and mental, material and spiritual. Science is our true knowledge of anything and everything—our true knowledge of mind and of matter, of the laws of the spiritual and the laws of the material universe. Whatever false knowledge, or imperfect and partial knowledge we have of anything, that is unscientific so far. He is the scientific man who knows, or who seeks to know by scientific methods, and who never lets his belief go ahead of his knowledge. He may guess, he may imagine, he may hope, he may expect many precious and beautiful things that he does not know (Heaven be praised that we all do), and so long as he properly discriminates between his guesses or his imaginings and his knowledge, he is not unscientific; but the instant, upon any basis of imperfect or partial or false knowledge, he begins to generalize and dogmatize, he becomes unscientific, no matter whether he is a so-called man of science or a theologian. He is scientific who sticks to facts as the basis of belief, as much in "science" as in religion, or anything else. Many "men of science" are as dogmatic as others. They announce conclusions before all the facts are in; or they refuse to admit certain evidences, or are indifferent to certain mighty suggestions and strong intimations. They often commit the mistake of relying too exclusively upon what are called the evidences of the senses; and in this are just as unscientific as Christians and Spiritualists, or believers in the supernatural (who would verify miracles by eye and ear testimony), whom scientific men generally hold in fine disdain. An instinct of the heart, an aspiration of the soul, a swift gleam of the imagination, are just as much facts that the truly scientific man will make note of, and give due weight to, as any fossil found in the field, or human skeleton in a cave, or bird-track in a limestone bed. Those men of science who pretend to have discovered that there is no God, are just as unscientific as those theologians who pretend to have discovered that there is one. So too those who announce it as a proven fact that there is no mind or soul, but that all that there is, is matter. The truly scientific man is yet neither a confirmed theist nor a confirmed atheist, neither a confirmed materialist nor a confirmed spiritualist. He has no business to be; for confirmation or demonstration of neither theism nor atheism, materialism nor spiritualism, is yet at hand. Profound is the thinking, vast is the research yet needed, before these great and momentous questions can be called settled. No snap judgment is in order, either from the "intuitionist" or the "scientist;" but both are scientific if they will bring forward their evidences, and wait for the results of real knowledge.

True science, then, does cover the whole ground of human knowledge; it is the true knowledge of man. Whoever seeks to bring to light whatever is concealed, to make known what is now unknown, in heaven or earth, in man or Nature, and who does this in a large, truth-loving spirit, avoiding narrowness and dogmatism, avoiding conclusions before knowledge,—he is truly a man of science, a scientific man. And, for my part, I cannot see why a poet who, though working with his imagination (which is a portion of his outfit as a human and rational being), yet works to this end and in this spirit, is not as truly a scientific man as the naturalist who deals with insects and fishes and stones and plants. What is the universe but a grand poem that is always being freshly written, and which we are evermore trying to catch the cadence of? What is human life but a poem, both sad and sweet, that we are each trying to have a hand in making? Nature makes no such false distinctions as we; she called the poet and the plowman one in Robert Burns, the carpenter and the seer one in Jesus. Tyndall, the physicist, it seems finds science not more delightful than Emerson's poetry. He has learned them both "by heart;" can he tell us which is more poetic or which more scientific than the other? The love of truth is scientific; the love of truth is also poetic.

A. W. S.

POSITIVE AND NEGATIVE.

Dr. Bellows, the other day, paid the president of the Free Religious Association the compliment of being one of the few Free Religionists who believe in something positive. What called forth the remark I know not, unless it was a frank admission by the particular "free religionist" in question that he acknowledged, accepted, honored the past; was grateful for what the Christian religion had done, and treasured up its good fruits. He said this not with the air of a seer, or the manner of a philosopher who was announcing a proposition of deep originality, but in the style of one who was compelled to correct a plain and humiliating absurdity; for he said in emphatic language that every "free religionist" he knew felt precisely as he did, and that they who supposed them to feel otherwise presumed them to be dolts, dunces, or idiots.

Can it be possible that Dr. Bellows makes that declaration the ground of his compliment? If he does, his notion of what is positive is very peculiar. The sectarian's notion of what is positive is very peculiar. That is positive which falls in with his opinion; that which falls out with his opinion is negative. They who make a great matter of historical Christianity might think that a recognition of the past of Christianity, even of the fact that it had a past, deserved to be classed among positive tenets. The Trinitarian thinks an admission of the Trinity positive; the Calvinist is satisfied with the quality of positiveness expressed in a confession of total depravity, or a belief in an indefinite future of woes. To the Universalist, positiveness means assent to the doctrine that God is Love, and so on. The Unitarian will drop the charge of being negative, if an affirmation of faith in the Messiahship of the Christ be made. The positive man is the man who accepts the sectarian's peculiarity, how small soever that may be. The man who rejects that peculiarity, though his faith include a thousand matters outside of it, is negative. To the disciple of the Ptolemaic system of astronomy Newton would be a dweller in the land of negations, as Galileo actually seemed to the believers in the Mosal cosmogony. To say Aye to an instituted superstition is an affirmation of faith; to say Aye to an unacknowledged truth is a repudiation of faith.

As a simple matter of fact, the Free Religion men hold many more positive ideas than their opponents do. Unless the word "positive" be taken in the sense of set, arbitrary, dogmatical,—as we say of an absolute, stubborn person that he is very positive,—if by positive be meant affirmative, this must be the case. The idea of historical religion contains a larger affirmation than the idea of historical Christianity; the idea of the symphony, or the sympathy, of religions contains a larger affirmation than the idea of the solitary Hebrew chant; the idea of the brotherhood of prophets contains a larger affirmation than the idea of the solitary revealer; the idea of progressive enlightenment contains a larger affirmation than the idea of special revelations; the idea of Evolution, from the beginning, of the human mind contains a larger affirmation than the idea of development from a single point in history; the idea of truth as a thing to be attained contains a larger affirmation than the idea of truth once delivered; the idea of God incarnate in Humanity contains a larger idea than the idea of God incarnate in the Christ; the idea of the inspiration of reason contains a larger affirmation than the idea of the inspiration of a few evangelists and apostles. And so we might go on contrasting the opinions of the Free Religionist, point by point, with the opinions of the "Christian," or the "Jew," or the "Mussulman," or the Indian "Theist." As the whole includes the parts, so his faith includes separate "faiths."

There is good reason for thinking that the word "positive" is employed in the sense of dogmatical. Thus the objection to the Free Religionist is that he affirms too much; he loses himself in light; he erects no fences; he sets down no stakes; he builds no house; he is all out of doors. As he who has no house is a beggar, an outcast, a vagrant, so it is said the man who has no bounded and roofed spiritual abode is nowhere, is an alien from the privileges of definite truth. This figure of the man living out of doors has done excellent duty among the caryatides of faith. It is effective, not to say imposing. But I submit that it has been over-worked. It is a figure that is more ornamental than important. The physical man is not comfortable or safe if he has no abiding place, no roof over his head, no walls to keep the wolves and maulers away. The progress of civilization is marked by the increase in the number of people who are comfortably housed in dwellings of their own. But in culture, progress is not indicated by that rule, but by the reverse rather. In the infancy of the mind, people creep into caves, erect shrines, build temples, construct creeds and spiritual citadels to keep off imaginary devils that were supposed to infest the intellectual air; but as they become wiser and discover the wholesomeness of the world of thought, they leave their enclosures and disport themselves fearlessly in the realm of mind, plucking fruits and flowers in all fields, gathering harvests wherever they grow, and resting peacefully under the foliage of any tree that gives them a shadow from the heat. The more souls live out of doors, the more hopeful is the spiritual condition of humanity. When all shall venture to sleep in the open air, the perfect day will have come.

O. B. F.

UNSCIENTIFIC AND NON-SCIENTIFIC.

It seems to me that some of our friends confound these two words. Charmed, as well they may be, at the vast steps taken by the science of the age, they forget that science represents, after all, but one-half the universe. Wage war against the unscientific,—that is, that which claims to be scientific and is not,—as much as you will; but if you exclude the non-scientific, then art and poetry, romance and passion vanish, and humanity is impoverished.

Under the exclusively scientific impulse, there is a reaction against all literature and art. We see it on all sides to-day; and most in those men and institutions where science has its freest course. An eminent naturalist told me the other day that the age of art had forever passed, that it belonged to the childhood of the world; and he hoped it would never revive. For himself, his aim was to continue his researches into the characteristics of the insect order Diptera. At Harvard,—where the scientific system has had fullest development, the department of "Rhetoric and Oratory" was only saved from extinction by the indignant remonstrance of the Overseers; and in the Commencement exercises of this year there was no more allusion to literature than my friend the entomologist would make to art.

It is on this ground, I think, and this alone, that the clerical order will hold its own for a time against the scientific. As philanthropists or leaders of practical reform, the clergy seem to me of less value than is commonly claimed for them; at least the pioneers are apt to come from the ranks of the unchurched. But as representatives of the ideal, the emotional, the poetic side of our nature, they may still claim to stand for something important. Not as against Emerson or Parker, to be sure, for those writers recognize the ideal side of life better than the Church does; not as against Tyndall, even, for he knows Emerson's poems by heart,—but simply as against the man who recognizes the scientific side only. So far as the Church is unscientific,—that is, claiming to be scientific and not fulfilling the claim,—it is powerless; but so far as it is non-scientific, it is still needed. It stands (often in a blind prejudiced way) for the demands of the heart, the imagination, the taste,—all non-scientific things. And even those of us who can feel no great personal interest in it, can still see its value in this respect.

And we must remember that even practical reforms need to be approached from the ideal side as well as the utilitarian; and that the merely scientific attitude may not be enough. The anti-slavery reform had to be carried, not merely against "Cursed be Canaan," but against facial angles and theories about the origin of the human race. It will be the same with the woman suffrage movement: there will be many scientific men who will fight it with their science, as well as many clergymen who will resist it with their Bibles. Secular Harvard holds out against co-education, while the Methodists voluntarily establish it in every academy and college. As to theology, I prefer Harvard; but so long as it does injustice, I thank Heaven for the Methodists. Of course, there is more hope for the men of science, in the end, because they aim at truth; whereas the others defer to authority. But it is not a question of "in the end;" it is a question of now. If my house is on fire, I prefer the most obsolete old hand-engine that plays on it while it burns, to the most improved "steamer" that is not yet in working order and only deluges the firemen. A radical, in a good cause, must not shrink from the fellowship of bishops and doctors of divinity. Professor Youmans is doing a great work against superstition, probably, with his Popular Science Monthly; but if it be true, as they say in England, that his influence has turned Herbert Spencer against the higher education of women, I should rather follow the lead of Rev. Dr. Clarke and Bishop Haven.

T. W. H.

Not long ago we heard of an "epidemic of delusions." Now we hear of an "epidemic of murders." Has anybody heard yet of an "epidemic of executions?"

"Materialism," which is a word of just reproach when it means besotted self-abandonment to sensual pleasures or the greed of gain, ought not to be in the least degree tainted with blame when it means a philosophical theory of the universe. It may be a true theory, or a false one; we think it a crude and superficial one. But it is just as consistent with high and fine character as any other theory. Nobility of soul may and does accompany all forms of speculative belief.

At a recent meeting of the Philadelphia Radical Club, Mrs. Pratt said that the real intention of the Christianizers is "cloaked" by the phrase, "God in the Constitution," and that their true object is the national acknowledgment of Jesus as God. This is substantially true. It is not the cause of Theism, but the cause of Christianity, which enlists their enthusiasm. Hence we speak always of the "Christian" rather than the "Religious" Amendment. The distinction between the two, however, is not recognized by the Christianizers, to whom "Christianity" is itself "Religion;" and the term "cloak" is not at all descriptive of their course. We consider them the sincerest and most unflinchingly consistent of all Evangelical Protestant Christians.

If the New York Church Journal and Gospel Messenger thinks to recommend religion to sensible people by such a definition and description of it as is contained in the following extract from its editorial leader of June 26, it shows to what depths of imbecility the religious press of this country has sunk:—

"It actually seems that a man may be religious even in a religion that is true, in a religion ordained minutely by God himself, carefully and conscientiously religious, and yet be a scoundrel."

"For religion is a set of observances, forms, ceremonies, acts of worship more or less elaborate, which, if the religion be a true one, are intended to bring a man into contact with eternal verities, with the everlasting laws of God, and the everlasting duties of God's rational creatures; which are to keep the sense and consciousness of these present in his mind and heart and powerful in his life, and help him in their fulfillment."

"And yet it is possible that religious observances may become to him, under certain circumstances, the whole. They may end with themselves. They may blind him to their purpose. They may hide from him the very things they were given to reveal and intensify. He may stop in the semblance, and forget the reality. He may be intensely religious, and yet utterly unrighteous, as were the Pharisees."

"This, we say, may be the case when the religion is even true and divine."

The "true and divine religion" which is consistent with "scoundrelism" will certainly get the contempt and scorn which it richly merits.

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but hereafter no space will be spared to Errata.
N. B.—Articles for this department should be SHORT, and written only on one side of the sheet.
N. B.—Flagrantly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.
N. B.—No responsibility will be assumed for unused manuscripts.

GROTE ON COMTE.

NEW YORK, June 16, 1873.

EDITOR INDEX:—

I have copied from the recently published Personal Life of George Grote (John Murray, London), by Mrs. Grote, the enclosed extract from a letter written by the historian to George Cornwall Lewis, under date of Oct. 1, 1851. I have copied that part only which relates to Comte. The allusion to Mr. Mill's review of Comte makes the extract the more interesting; and I presume that some of your readers will recollect that Mill himself, in his Examination of Sir Wm. Hamilton's Philosophy (Preface, p. viii, 3d Ed.) refers to Mr. Grote as "an illustrious historian and philosopher who, of all men now living, is the one by whom I should most wish that any writing of mine, on a subject in speculative philosophy, should be approved."

I thought the extract would be one which you would like to publish.

Very respectfully,
 GEO. R. BISHOP.

EXTRACT.

"In Comte's fifth volume, there is a great deal which is as unsatisfactory to me as it is to you. In his speculations respecting what he calls sociology and the progress of society, I find more to dissent from than to agree with. I respect very much his conception of philosophical method, especially with reference to the physical sciences; but his views respecting history and the moral sciences are, in my judgment, on many points faulty and untenable. I agree with you in thinking that 'an abstract history,' independent of time, place, and person, is a chimera. But there are, nevertheless, certain general conditions and principles common to all particular histories, and which are essential to enable us to explain and concatenate the facts of every particular history. These general principles and conditions of human society may be presented by themselves, with illustrations from this or that particular history. In this way you may have what may be called (very improperly, I think) an abstract history, or what I should call a philosophy of history.

John Mill says more in praise of Comte's speculations on history than I think they deserve. You say you have no distinct notion of felichism as representing a stage of the human mind. I have (at least so it seems to me) a very distinct notion of it, but I doubt very much, as matter of fact, whether it ever constituted so marked a stage of the human mind as Comte would make out. His affirmations on this point (positive beyond all reasonable estimate of the existing evidence) indicate that he has not himself got rid of that tendency which he so justly condemns in others—the hankering to divine the mysteries of inchoate or primordial man, where there is no torch to light up the dark cavern.

I agree with you also in thinking that much of what he says about polytheism is fanciful or incorrect. Think of a man assuming it as an attested fact (un fait capital, V. 254) that Thales actually taught the Egyptian priests to measure the height of the Pyramids by the length of the shadows! I set little value upon what he says respecting polytheism and monotheism; but I agree entirely with his classification of the two stages of the human mind, l'état théologique (either polytheistic or monotheistic) and l'état positif, together with what he calls l'état métaphysique, to form a bridge between them; and I think he has the merit of having set forth the radical antithesis and incompatibility between these two modes of interpreting phenomena better and more emphatically than it had ever been done before. He keenly feels and clearly perceives where it is that religion traverses and perverts the interpretation of physical phenomena. But as to moral or social phenomena, he recognizes no standard except his own taste and feeling; and this has been passively adopted, in him, from the Catholic teaching of his youth, though he has eliminated all the religious échafaudage with which it was once connected.

What he calls progress is often, in my judgment, change for the worse; and the general indications which he holds out of what is to be aimed at (for he never sets down or defends any rational standard) are just what you would hear from a Catholic priest, always excepting the religious doctrines. His morality is the commonplace of Catholic divines of the present day—divinizing chastity and making light of individual prudence; and he applies this standard to judge of the morality of Athens and Rome, as if all the points on which they differed from it were points of comparative corruption.

Moreover, I do not at all trust his knowledge of the facts of history. He has never gone through any careful study of the evidence, nor read anything beyond the expositions of Bossuet and Montesquieu, and a few such others—certainly men deserving of much respect, but by no means to be implicitly followed, and both immersed in that Catholic atmosphere which Comte takes to be the true Olympus, or region of pure air, to which the moral man has at length ascended, and beyond which he cannot and ought not to aspire. Comte has banished the gods, but he breathes and extols their atmosphere of morality as if it were purity itself. I do not know whether you will understand or follow the remarks which I have made on Comte: the subject is almost too wide to be touched on in a letter."

INTELLECTUAL HONESTY.

I have read with deep interest what has been said in THE INDEX on the question of the proper attitude of "Free Religionists" towards prevalent religious opinions and institutions. It seems to me that, after applying to the subject the ordinary rules of courtesy which the instincts of all well-bred persons quickly suggest,—after exhausting the help which those rules afford to its solution,—the unresolved residuum becomes simply a question of intellectual honesty. That, I take it, is at once the characteristic excellence and the chief instrumentality of this movement. A rare intellectual honesty, such as seems to me to be shown by the chief leaders of this movement, considered merely as personal attainment, is proof enough of the great superiority of Free Religion over the prevalent Evangelicism, and at the same time suggests the true method of dealing with popular errors.

It is a cheap performance to champion a cause, and refute and denounce all opposers. The vocabulary of praise and blame is as extensive and emphatic in the mouth of a narrow zealot as in that of the largest and strongest thinker, and is much more frequently called into requisition. It is one thing to overwhelm error and its votaries by exposure and censure; quite another thing to understand it and them. Every thoughtful person knows that in practice neither a baneful error nor its advocate is a concrete devil, at whom, like Luther, we are to "sling ink" without even the intervention of a pen. Careful and dispassionate discriminations are to be made. A better religion than the world has known hitherto demands justice towards all doctrines and systems; and in order to that, an emancipation from the tyranny of every system or no system.

Every one who has passed up through the religious experiences of Protestant Christianity knows that, while a certain grace and charm are imparted to the character by them, and a certain reinforcement of moral resolution is gained thereby, there is little or no accession to the intellectual virtues; but, on the contrary, some loss. They do not flourish in an atmosphere of Evangelical piety. The rationalité of it is not far to seek. Where something else than simple truth becomes the object of paramount moral and religious regard, the moral tone of the intellect is necessarily lowered. If allegiance to and reliance on Christ is the supreme moral and religious duty, then all that multifarious mass of history, cosmology, miracle, and doctrine, commonly associated with him, which is supposed to be the chief authentication and support of his office and mission, ought to be accepted in the place of the conclusions of personal investigation. In that case the "Truth" will take on the conventional meaning which makes it synonymous with the "cause of Christ." In this manner it is that the general moral and religious force of society becomes itself a powerful repressive influence upon the growth of the intellectual virtues, the cultivation of which, both for their intrinsic worth and as the great instrumentality and condition of all high attainment, it is the especial function of this movement to promote.

The scientific conscience is a counterpart in morals of the intellectual progress of the age; and it is doubtful whether Paul was any more capable of applying it to the investigation of religious subjects than he was of employing the method of modern scientific thought to the study of physics.

Like every other inferior stage of moral or intellectual development, this intellectual immorality, or un-morality, is, for the most part, unconscious. So soon as it becomes conscious, intellectual emancipation has already begun, and with a thoroughly sincere character will thenceforward be rapid.

The moral kernel of the whole matter lies in a sincere attempt, fully and exactly, to understand the thing one feels compelled to combat. Let the attempt only be perseveringly made, and one learns very soon that, in order to a perfect understanding of a delusion as it exists in the mind of the errorist, it is necessary not merely to "put yourself in his place," but to be fully emancipated from personal predilections—to espouse, for the time being, the cause you would understand, and to hold in abeyance all feeling of moral reprehension until the situation is fully mastered. So only will a wise opposition become possible. So only can any charity which is not a maudlin sentiment on the one hand, or on the other mere moral indifference, be developed.

I cannot forbear illustrating by a recent example. I have been an eager reader of everything that came to my hand from the Evangelical side of the discussion raised by Professor Tyndall's proposal to test the physical effect of prayer,—desirous that something of truth might be shown to lie at the foundation of the conviction common to all religions, but emphasized by the inculcations of Christianity; and with what result? With next to none, except the development of the anomalous fact that the intrepid iconoclast in this discussion shows a moral temper greatly superior to his opposers—evinces an intellectual honesty you might search in vain for among his detractors. Excepting, perhaps, the utterances of Dr. McCosh, nothing has come to my notice from that side of the question which did not leave a painful impression of moral as well as intellectual incompetence. Judged simply from what was said, and giving to the word "Christian" that meaning which makes it include all that is noblest and highest in human character, one must award the Professor the credit of being the best Christian of them all.

CLEVELAND, O.

E. D. S.

CONGRESSIONAL RECOMMENDATIONS.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Dear Sir,—The first Article of War "for the government of the Army of the United States," reads as follows:—

"It is earnestly recommended to all officers and soldiers diligently to attend divine service;" and then it proceeds to define the punishment for misconduct in church.

As the whole subject of Army Regulations is now before Congress, upon the report of a Board which has re-adopted this article, it seems to me a pertinent inquiry whence comes this recommendation to attend divine service? If Congress is the party who "recommends," the further inquiry is suggested, whence it derives its powers to recommend religion in any shape under the Constitution as it stands at present, untampered with by the God-in-the-Constitution party? While Congress is on the recommending path, why does it not take up the question of morals, for instance, or some other subject of importance? Studious habits might not be of very great injury to officers caged for the greater part of their lives in frontier garrisons; and this might advantageously be made the subject of a "recommendation."

S. R. H.

NEWPORT, R. I., July 10, 1873.

Senator Scott, talking to a Pennsylvania Sunday-school, recently, asked the scholars why Simon was kept in prison? One of the teachers hastily prompted a boy to say that it was for hostage; and the youth, not quite catching the word, piped out: "He was detained for postage!"

What it costs to "run" Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, a year is shown in the following figures: Henry Ward Beecher, $20,000; Mr. Halliday, associate pastor, $3,000; Mr. Weld, first sexton, $3,000; Mr. Raynor, second sexton, $1,200; music, $8,000; insurance, $500; current expenses, $7,000; Plymouth library, $700; total, $43,000.

We were at a Sunday School Concert the other evening, and enjoyed the following:—
 Little fellow (reciting his verse)—"I am the Bread of Life."

Superintendent (questioning him as to his knowledge of the Bible)—"Who said, 'I am the Bread of Life'?"
 (In surprise) "I said it."

A clergyman at Thornhill, Dumfriesshire, was lately examining the parish school. In the course of examination, the Bible class was brought forward. After many questions had been asked and answered, greatly to the satisfaction of the minister, he proposed that any boy might ask him a question, as he might then have an idea of what particular information they wanted. A pause ensued. At last a bright-looking boy said: "Sir, I would like to ask one." "Well, my little man," asked the minister, "what is the question you are to ask?" "Sir," said the boy, "what was the use of Jacob's ladder when the angels had wings?" The minister felt taken aback; took out his snuff-box, and looked at the boy. "I think, my little man, that is the very question I should have asked at the class, and I will give a sixpence to any boy in the class who will answer it." After a somewhat long pause, one little fellow, third from the bottom, held out his hand. "Well," said the minister, "can you answer that question?" "Yes, sir." "Well, what was the use of the ladder when the angels had wings?" "Oh! sir, the angels were poukin' (moulting) at the time, and couldna flee." The minister is taking an interest in that boy.

Manuals of athematical Instruments, microscopes, agic Lanterns, eterological Instruments, Physical Apparatus,

Profusely Illustrated, and priced, mailed to any address on receipt of 10 cents each.
JAMES W. QUEEN & Co., Opticians,
924 Chestnut St., 601 Broadway,
PHILADELPHIA. NEW YORK.
Mention that you saw this in THE INDEX.

THE American Bath, NORTH-EAST CORNER

17TH STREET AND IRVING PLACE, Embraces the most comprehensive system of remedial agencies of any like institution in this country. In addition to the TURKISH, RUSSIAN,
ORIENTAL,
SULPHURETS,
SULPHUROUS VAPOR, FUMIGATED,
MERCURIAL,
IODINE, ETC., BATHS,
Treatment by Electricity and Magnetism receives special attention.

These Baths are select, and given singly, and are administered in such a way as to be healthfully adapt themselves to each individual case of either sex.

PRICES OF BATHS—From $1.00 to $3.00
NEW YORK, May, 1873.

ENTRANCE TO GENTLEMEN'S BATHS.
Irving Place.
ENTRANCE TO LADIES' BATHS.
125 E. 17th Street.

LECTURES BY

Edward H. G. Clark,
OF TROY, N. Y.

1. FISK, OR, THE CRIMES OF OUR COMMERCE. (New Lecture for 1873-1874.)
2. THE AMERICAN LECTURE STAND.
3. OUR COMING REPUBLIC.

(Lecture in Progress.)

TERMS FROM $40 TO $80.

NEWSPAPER NOTICES.

Mr. Clark's "American Lecture Stand" is not only thoughtful and scholarly, but it is popular and entertaining. He delivers it without reference to his manuscript, in a clear, pleasant voice, with easy, graceful gestures. An ardent admirer of Phillips and Curtis, his manner and manner constantly suggest those great masters. No finer lecture than the "American Lecture Stand" has been delivered in Albany this season, and we heartily commend its author to the lycenium of the country as a speaker who will not disappoint great expectations. —Albany Journal.

"The American Lecture Stand" gave the best of satisfaction. Mr. Clark is a pleasant and attractive speaker, and will always be warmly welcomed upon the platform in Albany. —Albany Argus.

One of the best lectures given in Albany this winter. —Albany Express.

Undoubtedly one of the ablest productions that have recently been offered to lecture-goers anywhere in this country. —Troy Watch.

It lifts Mr. Clark at once to the first rank of public lecturers. —Troy Press.

It certainly meets the requirements of the lecture-going public to as great a degree as any similar effort that we remember. —Rockland Democrat and Chronicle.

We are compelled to say it is one of the most interesting, instructive and entertaining productions that have recently fallen under our notice. —Buffalo Express.

Unquestionably the best lecture we ever heard, is the verdict of all who listened. —Bennington Free Press.

Many declare it to be the best lecture of the course. —Bennington Banner.

Mr. E. H. G. Clark's lecture is considered the best of the course, except, perhaps, Carl Schurz's. —Bennington Correspondent of the Troy Press.

Not one of the best, but the very best lecture of the season. —Schuylerite News.

WENDELL PHILLIPS ON "FISK, OR, THE CRIMES OF OUR COMMERCE."

Dear Friend—Your lecture on Fisk is happily named and thoroughly treated. It was a rare treat to listen to it. You will surely interest your audience. What better subject could a speaker have for the lyceum than this startling scene and appalling conspiracy which we call your "Rings"? All Europe hangs breathless over that drama. It is the culmination of all Topsy-turvy forced for us. To Americans the subject is one of grave even painful interest. You have treated it skilfully, made a sketch at once terse and full, rapid, masterly and effective; sure to command a profounder interest than the most sensational topic. While it is full of suggestion for the thoughtful, it is brilliant and striking enough to charm the most indifferent audience. It will do much to keep the lyceum where it belongs—instruction and education, as well as interest and amusement.
Yours,
WENDELL PHILLIPS.
EDWARD H. G. CLARK, TROY, N. Y.

$5 to $20 per day! Agents Wanted! All classes of working people, of either sex, young or old, make more money at work for us in their spare moments or all the time than in anything else. Particulars Free. Address G. Stinson & Co., Portland, Me.

LOUIS BLACK,
194 Jefferson Ave., Detroit Michigan,
MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN,
INVENTOR AND PROPRIETOR OF
Black's Patent Interchangeable Spectacles, and Self-Attaching Spring Eye Glasses. Importer of all kinds of Optical Goods. The best Spectacles fitted to the Eye, light as to improve it.

Theodore Parker's Writings.

A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....$1.50
Sermons of THURISM, ATHEISM, and Popular Theology.....1.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....1.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional sermons, 2 vols.....3.00
The above sent post paid on receipt of price by
BUTTS & DINSMORE,
36 DEY STREET, NEW YORK.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO., BANKERS,
LEROY, MINNESOTA.

Money loaned on short time, or for a term of years, on unincumbered improved farms, at 12 per cent. per annum, interest not. Interest payable annually. All expenses for abstract of title and recording mortgage paid by borrower. We collect and remit to any part of the U. S. free of charge.

Representatives—First National Bank, McGregor, Iowa; Gilchrist & Co., McGregor, Iowa; First National Bank, Austin, Minnesota; City National Bank, Chicago, Illinois; Allen, Stevens, & Co., New York City.

Write for a Price List to J. H. Johnston.

GREAT WESTERN GUN WORKS
No. 100 N. 10th St.
Breech-Loading Shot Guns, $40 to $300. Double Shot Guns, $5 to $150. Single Guns, $3 to $30. Rifles, $5 to $75. Revolvers, $6 to $25. Pistols, $1 to $5. Gun Material, Fishing Tackle, &c. Large discounts to dealers or clubs. Army Guns, Revolvers, etc., bought or traded for. Goods sent by express C. O. D. to be examined before paid for.

HISTORIC AMERICANS,
BY THEODORE PARKER.

Edited by O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

Containing lectures treating of FRANKLIN, WASHINGTON, ADAMS, and JEFFERSON. Of these lectures three were delivered as addresses, and made no slight sensation from the boldness and freedom with which the speaker treated his subjects, and the original and novel views which he took of their characters. Will be mailed post paid on receipt of the price, $1.50, by

BUTTS & DINSMORE,
36 DEY STREET, NEW YORK.

"THE CLERGY A SOURCE OF DANGER TO THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC."

Second edition more elegant than the first. First sold within four months from the time it was issued.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.
Price, muslin, postage prepaid $1.75
Gift edge and side-edge 2.00

PAMPHLETS:
"America's Foes," single copy, 10 cents.
"The Clergy and our Common Schools," single copy 10 cents.

$3 per hundred.

W. F. JAMIESON,
129 & 141 Monroe St., Chicago, Ill.

FOR THE COUNTRY!
FOR THE SEA-SHORE!

"Gems of Strauss."
CHOICE COLLECTIONS OF SOUND MUSIC!
Containing all Strauss's best Waltzes, Galops, Quadrilles, Mazurkas, &c. About 20,000 sold. Price, $2.50.

"Organ at Home."
Just out. A new collection of over 300 of the most popular pieces of the day, arranged for Reed Organs, &c. Price, $2.50.

"Musical Treasure,"
Filled with the best of new music for the voice or for Piano. Over 100 Gems, all established favorites. Price $2.50.

"Wreath of Gems,"
Choice Songs, Ballads, &c. Price, $2.50.

Piano-Forte Gems,"
Containing the best Piano-forte Music. Price $2.50.

The above books are uniform in style and binding, all the pages filled with full Sheet Music Size. They will be found invaluable for the sea-shore or country resort, containing bright and pleasing music, all else being carefully avoided.

The Coming SABBATH SCHOOL SONG BOOK, entitled,

THE RIVER OF LIFE,

With new music and words by the most distinguished writers in the country, is nearly ready. Specimen pages free.

The above books sent, post paid, for the retail price.

O. Ditson & Co., C. H. Ditson & Co.,
Boston, 711 Broadway, N. Y.

LADIES!

Eureka Machine Twist,
50 and 100 Yard Spools,
AND THE
Eureka Button-Hole Twist,
10 Yard Spools,
ARE THE BEST IN USE.
For Sale at all Trimming Stores.

REAL ESTATE SECURITIES,
paying 8 to 10 per cent. interest, or
Investments in Real Estate
In Chicago and Vicinity,

If judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The old
REAL ESTATE AND LOAN AGENCY
OF
ERNST PRUSSING,

143 Randolph St., CHICAGO,
(Established 1853)
Guarantees perfect title and ample security in all the Real Estate Loans.
First-class securities always on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge.
Real Estate Investments made on commission and on shares; taxes paid, &c.
Orders of capitalists and real estate owners respectfully solicited.

Iron in the Blood

PELVIA SYRUP
AN IRON TONIC
THE PERUVIAN SYRUP Vitalizes and Enriches the Blood, Tones up the System, Builds up the Broken-down, Cures Female Complaints, Dropsy, Debility, Hemorrhage, Dyspepsia, &c.
Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy from weak, sickly, suffering creatures, to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.
Caution.—Be sure you get the right article. See that "Peruvian Syrup" is blown in the glass. Pamphlets free. Send for one. BETH W. FOWLE & SONS, Proprietors, Boston, Mass. For sale by druggists generally.

BABCOCK
407 Broadway, N.Y.
Near Canal St.
FIRE APPARATUS
EXTINGUISHERS,
HOOK & LADDER TRUCKS,
ENGINES & TANKS.
P. W. BABCOCK
Bos.

THE LIBERAL CHRISTIAN
FOR 1873.

HENRY W. BELLOWES, Editor,
Will endeavor, not only to maintain its present reputation as

ONE OF THE BEST WEEKLY JOURNALS OF Religion, Literature, Science,
and Art

Now published in this country, but to fulfill, more completely than ever before, its part of the work of supplying the American people with the

Best Thought on the Highest and Most Vital Themes

Of both general and particular interest, in all departments of human life. To this end, special arrangements have been entered into with able writers and correspondents to keep the columns of THE LIBERAL CHRISTIAN supplied, during the year 1873, with a pleasant variety of good articles and letters on the most stirring topics of the day.

The several departments of the paper—FELLOWSHIP OF THE SPIRIT; OUR CONTRIBUTORS; SIGNS OF THE TIMES; ORIGINAL AND SELECTED ARTICLES; OUR LITERARY RECORD; EDITORIAL; THE WEEK'S NEWS—ECCLIASTICAL, POLITICAL, AND GENERAL; CORRESPONDENCE; OUR POETS AND GIRLS; OUR SCIENTIFIC RECORD; THE FINE ARTS—will each receive the special care of the gentlemen and ladies under whose charge they have been placed; and no effort will be spared to provide A WEEKLY FAMILY JOURNAL Worthy of the Patronage of American Homes, and of the Enlightened Nineteenth Century.

Price of Subscription, $3 per Annum, Payable in Advance.

Upon application by letter, specimen copies will always be sent free.

Jos. N. Hallock, Publisher,
P. O. Box 6906,
114 Nassau Street, New York City.

ARITHMETICAL CARDS & GAMES.
Send for a Pack.
With these Cards the drill of Mental Arithmetic is made more pastime—besides many (including common card) games can be played. Teachers, and pupils, and everybody should use them for instruction and amusement. AGENTS WANTED. One pack, with book of instructions, sent post paid for fifty cents. Address P. H. BATESON, Drawer 90, Toledo, O.

THE WAYS OF WOMEN

In Their Physical, Moral, and Intellectual Relations.

By A MEDICAL MAN. This is unquestionably one of the most remarkable books issued from the American press in many years. A most beautiful specimen of scientific and practical word-painting on themes of vital importance to every woman. A splendid chance for Agents. It makes an elegant 8vo vol. of 400 pp., on tinted paper, superbly bound. Price $3. Sent by mail on receipt of price. For terms and agents' terms, apply to the publisher, JOHN P. JAWNY & Co., 5 Dey St. N. Y.

A GREAT OFFER.—Horace Waters & Son, 481 Broadway, New York, will dispose of 100 Pianos and Organs of first-class makers, including WATERS', at extremely low prices for cash, or part cash, and balance in small monthly payments. New 5-Octave first-class Pianos, all modern improvements, for $75 cash. Organs, $55 to $75. Double-Reed Organs, $100; 4-stop, $110; 8-stop, $125 and upwards.

WATERS' CONCERTO PARLOR ORGANS are the most beautiful in style and perfect in tone ever made. The Concerto Stop is the best ever placed in any Organ. It is produced by a third set of reeds peculiarly voiced, the effect of which is most charming and soul-stirring, while its imitation of the Human Voice is superb. Terms liberal. Illustrated Catalogue mailed for one stamp. A liberal discount to Ministers, Churches, Sunday-Schools, Lodges, etc.

AGENTS WANTED.

THE COMMONWEALTH

LIFE GENTLEMEN of standing and ability (either in professional or mercantile pursuits) are desired in all parts of the country to represent this reliable company. Our plans of Insurance are simple, popular, and honest.
Address 178 Broadway,
NEW YORK.

Are You Going to Paint?

THEY USE
The Averill Chemical Paint.

THE HANDSOMEST AND MOST DURABLE EXTERIOR PAINT.

Costs Less, and will Outlast any other.

Gen. O. R. Smith, Sedalia, Mo., writes:—"Two coats of 'Averill' covered better, and looked finer, than three coats of Lead and Oil, with a coat of varnish thereon. I would not again use Lead and Oil were it given to me."

Levi Shaw, Trustee of the Society of Quakers, Mt. Lebanon, writes:—"The buildings painted with the Averill White Paint some three and a half years since, I have examined, and found it retains the gloss nearly if not quite as well as when first put on. It is the best paint we have ever used."

Sample card of beautiful colors, and recommendations from owners of the finest residences in the country, furnished free, by the AVERRILL CHEMICAL PAINT CO.
32 Burling Slip, New York,
and 118 Superior St., Cleveland, O.

THE BOSTON INVESTIGATOR,

THE OLDEST REFORM JOURNAL IN THE UNITED STATES,

Is published
EVERY WEDNESDAY,

At
84 WASHINGTON STREET,

BOSTON, MASS.,

By JOSHUA P. MENDIN.

EDITED BY HORACE SEEVER.

Price, $3.50 per annum. Single Copies, Seven Cents. Specimen Copies sent, on receipt of a Two-Cent Stamp to pay the postage.

The "INVESTIGATOR" is devoted to the liberal cause in Religion; or, in other words, to Universal Mental Liberty. Independent in all discussions, discarding superstitious theories of what never can be known, it devotes its columns to things of this world alone, and leaves the next, if there be one, to those who have entered its unknown shores. Believing that it is the duty of mortals to work for the interests of this life en world, it confines itself to things of this life en world. It has just entered its 43d year, and asks for a support from those who are fond of sound reasoning, good reading, reliable news, anecdotes, science, art, and a useful Family Journal. Reader! please send your subscription for six months or one year; and if you are not satisfied with the way the "INVESTIGATOR" is conducted, we won't ask you to continue with us any longer.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Five Cents.

VOLUME 4.

TOLEDO, OHIO, AUGUST 2, 1873.

WHOLE No. 188.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; J. Gattilon, Vice President; F. A. Loggreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries; E. K. Thomas, Treasurer.
BOSTON, MASS.—J. B. Rogers, President; A. Davis, J. W. Smith, Vice Presidents; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bucon, Secretaries; J. A. J. Wilcox, Treasurer; R. H. Ranney, F. W. Clarke, H. B. Storer, Executive Committee.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; J. E. Curtis, Vice President; A. Giddings, Secretary; E. Wood, Treasurer; L. B. Crowell, M. A. Giddings, D. D. Holmes, Executive Committee.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; L. Magenheimer, Vice President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary; Wm. Fischer, Treasurer; A. C. Stowe, C. G. Hoadly, R. P. Thomson, Executive Committee.
TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. J. Reedy, President; R. Bruner, Vice President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary; A. W. Harbaugh, Treasurer; L. Westover, J. Bruner, W. Krause, Executive Committee.
VINELAND, N. J.—L. Bristol, President; E. Dickinson, E. B. Duffey, Vice Presidents; E. G. Binsdell, Secretary; S. M. Clute, Treasurer; John Gage, D. A. Russell, E. G. Binsdell, D. L. Butler, A. C. Bristol, P. T. W. Campbell, Executive Committee.
JACKSONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; Jas. H. Smith, Vice President; Isaac Baldwin, Treasurer; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
MATHER, KAN.—S. H. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary; J. N. Haws, B. Pancoast, P. Jullien, Executive Committee.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary; J. W. Watkins, Treasurer.
BURNSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; I. Brown, Vice President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary; C. R. Capin, Treasurer; A. D. Enos, E. O. Barnum, Betsey Brown, Executive Committee.

An Essay on Miracles.

BY DAVID HUMDE.

(Continued.)

PART II.

In the foregoing reasoning we have supposed that the testimony upon which a miracle is founded may possibly amount to an entire proof, and that the falsehood of that testimony would be a real prodigy; but it is easy to show that we have been a great deal too liberal in our concession, and that there never was a miraculous event established on so full an evidence.

For, first, there is not to be found, in all history, any miracle attested by a sufficient number of men of such unquestioned good sense, education, and learning, as to secure us against all delusion in themselves; of such undoubted integrity as to place them beyond all suspicion of any design to deceive others; of such credit and reputation in the eyes of mankind as to have a great deal to lose in case of their being detected in any falsehood, and at the same time attesting facts performed in such a public manner and in so celebrated a part of the world, as to render the detection unavoidable: all which circumstances are requisite to give us a full assurance in the testimony of men.

Secondly, we may observe in human nature a principle which, if strictly examined, will be found to diminish extremely the assurance we might, from human testimony, have in any kind of prodigy. The maxim, by which we commonly conduct ourselves in our reasonings, is, that the objects of which we have no experience resemble those of which we have; that what we have found to be most usual is always most profitable; and that where there is an opposition of arguments, we ought to give the preference to such as are founded on the greatest number of past observations. But though, in proceeding by this rule, we readily reject any fact which is unusual and incredible in an ordinary degree, yet, in advancing farther, the mind observes not always the same rule; but when anything is affirmed utterly absurd and miraculous, it rather the more readily admits of such a fact, upon account of that very circumstance which ought to destroy all its authority. The passion of surprise and wonder, arising from miracles, being an agreeable emotion, gives a sensible tendency towards the belief of those events from which it is derived. And this goes so far, that even those who cannot enjoy this pleasure immediately, nor can believe those miraculous events of which they are informed, yet love to partake of the satisfaction at second hand or by rebound, and place a pride and delight in exelling the admiration of others.

With what greediness are the miraculous accounts of travellers received, their descriptions of sea and land monsters, their relations of wonderful adventures, strange men and uncouth manners? But if the spirit of religion joins itself to the love of wonder, there is an end of common sense; and human testimony, in these circumstances, loses all pretensions to authority. A religionist may be an enthusiast, and imagine he sees what has no reality; he may know his narrative to be false, and yet persevere in it with the best intentions in the world, for the sake of promoting so holy a cause. Or even where this delusion has not place, vanity, excited by so strong a temptation, operates on him more powerfully than on the rest of mankind in any other circumstances; and self-interest with equal force. His auditors may not have, and commonly have not, sufficient judgment to canvass his evidence: what judgment they have, they renounce by principle, in these sublime and mysterious subjects; or if they were ever so willing to employ it, passion and a heated imagination disturb the regularity of its operations. Their credulity increases his impudence; and his impudence overpowers their credulity.

Eloquence, when at its highest pitch, leaves little room for reason or reflection; but addressing itself entirely to the fancy or the affections captivates the willing hearers and subdues their understanding. Happily, this pitch it seldom attains. But what a Tully or a Demosthenes could scarcely effect over a Roman or Athenian audience, every Capuchin, every itinerant or stationary teacher, can perform over the generality of mankind, and in a higher degree, by touching such gross and vulgar passions.

The many instances of forged miracles and prophecies, and supernatural events, which, in all ages, have either been detected by contrary evidence, or which detect themselves by their absurdity, prove sufficiently the strong propensity of mankind to the extraordinary and the marvellous, and ought reasonably to beget a suspicion against all relations of this kind. This is our natural way of thinking, even with regard to the most common and most credible events. For instance, there is no kind of report which rises so easily and spreads so quickly, especially in country places and provincial towns, as those concerning marriages; inasmuch that two young persons of equal condition never see each other twice, but the whole neighborhood immediately join them together. The pleasure of telling a piece of news so interesting, of propagating it, and of being the first reporters of it, spreads the intelligence. And this is so well known that no man of sense gives attention to these reports, till he finds them confirmed by some greater evidence. Do not the same passions, and others still stronger, incline the generality of mankind to believe and report, with the greatest vehemence and assurance, all religious miracles?

Thirdly, it forms a strong presumption against all supernatural and miraculous relations, that they are observed chiefly to abound among ignorant and barbarous nations; or if a civilized people has ever given admission to any of them, that people will be found to have received them from ignorant and barbarous ancestors, who transmitted them with that inviolable sanction and authority which always attend received opinions. When we peruse the first histories of all nations, we are apt to imagine ourselves transported into some new world, where the whole frame of Nature is disjunct, and every element performs its operations in a different manner from what it does at present. Battles, revolutions, pestilence, famine, and death, are never the effect of those natural causes which we experience. Prodiges, omens, oracles, judgments, quite obscure the few natural events that are intermingled with them. But as the former grow thinner every page, in proportion as we advance nearer the enlightened ages, we soon learn that there is nothing mysterious or supernatural in the case, but that all proceeds from the usual propensity of mankind towards the marvellous; and that though this inclination may at intervals receive a check from sense and learning, it can never be thoroughly extirpated from human nature.

It is strange, a judicious reader is apt to say, upon the perusal of these wonderful historians, that such prodigious events never happen in our days. But it is nothing strange, I hope, that men should lie in all ages. You must surely have seen instances enough of that frailty. You have yourself heard many such marvellous relations started, which, being treated with scorn by all the wise and judicious, have at last been abandoned even by the vulgar. Be assured that those renowned lies, which have spread and flourished to such a monstrous height, arose from like beginnings; but being sown in a more proper soil shot up at last into prodigies almost equal to those which they relate.

It was a wise policy in that false prophet Alexander, who, though now forgotten, was once so famous, to lay the first scene of his impostures in Paphlagonia; where, as Lucian tells us, the people were extremely ignorant and stupid, and ready to swallow even the grossest delusion. People at a distance, who are weak enough to think the matter at all worth inquiry, have no opportunity of receiving better information. The stories come magnified to them by a hundred circumstances. Fools are industrious in propagating the imposture; while the wise and learned are contented, in general, to deride its absurdity, without informing themselves of the particular facts by which it may be distinctly refuted. And thus the impostor above mentioned was enabled to proceed, from his ignorant Paphlagonians, to the enlisting of votaries even among the Grecian philosophers and men of the most eminent rank and distinction in Rome: nay, could engage the attention of that sage emperor Marcus Aurelius, so far as to make him trust the success of a military expedition to his delusive prophecies.

The advantages are so great of starting an imposture among an ignorant people, that, even though the delusion should be too gross to impose on the generality of them (which, though seldom, is sometimes the case), it has a much better chance for succeeding in remote countries than if the first scene had been laid in a city renowned for arts and knowledge. The most ignorant and barbarous of these barbarians carry the report abroad. None of their countrymen have a large correspondence, of sufficient credit and authority to contradict and beat down the delusion. Men's inclination to the marvellous has full opportunity to display itself. And thus a story, which is universally exploded in the place where it was first started, shall pass for certain at a thousand miles distance. But had Alexander fixed his residence at Athens, the philosophers of that renowned mart of learning had immediately spread throughout the whole Roman empire their sense of the matter; which, being supported by so great authority, and displayed by all the force of reason and eloquence, had entirely opened the eyes of mankind. It is true, Lucian, passing by chance through Paphlagonia, had an opportunity of performing this good office. But though much to be wished, it does not always happen that every Alexander meets with a Lucian ready to expose and detect his impostures.

I may add as a fourth reason, which diminishes the authority of prodigies, that there is no testimony for any, even those which have not been expressly detected, that is not opposed by an infinite number of witnesses; so that not only the miracle destroys the credit of testimony, but the testimony destroys itself. To make this the better understood, let us consider that, in matters of religion, whatever is different is contrary; and that it is impossible the religions of ancient Rome, of Turkey, of Siam, and of China, should all of them be established on any solid foundation. Every miracle, therefore, pretended to have been wrought in any of these religions (and all of them abound in miracles), as its direct scope is to establish the particular system to which it is attributed, so has it the same force, though more indirectly, to overthrow every other system. In destroying a rival system, it likewise destroys the credit of those miracles on which that system was established; so that all the prodigies of different religions are to be regarded as contrary facts, and the evidences of these prodigies, whether weak or strong, as opposite to each other. According to this method of reasoning, when we believe any miracle of Mahomet or his successors, we have for our warrant the testimony of a few barbarous Arabians; and on the other hand, we are to regard the authority of Titus Livius, Plutarch, Tacitus, and, in short, of all the authors and witnesses,

Grecian, Chinese, and Roman Catholic, who have related any miracle in their particular religion: I say, we are to regard their testimony in the same light as if they had mentioned that Mahometan miracle, and had in express terms contradicted it with the same certainty as they have for the miracle they relate. This argument may appear over subtle and refined, but is not in reality different from the reasoning of a judge who supposes that the credit of two witnesses, maintaining a crime against any one, is destroyed by the testimony of two others, who affirm him to have been two hundred leagues distant at the same instant when the crime is said to have been committed.

One of the best attested miracles in all profane history is that which Tacitus reports of Vespasian, who cured a blind man in Alexandria by means of his spittle, and a lame man by the mere touch of his foot, in obedience to a vision of the god Serapis, who had enjoined them to have recourse to the Emperor for these miraculous cures. The story may be seen in that fine historian [Hist. lib. v. cap. 8. Suetonius gives nearly the same account in Vita Vesp.], where every circumstance seems to add weight to the testimony, and might be displayed at large with all the force of argument and eloquence, if any one were now concerned to enforce the evidence of that exploded and idolatrous superstition. The gravity, solidity, age, and probity of so great an emperor who, through the whole course of his life, conversed in a familiar manner with his friends and courtiers, and never affected those extraordinary airs of divinity assumed by Alexander and Demetrius; the historian, a contemporary writer, noted for candor and veracity, and withal the greatest and most penetrating genius, perhaps, of all antiquity, and so free from any tendency to credulity that he even lies under the contrary imputation of atheism and profaneness; the persons, from whose authority he related the miracle, of established character for judgment and veracity, as we may well presume, eye-witnesses of the fact, and confirming their testimony after the Flavian family was despoiled of the empire, and could no longer give any reward as the price of a lie—Utrumque, qui interfecit, nunc quoque memorant, postquam nullum mendacis pretium; to which if we add the public nature of the facts, as related, it will appear that no evidence can well be supposed stronger for so gross and so palpable a falsehood.

There is also a memorable story related by Cardinal de Retz, which may well deserve our consideration. When that intriguing politician fled into Spain, to avoid the persecution of his enemies, he passed through Saragossa, the capital of Arragon; where he was shown, in the cathedral, a man who had served seven years as door-keeper, and was well known to everybody in town that had ever paid his devotions at that church. He had been seen, for so long a time, wanting a leg; but recovered that limb by the rubbing of holy oil upon the stump,—and the Cardinal assures us that he saw him with two legs. This miracle was vouched by all the canons of the Church; and the whole company in town were appealed to for a confirmation of the fact, whom the Cardinal found, by their zealous devotion, to be thorough believers of the miracle. Here the relater was also contemporary to the supposed prodigy, of an incredulous and libertine character, as well as of great genius; the miracle of so singular a nature as could scarcely admit of a counterfeit, and the witnesses very numerous, and all of them in a manner spectators of the fact to which they gave their testimony. And what adds mightily to the force of the evidence, and may double our surprise on this occasion, is, that the Cardinal himself, who relates the story, seems not to give any credit to it, and consequently cannot be suspected of any concurrence in the holy fraud. He considered justly that it was not requisite, in order to reject a fact of this nature, to be able accurately to disprove the testimony, and to trace its falsehood through all the circumstances of knavery and credulity which produced it. He knew that, as this was commonly altogether impossible at any small distance of time and place, so was it extremely difficult, even where one was immediately present, by reason of the bigotry, ignorance, cunning, and roguery of a great part of mankind. He therefore concluded, like a just reasoner, that such an evidence carried falsehood upon the very face of it; and that a miracle, supported by any human testimony, was more properly a subject of derision than of argument.

[To be continued.]

A certain up-country clergyman discoursed in this truly eloquent manner upon the subject of Jonah and the Whale. It is almost as good as Talmage's best. He said: "I seem to see Jonah passing along the road to Nineveh; I seem to see him entering the ticket office, buy his ticket, and pay for it; I seem to see him walk upon the vessel; I seem to see them lift their anchor and the stately ship move grandly out upon the broad Atlantic."—Liberal Christian.

[Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1875, by F. E. Abbott, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.]

PAUL GOWER.

A RATIONALISTIC STORY

OF

ENGLISH AND AMERICAN LIFE.

(CHAPTER XXIV.—(Continued).)

In New York City, you behold the American, if not at his best, yet at his busiest—the shrewd, keen, ingenious, indomitable, inexhaustible "Yankee" that Englishmen may, might, could, or should have heard of; who chiefly believes in success, and too often worships it in its grossest and most material form of money, for which I am not going to justify him; though the characteristic has been so unfairly exaggerated that even such a man as John Stuart Mill could once write that, in the United States, one sex was entirely given up to "dollar-hunting," and the other to "breeding dollar-hunters." But Britons, at any rate, cannot afford to throw stones. I have not heard that Americans ever proposed to erect a statue to Mammon in the shape of a merely rich railway speculator, or furnished occasion for a certain Latter-Day Pamphlet that we all remember (nor, it may be added, kicked their idol when it had fallen): your Plutocrat in New York City being appropriately allowed to perform that act of self-worship and self-stultification himself. Hear the truth about both nations: "In America there is a touch of shame when a man exhibits the evidences of a large property, as if, after all, it needed apology; but the Englishman has pure pride in his wealth and esteems it a final certificate."† In fact, the American only talks more about money, as about everything else that interests him, but lacks the ingrained reverence for it of both the average Briton and Frenchman—the last of whom, apart from his lust for it as a means of display and luxury, often becomes avaricious in his old age, when there is no meaner, sharper, or politer rogue conceivable. But the derided Yankee appears to advantage even in his fiercest pursuit of wealth; seldom seeking to compass the object of his ambition by parsimony or even economy; not often allowing it to kill his generous instincts, sympathy, and public spirit, and, being in general satisfied by making a moderate provision for his children. He has none of that posthumous egotism so common among Englishmen, a desire to found a family—"an ingenious contrivance by which greed is rendered insatiable." He means to give his descendants the advantages of a good education, travel, and a start in life; but intends that they shall work as well as himself, and sees no glory in the idea of keeping them idle forever. He would rather let his cup overflow, for the benefit of the community, into Astor Libraries, Peter Cooper Institutes, Cornell Universities, Peabody Charities, and the like. His Pactolus is dammed up into no great stagnant pond, breeding corruption, but allowed to flow, as from a reservoir, into channels fertilizing the neighborhood. Both his acquisitiveness and liberality are helped by circumstance. In every new, rapidly advancing country, materialism must necessarily be uppermost—there is so much to be done, to be got, to be scrambled for—and as, in the old proverb, all roads led to Rome, so in the United States the one way to distinction is dollar-getting, and all honest modes of it are equally honorable. Titles and decorations are non-existent to divide the struggle. Yet, at the same time, money will purchase for its possessor far less than almost anywhere else in Christendom—certainly not the social privileges, position, and consideration it bestows in England. But what I have to say on that head will come in better presently.

The American's pluck, persistence, intense application, and adaptability to circumstances justify the success they insure: he is rarely hard-natured, or proud, or exacting (except towards himself); and however rich, celebrated, or illustrious, never conceits himself to be made of different flesh and blood than his poorer fellow-creatures, to whom he is commonly very ready to lend a helping hand. He scarcely expects deference for his wealth alone. Mr. Danbey could not exist in New York City, nor Mr. Carver—an essentially English pair, of course deducting the villainy of the latter. The American millionaire, merchant, lawyer, editor, "big-bug" of every description, troubles himself less about his dignity than any man going; the American employé (there is no English word covering my meaning) yields no obedience beyond the limits of plain duty, stands on his manhood, and, business hours over, considers himself "the boss's" equal—his vote counts as much in shaping the destinies of the nation. He has even been known to "take a drink" with him, without any of the insufferable consequences we should imagine as inevitable. Very likely "the boss" has himself risen from the position of employé; certainly the latter hopes to do so, and the consciousness of either fact exerts a wholesome influence on both, though not all that could be desired. If the system fail, as it assuredly does and must, in neutralizing artificial distinctions and enmities, and in realizing what the French theorize about as fraternité, but never practise, it, at least, works as well as the English, with its chronic strikes, "rattennings," organized assassinations, and Mr. Broadhead. Strikes there are, and trades-unions there are, in the United States; but these are inevitable in the great and growing contest between labor and capital, extant in every civilized, manufacturing country. The question was not killed with those poor revolutionary Communists of Paris, nor will be settled by any ten, or nine, or eight hours' agreement; though perhaps by co-operation—the substitution of mutual for opposite interests. And nowhere will this be sooner decided than in America. In England the whole framework of society rests on authority: rank, position, custom, opinion, usage, all exert a compressive and repressive influence; everybody is somebody's superior, and accustomed to exact as to yield proportionate deference. Democratic tendencies disappear as men get on in the world; they go over to the exclusives, while "the hardest radical instantly uncovers and changes his tone to a lord."‡ In the United States things are republican and pulsative; there is no rooted discord existing between classes, and but temporary antagonism; none of that arbitrary division of society into hard strata, and unhappy, unnatural estrangement of human interests, which Talfourd denounced from the judicial bench, with his dying words, as the arch sin of English civilization. I know all about the impossibility of people of different breeding, tastes, habits, and manners associating with each other (what a paltry parody of their betters a large proportion of the English middle classes are; how materialistic those below them); but that is not the point. The real distinction between the American social system and that which Britain is striving to throw off is this: In the former it is a man's own fault if he does not attain proper rank in his own guild, and with his like—it will be accorded him, and its accompanying consideration, as freely as his place to a lord in England, where law and custom force on every one at his birth a false and fictitious gradation of rank, from which no effort of his own can free him. Inevitably caste shows itself in conduct. "Our great people," says Thackeray,† "are so habituated to see folks on their knees before them, that they are shocked when they meet a man of independent demeanor." In political liberty Englishmen stand ahead of the nations of Europe; in social progress they lag after them all.

Of course there are many disadvantages on the other side. In a country where "one man is as good as another," the Irish corollary "and a great deal better" will not infrequently be acted upon, especially by poor Paddy himself, inevitably the most rampant republican of the community. Englishmen are, on their first arrival here, always intensely disgusted with American manners, or rather, as they would say, the utter want of them. Their first experience is like being plunged into a bed of stinging nettles. They find no deference and but little civility anywhere. The hotel clerk doesn't condescend to notice them until he has finished conversation with his friends. The shoe-black who polishes their boots, pockets his five or ten cents without a word of acknowledgment. When they want postage-stamps, the vendor thereof serves them as if highly resenting that duty and bound to convey as much to their offensive selves in the brusque discourtesy of his action. If they ask a pedestrian to direct them in the street, he first stares at and springs an "How?" upon them with almost as agreeable an effect upon their nerves as the snapping of a pistol, and then tells them with what is to them quite a revolting abruptness. Sharpness, rudeness, incivility, self-assertion, seem to be the rule; everywhere it appears taken for granted that courtesy, politeness—those small amenities of daily life which cost so little, yet are worth so much in softening and mitigating its wear and tear and friction—are, at least in the intercourse of men, uncared for, or rather fully disregarded.

All of this is more than half true, and worth putting on record, with a view to its correction. It may be questioned, indeed, if we have as yet succeeded in producing as agreeable a social average as is common, not merely in Great Britain, but throughout civilized Europe. The standard of national manners certainly needs elevating. There is too much of selfishness, egotism, and conceit among us (especially the latter)—the root whence this altogether gratuitous and rampant self-assertion originates. Civility is mistaken for servility, or, at least, something akin to it. Every American is a walking De-

†In the earlier editions of his Elements of Political Economy.

‡Ralph Waldo Emerson, in English Traits.

†Emerson, in English Traits.

‡To M. Taine. See the latter's Letters to England.

declaration of Independence "on his own hook," and bound to show strangers that he is as important a person as they are, if not more so. Very good! Only if we were entirely at ease on the subject we should hardly be so intent on proving it: such an ever-active demonstration suggests latent doubts and misgivings. Neither is there anything inherently degrading in those "minor morals" of kindness, courtesy, good behavior, and pleasant manners, nor contrary to the soundest republicanism and strictest American feeling.

But something remains to be said on the other side, which the Englishman hardly takes note of. He is like a man emerging from a crowded parlor into the uncompromising atmosphere out of doors, where perhaps a bracing wind is blowing. Observe that the American, so brusque and unceremonious to his fellow, is towards women the politest of persons. That is a natural, manly impulse in all who have risen above the rudimentary selfishness of savage life—which, by the way, class civilization sometimes travels round to and emulates. In France, "where they have the prettiest words for the beau sexe and nothing beyond," the women work harder than the men, performing not only much more than their share in the office, shop, and manufactory, but even the coarsest agricultural drudgery. In England they have a sliding scale of courtesy, adapted to the rank of the person addressed, and sometimes speak to "inferiors" as if they belonged to another species. The average American, being in a very great hurry to get on in the world, and jealous of his independence, neglects the amenities, just as he is careless of his language so long as it expresses his meaning in a direct, idiomatic manner—for which, after all, language was invented. In what constitutes the essence of politeness, namely, good nature, he is really second to none and superior to most people. Already his more intelligent countrymen—the editors (whom Englishmen imagine as perpetually "on the rampage" towards one another), lawyers, merchants, and others (especially if travelled)—have adopted a suavity of manner quite edifying to witness; and by and by we shall cultivate the graces, and originate a new school of manners, excelling anything to be seen in Europe, because founded on that practical recognition of manhood which, as intimated, forms the basis of the national character, and entirely free from the taint of caste considerations. In the meantime is not British snobbishness as objectionable as American rudeness, and a meaner quality? I oblige, deplore, and detest the steamboat, railway, hotel, or express clerk who is so very "gentlemanly" as to be above his business, the conductor who "promptly ditches" his passenger on the provocation of being asked to change a five-dollar bill, the "sales-lady" who elevates the nose of scorn at me when I don't buy the first article she produces, the Jack-in-office in general which fancies itself the natural lord and master of those temporarily subjected to its control, and like others have marvelled at "the mystery of American strength as a nation and weakness as a public," but surely the civility of British attendants is not much to brag of, being always more or less identified with a slavish craving for back-sheesh—the offer of which, in the United States, would be resented as an insult. On the whole, I prefer Mose the Bowery boy to Tittlebat Titmouse; and can almost put up with Irish Biddy's barbarism, stupidity, and absurd airs of equality abroad, when I remember the poor creature's condition at home, or "no followers allowed" in London,—though I grant you it requires some philanthropy to do so.

Concede to this equitable democracy a large-heartedness nowhere, I think, so well developed as on the American continent, public spirit which appears equal to any task but that of reforming its own abuses, the frankest and most cordial acceptance of strangers (native or foreign) who can show any title to a welcome, and a facility of adaptation of new usages so remarkable that, socially, New York is continually changing,—and you have its human aggregate, whose rush of life is so vigorous that, at first, it seems to take away one's breath and then intoxicates like champagne. Amid such a fast population an Englishman is apt to imagine there can be no place for him, until he finds himself straining every nerve to be neck-and-neck with the foremost—just as he wonders at men jumping off the ferry-boats, to gain a few seconds, on peril of their lives, and does the same himself in a week or two. There should be a larger supply of oxygen in the air than the average, life is so stimulating. The American works harder than the Briton, because longer, and with a keener nervous energy; there being in every class a feverish struggle for money or success unknown in every other country. The whole nation, male and female, is possessed with a demon of unrest and anxiety. The higher one ascends in the social scale, the more intense is the demand upon brain and body—the New Yorker, especially, doing business with greater ardor, and performing more intellectual and physical labor in the twenty-four hours than any inhabitant of any other city in the universe. No wonder it sometimes lands him in the madhouse, or induces paralysis (almost a national disease), or drinking, or drugging (of which anon); though he seldom commits suicide, and never, as Englishmen say, "breaks his heart" from reverse of fortune, being born heir to the idea of his superiority to circumstances. He doesn't cry over spilt milk, is quick in abandoning failure and trying again; plastic, a man of many dodes. He will either make a shaft or bolt of the means at command. If he "burst up" half a dozen times, in as many different callings (changing them as often as he pleases without loss of dignity or self-respect), he can go to Kansas, or San Francisco, or Texas, and begin life afresh, without emigrating. The Western States are practically colonies, minus the disadvantages of expatriation, and plus the power of returning in days instead of months, as with Britons from Australia or New Zealand. It is the consciousness of these resources, together with his great gains—for New York is perhaps the most prosperous of cities, despite its municipal dishonesty—which has rendered him indifferent to political villainy. He has not felt the pinch as other people do when their public men are knaves. "Let them thrive," he has said, "and be something'd to them!" A few hundreds of dollars, more or less (his mule of the swindle), won't make much difference to him; he could realize ten times the sum in the time it would take to dabble in politics—attend primary meetings, find men to accept office, canvass his acquaintances, discover who is fit for a public post, and who, at the same time, will accept small pay for much responsibility; and then watch carefully that the person whom he has aided in electing discharges his duties. All this would involve work—work diverted from his own direct profit to that of the community, of which, to be sure, he is a member, and not a less respectable and patriotic one than your French or Englishman; but it needs a greater than ordinary stimulus to induce him to leave his vocation for politics. By and by, when his pocket is more nearly touched, when he lives closer, and the stealings imply coming down a grade in the world, he will be as sharp with his rascals as anybody else dare.

Preeminently a nervous, bilious, and overworked person, possessing the sensitiveness of the Frenchman without his elasticity, the earnestness of the English temperament and not its equability, subject to more exhausting influences, both of climate and circumstance, than either,—nevertheless the New Yorker gives himself but little rest and no holidays, except the inevitable Fourth of July and New Year's Day, exhibiting on the former a rather rudimentary tendency towards flags and fire-works, liquor, brass bands, and gunpowder; and too often combining the "calls" of the latter with locomotive inebriation. He has, indeed, yet to learn the appropriately named art of recreation, his principal resource at present centering in alcohol. "He drinks," said a keen-sighted traveller, "not for social enjoyment, but as a physical necessity, to relieve apparently some actual cerebral over-strain." Also, as intimated, he does himself; dabbling in narcotics, anesthetics, and so forth, to soothe the stereotyped irritability of his nerves. There is no country wherein quacks so notoriously flourish as in the United States; and, as a prominent New York paper recently asserted, "The extent to which women are blindly using chloroform is as astonishing as it is fatal; if they do not suffer from its effects, the next generation will." Their dread of pain and trouble induces still worse practices, to be honestly admitted in this story. Still let us not be too ready to cast stones at them. Whatever the vices of American society, there are various counteracting and compensating phenomena which prevent, and are sure to prevent, them in the long run from doing the mischief they seem to threaten. In other words, there are checks and balances to be considered, as well as tendencies.

[To be continued.]

The writer has availed himself of various passages and suggestions in the text from the N. Y. Tripped Nation, and Anglo-American Times (which last excellent and valuable journal has done more to remove error and diffuse correct information concerning American affairs in Great Britain than any other paper extant). The way in which these passages have been introduced forbids more than a general acknowledgment.

"Kitty's going to join our Sabbath School," said one little girl to another; "she's coming with me, next Sunday, ain't you Kitty?"
"Oh, I don't know—I've never been to Sabbath School; what do you have to do?"
"Why you get saved, of course; and books and albums, and—"
"I mean, what do you have to do—have to study anything?"
"Oh it isn't like that. It's like church, you know. When you first go in, you have to put your head down and pray."
"But I can't pray," says heathen Kitty; "I don't know how."
"Oh, well, do as I do. Shut your eyes and count fifty."

At a spirit meeting the other night, a gentleman requested the medium to ask what amusements were most popular in the spirit world. The reply was, "Reading of obituary notices."

GIRARD COLLEGE.—None will question Mr. Girard's liberality and philanthropy in voting so large a portion of his fortune to so laudable purpose; and yet this same man confines his posthumous charity to "poor white male orphans;" and after saying, "I do not forbid, but I do not recommend the Greek and Latin languages" as branches of study, while including such abstruse studies as "astronomy, natural, chemical, and experimental philosophy," in the curriculum which he lays out for the instruction of the children, he winds up by enjoining and requiring that "no ecclesiastic missionary, or minister of any sect whatever, shall ever hold or exercise any station or duty whatever in said college, nor shall any such person ever be admitted for any purpose, or as a visitor, within the premises appropriated to the purposes of said college." When I presented my ticket of admission to the porter at the college lodge this morning, I found myself unconsciously regarding my costume, and considering whether it in any way partook of a clerical character. A moment's afterthought, however, convinced me that no sane man would ever accuse me of being a priest or person, and I was soon laughing over the idea with Professor Allen, the President of the College. "Do you strictly enforce the anti-clerical regulation?" I asked of Mr. Allen. "Yes; the law compels me to do so," he replied; "if any clergyman finds his way in here, he does so with a supersessio veri," and then he laughingly added: "I recall an incident in this regard. A gentleman with a clerical look about him once presented a pass to the janitor. The janitor eyed him up and down, and then said, 'I cannot admit you, sir; you are a clergyman.' 'The devil I am!' exclaimed the visitor, who was a banker, or merchant, or engaged in some kind of business. 'You can pass,' was the quiet rejoinder of the janitor. He knew at once that any one using such an expression was not likely to infringe on the provisions of Mr. Girard's will."—Cor. N. Y. Times.

THE GREATEST LIAR ON RECORD.—The Bishop of Litchfield hath a taste for walking, and on one occasion, sometime ago, he walked from a church in the Black country to the railway station, where he was to take the train for home. On the way he happened to observe a group of men sitting together on the ground, and immediately resolved to "say a word in season" to them after the fashion of the Caliph Haroun or the average district tract distributor. "Well, my good men," said his lordship incognito, "what are you doing?" The response of one of the men was not calculated to please and encourage the amiable prelate. "We bin a loyin'," he said. "Lying!" said the horrified bishop; "what do you mean?" "Why, yer see," was the explanation, "one on us fun a kettle, and we bin a tryin' who can tell the biggest lie to have it." "Shocking!" said the bishop, and straightway improving the occasion he proceeded to impress upon the sinners the enormity of lying. He informed them that he had been taught that one of the greatest sins was to tell a lie, and, in fact, so strongly had this been urged upon him that never in the whole course of his life had he told a lie. Would that we might relate how those wicked men were moved and charmed by the recital of such saintliness! Alas! no sooner had the excellent bishop made this announcement than there was a gleeful shout: "Gie th' Governor th' kettle, gie th' Governor th' kettle!"

CASH RECEIPTS.

For the week ending July 26, 1873.

A. R. Kochler, $3; Wm. K. Miller, $2.50; S. A. Wood, $3; S. H. Dame, $3; N. H. Webster, $3; Thos. Taaker, $3; Jacob Edson, $3; C. Runck, $3; Wm. Zimmerman, $3; Edmund Snyder, $3; Amos Boynton, $3; George Lewis, $1.50; C. H. Lake, $1.50; S. C. Ward, $3 etc.; J. L. Mason, $2.50; S. A. Hackman, $5 etc.; F. C. Wheeler, $3 etc.; F. W. Woodward, $5 etc.; F. H. Henshaw, $10; E. F. Hunt, $5 etc.; H. L. Hall, $3; H. W. Beach, $2; John Eldering, $3; D. M. McAllister, $3; J. S. Shaller, $2; L. S. Hagood, $3; L. C. Best, $3; C. G. Cornell, $1.50; J. A. Phangle, $1.50; L. W. Blackely, $1.50; Fred B. Allen, $1.50; Robt Avery, $5; C. Ropp, Jr., $5 etc.; James Whittier, $5 etc.; L. O. Bass, $1.50; Augusta Seeger, $1.50; Helen L. B. Postwick, $3; Eliza A. Babbitt, $3; Max Jungblut, $3; Geo. Meisner, $3; E. F. Blaisdell, $1.50; Wm. McKensie, $3; E. D. Stark, $1; J. N. Wilson, $3 etc.; T. C. Evans, $5.40; R. M. Mellen, $1; H. S. Ware, $3; O. H. Frothingham, $100.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittance acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Pentagon The Index is five cents per quarter, dating from receipt of the first number, payable in advance at the place of delivery.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on New York. Cheques on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or Single Numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

N. B.—THE INDEX is payable in advance. Its friends should not be offended if the paper is stopped at the expiration of their term as indicated by the mail-tag. We have no means of knowing whether they wish it continued or not except the receipt or non-receipt of the subscription price.

The Index.

AUGUST 2, 1873.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B. No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OTAVIUS BROOKS PROTHINGHAM, THOMAS WESTWORTH, HIGGINSON, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HOLLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), Rev. MONROE D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS TO INDEX STOCK.

Mrs. F. W. Christern, New York City, One Share	$100
Rich'd B. Westbrook, Sonman, Pa.	100
R. C. Spencer, Milwaukee, Wis., Two "	200
R. W. Howes, Boston, Mass., One "	100
Chas. W. Story, Detroit, Mich., Five "	500
E. W. Meddaugh, New York, N. Y., " "	500
O. B. Frothingham, New York, N. Y., " "	500

DOLLAR DONATION FUND.

This fund is to be used, first, in meeting any deficiency in current expenses that may result from the recent "Index troubles," and, secondly, in such other ways as the editor shall find most advantageous for the paper. All appropriations will be reported to the Directors.

Acknowledged with thanks for the week ending July 26:-

$1.00 each—C. E. Serrill, N. H. Webster, C. F. Hardon, Mrs. Jacob Martin, Oscar Root; $5.00—Chas. Voysey.

RADICAL CALVINISM.

In the Christian Union of June 18, Rev. Edward C. Towne published a long criticism upon Unitarianism and Free Religion, their tendencies and some of their present representatives. In 1860 he left the Orthodox ranks and joined the Unitarian denomination; in 1867 he took an active part in organizing the Free Religious Association; and now (for such is the apparent drift of his article) he abandons both Unitarianism and Free Religion to their fate, in the fond belief that Orthodoxy itself has, after all, more of true liberality and true religion in it than either of the liberal movements he first espoused and at present so sharply criticises. Although he does not explicitly say so, it would seem that he now prefers to affiliate with progressive Orthodoxy, as retaining a profounder religious faith, and promising a larger religious freedom than are to be discovered or anticipated in the diminishing Christianity of these unorthodox movements. For in some sense scarcely intelligible, Mr. Towne still adheres to Christianity as the "providential" and purest form of religion possible to man.

We have somewhat hesitated to make any comments on the above-mentioned article, lest Mr. Towne might mistake their motive; but on the whole we judge that he will credit us with as little wish to wound as he would have credited to himself. Accepting his own caustic strictures as a perfectly legitimate discussion of what is fairly before the public, and not doubting that the misrepresentation and practical injustice he falls into result from imperfect comprehension of a movement he never fully fathomed, and not from the least intention to distort it or to caricature its participants, we think that the cause of truth will be furthered by criticism as frank on our part as on his.

The principal points made by Mr. Towne against the Free Religious movement are that the "leaders" of it (we know of nobody who aspires to the self-stultifying and absurd position of "leading" a movement against all personal "leadership") have adopted the new dogma of "mixing no religion whatever with their liberty, lest liberty should suffer;" that the "Free Religious conceit of exclusive knowledge of freedom is the last refinement of Unitarian conceit;" and that "the truth is that Christian thought has generally reached in our day an undogmatic epoch." In other words, the Free Religious Association has abjured religious faith in striving to attain an unreal and in fact dogmatic freedom; while the Christian sects of to-day are finding all freedom that is desirable by developing their faith into "a breadth and depth of pure consciousness of religious motives, of godliness and charity and devotion, which no dogma can ever get under." In Mr. Towne's estimation, all "freedom" that is not based upon "faith" is "narrow and barren;" and he ardently expects that "a grand radicalism of the heart of Christendom is to break forth with new interpretation of Law and Gospel."

Here is betrayed the secret of Mr. Towne's very imperfect radicalism. He claims "for fifteen years" to have been an "extreme radical;" but in point of fact he has never been, is not now, and probably never will be, an "extreme radical" at all. From the first beginnings of his heresy until now, he has been a devotee of faith rather than of ideas. Unlike the Unitarians (whom for this reason he never fully understood) he originally seceded from Orthodoxy not because it set bounds to human freedom of thought, but because its doctrine of damnation for sinners set bounds to human faith in God, by making the Divine character intrinsically hideous and unlovely. What he has striven for has always been an intenser faith rather than a larger freedom. His hostility to Jesus as the self-offered Savior from a hell the very existence of which would be a dishonor to God, and as the claimant of a mission which would put a human leader in the place of Providence itself, has grown out of a jealousy for the Divine glory which is worthy of the chief fathers of Calvinism itself; and his wrath has burned fiercely against a "pretender" who thrusts himself between man and God. Hence he has said and written things about Jesus which even to the radicals seemed extravagant, bitter, and unjust, and which are inexplicable to those who do not discern that Mr. Towne is an enthusiast for the rights of God rather than for the rights of man. With all his ability (and he is as able as he is brave, sincere, and self-sacrificing), he inherits the spirit of the Orthodoxy in which he was bred, and which it is very unlikely he will ever entirely escape from. A year or two ago he claimed to be a "Calvinist" still, in a Boston Evangelical paper; and although such a claim appeared to many at the time as a freak of eccentricity bordering on derangement, when considered as coming from one who imagines himself also to be an "extreme radical," it now seems strictly true in a certain sense. For Calvinism, like all other phases of Christianity, rests on "faith;" and Mr. Towne's radicalism is nothing but "faith" carried out so far as to become a protest against the historic doctrines of Calvinism itself. It is singular how extremes sometimes meet; and the old Calvinistic "faith" in the Bible re-appears in a striking manner in Mr. Towne's rapt anticipation that a "grand radicalism of the heart of Christendom" will yet burst forth in a "new interpretation of Law and Gospel." Alas for the fond ecstatic dream! The only radicalism that is ever "grand" bursts forth from the heart of humanity, and knows no "Law and Gospel" but that of ideas. Ideas, not faith—we must accept the issue. There is no radicalism but that of ideas. Change the objects of faith as you will, faith itself remains essentially unreasoning; and reason is the synonyme of radicalism. To protest against the personal Jesus in the name of the personal God, and to transfer faith from one to the other, may be and is a great advance in religious development; but it is not radicalism. True, it marks the transition from Christianity to Theism of one kind; and it seems remarkable that any man should still consider himself a Christian who transfers his faith from Jesus the Christ to God the Father, even although he still clings to the faith-principle which underlies Christianity and almost all other special religions. Between faith and reason, however, taken as bases, there is a world-wide difference. Radicalism is the ordering of thought and life by reason, by principles, by ideas; while Christianity is the ordering of thought and life by the will of God revealed through the Christ. Behind the will of God, however, Christianity does not venture to go; neither can any form of religion which rests on faith. But radicalism proclaims ideas as the law of all personalities whether human or divine; and this law is paramount to all will whatsoever. If to abandon the law of faith for the law of reason, and to substitute ideas for persons as the only rightful sovereigns of human life, is to sacrifice religion to liberty, then Mr. Towne's strictures are correct; but in that case he is marvellously mistaken in imagining himself a radical at all. He adheres still to the faith-principle as the ground-work of religion, as it is indeed of Christianity in general and of Calvinism in particular. While he builds on that basis, he is more Orthodox than radical, and falls into a grave error in mistaking sharp sayings about Jesus for proof of radicalism. When he becomes really radical, he will build on reason, not faith, and perceive that the emphasis put by the Free Religious Association on the idea of liberty is not the sacrifice of religion, but rather the establishment of it on the only foundation upon which it can permanently maintain itself in the veneration of mankind.

RADICAL CHARITY.

One of THE INDEX subscribers, in renewing his subscription recently, wrote as follows: "I do so at once, as my sympathy and wishes are with the principles which are generally advocated by THE INDEX. I have noticed, however, traces of an intolerant and illiberal spirit in some of the articles during the past year, and really hope that this may be remedied in future. It is not pleasant to find bigotry in our columns; that properly belongs to the Christian press."

The good man and the honest truth-seeker can never mean to be intolerant or uncharitable. In the first place, it is his duty not to be. He owes it to the truth to give it the freest possible chance to be expressed; and he knows that it requires many different voices for its utterance, and many different ways for its manifestation. He knows that the truth must have free course in order to get glorified; and he knows that he has no right to sit as sole judge for its cause, and to determine who shall appear as its witnesses, or how they shall present their testimony. He knows that the truth has the right to the freest parliament, and to the advocacy of anybody and everybody, no matter what their title or standing; and he observes that sometimes the latest new-comer, as well as he who has longest held his place, has an important word to utter and a valuable part to take in the discussion. But not only is it his obligation to the truth to be charitable and tolerant for its sake, but he owes it to his fellow truth-seekers to treat them with the strictest fairness and the most generous courtesy. Ordinarily he has no right to any other presumption than that they are truth-seekers, that they want the truth for themselves and want it to show to others. Men go on quests for truth, not for error. They may find and ignorantly take up error instead of truth; but that is not what they want—they want the truth. Now though one man may be quite certain that he has found truth in a given case (for I hold that incertitude is not the fate to which we are necessarily doomed in any intellectual inquiry), he cannot be less certain that he has not found out the whole truth about anything, and that therefore another man's candid report of what he has also found must be not only very valuable but absolutely indispensable. The discoverer has always a right to tell what he has discovered, and to tell it in his own way; and he must not be interfered with, nor sneered at, nor wantonly provoked. He most serves the truth and his fellow-men, who most encourages and aids mankind to attain and impart knowledge, and who makes the means of learning most easy, attractive, and universal. Every thinker's simple right is to utter his thought without fear and without reproach; and it is each thinker's duty to help every other thinker to do this.

But, moreover, the honest truth-seeker not merely rests under the duty to be charitable and tolerant, he can afford to be. By such a course he gains everything, he loses nothing. His gain of course is that which the truth has, and her's is immense when freedom is the condition under which all men seek her. The real truth-seeker has no fear of the truth or for the truth. He has nothing to conceal, and he desires that nothing should be concealed. He wants everything brought to the light; he desires that every man should speak, and speak freely,—that each should tell all he really knows. The result of free discussion can never be the condemnation of the truth-seeker, though it may be the condemnation of his opinions. But for this he is not sorry; he rejoices rather—no man so much—because if his opinions can be proved false he desires they should be, and then, if false, no man condemns them so heartily as he does himself. Beside the truth he has nothing of his own that he wishes to preserve,—no private opinions, or beliefs, or theories. He is not a conservative of anything that has not the vitality of truth in it, and what has that vitality he knows will live whether he seeks to destroy or to save it. The truth-seeker is a radical, therefore, because he goes for laying everything open and bare, for bringing everything into the light, for publishing and not suppressing, for ventilating and not stifling, for loosing and not binding. Were he to be intolerant and uncharitable, then, he would spite and wrong himself, he would damage his own cause, he would ruin his own interests, he would blast his own hopes. In fact, just so far as the radical is intolerant and uncharitable he is not a radical. He may think he is, but he is not. The true radical has no fear; therefore he has no hatred; therefore, again, he cannot be intolerant or uncharitable. The truth is safe because it is absolute and eternal. It waits for all men to know it. Love of truth inspires love of man; and such love rules out narrowness, and bigotry, and every vestige of partisan feeling.

In the spirit of the foregoing remarks, I thank the INDEX subscriber with whose words I began this article for his kind and frank criticism of the paper he does his part to sustain. His is no indiscriminate or unintelligent devotion, and therefore it is all the more encouraging and valuable. I believe that THE INDEX desires to be a learner as well as a teacher, and that it is willing to learn not only from its judicious friends but even from its stubborn foes. It desires to have no undue pride of virtue nor any conceit of knowledge, but as wisely to appropriate criticism and censure as praise and admiration. Its motto is "Liberty and Light." If it is in any way unfaithful to this, it desires that the fact should be brought home to it. If it fails to give the same liberty that it demands, if it refuses to receive light from any and every source while it seeks copiously to shed it forth, the sooner it is convicted of such infidelity and flat inconsistency the better. It will not exert itself to make an ingenious self-defence when fairly confronted with this charge, but will lend every possible assistance to its just prosecution,—glad to have the truth appear, even though it bring in its hand a condemnation for THE INDEX.

But though it is not impossible that any writer for these columns should sometimes let his or her pen take on a wiry edge, or seem to dip it in ink too intensely black or fiery red, it must at the same time be remembered that there is great virtue in plain speech, and in calling things by their right names. It must also be remembered that some persons are shocked when they have no business to be. The radical cannot use the same language that the conservative does, to describe the same thing; and although the language which is used may shock the conservative, it does not necessarily follow that the radical meant to be shocking. He must be allowed to be explicit and even forcible in utterance; and if, when he aims a well-intentioned blow at what he honestly believes to be error, somebody's prejudices happen to be in the way and get hurt, it cannot fairly be deemed his fault. Kindness and good taste must not be held to be incompatible with plainness and directness.

A. W. S.

I trust that all who desire to subscribe for THE INDEX will not forget that the opportunity is now offered them to secure the paper at the "clubbing" rate of $2.00 a year. This offer is only for a limited time, and should therefore be approved at once.

A. W. S.

SPIRITUALITY AND RELIGION.

It is a good thing to understand our terms, for it leads to greater clearness of thought, and so to better understanding of each other, more respect for each other's opinions and greater fairness in mutual judgment. The various definitions of religion, which have been offered by earnest thinkers from time to time, show what a comprehensive word it is, and how it stands for a vital, organizing principle more readily recognized by its effects than analyzed as to its nature and origin. Very few are willing to give up the term religious, and even those who do, generally make an indignant protest against its narrowed signification, and the arrogant assumptions of those who claim a special right to it.

But it seems to me there is a real, practical misunderstanding arising from the confusion of the terms spiritual and religious. Many imagine that a person who is spiritually disposed,—that is to say, who delights in the exercise of his spiritual faculties, in the contemplation of the grand themes of eternal life, in meditation upon the great creative power in all which can be distinguished from the objects of time and sense,—is necessarily a religious man; while another honest soul who is concerned mainly with that which is directly about him, but, lacking something of the "vision and the faculty divine," is little concerned except about the here and the now, and is incapable of rhapsodies and enthusiasms, thinks often that he ought to be troubled about his state, and regrets that he is not a religious man.

While I will not question Mr. Abbot's etymology of the word religion, if it be really based on the best evidence, I do feel that the word in its largest and best sense, and as representing the most vital element of our inward life, does imply the sense of law, of obligation, and so of a binding force. It is like the law of love, which binds us so to one another that it is the only condition of freedom. Its material symbol is the law of attraction, which binds all together and holds all in relation to the great centre, and yet by which all can move in harmony and order. It is the same principle as duty, in the high sense in which Wordsworth uses it:—

"Tis thou that keep'st the sides from wrong,
And the most ancient heavens by thee are fresh and strong."

Thus considered, religion seems to me to unite in action the two elements of spirituality and materiality, or practicality. It binds this life and all future life together; it relates this planet to all other places in the universe; it fills the smallest practical duty with the infinite meaning and value of great spiritual truths, and it gives form and expression to spiritual life.

The two factors of religion in well developed natures work so harmoniously together that we do not separate them. "The man who loves his brother whom he has seen," naturally loves "God whom he hath not seen." He who rejoices in the life of the bird and the flower, and finds daily toil sweet and blessed, rejoices in the certainty of the infinite possibilities of eternity; the hour of meditation and communion sends him back strengthened and purified for active life.

But many have so divorced these two forces of life that, instead of mutually blending in and aiding each other, they are considered as antagonistic. We all know the extremes to which the admiration of spiritual exercises has carried men. It is not perhaps the common fault of our time and country, but do we not see those who are really spiritual, full of interest in spiritual themes, but who are yet wanting in that fulness of life and love which ought to be the fruits of the Spirit? It seems to me this is the explanation of those beautiful hymns and other poetic expressions of religious truths, written by men lacking all moral beauty in their lives. They were not hypocrites; they saw what they described, but they did not wed it to "the stern daughter of the voice of God."

On the other hand, do not those brave, honest souls who accept and glory in the name of atheist, but whose humane and noble lives show them sound to the core, and full of life, simply lack in spirituality? We always feel in these men a want of sympathy in those experiences of communion and divine reception which are very real to other souls; but it seems to me they are religious men, and that their devotion to truth and right is genuine, and their hearts are warm and their lives are full of earnest meaning. That they lose much of inspiration and beauty seems as inevitable as that the excessively spiritual man loses in warmth and vigor and force of action. I think the practical injustice and evil is in claiming a superior merit for the immaterial over the material side of our nature, that he who delights in contemplation is higher than he who delights in work, that he who saves his own soul is religious, but he who cares for his own body and the bodies of others is not. We are truly, grandly, and healthily religious only when the two phases of life are blended in our lives; only when soul informs the whole body, and the spiritual life animates and invigorates practical duty. The man who can go so much out of himself as to labor for other men, or for the cause of truth and right, seems to me to have gained the power of the Spirit; to be in truth related to the great Centre and Source of life,—and so to merit the name religious, however little his spiritual nature may be developed into conscious expression.

E. D. C.

INTUITION.

In the last number of THE INDEX which has reached my eye (June 7), there is an editorial summary of the contrasts to Free Religion; and among the contrasts is placed Intuitionism. Since I account myself a Free Religionist, while I also profess to be an Intuitionist, I beg to explain wherein I think the writer to misunderstand Intuition.

First, I would protest against the accepting Theodore Parker as a trustworthy expounder of the doctrine. He was a man of high moral sensitiveness, commanding will, noble aspiration, wide and rapid in his survey of men and books, bold and warm, eminent in unselfishness and self-sacrifice; but far from accurate either in logic or in history. He made the wonderful assertion that mankind at large has intuition of a future state, blind to the fact that this is false of the ancient Hebrews and of the modern Buddhists, to say nothing of our irreligious multitudes. Like Mazzini and the deist Lord Herbert of Cherbury, he regarded God and Immortality as alike truths of intuition; but I know few theists who can herein follow him. The vast majority of men regard a future state as precisely the darkest of all dogmas. One part glorifies Christianity because it reveals this otherwise unattainable doctrine; another part holds up "spirit rapping" to admiration for the same reason. The misapplication of a principle by one who exalts it, is no disproof of the principle.

I was an Intuitionist in Geometry before I became an intuitionist in Morals and Religion. It is to me a clear first principle that no science can exist except on the basis of intuition; and as Geometry is the received type of the most perfect science, I hope it will not displease the readers of THE INDEX if I enter a little into this, avoiding technicality as far as possible. The common treatises of Geometry, following Euclid, put forth in the outset certain axioms, or propositions to be received without proof; i. e., to be received upon mere reading of them, or to be believed upon looking at them,—which, in Latin phrase, is by intuition. Thus intuition confronts us on the threshold of the science. Of the current axioms, some are verbal and belong to all quantitative science; yet two, quite necessary, are purely geometrical: some persons would make three, but the following two suffice: 1. Between any two points in space one path exists shorter than any other; 2. Two straight lines perpendicular to a third are everywhere mutually equi-distant. From the first we can prove the primary properties of a plane; from the second the primary properties of parallel straight lines. Many attempts have been made to get rid of these axioms, but the reasoner has had at last to propose some other axiom as a substitute. But if any should now succeed in this attempt, the fact would remain that prior reasoners who rested on mere intuition, held as complete a conviction of truth as any of us, and a just conviction too.

Next, in the science of Mechanics we begin by laying down certain laws concerning equilibrium and motion, and concerning the transference of forces from one point of application to another. For all of these but one, mere intuition suffices to bring conviction; yet appeal may be made, and is made, to experiment, to furnish material for the proofs of argument called "induction." For the main law of Dynamics intuition does not suffice; yet neither does experiment, if we reason severely: for, the dogma that a ball once set in motion will move forever, with undiminished velocity, if unimpeded, is not adequately established as absolute truth by the petty experiments which alone we can make,—such as, on a lawn and on a sheet of ice. Such experiments suffice for the presumption of truth. Call it a hypothesis rather than a law; then in the applications of the science abundant verification of the hypothesis is found. But (what must here be pressed) induction itself rests on a basis which is anything but demonstrative. Its basis is one or more provisional assumptions, to be received as were the axioms of Geometry, upon intuition. The late Professor Baden Powell, a very keen searcher into first principles, basis induction on two presumptions, and says that the first is justified by the second. 1. "All phenomena of the kind in question are similar to the few which are actually examined." 2. Nature is uniform in her laws and processes. Now in a book problem of Mechanics or of Heat, where we by hypothesis exclude diversity, we hardly need the first principle at all; but when we deal with actual Nature, and consider the vagueness of the word "similar," the second presumption by no means "justifies" the first—much less in Chemistry, in Physiology, and in human action, where elements are very numerous, and a complexity easily unsuspected by us is at work. But the second principle, on which Sir John Herschel insists that all modern science rests—the uniformity of Nature—is furnished to us originally by intuition; just as are the axioms in Geometry. No doubt we have much after-verification of the doctrine, in the harmony of each science with itself, and next of each with others; finally in the agreement of results indicated by science with results ascertained by direct inquiry and observation. Not the less is the original doctrine a presumption, a hypothesis, a provisional truth, dictated to us by good sense, by common sense, or, it may be, by uncommon sense, by genius, upon mere intuition. Nor is this all. The "uniformity" of Nature is a very vague phrase, needing different interpretation under different circumstances, and often yielding little more than a suggestion by analogy. In the actual process of induction we cannot dispense with consideration of chances (as I have explained in the "Fragments of Logic" prefixed to my volume called Miscellanies). If we know no reason for supposing the cases not examined to differ from those examined, we presume similarity; and when we find partial verifications (in fact of that which was anticipated (by argument), we need to inquire "whether this is too much to attribute to chance." This is decided only by good sense (common or uncommon), which is supreme arbiter; just as on propositions called intuitive, one might even say we decide by intuition whether an induction is sound. Yet, of course, this is an intuition of a mind well versed in special inquiry.

I hold that science is indissolubly wedded to intuition, and that we can never succeed in building Religion into a science if we cast off intuition. I advance nothing paradoxical, but just that which we must expect. I do not regard intuition as a faculty, any more than is "good sense" a faculty. Barbarians eminently lack good sense, as is testified by their wild credulity. Wide information, habits of orderly, systematic thought, instrumental aids to accuracy (such as writing affords), public debate, open judicial processes,—all these combine to diffuse general good sense in a community; so that, as the mind of nations becomes cultivated, the sounder is the judgment and the more trustworthy the sentiment which rests on mere intuition. The basis of morals, however, is the agreement of barbarian with civilized man as to the relative rank of certain springs of action; such as, that gratitude is nobler than self-indulgence, patriotism than love of life, love of knowledge than love of dainty food, public spirit than private avarice. Only the soul from within pronounces a verdict upon such matters. If a man has a taste of his own in morals,—as, if he hold a sensual life to be better and more desirable than a life of philanthropy and self-sacrifice,—we cannot argue him down; we can only vote him down by appealing to the intuition of mankind. If any one say that this is an infirm foundation of morals, hear how Aristotle replies in this very matter, when he has appealed to the following lines of Hesiod:—

"That utterance never wholly perishes which many peoples utter; Nay, but it is even an utterance of God."

"If any one," says Aristotle, "reject this as an insufficient basis, he will never get anything else so firm." [I may add, that the "saying of Hesiod" has been caricatured into Vox populi vox Dei; instead of, "The voice of mankind is a voice of God."]

The name of my friend the lamented John Sterling is not wholly unknown to some of your readers. Baden Powell misconstrued a sentence of his, which ran: "Physical results prove nothing but a physical cause." I believe he substantially agreed with Baden Powell himself, who says: "Legitimate [physical] science can never lead to anything but higher generalizations of physical order." Sterling, though a pupil of Coleridge, was eminently free from the supercilious cloudiness by which Coleridge so exasperates one; yet he thoroughly agreed with Coleridge that it is impossible to found anything which the modern world will recognize as Religion on mere outward observation, outward experience or experiment, outward science. In Geology, Astronomy, Chemistry, &c., we of course need a human mind to follow the reasonings, but none of the premises from which we there reason are propositions concerning the human mind; therefore, also, none of the conclusions can be moral, spiritual, religious. But when propositions concerning the mind itself enter a science, then the science may become spiritual.

The most fundamental proposition of religion known to me is the axiom (justified by intuition) that "the qualities of a created mind cannot be higher, but must be immeasurably lower, than that of its Creator;" or, "If there be a Mind ruling in the universe, it contains the noblest powers of the human mind, and vastly more." To impute pre-eminent intelligence and pre-eminent goodness to the primal source of our being, is the first step into Religion. It is not and cannot be demonstrated, otherwise than by appealing to the axiom which we lay down as intuitive. Of course, as axioms in science are very few, so are the intuitive truths of morals and religion. Geometers have fretted under the axioms, vainly; so likewise do utilitarian moralists and scientific oligonists vainly fret against intuitive truths. Such first principles, though very few, are absolutely vital to the sciences.

As to making immortality an intuitive dogma, there are so many objections that it is wonderful (if anything were wonderful in religious opinion) how earnest theists can so treat it. But Coleridge wrote that the doctrine of the Trinity is the sole foundation of all reasonable philosophy; so with him the doctrine of the Trinity was intuitive! Let every man, for his own guidance, give as much weight as he pleases to his private thoughts,—to his conscientious convictions, his arguments of what is coming, his theological philosophy; but no one can propose his "intuitive truths" as a basis for the belief of others—that is, as a basis for science. He must show, either that mankind in enormous preponderance believes them, so that they are matters of human intuition, not merely personal; or else, that in some proportion to men's growth in intellect, wisdom, nobleness of moral character, they tend to believe them. If Theodore Parker had been satisfied to allege this tendency, he would have a claim for immortality as a presumption; still, as I think, by no means as a dogma which may be simply announced as truth. Immortality has always been with me (ever since I ceased to receive the doctrine on Scriptural authority) as the final result of a chain of argument which, however I might succeed in shortening it, had several loopholes of error; nor have I ever entirely overcome an underlying suspicion that there may be an inherent contradiction (such as a German school maintains that there is) in the idea that the same individual who dies can revive. Physical arguments do not seem to me at all to prove it, or even to touch the real matter; yet, since men uneducated in a science are not aware what problems in it are self-contradictory, a sense of my own ignorance incapacitates me for dogmatizing on such a subject as the After Life, which combines elements moral and physical in very uncertain relations. Hence, practically, I am here at a vast distance from Theodore Parker who was able to preach the doctrine as a fact, and make it fundamental in religion. He was certainly wrong in asserting for it the rank of a truth intuitive to mankind.

But the question whether we can appeal to human intuition for a decision on this particular matter is one of detail. I desire only to bring out clearly the true doctrine of intuitive truths, or "propositions to which we assent by mere dwelling of the mind upon them."

FRANCIS WM. NEWMAN.

WESTON SUPER MARE, ENGLAND,
June 21, 1878.

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but hereafter no space will be spared to errata.
N. B.—Articles for this department should be SHORT, and written only on one side of the sheet.

"GOOD WORDS."

DEAR INDEX:—

Amongst all the miserable trash that uselessly encumbers the press, wearing out type and wasting paper and ink, (Good Words: a Paper for the People, published at New York by the Christian-at-Work Association, must take a front rank. It is as nauseating a specimen of superstition and arrogance as one could wish never to find. The publishers send it forth in the name and in the interest of religion. From such a religion as theirs is, the world needs sorely to be released altogether. Its God is a demon who, if he cannot make a heart love him, will fill it with fear, and by that fear compel love at last, or cause the fear to be realized in an eternity of woe. These papers are sent out broadcast, falling into homes where the weight of priestly tradition crushes out all idea of newer revelations and broader truths; allying into the hands of readers who never think, except as their church has thought; spreading themselves open before eyes that, seeing, see nothing in, for, or of religion, but what they have been taught to see. Then, again, they fall into the hands of some who, careless about religion only because intellectually they have been too lazy to think about it, have lived indifferent, bad, worse, or worst lives. Some brimstone-tinted story, verse, or exhortation awakens the terrors that have but slumbered since the days of early religious instruction; a few tears, a few prayers, a standing up for Jesus, convert a sinner into a saint, and the "good words" have accomplished their mission. So the wretched business prospers! Superstition, bigotry, and cant, bring forth fruit an hundred fold; and while, here and there, one individual grows up into freedom of mind and soul, hundreds grow up into slavery, bound in chains which they seek to rivet upon all around them by means of churches, Christian associations, and similar machinery. Self-interest and fear are the elements in human nature to which all appeals are made, and where the greater terror can be produced in the hearts of hearers and readers, is the field where will be gathered the greater harvest of souls. "What did you think of the sermon?" I was asked one Sunday a few weeks ago, coming out of a church where a revivalist-preacher had delivered a rambling discourse, every other sentence of which had a coffin or a corpse in it; and the only reply I could make was, "I thought there ought to have been a bier in front of the pulpit, and a hearse at the door."

Any person who has been favored with a copy of (Good Words, No. 48, may find in it a poem, based on Matthew xvi. 26, and entitled, "Is it worth it? Or, the Gain and the Loss." This poem can be readily found by the abundance of italics in it, if by nothing else. After describing the vanity of all the pleasures the world can give, thereby implying that the gain in obtaining the whole world is very little, it describes the loss in the following "good words":

"To waken up among the damned;
To hear the devil's jeer;
To wallow in vile leprosy
No thought can picture here,
Lost! lost the soul! oh, never more
A ray of light to see,
Of peace, or hope! Endless remorse,
Undying misery."

Oh, never more to get a glimpse
Of such a thing as good or pure!
To see, at last, sin's loathsomeness,
Too late to find its cure!
And this for souls that heard of Christ!
Knew of his work of love;
Ah! that will be the ceaseless sting,
All other woes above!

Work out the sum—the gain, the loss—
And weigh the profit well;
Then tell the Loving One who asks,
Will you choose CHRIST or HELL?"

You will take notice that the last "good word" in this beautiful production needs large capitals for its proper expression.

This is a sample of the tone in which all the articles are pitched. "CHRIST, or HELL;" these are the alternatives; and from the relative size of the letters in this instance, it is safe to infer that, while it is important that people should choose Christ, it is more important that they should escape hell. And it probably is so.

It is indeed important that the whole world should escape from the hell of such doctrines as are sown and cultivated by (Good Words and its fellows. The religion of fear and self-interest cannot make the kind of people who are most worthy to be called by the name of Man. It does not give the best preparation for living the life we are living; and the "other life" for which it can make any adequate preparation must be one hardly worth living: for if the centre of that life is a Being such as is presented by the Good Words theology, then it were better to feel, with John Stuart Mill, that rather than to call a being good who is not what we mean when we call our fellow-creatures good, we would go to hell, had he the power to send us there.

F. W. WERNER.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Five Cents.

VOLUME 4.

TOLEDO, OHIO, AUGUST 9, 1873.

WHOLE No. 189.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; J. Gallion, Vice President; F. A. Loggson, L. La Grillo, Secretaries; E. K. Thomas, Treasurer.
BOSTON, MASS.—J. S. Rogers, President; A. Davis, J. W. Smith, Vice Presidents; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries; J. A. J. Wilcox, Treasurer; R. H. Ranney, F. W. Clarke, H. B. Storer, Executive Committee.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; J. E. Carls, Vice President; A. Giddings, Secretary; E. Wood, Treasurer; L. B. Crowell, M. A. Giddings, D. B. Holmes, Executive Committee.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; L. Magenheimer, Vice President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary; Wm. Fischer, Treasurer; A. C. Howe, C. G. Howdy, R. P. Thomson, Executive Committee.
TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Heedy, President; B. Bruner, Vice President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary; A. W. Harbaugh, Treasurer; L. Westover, J. Bruner, W. Krause, Executive Committee.
VIRGINIA, N. J.—L. Bristol, President; E. Dickinson, E. B. Duffy, Vice Presidents; E. G. Baisdel, Secretary; S. M. Clute, Treasurer; John Gage, D. A. Russell, E. G. Baisdel, D. L. Butler, A. C. Bristol, P. T. W. Campbell, Executive Committee.
JUNCTIONVILLE, N. H.—J. W. Eastman, President; Jas. H. Smith, Vice President; Isaac Baldwin, Treasurer; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
OLATH, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary; J. N. Haws, R. Pancoast, P. Jullen, Executive Committee.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary; J. W. Watkins, Treasurer.
BUCKSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; L. Browe, Vice President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary; C. R. Upin, Treasurer; A. D. Enos, E. O. Barnum, Betsey Brown, Executive Committee.

An Essay on Miracles.

BY DAVID HUME.

PART II.

(Concluded.)

There surely never was a greater number of miracles ascribed to one person than those which were lately said to have been wrought in France upon the tomb of Abbé Paris, the famous Jansenist, with whose sanctity the people were so long deluded. The curing of the sick, giving hearing to the deaf and sight to the blind, were everywhere talked of as the usual effects of that holy sepulchre. But what is more extraordinary, many of the miracles were immediately proved upon the spot, before judges of unquestioned integrity, attested by witnesses of credit and distinction, in a learned age, and on the most eminent theatre that is now in the world. Nor is this all: a relation of them was published and dispersed everywhere; nor were the Jesuits (though a learned body), supported by the civil magistrate and determined enemies to those opinions, in whose favor the miracles were said to have been wrought, ever able distinctly to refute or detect them. [See Note 3.] Where shall we find such a number of circumstances agreeing to the corroboration of one fact? And what have we to oppose to such a cloud of witnesses, but the absolute impossibility or miraculous nature of the events which they relate? And this, surely, in the eyes of all reasonable people, will alone be regarded as a sufficient refutation.

Is the consequence just, because some human testimony has the utmost force and authority in some cases—when it relates the battle of Philippi or Pharsalia for instance—that therefore all kinds of testimony must, in all cases, have equal force and authority? Suppose that the Cæsarean and Pompeian factions had, each of them, claimed the victory in these battles, and that the historians of each party had uniformly ascribed the advantage to their own sides,—how could mankind, at this distance, have been able to determine between them? The contrariety is equally strong between the miracles related by Herodotus or Plutarch, and those delivered by Mariana, Beale, or any monkish historian.

The wise lend a very academic faith to every report which favors the passion of the reporter; whether it magnifies his country, his family, or himself, or in any other way strikes in with his natural inclinations and propensities. But what greater temptation than to appear a missionary, a prophet, an ambassador from heaven? Who would not encounter many dangers and difficulties in order to obtain so sublime a character? Or if, by the help of vanity and a heated imagination, a man has first made a convert of himself, and entered seriously into the delusion, who ever scruples to make use of pious frauds in support of so holy and meritorious a cause?

The smallest spark may here kindle into the greatest flame, because the materials are always prepared for it. The avidum genus auricularum (Lucretius), the gazing populace, receive greedily, without examination, whatever soothes superstition and promotes wonder.

How many stories of this nature have in all ages been detected and exploded in their infancy! How many more have been celebrated for a time, and have afterwards sunk into neglect and oblivion! Where such reports, therefore, fly about, the solution of the phenomena is obvious; and we judge in conformity to regular experience and observation when we account for it by the known and natural principles of credulity and delusion. And shall we, rather than have recourse to so natural a solution, allow of a miraculous violation of the most established laws of Nature?

I need not mention the difficulty of detecting a falsehood in any private or even public history, at the place where it is said to happen; much more when the scene is removed to ever so small a distance. Even a court of judicature, with all the authority, accuracy, and judgment which they can employ, find themselves often at a loss to distinguish between truth and falsehood in the most recent actions. But the matter never comes to any issue, if trusted to the common method of altercation and debate and flying rumors; especially when men's passions have taken part on either side.

In the infancy of new religions, the wise and learned commonly esteem the matter too inconsiderable to deserve their attention or regard. And when afterwards they would willingly detect the cheat, in order to undeceive the deluded multitude, the season is now past, and the records and witnesses, which might clear up the matter, have perished beyond recovery.

No means of detection remain, but those which must be drawn from the very testimony itself of the reporters: and these, though always sufficient with the judicious and knowing, are commonly too fine to fall under the comprehension of the vulgar.

Upon the whole, then, it appears that no testimony for any kind of miracle has ever amounted to a probability, much less to a proof; and that even supposing it amounted to a proof, it would be opposed by another proof, derived from the very nature of the fact which it would endeavor to establish. It is experience only which gives authority to human testimony; and it is the same experience which assures us of the laws of Nature. When, therefore, these two kinds of experience are contrary, we have nothing to do but subtract the one from the other, and embrace an opinion, either on one side or the other, with that assurance which arises from the remainder. But according to the principle here explained, this subtraction, with regard to all popular religions, amounts to an entire annihilation; and therefore we may establish it as a maxim, that no human testimony can have such force as to prove a miracle, and make it a just foundation for any such system of religion.

I beg the limitations here made may be remarked, when I say that a miracle can never be proved, so as to be the foundation of a system of religion. For I own that, otherwise, there may possibly be miracles or violations of the usual course of Nature, of such a kind as to admit of proof from human testimony; though perhaps it will be impossible to find any such in all the records of history. Thus, suppose all authors, in all languages, agree that, from the first of January 1600, there was a total darkness over the whole earth for eight days; suppose that the tradition of this extraordinary event is still strong and lively among the people; that all travellers, who return from foreign countries, bring us accounts of the same tradition, without the least variation or contradiction,—it is evident that our present philosophers, instead of doubting the fact, ought to receive it as certain, and ought to search for the causes whence it might be derived. The decay, corruption, and dissolution of Nature is an event rendered probable by so many analogies, that any phenomenon which seems to have a tendency towards that catastrophe comes within the reach of human testimony, if that testimony be very extensive and uniform.

But suppose that all the historians who treat of England should agree that, on the first of January 1600, Queen Elizabeth died; that both before and after her death she was seen by her physicians and the whole court, as is usual with persons of her rank; that her successor was acknowledged and proclaimed by the parliament; and that, after being interred a month, she again appeared, resumed the throne, and governed England for three years.—I must confess that I should be surprised at the concurrence of so many odd circumstances, but should not have the least inclination to believe so miraculous an event. I should not doubt of her pretended death, and of those other public circumstances that followed it; I should only assert it to have been pretended, and that it neither was nor possibly could be real. You would in vain object to me the difficulty, and almost impossibility, of deceiving the world in an affair of such consequence; the wisdom and solid judgment of that renowned queen, with the little or no advantage which she could reap from so poor an artifice,—all this might astonish me; but I would still reply, that the knavery and folly of men are such common phenomena that I should rather believe the most extraordinary events to arise from their concurrence, than admit of so signal a violation of the laws of Nature.

But should this miracle be ascribed to any new system of religion, men in all ages have been so much imposed upon by ridiculous stories of that kind, that this very circumstance would be a full proof of a cheat, and sufficient with all men of sense, not only to make them reject the fact, but even reject it without further examination. Though the Being to whom the miracle is ascribed be, in this case, almighty, it does not upon that account become a whit more probable; since it is impossible for us to know the attributes or actions of such a Being, otherwise than from the experience which we have of his productions in the usual course of Nature. This still reduces us to past observation, and obliges us to compare the instances of the violation of truth in the testimony of men with those of the violation of the laws of Nature by miracles, in order to judge which of them is most likely and probable. As the violations of truth are more common in the testimony concerning religious miracles than in that concerning any other matter of fact, this must diminish very much the authority of the former testimony, and make us form a general resolution never to lend any attention to it, with whatever specious pretence it may be covered.

Lord Bacon seems to have embraced the same principles of reasoning. "We ought," says he, "to make a collection or particular history of all monsters and prodigious births or productions, and, in a word, of everything new, rare, and extraordinary in Nature. But this must be done with the most severe scrutiny, lest we depart from truth. Above all, every relation must be considered as suspicious which depends in any degree upon religion—as the prodigies of Livy; and no less so in everything that is to be found in the writers of natural magic or alchemy, or such authors who seem, all of them, to have an unconquerable appetite for falsehood and fable." [Nov. Org. lib. II. aph. 9.]

I am the better pleased with the method of reasoning here delivered, as I think it may serve to confound those dangerous friends or disguised enemies to the Christian religion who have undertaken to defend it by the principles of human reason. Our most holy religion is founded on Faith, not on reason; and it is a sure method of exposing it to put it to such a trial as it is by no means fitted to endure. To make this more evident, let us examine those miracles related in Scripture; and not to lose ourselves in too wide a field, let us confine ourselves to such as we find in the Pentateuch, which we shall examine according to the principles of these pretended Christians, not as the word or testimony of God himself, but as the production of a mere human writer and historian. Here then we are first to consider a book, presented to us by a barbarous and ignorant people, written in an age when they were still more barbarous, and in all probability long after the facts which it relates, corroborated by no concurring testimony, and resembling those fabulous accounts which every nation gives of its origin. Upon reading this book, we find it full of prodigies and miracles. It gives an account of a state of the world and of human nature entirely different from the present; of our fall from that state; of the age of man extended to near a thousand years; of the destruction of the world by a deluge; of the arbitrary choice of one people as the favorites of Heaven, and that people the countrymen of the author; of their deliverance from bondage by prodigies the most astonishing imaginable. I desire any one to lay his hand upon his heart, and after a serious consideration declare whether he thinks that the falsehood of such a book, supported by such testimony, would be more extraordinary and miraculous than all the miracles it relates; which is, however, necessary to make it be received according to the measures of probability above established.

What we have said of miracles may be applied without any variation to prophecies; and, indeed, all prophecies are real miracles, and, as such only, can be admitted as proofs of any revelation. If it did not exceed the capacity of human nature to foretell future events, it would be absurd to employ any prophecy as an argument for a divine mission or authority from heaven; so that upon the whole we may conclude that the Christian religion, not only was at first attended with miracles, but even at this day cannot be believed by any reasonable person without one. Mere reason is insufficient to convince us of its veracity; and whoever is moved by Faith to assent to it, is conscious of a continued miracle in his own person, which subverts all the principles of his understanding, and gives him a determination to believe what is most contrary to custom and experience.

NOTES.

Note 3. This book was writ by Mons. Montgeron, councillor or judge, of the Parliament of Paris, a man of figure and character, who was also a martyr to the cause, and is now said to be somewhere in a dungeon on account of his book.

There is another book in three volumes, called Recueil des Miracles de l'Abbé Paris, giving an account of many of these miracles, and accompanied with prefatory discourses, which are very well written. There runs, however, through the whole of these a ridiculous comparison between the miracles of our Savior and those of the Abbé; wherein it is asserted that the evidence of the latter is equal to that for the former: as if the testimony of men could ever be put in the balance with that of God himself, who conducted the pen of the inspired writers. If these writers, indeed, were to be considered merely as human testimony, the French author is very moderate in his comparison; since he might, with some appearance of reason, pretend that the Jansenist miracles much surpass the other in evidence and authority. The following circumstances are drawn from authentic papers, inserted in the above-mentioned book:—

Many of the miracles of Abbé Paris were proved immediately by witnesses before the official or bishop's court at Paris, under the eye of cardinal Noailles, whose character for integrity and capacity was never contested even by his enemies.

His successor in the archbishopric was an enemy to the Jansenists, and for that reason promoted to the see by the court. Yet twenty-two rectors or curés of Paris, with infinite earnestness, press him to examine those miracles which they assert to be known to the whole world, and indisputably certain; but he wisely forbore.

The Molinist party had tried to discredit these miracles in one instance; that of Mademoiselle le Franc. But, besides that their proceedings were in many respects the most irregular in the world, particularly in citing only a few of the Jansenist witnesses, whom they tampered with,—besides this, I say, they soon found themselves overwhelmed by a cloud of new witnesses, one hundred and twenty in number, most of them persons of credit and substance in Paris, who gave oath for the miracle. This was accompanied with a solemn and earnest appeal to the parliament. But the parliament were forbidden by authority to meddle with the affair. It was at last observed that where men are heated by zeal and enthusiasm, there is no degree of human testimony so strong as may not be procured for the greatest absurdity; and those who will be so silly as to examine the affair by that medium, and seek particular flaws in the testimony, are almost sure to be confounded. It must be a miserable imposture indeed that does not prevail in that contest.

All who have been in France about that time have heard of the reputation of Mons. Herault, the lieutenant de police, whose vigilance, penetration, activity, and extensive intelligence, have been much talked of. This magistrate, who by the nature of his office is almost absolute, was invested with full powers, on purpose to suppress or discredit these miracles; and he frequently seized immediately and examined the witnesses and subjects of them, but never could reach anything satisfactory against them.

In the case of Mademoiselle Thibaut, he sent the famous De Sylva to examine her, whose evidence is very curious. The physician declares that it was impossible she could have been so ill as was proved by witnesses, because it was impossible she could, in so short a time, have recovered so perfectly as he found her. He reasoned, like a man of sense, from natural causes; but the opposite party told him that the whole was a miracle, and that his evidence was the very best proof of it.

The Molinists were in a sad dilemma. They durst not assert the absolute insufficiency of human evidence to prove a miracle. They were obliged to say that these miracles were wrought by witchcraft and the devil. But they were told that this was the resource of the Jews of old.

No Jansenist was ever so embarrassed to account for the cessation of the miracles, when the church-yard was shut up by the king's edict. It was the touch of the tomb which produced these extraordinary effects, and when no one could approach the tomb, no effects could be expected. God, indeed, could have thrown down the walls in a moment, but he is master of his own graces and works, and it belongs not to us to account for them. He did not throw down the walls of every city like those of Jericho, on the sounding of the rams' horns, nor break up the prison of every apostle, like that of St. Paul.

No less a man than the Duc de Chatillon, a duke and peer of France, of the highest rank and family, gives evidence of a miraculous cure performed upon a servant of his, who had lived several years in his house with a visible and palpable infirmity.

I shall conclude with observing that no clergy are more celebrated for strictness of life and manners than the secular clergy of France, particularly the rectors or curés of Paris, who bear testimony to these impostures.

The learning, genius, and probity of the gentlemen, and the austerity of the nuns of Port-Royal, have been much celebrated all over Europe. Yet they all give evidence for a miracle wrought on the niece of the famous Pascal, whose sanctity of life, as well as extraordinary capacity, is well known. The famous Racine gives an account of this miracle in his famous history of Port-Royal, and fortifies it with all the proofs which a multitude of nuns, priests, physicians, and men of the world,—all of them of undoubted credit,—could bestow upon it. Several men of letters, particularly the bishop of Tournay, thought this miracle so certain as to employ it in the refutation of atheists and free-thinkers. The queen-regent of France, who was extremely prejudiced against the Port-Royal, sent her own physician to examine the miracle, who returned an absolute convert. In short, the supernatural cure was so incontestible that it served, for a time, that famous monastery from the ruin with which it was threatened by the Jesuits. Had it been a cheat, it had certainly been detected by such sagacious and powerful antagonists, and must have hastened the ruin of the contrivers. Our divines who can build up a formidable castle from such despicable materials,—what a prodigious fabric could they have reared from these, and many other circumstances which I have not mentioned! How often would the great names of Pascal, Racine, Arnaud, Nicole, have resounded in our ears! But if they be wise, they had better adopt the rest of their collection. Besides, it may serve very much to their purpose. For that miracle was really performed by the touch of an authentic holy prickle of the holy thorn which composed the holy crown, &c., &c.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON TO THE CHILDREN.

—Not long ago Mr. Emerson addressed these words to the pupils of a Boston school: "I wish to say one word or two to the boys and girls. Everything depends on you and you alone in the future. I hope you read the right books. I am afraid there are too many story books, too many newspapers; that the young people do not read quite as good books as their fathers did. At the same time I wish to say to the boys, let them read Scott, let them read Plutarch, let them read Mrs. Edgeworth's stories. There is a noble life that you will have to read, or ought to read—the life of Sir Phillip Sidney, that hero and pattern of the times and age in which he lived. His friend, his lover, Lord Brooke, says of him, that in youth, as a child, he had the same bearing and carriage as a man; that in his youth there was nothing to distinguish him from the man who was afterwards the hero of Europe. The same gravity, the same solidity, belonged to him then as afterwards. It is remarkable that some of the better English people have been the same. I think it belongs as much to us that the highest traits should also appear in the form of the child. But I see I am taking too much time, and I will not say any more."

By far the greater part of the inhabitants of Persia are Mohammedans, the total number of dissenters from the established religion being considerably under a hundred thousand souls. The dissenters consist chiefly of Armenians, Nestorians, Jews, Guebres, or Parsees, and a few Roman Catholics.—Greenville Murray, in N. Y. Herald.

[Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1874, by F. E. Annot, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.]

PAUL GOWER.

A RATIONALISTIC STORY

OF
ENGLISH AND AMERICAN LIFE.

(CHAPTER XXIV.—(Concluded).)

The New Yorker contrives to mix up a good deal of sociality with business, often blending them in the oddest fashion. His office, counting house, or store is not fortified against outsiders by a carefully graduated scale of delay and incivility, calculated to impress you with a sense of his importance and your own insignificance; he regards "all that" as a restraint and a nuisance, and when abroad chafes at really necessary restrictions, being quite unaccustomed to them. At home, be he president, bank-director, or editor, you may have access to him in a wonderfully simple manner: he "likes to see folks himself," he says; finds that "it pays," and relies on his own tact (in the absence of your good sense) for getting at your business by a few plain, incisive questions. Interrupted or hindered, he has not much patience. All of which contrasts refreshingly with people's circumlocutionary habits in England, where the word stranger is almost synonymous with intruder, and, until they know a man's standing, prospects, and position in society, they involuntarily regard him with as much geniality as if he wanted to borrow money, or came with an eye to the spoons.

As for society in New York, properly so-called, I think that none but the most inveterate of anti-republicans will commit the absurdity of supposing that a capital of nine hundred and twenty thousand odd inhabitants, with a fair proportion of them rich, highly educated, familiarized by travel with foreign countries, possessing most of the appliances of civilization and a decided taste for enjoying them, does not contain plenty of clever, refined, and agreeable people. That is so much a matter of course that allusion to it is only excusable because of the existence of a shallow notion (which often gets into print) that American society is identified with money; that it simply means what New Yorkers refer to when they talk of a "shoddy," or "petroleum," or "codfish," aristocracy. To be sure the latter is most conspicuous and glaring, and naturally most accessible to strangers; besides liable to chronic "showings-up" from native satirists—all of which circumstances combine to bring it into undue prominence; but such impressions are necessarily one-sided, and have been so for at least a quarter of a century. "No one will deny," wrote N. P. Willis (a good authority) in 1850, "that mere wealth has lost much of its value, within the last five years, as a passport to society. There are, at this moment, rich people, by scores, waiting unadmitted at the door of fashion—those, too, whose houses, carriages, 'goodness in Wall Street, would, at one time, have been an 'open sesame' undisputed. Wealth, now, above an easy competency, only suggests the additional question of 'how it was made,' and without a satisfactory answer to that, the 'black-ball' upon a new-comer's advances would be unanimous." And though the civil war, with its tremendous opportunities in the shape of contracts and bounties, inevitably developed a proportionate increase, both in the pocket-aristocracy and its pretensions, it also induced a stricter necessity for the preservation of the barrier between the vulgar rich and the refined. There is, in fact, the same division of the opulent into exclusives and inclusives, real ton and the sham, observable in civilized capitals all the world over. The bounds are less sharply defined than in Europe; there are fewer claims to hereditary distinction (which, of course, is only the more highly valued on that account), and the select class is continually changing, being reinforced from below; but that is all. There always will be an aristocracy, even in a republic, so long as people aspire to what is best socially, and practically assert the last item of the first part of the Declaration of Independence. That it should differ from that of Paris or London is also a self-evident proposition; but the difference, whether for good or evil, is, as Thackeray has told us, less than the resemblance to Englishmen.

In all modern cities money must command a certain position, and it would be impossible that it should not have its influence in New York; yet, as already asserted, it is scarcely omnipotent there. "Shoddy" may own the finest houses in the Fifth Avenue (there was once a famous one in that thoroughfare, each room of which was furnished in an entirely different style from all the rest; so that you passed from Renaissance to Old English, from that to "classic," and so on), drive the most splendid teams in the Central Park, dinners à la Russe, prepared by French cooks, cut the greatest dash at Saratoga, or Newport, or Long Branch, flash the most brilliant, most costly diamonds from coronal or shirt-front, glove, boot, and dress itself as unexceptionably as can be seen anywhere out of Paris, and puff and advertise all its doings in some of the journals, which willingly publish these things and much worse stuff—"shoddy" may and does practise all this; but it is not the best American society, after all. Neither is it to be found in the Second Avenue, among the "Knickerbockers"—a term including not only the old Dutch families, consigned by the author who has made that name famous to a ridiculous immortality (to which they are still sensitive), but also to those appertaining to the more modern, colonial, and revolutionary era of Hamilton and his contemporaries. These, like some other hereditary aristocracies, having done little or nothing to conserve distinction, occupy in New York much the same position as that of the inhabitants of the Faubourg St. Germain in Paris. "They live among themselves, are poor, proud, and inausferably dull. But they believe in themselves, and are believed in by others. The wife of a shoddy millionaire conceives it happiness indeed when she is allowed to visit a Knickerbocker; but it is a happiness which she seldom enjoys, for these dull fossils can only keep up their prestige by keeping out all appertaining to shoddy." In fact the best society in a republic can only mean that class which most truly and powerfully represent the culture and refinement of the country. In New York it consists of bankers, merchants, and journalists of character and reputation, professors and officials of the University of Columbia College, and other great educational establishments, the clergy of various denominations, and the best professional men of all kinds, who, caring and claiming nothing particular in the way of ancestry, or other factitious distinction, lead honorable and useful lives, in accordance with the spirit of their institutions, and are as scrupulous as to whom they associate with on terms of companionship and intimacy, or admit to their houses, as could be wished. Foreign adventurers may sometimes obtain an opportunity to abuse their hospitality, but the native upstart is rigidly excluded.

Furthermore to sing its praises, after the British capital there is none which includes such a kaleidoscopic variety of the human family as the Empire City. The popular English notion that the citizens of the Great Republic are all on a dead, monotonous level, with nothing to distinguish one from another—or, as the Saturday Review once put it, that "all men in that land of progress are alike; everybody wears the same clothes, talks the same dialect, and rides in the same cars"—is the wildest of hallucinations. So far from that being the case, the truth is that, though there may be less sharp social and artificial contrasts, there is no country in the world where individual character is developed so freely among circumstances so mutable or dramatic as in the United States. Besides the diversities of native growth—in themselves continental—they comprise almost every nationality under heaven, interused or repelling each other, every variety of religious creed, every condition. In New York especially, one sees this with curious facility; not obscured by its size, colonized into Leicester Squares, segregated from a community which knows little or nothing of the foreign element within it, but conspicuous, accessible—living in accordance with the cardinal rule of Rabelais' Abbey of Theleme: "Do what thou wilt." Of course the Europeans are predominant—indeed one-half the population "hails" from across the Atlantic, and, of the other half, a large proportion consists of the children of emigrants, foreign in all their sentiments, habits, and associations, and, it may be added, much harder to manage than the original Irish and German settlers. It is their votes which cause nearly all the corruption extant,—always east, as they are, for the Dext'rous Spoiler. The last have become Americanized; but the ratio of foreigners to natives grows larger every year, and, as a rule, the worst, the most idle, ignorant, and vicious of the emigrants remain in the city, while the better class are attracted to the farming regions of the West—leaving the residuum a source of dangerous power, upon which any organization of corrupt politicians can draw at pleasure. But the jumble is amusing, affording a lively microcosm of the world at large. One can live English, French, German, Italian, Spanish, or American fashion, all within the compass of one metropolis. And we may conceive how untrammelled in the exercise of their personal and even political proclivities all these people are by their public "demonstrations"—the good-natured, liberty-loving Americans looking on with equal unanimity at a Communist, German, Polish, French, or "Feulan" procession, and only interfering (but then pretty effectually) when the intolerant Catholicism of poor Paddy tried to prevent his detested Protestant brother from exercising the same privilege. Where, I ask, in any other civilized capital is so much (even its government) conceded to alien residents? Where else would they be permitted to occupy its only main thoroughfare, driving all its business traffic into the side streets, for half a day together? Nearly a score of years ago, I remember, there was a rumor in New York City that its Chinese inhabitants, then perhaps numbering only a couple of hundreds, had a temple in the Bowery where they worshipped their Joss, in the shape of a big bronze idol—as they really do at this day in California. It didn't prove to be the fact, but might have been so, for what the citizens would have cared: the editors merely sent reporters to get particulars. And I have no doubt whatever that if a sect of Yzedis, or Adorers of the Evil Principle (avowedly such, I mean, for the religion is, practically, not unknown either in New York or other capitals), they would be entirely uninterfered with. The people are more tolerant in matters of faith than the Athenians who listened to Paul on Mars Hill, and from a better motive. And the same praise can now be awarded them in respect to politics; for the rowdism which used to mob abolitionists culminated and collapsed in the bloody and disgraceful Irish "draft" riots of July, 1863, and can no more be repeated than the national iniquity in which they originated. The war ended all that, and much more skin to it—half of the worse characteristics which once might fairly have been alleged against the American people.

Then where else is one's social freedom—that "right to do as you (adjectively) please" heretofore alluded to—so universally admitted and acted upon? "An Englishman," says Emerson, "wears a wig, or a shawl, or a saddle, or stands on his head, and no remark is made." Well, they have accomplished something in the assertion of personal liberty since 1847; but the writer of this novel retains a lively remembrance of what he underwent, not a score of years ago, in the British metropolis, for merely anticipating the beard movement. He might have compiled a small vocabulary of the abuse levelled at him, of course by the lower orders; whereas, for half a decade, his appearance had never provoked hostile comment in the Empire City, though beards were not then in fashion. And I should like to see a Belgravian family—lightly-dressed, elegant, pretty women, dandies, and children—chatting and enjoying themselves of a summer evening at the threshold of their open-doored mansions, or in the balcony, as New Yorkers do in the Fifth Avenue; while the crowds outside the big hotels in Broadway almost emulate the sidewalk life of Paris. During the "heated term" of 1870, the citizens went about without either coat or waistcoat, fanning themselves with Japanese fans—a practice which, as was ingeniously remarked, would of itself have been enough to freeze and petrify the whole of Boston. Socially, the New Yorker is the most unconventional of mortals.

Again, there is always something of interest occurring in his capital, commonly of a public nature and involving some kind of display or spectacle, towards which the genius of the nation inclines them as much as the French, who do not exhibit more good humor or capacity for being easily pleased. Your Gothamite is a great getter-up of shows and sights, an irrepressible lover of them. He delights in all kinds of "demonstrations," in stump-speaking, music, blazing tar-barrels, celebrations, "levees," in general glorification of himself and others—everybody who appears to deserve it. "Our people like excitement, sir," said Mr. Jefferson Brick to Martin Chuzzlewit; and the statement may be accepted as eminently truthful. Many of their celebrations are both picturesque and splendid—for instance, the processions during a presidential election; others rise to magnificence. Such occasions supply the lack of state-pageants, and, if less gorgeous, are more amusing, besides originating among and belonging to the people. And you can only avoid seeing them by keeping out of Broadway, which is the road to everywhere, and affords you an opportunity of meeting all your friends and acquaintances at least once a day—in itself an advantage over London.

In fine, every variety of entertainment, almost every element of refined, elegant, luxurious living is to be had in New York in greater abundance and of better average quality than elsewhere on the American continent, and at prices generally cheaper. The theatres, music halls, parks, drives, clubs, libraries, and so forth, are better and ampler than any others. In it the man of business finds as good a centre for his operations as London; the pleasure-seeker can amuse himself as well as in Paris; while litterateurs and art students feel themselves more at home in the Empire City every day. To conclude, you know all its celebrities by sight, and, in consequence, have a far livelier interest in all their doings than is possible in the British metropolis, where thousands live and die contemporaneous with their best friends without ever having set eyes on them; where Thackeray and Dickens in the flesh were comparatively unknown until they gratified that honest longing which people had to look on our benefactors, by giving readings. And without being over-prone to hero-worship, who does not acknowledge this to be a source of legitimate satisfaction in a great city?

When New York shall get itself decently governed, drained, paved, and lighted; when Broadway shall be widened throughout, and effectually relieved by the construction of half-a-dozen equally handsome thoroughfares on either side of it; when all the principal streets shall be arched by innumerable elegant bridges for the convenience of pedestrians; and viaducts or aerial railways shall allow the citizens the comfort of riding in the free air, over the house-tops, instead of through dark, half-ventilated tunnels, like the London sub-ways; when tenement houses shall be things of the past, or built on a very different model; when the noisome, rat-infested, tumble-down markets shall be utterly abolished and replaced by those as fine as that recently completed above Thirty-Fourth Street; when all the piers and docks shall be of massive stone instead of rickety timber, affording no less than thirty miles of wharfage, outside a raised "girdle" or "belt" railway, completely encircling the city, and neighbored by capacious warehouses, to receive and store goods without the inconvenience and expense which now cripples trade; when these wharves and warehouses shall extend from the Battery to Harlem, on both rivers; when the first-mentioned pleasant old resort shall, besides grass and trees, be further ornamented with fountains, water-gates à la Inigo Jones, and steps leading to the river; when Mr. Mullin's new post-office, in City Hall Square, shall have been burnt down (the natural end of all New York buildings), and another of shining white marble covers the site of Union Square; when the East and North Rivers shall be spanned by immense suspension bridges, beneath which the largest vessels can pass without lowering a spar, and undermined by tunnels, supplying the necessary means of communication between the Queen City and its tributary trans-aquatic suburbs (to be annexed as inevitably as those of the British metropolis into its giant integer); when they, in their turn, stretch miles along the river, and into the interior, furnishing residences for a good proportion of New Yorkers, now driven into Jersey, Connecticut, or elsewhere, but willing enough to return when there shall be facilities enabling them to live within reach of their business occupations; when viaducts and underground railways, running along the sides and through the centre of the island, lead the teeming population to Harlem, and over solid, handsome bridges, or through tunnels, beyond the river into Westchester county—the picturesque hills and valleys of which will be covered with the fine houses of wealthy citizens; when all the unsightly rocks shall be blasted out of the upper portion of Manhattan Island, and their place occupied by airy streets and avenues, and the Central Park is in the middle of the city, while all below it, like the locality technically known by that name in London, is engrossed by business only, and crowded by day and deserted by night; when the new national Museum of Art and the Crystal Palace shall rival South Kensington and Sydenham in value and attractiveness; when the "Road" or "Public Drive" is finished all the way from the "Circle" to the Kingsbridge Road, commanding at the upper part an unmatchable prospect of the Hudson and its opposite shores from an elevation of from fifty to a hundred and twenty feet; when that superb river shall be bordered with villas, lawns, and garden terraces, up to the "ancient dorp of Youkers"; when commerce shall have established a new "Port of Entry" at the north-eastern end of the city, and made a "Pool" of Hell Gate Channel and Long Island Sound (thereby saving fourteen hours in the passage to or from Liverpool); when that absolute blunder which arbitrarily banished the capital of the union to the banks of the Potomac (as if the parliament of Great Britain should assemble in the sleepy old town of Warwick), is rectified by its removal to the shores of the Hudson, where it naturally belongs,—when all these things shall be accomplished (and a good many of them are already in progress), and lastly when, as Mr. Emerson has predicted, the European merchant "passes from India by the Pacific Railroad, making his exchanges in New York,"—In short, when it is the chief commercial mart of, as well as the most beautiful city in, the whole world, then will its inhabitants possess a metropolis worthy of their alte, nation, and general good qualities. Such a prophetic vision, I imagine, was that vouchsafed to the sage Oloffe the Dreamer, when he climbed to the tree-top to behold the New York of the future dimly foreshadowed in the tobacco smoke of its patron, the good Saint Nicholas,—as related in the most mythical of histories.

CASH RECEIPTS.

For the week ending August 2, 1873.

James Annis, $2; George E. Whitehead, $2; R. B. Hubbard, $2; J. C. Clark, 75 cts.; Alonzo Denison, 75 cts.; H. D. Bennett, $1; Richard W. Wood, $1; J. B. Folsom, $3; Geo. W. Hatchelder, $3; J. M. Macomber, $1; M. H. Isbell, $3; Wm. U. Daine, 75 cts.; H. L. Bacon, $1; John Hendrie, 25 cts.; Gilbert Billings, $1.50; Jacob Hoffman, 25 cts.; F. Loosor, $1.50; J. F. Dyar, $3; Wm. G. Harder, $1.50; E. Heidenreich, $3; J. F. Wilson, $3; J. W. North, $3; Wm. Hine, $3; Wm. H. Eastman, 75 cts.; Reuben Wallace, $3; D. G. King, $10; James Thomson, $1; N. T. Bomar, $3; Nelson Thwing, $1; Levi Kelley, 75 cts.; L. Eberley, $3; J. F. Ruggles, $1.50; D. L. Smith, 75 cts.; M. D. Conway, $3.57; H. Gilliland, $2.35; John Austin, $3; W. Tripp, $3; F. D. Nellis, $3; W. W. Scott, $1.50; E. S. McCormick, $3.75; A. M. Twining, 10 cts.; Isabella G. Hardy, $3.

*Mr. W. F. Rae, in the volume before quoted.

The Index.

AUGUST 9, 1873.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. H. No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS PROTERINGHAM, THOMAS WESTWORTH HIGGINSON, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOTSEY (England), PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), REV. MONCURE D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS TO INDEX STOCK.

Mrs. F. W. Christern,	New York City,	One Share	$100
Rich'd B. Westbrook,	Bonham, Pa.	"	100
R. C. Spencer,	Milwaukee, Wis.	Two "	200
R. W. Howes,	Boston, Mass.	One "	100
Chas. W. Story,	Detroit, Mich.	Five "	500
E. W. Meddaugh,	New York, N. Y.	"	500
O. B. Frothingham,	Cumminsville, O.	One "	100
Jacob Hoffman,	Boston, Mass.	"	100
John Weiss,

DOLLAR DONATION FUND.

This fund is to be used, first, in meeting any deficiency in current expenses that may result from the recent "Index troubles," and, secondly, in such other ways as the editor shall find most advantageous for the paper. All appropriations will be reported to the Directors.

Acknowledged with thanks for the week ending August 2:—

$1 each—Gilbert Billings, Isaac Ames, "A Friend," Richard Illenden, Mrs. W. H. Pillow, Reuben Wallace, Chas. Atwood Hardy, Chas. Almy; $2.00—A. R. Jones; $5.65—F. A. Maxze.

Mr. Underwood's Christianity and Materialism is a bold and vigorous defence of a philosophy which "deems it more reasonable to regard the operations of Nature the result of natural forces, undirected by any God and subject to eternal laws, than to view them as the doings of an intelligent being of infinite power, wisdom, and love." We find in his pages no criticism of the grounds of our own belief in theism, as explained in the Index tract entitled "The God of Science;" but we recognize in Mr. Underwood a keen critic of Christian theism, and one whose blows it is certainly difficult to parry. The views of Nature he presents are simple and reasonable; and while we fail to perceive their incompatibility with the philosophic idea of God, as developed by the great masters of thought, they certainly destroy the foundations of dogmatic theology. Whoever desires to understand the opinions held to-day by a large class of minds, advocated in a spirit which must command respect from all who can appreciate manly fidelity to independent convictions, will be interested by this essay; and whatever judgment he may form of "Materialism," every candid reader must find his prejudices against "Materialists" as men melting away rapidly as he reads. This is a great gain; for there is no greater obstacle to a genuine friendliness among mankind than ill-will for mere opinion's sake.

TWO STRAWS.

A correspondent of the Boston Globe, writing from Penekese (where Professor Agassiz is now holding his summer school of science), quotes the following passage from one of the professor's recent lectures:—

"The more we know science, the more lenient we become towards those who differ from us. It is interesting to see how few the sources of knowledge are, and how few investigators have lived. This is largely owing to our wrong education; and I am reverent enough to dare to say it—Christianity has operated against it. It has taught us to believe, and not to investigate. Investigators have been persecuted by it, Galileo for example; and it is no wonder if some scientific men hate every form of belief. And yet the time must come when they (belief and investigation) will go hand in hand."

Is it true, as Professor Agassiz here intimates, that science and Christianity have opposite tendencies and exert opposite influences—that science inclines men to leniency towards those of contrary opinions, while Christianity inclines them to persecution, because it teaches "to believe, and not to investigate"? This we believe to be the necessary difference of result consequent on a radical difference of principle. Science bids men discover truth, whereas Christianity bids them accept it. The one offers truth as the reward of exertion, the other as the reward of submission. The one, by leading men over the rough road of experiment and thought, shows how easy it is to stumble, to go astray, to make great mistakes with the best of motives; but the other, by commanding them to pin their faith on the unsupported word of evangelists and apostles and priests, makes it a simple matter of obedience to tread the path of prescribed belief. To science, therefore, difference of opinion is inevitable, as an earlier stage of intelligent unanimity; to Christianity, on the contrary, it is sinful, as proving on the part of the recalcitrant a wilful insubordination to divine authority. While science, therefore, feeds the fountain-head of charity, Christianity does much to create a merciless pharisaism, pride of orthodoxy, and disposition to persecute. This is none the less true because some men of science are harsh and intolerant, while some Christians are liberal and gentle. We speak of tendencies, not individuals, and by no means forget that temperament sometimes proves itself too strong for all external influences. Dogmatic science, and undogmatic Christianity, nevertheless, are monstrosities in Nature.

That Professor Agassiz, who is not supposed to be fanatically attached to extreme radicalism, and who certainly is quoted with triumph by the ecclesiastical opponents of Darwin, should have expressed this plain truth with so much point and freedom from ambiguity, is a little surprising. Surely, modern thought is developing itself with increasing boldness, even where least expected. Criticism of Christianity, not wanting in appreciation of its good side, which is the emotional, and yet not lacking in keen discernment of its weak side, which is the intellectual, meet us now from many quarters where a few years ago its supremacy was unquestioned. Progress in liberal thought is one of the most marked signs of the times. People speak out boldly in defence of it, who even a dozen years ago would have been aghast at the idea of defending it. If anything is clear, it is that free thought is strengthening itself daily in the secular press, in the lecture-room, in the university, in literature, and even in the pulpit.

Yet side by side with this steady march of radical and anti-Christian thought appears another fact no less clear to the eyes that watch it. While Professor Agassiz was lecturing in his little circle of students at Penekese on the irremediable intellectual defect of Christianity, and through the press to the great circle of all thoughtful minds, Pope Pius the Ninth was sending to this country his private secretary, one of the prelates of his household, whose name figures in the Boston Journal as "Monsignor Kelstaff," just arrived in New York. The object of this eminent nuncio is to "inquire into the feasibility of sending a large number of missionaries to preach Roman Catholicism to the negroes in the Southern States," "to urge all bishops and priests here to renewed zeal in promoting the Church on this continent, and thereby make up for what the Church is losing in the Old World," and "to make a minute report of his observations in America, more especially of the state of Catholicism in the United States." It is unlikely that this visit will affect the money-market very profoundly; yet it points not very obscurely to causes of disturbance in this country to which the money-market may yet respond in deep agitation. Ecclesiastical ambition is still vigorous, crafty, and menacing; and popular stupidity is still its easy victim. Whoever observes the amazingly rapid increase of Catholic churches here, and knows the small individual contributions by which they are built,—whoever studies the despotic power wielded over the daily press in some places by the Catholic influence,—whoever marks the insidious advances of the Catholics against the principle of free secular education, and appreciates how feeble are its defences in the hands of its Protestant defenders,—in short, whoever comprehends the nature of the irrepressible conflict between Christianity and freedom of all kinds, and beholds how strong a grasp the former has still over our most precious institutions, will see in the advent of "Monsignor Kelstaff" an indication of a mighty current setting quite in the opposite direction to that indicated by Professor Agassiz's little outbreak of radicalism at Penekese.

Two straws—two currents—whither tending? Who knows? Yet who cannot guess?

FREE AND TRUE.

In these days, when not only in thought but in action the largest liberty is demanded, it is important that one thing should be borne in mind; namely, that with freedom we must have fidelity. Freedom is a good thing, a most desirable thing; but after all it is only a means to an end,—and that end is truth in thought, and rectitude in life.

I yield to no man in the persistency with which I demand freedom. Freedom we must have before anything else; for no man can so much as begin to think or act rightly until he is free. Any kind of slavery is fatal to mind and body alike. We see nothing, we do nothing truly and well until we are emancipated from every trammel. So long as I am forced, by any sort of compulsion, to think or feel or act in any way, my thoughts, sentiments, and actions are not most beautiful or admirable, because they are not the results of a voluntary rational being. Only as I am free to think and feel and act, according to my own untutored and unbribed intellectual and moral judgment, will any intelligent and good persons hold me in highest regard, or consider my relations to them to be most helpful and agreeable.

And, in insisting upon freedom, I may not limit my demand merely to that degree of it which seems needful and satisfactory to myself. In claiming and exercising my own freedom, I shall be inconsistent if I prescribe or describe the freedom fit for another. To a child, or an idiot, or a maniac, I may do this; but not to any mature rational being. For the exact degree of freedom which suits me, may not suit another; the exact degree of freedom which is useful to me, may not be useful to another. He may be better suited with more or with less freedom than is agreeable to me; a greater or less degree of freedom he may find more useful to him than I find to me. For instance, I may not wish, or may not think it best for me, to be free to drink intoxicating liquors; and so I bind myself with a pledge never to drink any. (This is not external bondage, but a limit which I myself set to my own action—whether wisely or not may be a question; but it is a choice of the degree of freedom for myself which I have an undoubted right to make.) My friend, however, chooses a larger liberty than that. He thinks it better becomes a rational being to be free at all times to drink or not to drink, and therefore he refuses the pledge of total abstinence; and he also has an undoubted right to all the freedom he desires in this respect. So too, for reasons which seem sufficient to myself, I may not desire to attempt control over my amative propensities, and therefore go and join the Shakers, and devote myself to life-long celibacy. My friend, again, says that he thinks we should crucify no part of our nature, each being significant of use, and that the whole man should receive proper development; and so he chooses more freedom in this respect than I assign to myself.

Beyond a certain point, intellectually and morally, every man is a conservative; the most radical of radicals is no exception to this rule. There is a step beyond which each individual chooses, or prefers, not to go. There is a brink to every radical's radicalism; and though he may think it only consistent to ignore that brink, and screw up his courage to walk right off it, yet he will take the plunge with a cold shudder if not with an audible groan. Our very constitution of mind and body, our temperament, our educational training,—these make every man more or less of a conservative, make him indisposed to claim or exercise more than a certain amount of freedom for himself. A man who never is "shocked" even at the honest and sincere freedom of another, is perhaps as rare as a babe that does not prefer its mother's milk to any other kind of food. Therefore we must be on our guard against this constitutional conservatism which leads us, not only to put a check upon our own thought, feeling, and action, but also, almost unconsciously, to protest against the greater freedom of thought, feeling, and action of another. Let each one choose his own degree of freedom, gradually adapting himself to as large a liberty as he finds useful and agreeable to him—for unquestionably liberty is the only normal and healthful condition of every mind and body.

But, now, to recur to the statement with which we began, let us remember that freedom must go hand in hand with fidelity. All freedom has its limitations. There is no freedom which is not subject to law. The highest amount of liberty we can have consistent with truth and right, is desirable; but not a whit more. There is a limit beyond which if liberty go it falls into license. Freedom without conditions is fatal to peace, welfare, and happiness. He who tries to think the unthinkable, beats his brains out against the solid wall of logic; or he who thinks recklessly and fanatically, disregarding the sober wisdom of experienced thought, turns his brain giddy in the thin air of nonsense. He who attempts to practise what is really unsafe, unbeneficent, and infelicitous, rides his hobby of freedom to his and its destruction. We live in a universe of laws, and it is only wise to learn what they are and to seek to conform to them. We should seek to be free only to know and to be faithful to those laws. They command us whether we heed them or not; nay, they compel us to submit whether we yield them willing obedience or no. Free to obey,—that, and that alone, is the freedom possible and good for us.

But the question arises just here, Who shall announce the law that shall circumscribe freedom in any case; who shall decide what is true to believe and good to do? Of course there is but one reply to this; and that is that each rational individual shall decide for himself just how freedom and fidelity shall cooperate in his case; each shall announce to himself the law that restricts his freedom. Yet is there no general rule which will apply to all; no average judgment of the limit belonging to individual freedom? I think there is, and it seems to me to be this:—

No person should claim or exercise freedom of any kind, the result of which is loss of self-respect, or infringement upon another's equal right.

First and foremost, that is wrong to any man which tends to degrade him in his own eyes. He exists for perfection; he should not therefore willingly keep himself imperfect. He is sacred to himself; therefore he should do nothing which in his self-estimate lessens his personal sacredness in any degree. In this particular another shall not judge for him,—he shall judge for himself; and whatever is not impure in his own eyes, whatever is not consciously self-degrading, to him, so far, that is allowable. But he must be true to himself; he must be true to his ideal self. The glory, actual or possible, with which his being shineth in his own eyes he must not by so much as the least spot or stain diminish. Let him keep peace with himself, let him be able to face himself at all times without blush or reluctance, and then he is the freest being in the universe; no bolts or bars or laws confine him—all things are his. His own verdict as he goes along, passing from stage to stage of experience and growing wisdom,—always docile, always hospitable to all men's judgments and opinions even of himself,—his own verdict as he goes along, I say, shall suffice him; that, and only that, is his truest approval or condemnation.

But the individual must think of others as well as himself. To others he must be faithful also. His truth to himself shall be consistent with his truth to another. He shall not claim more than he gives. In his relations with every other individual he shall be as kind and considerate and conciliatory as a just, generous, magnanimous nature can be. He will err least, probably, when for others he sacrifices himself most. He must, at least, always pay what he owes. Reciprocity is a law he must not seek to escape from. It takes two to make a bargain: does it not take two to unmake one? Fair play is a conspicuous element in social ethics. Let alone is also another. We may not avoid shaping our course somewhat by the rule of the greatest good to the greatest number. Utilitarians in morals we all must be to some extent. By experience we must find out what theories and practices most promote the general welfare and happiness, and what really do not I think we shall have to abandon. Somehow the individual's perfection goes hand in hand with the perfection of all.

Fidelity to self and fidelity to all,—are not these the very foundations of social ethics? Are not these also the only natural limitations to individual freedom? May not all questions of individual and social liberty be settled by the touchstone which these two rules supply? If so, then it becomes the claimant of freedom, more or less,—the radical, especially, who is supposed to "shriek for freedom" loudest,—to put upon his banner the motto FREE AND TRUE: free to think all and to do all that is true to self and true to Man.

A. W. S.

COUNTRY VISIONS AND THOUGHTS.

If one asked of God a revelation of himself which should give rest and peace to a weary soul, which should express the eternal strength and repose of the Infinite Being and yet the varied activity and flowing life which make creation possible and keep it fresh and living by constant change, which should unite in one harmonious view the infinite and the finite, the far-off heaven and the present earth,—let one look from my window to-day, and see if God has not spoken as fully and clearly to the heart that can receive his word as ever he did to prophets of old.

* Afar off under the clear blue heaven speckled by light fleecy clouds which but deepen its beauty, lies Mt. Desert Island. The mountains lift up their strong massive sides to the sun, crowned by the ancient forests, like giants supporting the world. So calm and still it seems as if they had rested through ages of solitude, content in the grandeur of their mighty being. A little nearer, the points of the mainland run out into Frenchman's bay, and I can trace the forms of the trees that clothe them with greenness and beauty, while the fresh breeze ripples the water and sends it up in lines of pure white foam on the sand-bars and beaches which the coming tide is soon to cover,—and which will flow on up to our very lawn, almost bathing the roots of the trees which skirt it, moistening it with spray and fog to deepen the color of the wild roses, and bring out the fragrance of the linnea and the spiciness of the wintergreen which lurk among its nooks and coverts. On the little hillock is the family grave-yard where lie the bodies of the beloved wife and daughter of the household,—one gathered after a long life of usefulness, the other a woman in the very prime of life, and with such richness of gifts and nobleness of character that she remains a living presence and a minister of encouragement and strength to each new comer at this place, though ten years have passed since she walked bodily here.

And on the lawn as it is called (not as we will believe in affectionate remembrance by some early settler of a far-off English home), the hay-makers are at work, and the mounds send their rich fragrance to say how sweet is toil, and that the great Creator of all this beauty wants the helping hand of man to till and dress the garden he has planted. Still nearer, put forth your hand and pluck a white rose in its fresh, perfect beauty, and as it brings to you memories of by-gone days and dear old gardens of childhood, and loving words, and voices long hushed and still, look up again over the graves on the hill-side, over the blue waters, over the dark green hills, up to the clear heavens above; drink in the influence of the summer air fresh with the breezes of the sea and sweet with the aroma of the earth, and then—

"Name it what you will,"

but let it all steal into your heart and life, and it will reveal to you the meaning of many a dark hour and many a hard struggle, and give promise of infinite peace and fulness of life.

So, like the psalmist, we may still "lift up our eyes unto the hills from whence cometh help," and find fresh revelation of truth as he did.

E. D. C.

WEST HARTSHORNE, Me., July 16, 1873.

ARGUMENT VERSUS INSPIRATION.

At the recent grand convention of Young Men's Christian Associations, from the "Question-box" the following slip was drawn: "Should we argue with infidels?" Answer.—We should talk with them kindly without argument." The infidels, of course, are (among others, partial or complete) ourselves. We are the most unqualified and hopeless of them, and therefore to be spoken most kindly to, and argued with least. Reasoning has less pertinency with us than with any; less than with the Unitarians, for instance, who are infidels, but of a more equivocal stamp. We are the most hopeless, and, as being the most hopeless, are the most absolutely subjects not for ratiocination but for charity.

I do not say this in bitterness or sarcasm, as if the answer to the question propounded above were a confession that the "Evangelical Christian" had a weak case, and, in lack of reason, must fall back on sentiment. No such confession is made, no such admission is acknowledged. That the "Evangelical" cannot cope with the infidel in argument, is indeed freely acknowledged; but argument is not accepted as the court of appeal. Argument is fallacious; argument is of the carnal understanding—argument is of the devil. Of course the infidel is stronger in argument, being under the instigation of the evil one who is the master of casuistry, the prince of lies. At these weapons the "Christian" is sure to be beaten. He relies on inspiration; his assurance is from above, through faith. He claims direct revelation from the Lord. He is certain of his ground,—he knows; in the face of argument he believes. Though all argument were against him, he would hold fast his conviction; nay, the more argument is against him the stronger will be his reliance on his intuitions which are by the grace of the Holy Spirit. It is a merit with him to resist argument; for to resist argument is to resist the devil. As truth comes from the Spirit, so truth must be communicated by the Spirit. The organ of the Spirit is not reason but love. If the infidel is to be converted, love must do it: his heart must be reached by the power of the Infinite heart. A single kind word, therefore, will avail more than all the argument in the world of speculation. The work of love is not (be it remembered) to soften, befog, or disarm the infidel,—to disarm him by attacking his weakest point; it is to convey to his spiritual nature the regenerating grace of Christ. To argue is weak; that implies a want of confidence in the Savior. Charity is strong. The kind word implies faith in the spirit, absence of confidence in the flesh.

I think the above is a fair statement of the "Evangelical's" position. It is a clear and strong one as taken by him, and is in all aspects respectable. It is a position taken by others besides the "Evangelical." Whoever relies on intuition takes it, though possibly not after the same manner. He claims an assurance different in kind from that obtained by the philosopher, or man of science. He says: "I know; I am sure; I see; I feel." The Quaker says this; the transcendentalist says this; the disciple of the school of the "Spiritual philosophy" says the same thing. He appeals to the sentiment, the consciousness, the higher reason, the interior sense, the immediate spontaneous conviction, the heart's perception of divine things. He says: "Oh, well, if you don't see it there is nothing to be said. The truth is its own witness, and all it needs is a pure heart; against a stubborn heart it has no power."

This notion that "unbelief" is of the heart, that "infidelity" is moral, that reason is carnal, that the inward eye is closed by science, is probably our most obstinate opponent in the war the rationalist is waging against superstition. That is one of superstition's strongholds. Hence the opprobrium attached to free thinking, and the unlimited swing given to free feeling,—as in the case of the Methodists, and other sentimental sects. Hence the horror of the rationalist or reasoner, as his name imports; while the spiritualist, or emotional man, receives endless commendation. Our faith is in reason, as being competent to render an account of the faith that is in us,—not in logic especially, or in learning, or in criticism, or in the matter-of-course understanding; but in thought. Everything that is to be justified, must be justified by thought. To substitute "talking kindly" to a man for talking convincingly with him, is an insult, a thing to be resented. Every belief, even the most fundamental—the most fundamental especially—must be brought to the test of argument. The process will be a little rough at first, as all processes carried on by persons who have been kept out of their rights and are therefore disposed to seize them rudely, must be. Subordination is succeeded by insubordination, servitude gives place to riot. But when capacities are admitted and rights adjusted, all will go well. It looks now, sometimes, as if "argument" would tear beliefs to pieces; but in the end it will simply establish the beliefs that are vital and true.

The rule of "talking kindly" to infidels, instead of arguing with them, produces the Voltaires and Palmes and Seavers, who answer such saponaceous overtures with a contempt which is natural if undeserved. Let reason be the test, and reasoning the rule, and a more calm and philosophical method will be in vogue. The young Christians perpetuate the race of seofers, create the class they fear and deplore. Their "good" talk causes the derision that honest, manly talk would never excite. Mind demands to be met with mind, not with feeling. Science will curl its lip if sentiment comes into the field rolling its eyes and spreading out black-gloved hands. That, in plain speech, is nonsense; and will be received as nonsense deserves to be received,—with cool silence.

O. B. F.

Communications.

THE HIGHER TRUTHS OF NATURAL RELIGION.

It was said in a recent discourse upon John Stuart Mill, that "he died without fear of death and without hope of heaven." And I have never seen a more lovely expression of serenity and peace than that depicted upon the countenance of her who, finding no satisfactory evidence of immortality, yet in advanced years, while looking forward to the moment of life's setting sun with the utmost cheerfulness, penned these lines:—

"'Tis Thine to re-create immortal birth, Or seal the slumber of the Nevermore."

In thus resigning one's sense of personality in uncertainty as to future conscious existence, but reposing in full trust upon the Infinite Unknown with undoubting faith that the order of the universe in its entirety is perfect whatever may be the result in its individual details, there is an element of the truly sublime. In the utter self-abnegation implied, there seems something far more grand and noble than in the Christian's dying ecstasy, mingled as it of necessity is with much of egoism, that now he is to be forever set free from trials and sufferings, that the limitations of his spirit are to be forever removed, and that he is now to enter upon the full and eternal fruition of all which his most enraptured imagination can suggest of perfect joy and delight. And so, when the beautiful form which has been the embodiment of all that is lovely and precious in the human spirit, is put away into darkness, and no certainty of continued existence comes to the bleeding hearts of bereaved ones, it is a loftier height of the spirit—a sublimer trust—that can composedly and cheerfully commit to the bosom of the Adi, with no assurance of recognition again, that which was part of our own very existence, than can exist where the spirit is sustained by undoubting belief of a speedy and everlasting re-union in glorious mansions beyond the skies. Surely, if there is a hereafter, such faith entitles to the right of participation in the best it has to give.

The spirit which prompts to the exercise of such faith and trust seems akin to that of the old Calvinistic one which was considered the acme of Christian attainment; namely, "the perfect willingness to be damned for the glory of God." But there is this difference; that, in the one case, there is a far less rational and humane idea of the over-ruling Spirit of the universe than in the other. Yet it is pleasant to find in such diverse extremes a unity of that religious sentiment which exists in all human souls, variously wrought out as it may be in the diversified religions of the race,—thus forming a basis of fellowship among them all.

No less striking is the difference between the common type of Christian and many a so-called infidel in their relations to the future than in regard to the conduct of this life. The former makes it his prime object to save his own soul for the future existence, in order that he may enjoy himself forever; the latter, not certain as to what is to come, labors for the known present to perfect himself and others here and now. In the words of one of this class: "Considering the welfare of each individual soul as part and parcel of the universal welfare of the race, and that the individual cannot realize his own most private ideal unless he consecrates himself to universal ends, he seeks not selfishly his own good, but, without hope of earthly reward or expectation of a heavenly one, he counts it a dazzling destiny to serve the cause of spiritual emancipation and free human development."

Duly considering such examples, who shall accuse those who make Natural Religion their guide, of the want of an enthusiastic devotion which penetrates to the very heart of human welfare, and is based upon an exalted faith in the infinite and the eternal?

A. H.

SCIENCE—SPIRITUALISM.

IN THE INDEX of July 26 is an article on "Science," over the initials "A. W. S.," by which it is known as the work of Mr. Stevens. I read it with interest, as I usually do his articles. He appreciates the narrow, external, and material definition of science, and defines it as "our true knowledge of mind and matter, of the laws of the spiritual and the laws of the material universe,"—which is far broader and better than the common idea. Indeed, while physical science is making great progress, and is of signal benefit, we are but entering the verge of investigation of spiritual science, and but just beginning to know something of the subtle, unseen, and permanent forces which mould and shape, build up and dissolve, all material forms and substances.

The greatest advance in that direction has been made by thoughtful and scholarly men and women among the Spiritualists, with others of kindred views but not technically under that name. It was said of old, "The stone which the builders rejected shall become the chief of the corner;" so spiritual science even among those "whom scientific men," as Mr. Stevens truly says, "generally hold in fine disdain," will save the world from that materialism and atheism toward which science, in its present physical and inductive aspect, surely tends. The future pathway is toward materialism and atheism, or toward a rational spiritualism,—the first the result of physical science looking at the outward and transitory body of things, and disdaining recognition of the soul and spirit within all; the second the joyous triumph of a broader science which shall feel and know the central, creative, and inspiring soul, and shall begin, from within, to study the outward body, in man and in all Nature alike. Of this spiritualism, the knowledge (not belief merely) of a future life, of the return of friends from thence to us, and of their sweet communion tangible to soul and sense, is a part, to me and to hosts of others. I think, confidently and gladly, it will grow and conquer, and be a great vitalizing element and ennobling influence in the future, and will bring the unity and reconciliation of religion and science.

And here allow a criticism. Mr. Stevens speaks of some scientists as "dogmatic," refusing "to admit certain evidences, or indifferent to certain mighty suggestions," and as "relying too exclusively on what are called the evidences of the senses." This dogmatic pride, this deafness to inner voices or truths, this relying on outward sense alone, are legitimate results of the half-science he so clearly shows up,—a science of the husk, not of the germ. But he speaks of such as "just as unscientific as Christians or Spiritualists, or believers in the supernatural (who would verify miracles by eye and ear testimony)." Here, it seems to me, he fails to see clearly. Christians, or supernaturalists, may have miracles to verify; but usually it is not even "eye and ear testimony," but only faith, that is asked for, and that blind enough.

Spiritualists have no miracles to verify, and in their pursuit of truth accept the evidence of the outward and inward senses, the facts tangible to eye and ear and touch, and the verdict of reason and affection, of the soul's wants and the help the senses give them.

I cannot give details, but will call up only the memory of hours spent with one of the ablest and clearest lawyers, most eminent statesmen, and most thoroughly educated men in our land, in the investigation of spiritual phenomena. It was a pleasure indeed to note his close scrutiny, his keen and careful criticism, his nice balancing of proofs and doubts, his ready rejection of errors, and his cheerful acceptance of realities. Pardon me, but I must ask for myself and all Spiritualists claiming any intelligence, to be counted out from among all Christians and supernaturalists who "verify miracles by eye and ear testimony" alone, or who ask for "faith nothing doubting." We ask for truth by exact and complete spiritual science, and take tests and proofs from soul and sense; and supernaturalism or miracle is not for us.

But I must stop, for there is no end to this matter; yet in a brief word like this one feels the poverty of language and the difficulty, in small space, of making complete statements. Accept this therefore as suggestion and friendly criticism.

G. B. STEBBINS.

DETROIT, MICH., July 27, 1873.

RATIONAL NURTURE OF CHILDREN.

NEW YORK, February 17, 1873.

EDITOR INDEX:—

Superstition has always been a great bulwark of sectarianism. Were bigotry deprived of the power to influence the minds of men through their dread of the supernatural, the cause of liberal religion would be greatly strengthened. But so long as the mass of mankind are taught in early life to believe in the existence of angels and devils, and the occurrence of miracles, it will be more or less difficult to convince adults of the truths of philosophy.

In view of these facts, it seems very strange that so many parents of culture and liberality of thought should entrust their children to the care of ignorant, fanatical servants, whose conversation not only abounds in bad grammar and slang expressions, but turns frequently upon fairy tales and ghost stories. Ought not the dawn of intelligence in the child to be carefully watched, and its tender mind nourished with the true, the beautiful, and the good? Why should it be taught silly, debasing fictions?

The subject of the management of children, in respect to what they should be allowed to hear and read, deserves very wide discussion. It should be deeply pondered by radicals especially, as it is the old leaven acquired in childhood which blinds most men to the truths which modern thought has evolved. Full consideration of the matter may very likely lead to the following conclusions:—

1. No child, after he is old enough to understand what he hears, should be left under the care of any person uneducated or superstitious.
2. No child should ever be allowed to hear or read anything about angels, fairies, devils, ghosts, or miracles.
3. The attention of children should in general be directed to objects of Nature more than to tales of fiction, however pure, moral, and entertaining.

B. W.

ACCIDENT TO A VETERAN STATESMAN.—Hon. John P. Hale fell in his parlor in this city, July 22, and fractured his hip. He had been for some time in feeble health, and there is no doubt just cause of alarm that the accident may terminate fatally. Although Mr. Hale has been in comparative retirement since his return from the Spanish court, yet his public service was of a nature that has given him an abiding place in the memory and affections of his countrymen. He is now in his sixty-eighth year. Three years after his graduation from Bowdoin College in 1827, he was admitted to the New Hampshire Bar, and almost immediately took a prominent place in politics. In 1832 he was a member of the State legislature, and from 1834 to 1842 district attorney for the State. Then he was three years a member of Congress, again in the State legislature, one term of which he was speaker, and during that time was elected to the United States Senate. Excepting an interval of two years, he continued a member of the Senate for sixteen years, when, in 1865, he entered upon a four years' service as United States Minister to Spain. The time of Mr. Hale's public life, and particularly the portion of it spent in Congress, will suggest to many the stormy career that it brought to him. His grand opposition in 1845 to the annexation of Texas as a slave State, and his brave fight in behalf of an oppressed race, when it obliged him to sacrifice position, and friendships, and almost everything but a good name, will now be recalled by thousands. But in losing a little he gained much, for there is hardly a philanthropist or patriot in the country but whose heart beats quicker at mention of his name. Their prayers will ascend with ours that his failing years may not close too suddenly.—Dover (N. H.) Star.

The fine idealism in the exploration of Nature, by lens and prism and calculus, which casts theologies into the back ground of human interest, is preparing the way for a religion of religions, whose Bible shall be the full word of human nature.—S. Johnson.

Advertisements.

GENERAL NOTICE.

On Aug. 8, 1872, I contracted for the two best advertising pages of THE INDEX for the current year. No advertisements objectionable to the editor to be taken." For terms apply to
ASA K. BUTTS, 38 Dey St., New York.

No improper advertisements, no advertisements of patent medicines, and no advertisements known to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be hereafter admitted into THE INDEX. All advertisements accepted before this date will be allowed to run their time.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.
Toledo, O., June 21, 1873.

J. F. RUGGLES, Free Thought Bibliopole, BRONSON, MICH.

Continues to furnish those who desire them, liberal and philosophical books, tracts, etc., that embody the matured thoughts and opinions of the True Salt of the Earth! Being in constant receipt of importations from Europe, I am prepared to supply all works in any department of literature that are obtainable in the markets of the world. Catalogues free.

Independent Tract Society. CLINTON, MASS.

The object of this organization is the publication and dissemination of radical sentiments from all sources.

Yearly Subscription.....$0 25
Life Membership.....5 00

Address
A. BRIGGS DAVIS, CLINTON, MASS.

A CHEAP OFFER!

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.

The INDEX TRACT NO. 7, "Compulsory Education," is out of print, and therefore orders for it cannot be filled at present. But it is intended to reprint it before long, and all parties ordering a COMPLETE SET will be furnished with it without extra charge as soon as reprinted.
Address
THE INDEX,
Toledo, Ohio.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF LEADING INDEX WRITERS,

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.
Address
THE INDEX,
Toledo, Ohio.

LETTER FROM

O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

"I have used THE HEALTH LIFT nearly every day for the past year, and with manifest advantage. A tendency to sleeplessness at night has been corrected, my animal spirits have been raised in tone, and my elasticity of frame increased. The sense of repose imparted is quite as great as the stimulus."—O. B. Frothingham.

For circulars descriptive of THE BUTLER HEALTH LIFT and its apparatus, address

LEWIS G. JAMES, Manager.

Principal Office, Park Bank Building, 214 Broadway, N. Y.

Brooklyn—168 Remsen St., connecting with Dr. Holbrook's Rooms, 180 Fifth Avenue.

Visitors always welcome.

PROGRESSIVE PUBLICATION HOUSE.

A. J. DAVIS & CO. Standard Books on Harmonical Philosophy, Spiritualism, Free Religion, and General Reform. Constantly on hand all the STANDARD INDEX PUBLICATIONS, in paper and cloth bindings, at wholesale and retail, and sent by mail to any part of the world on receipt of the price and postage. Address No. 24 East Fourth St., New York. (P. O. Box No. 84, Station D.)

ARITHMETICAL CARDS & GAMES.

Send for a Pack.
With these Cards the drill of Mental Arithmetic is made mere pastime—besides many (including common card) games can be played. Teachers, and pupils, and everybody should use them for instruction and amusement. AGENTS WANTED. One pack, with book of instructions, sent post-paid for fifty cents. Address P. H. HATESON, Drawer 60, Toledo, O.

Theodore Parker's Writings.

A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....$1.50
Sermons of THEISM, ATRHEISM, and Popular Theology.....1.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....1.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional sermons, 2 vols.....3.00
The above sent post-paid on receipt of price by RUTS & DINSMORE,
36 DEY STREET, NEW YORK.

THE WAYS OF WOMEN

In Their Physical, Moral, and Intellectual Relations.

By A MEDICAL MAN. This is unquestionably one of the most remarkable books issued from the American press in many years. A most beautiful specimen of scientific and practical every woman. A splendid chance for Agents. It makes an elegant 8vo. vol. of 400 pp., on tinted paper, superbly bound. Price $3. Sent by mail on receipt of price. For territory and agents' terms, apply to the publisher, JOHN P. JAWETT & Co., 5 Dey St. N. Y.

THE GOLDEN AGE.

Every Man and Woman who reads THE INDEX ought to read also The Golden Age, edited by Theodore Tilton. After fifteen years of experience on The Independent, Mr. Tilton two years ago established, in the interest of more liberal thought, The Golden Age,—a journal of his own, to which he gives his constant and tollsome attention, and which has already won a national reputation for honesty, courage, and brilliancy. Probably no other journal in America is so widely quoted from, both by those who agree, and those who disagree with it. Unlike any other weekly paper, either in America or England, it is unique and original in appearance, in thought, and in style. It abounds in brief and apt paragraphs—shot like swift arrows hitting the mark. Its editorial discussions cover the whole field of current topics—whether religious, political, literary, social, or industrial. It does not pretend, or seek, or want to agree with its readers, or with the general popular opinion. It indulges in the luxury of free speech. It has a mind of its own, and is sometimes wrong—which makes it all the more novel, for it is almost the only journal of the American press that is ever wrong. But whether right or wrong, it is always good natured, and ever believes in fair play. It would be happy to make the acquaintance of the readers of THE INDEX; and though The Golden Age is in no sense a rival to THE INDEX, and does not undertake to do such a work as Mr. Abbot has embarked upon, yet it is fighting a battle for free thought in religion, and free speech in politics, and is conscientiously dedicated to the promotion of whatever helps forward the Emancipation of the Human Mind. Anybody who subscribes for Mr. Tilton's paper will get something to think about, and more than the money's worth. Enclose three dollars in an envelope (before you forget it), and address
THE GOLDEN AGE,
Box 2385,
New York City.

Popular New Music Books.

FOR THE COMING MUSICAL SEASON.

The Standard. EMERSON & PALMER. $1.50
Unexcelled as a Collection of Church Music.

The River of Life. PERRINS & BENTLEY. 50
The Newest and Finest of Sabbath School Song Books.

Cheerful Voices. L. O. EMERSON. 50
Very beautiful School Song Book.

Gems of Strauss. JOHANN STRAUSS. 2.50
All the best Strauss Music.

Organ at Home. For Reed Organs. 2.50
200 most attractive pieces.

Clarke's Dollar Instruction.
For Reed Organs, Piano, and Violin.

Emerson's Chants and Responses. 1.00
Dr. Streeter's Voice Building. 1.50
Sold every where. Sent post-paid for retail prices.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 Broadway, N. York.

THE TABLE.

A Monthly Publication devoted to the Resources and Refinements of the Table, at $2.00 per annum, in advance. Single copies 30 cts. Edited by BARRY GRAY.

Publication office, 139 Eighth St., New York.

Baths and Bathing.

The Bath. Its Uses in Health and Disease. The latest and most Practical Work on the Bath. All about Swimming and Sea Bathing. By R. T. Trall, M. D. By mail, post-paid, only 20 cents. Address S. R. WELLS, Publishers, 389 Broadway, New York.

*—Large illustrated and Descriptive Catalogue of new and standard works on Health, Hygiene, Phrenology, Psychology, Mesmerism, etc., sent for two three-cent stamps.

PRIVATE MEDICAL WORKS on Physiology, Physical Life of Women, Generation, Pregnancy, Midwifery, Maternity, Wedlock, Diseases, etc. An Illustrated Special List of over fifty private works containing just what every man and woman should know, sent on receipt of stamp. Address S. R. WELLS, 389 Broadway, New York.

LIBRARY OF MESMERISM AND PSYCHOLOGY.

COMPRISING THE PHILOSOPHY OF MESMERISM, CLAIRVOYANCE, MENTAL ELECTRICITY—FASCINATION, or the Power of Charming. Illustrating the Principles of Life in connection with Spirit and Matter.—THE MACROCOSM AND MICROCOSM, or the Universe Without and Within; being an unfolding of the plan of Creation, and the correspondence of Truths, both in the World of Sense and the World of Soul.—THE PHILOSOPHY OF ELECTRICAL PSYCHOLOGY; the Doctrine of Impressions; including the connection between Mind and Matter; also, the Treatment of Disease.—PHRENOLOGY, or the Science of the Soul, considered Physiologically and Philosophically; with an appendix containing notes of Mesmeric and Psychical experience, and illustrations of the Brain and Nervous System. Complete in one large volume. Price by mail, post-paid, $4.00. Address
S. R. WELLS, Publishers,
389 Broadway, New York.

NEW BOOKS

FOR SUMMER READING.

MUST IT BE?

A Romance from the German of CARL DETLEY. By M. S., translator of "By his Own Might," "A Twofold Life," etc. Illustrated. 8vo. Paper cover, 75 cents. Fine cloth, $1.25.

Emotionally natural, full of charming realism, and abounding in vigorous and exciting action.

WHAT WILL THE WORLD SAY?

A Novel of Every-day Life; and "Only a Woman." By JOSEPH MOORE. 12mo. Extra cloth. $1.50.

POLITICAL PORTRAITS.

By an Eminent Journalist. 12mo. Extra cloth. $1.50. Short, pithy, and timely addresses, presenting in a condensed and striking manner the political character of England's most representative statesmen.

GONE BEFORE.

Being a Manual for the Bereaved. By HENRY SOUTHGATE. Extra cloth. Red edges. $2.00. "The book is one of those specialties in which the writer has already established a reputation on both sides of the Atlantic, and should be in every private and public library in the land."—Boston Globe.

EVOLUTION OF LIFE.

By HENRY C. CHAPMAN, M. D., Member of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia. Illustrated with numerous Lithographic Plates. New and Cheaper Edition. Extra cloth. $2.75.

"The best general text that we have seen for readers who desire to know the foundation, steps, results, and reasons employed in the latest scientific theories."—Phila. North American.

MINERAL SPRINGS OF NORTH AMERICA.

How to Reach, and How to Use them. By J. J. MOORMAN, M. D. Illustrated. 12mo. Extra cloth. $2.00.

REASON AND REDEMPTION.

Or, The Gospel as It Attests Itself. By ROBERT BAKER WHITE, D. D. 8vo. Extra cloth. $2.00.

"Dr. White displays great logical power and acumen, and fearlessly grapples with the objections to the truth of revelation which are drawn from the teachings of geology, astronomy, and ethnology."—Boston Globe.

WORK, PLAY, AND PROFIT.

Or, Gardening for Young Folks, explained in a Story for Boys and Girls. By ANNA M. HYDE, author of "Six Hundred Dollars a Year," "American Boys' Life of Washington," etc. Illustrated. 12mo. Extra cloth.

THE "SPIRITUAL" DELUSION.

Its Methods, Teachings, and Effects. The Philosophy and Phenomena Critically Examined. By DYER LLOYD, author of "The Early Social Life of Man." 12mo. Fine cloth. $1.50.

WU BUN.

The "Early Day" in the Northwest. A Novel. By the author of "Walter Ogilby." New Edition. 12mo.

A Romantic and highly attractive narrative of life in the Northwest during the period of the early settlement.

For sale by all Booksellers, or will be sent by mail post-paid, upon receipt of the price by LIPPINCOTT & CO., Publishers,
715 and 717 Market Street, Phila.

DIGESTION

AND DYSPEPSIA.

A Complete Explanation of the Digestive Processes, with the Symptoms and Treatment of Dyspepsia and other Disorders of the Digestive Organs. Illustrated. By R. T. TRALL, M. D. Bound in Muslin, price $1.00.

This Book constitutes by far the best work on the subject ever published. With fifty illustrations; showing with all possible minuteness every process of digestion, and giving all the causes and directions for treatment of Dyspepsia; a disorder which, in its various forms, is the cause of nearly all the diseases from which the human race is suffering. Sent by mail post-paid on receipt of price. Address,
S. R. WELLS, Publisher, 389 Broadway, N. Y.

SOMETHING NEW.

LIFE INSURANCE

ON THE

SAME BASIS AS FIRE INSURANCE.

PAY FOR IT AS YOU GET IT.

NO "NOTES," "DIVIDENDS," "RESERVES," OR OTHER DEVICES

to collect more money than is actually required to secure all the benefits of Life Insurance. On this plan the National Life Insurance Co. of Chicago has actually paid the heirs of deceased members $199,664, at a cost to them of only $3,999.10. Had these persons been insured on the old high-rate plan, their heirs would have received only $65,746.12.

INVESTIGATE, AND SAVE MONEY BY INSURING ON THIS PLAN, AND

MAKE MONEY

by securing an agency for it. Address,
NATIONAL LIFE INSURANCE Co.,
75 and 80 Van Buren St.,
Chicago.

"To any one who wants a book that will prove both entertaining and profitable, as good literature always is, and does not know precisely what to ask for, we say select one of

The Leisure Hour Series."

—Boston Advertiser.

LATEST VOLUMES.

INGO. By G. FRETZG, author of "Debit and Credit,"

DIMITRI ROUDINE. By IVAN TURGENIEFF.

ASLEEP IN THE FENS. With Illustrations. WHAT THE SWALLOW SANG. By F. SPIELHUYER, author of "Problematic Characters," etc.

HERO CARTEW. By LOUISA PARR, author of "Dorothy Fox," etc.

BABALON. By G. Dnos.

UNDER THE GREENWOOD TREE. By THOMAS HARDY.

COUNT HOSTIA. By VICTOR CHERULIN. Price, $1.25 per volume.

"These are cool and tasteful outside, and variously attractive within; excellent summer books, and pleasant too when summer is past."—Boston Transcript.

HOLT & WILLIAMS,
25 Bond St., N. Y.

JAMIESON'S BOOK!

"THE CLERGY A SOURCE OF DANGER TO THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC."

GOD IN THE CONSTITUTION.

INFAMY.

Full Exposure—Second Edition Just Published. A Volume of 381 Pages.

One of the most startling books ever issued from the press. Price, bound in muslin, postage paid, $1.75. Books furnished at Reduced Rates on the Club Plan.

CLUB RATES:

Three Copies, expressage or postage paid, $4 00
Six " " " " " " 8 00
Ten " " " " " " 12 50
Parlor Edition, gilt, 20 cents per volume extra.

AGENCIES.

Terms made known on application. Address all orders to W. F. JAMIESON, 139 and 141 Monroe street, Chicago, Ill.

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS:

We consider Mr. Jamieson as having done a most useful and needed work in publishing this book. It might be read by every one who takes the least interest in the Christian Amendment movement, or any of its allied questions. It is crammed with information of all kinds bearing on the general issue; and every page burns with intense earnestness.—Free Religious Index, Nov. 16, 1872.

A meaty volume, a remarkable book. Mr. Jamieson writes with earnestness and fervor. We commend the book to the widest possible perusal, believing that it is singularly calculated to open men's eyes and do their souls permanent good.—Banner of Light, Oct. 12, 1872.

Interesting, valuable, and timely. It abounds with important facts. No more important volume has been issued from the press for many years.—Boston Investigator, Oct. 2, 1872.

THE RELIGIOUS PRESS IS SILENT. SIGNIFICANT!

THE LIBERAL PRESS IS REJOICING.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Five Cents.

VOLUME 4.

TOLEDO, OHIO, AUGUST 16, 1873.

WHOLE No. 190.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McConl, President; J. Gallion, Vice President; F. A. Loggreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries; E. K. Thomas, Treasurer.
BOSTON, MASS.—J. S. Rogers, President; A. Davis, J. W. Smith, Vice Presidents; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries; J. A. J. Wilcox, Treasurer; J. H. Ranney, F. W. Clarke, H. B. Moret, Exec. Committee.

JERSEY, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; J. E. Curran, Vice President; A. Giddings, Secretary; E. Wood, Treasurer; L. B. Crowell, M. A. Giddings, D. D. Holmes, Executive Committee.

HAN JOSH, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; L. Magenheim, Vice President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary; Wm. Fischer, Treasurer; A. C. Stows, C. G. Hoadly, R. P. Thomson, Executive Committee.

TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Beesly, President; B. Bruner, Vice President; E. B. Beckley, Secretary; A. W. Harbaugh, Treasurer; L. Westover, J. Bruner, W. Krause, Executive Committee.

VINELAND, N. J.—L. Bristol, President; E. Dickinson, E. B. Duffey, Vice Presidents; E. G. Blaisdell, Secretary; S. M. Clute, Treasurer; John Gage, D. A. Russell, E. G. Blaisdell, D. L. Butler, A. C. Bristol, P. T. W. Campbell, Executive Committee.

JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; Jas. H. Smith, Vice President; Isaac Baldwin, Treasurer; H. L. Easley, Secretary.

OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary; J. N. Haws, B. Panoconi, P. Julien, Executive Committee.

DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary; J. W. Watkins, Treasurer.

BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; I. Brown, Vice President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary; C. R. Caplin, Treasurer; A. D. Enos, E. O. Barnum, Betsey Brown, Executive Committee.

Little by Little.

BY A. W. STEVENSON.

The nomenclature of science has divided the universe into two parts. One it calls the macrocosm, or the great world; the other it calls the microcosm, or the little world. The macrocosm, or the great world, includes the large, bulky, extensive things of Nature,—the mountains, forests, rivers, seas, and starry skies. The microcosm, or the little world, includes Man—who is really a very small thing among the immense works of creation—and all those lesser forms which grade from Man all the way down to the most minute and infinitesimal.

These eyes which were given us wherewith to look out upon the external universe, are like two doors that the Divine architect has cut in this material frame which encloses us, and has arranged them upon such pliant hinges that, at our will, they are thrown wide open, admitting us freely to all the bounteous scene and vast realm of beauty which has been prepared to charm and instruct us. It is our happy privilege to go and come through these facile gates of communication, and bring home across their threshold, from our widest wanderings, vast treasures of fact and suggestion which we can renew and increase as often as we wish, and keep in constant store for our present and future dependence and support.

But these eyes of ours, though so wonderful an invention of the Divine mind, are yet very small and insufficient means of communication with that immense outlying region which the universe in all its available scope unfolds to us. They are but as pin-holes in a solid wall, through which in vain we strive to get more than a meagre and most partial glimpse of the enchanting scene beyond. Our naked vision must be clothed with human inventions before we can see far or wide into the domain of the infinite.

But man is an offspring of the Divine, who inherits the highest inventive genius for supplying his own deficiencies. All his senses complement each other, and conspire together to extend and enlarge their functions. Give man a place to plant one foot, and he will soon make a place to plant the other; thus stepping out along that line of progress which leads into and through all mysteries, all knowledge, all achievement.

Among the most wonderful inventions of man, wherewith to aid his natural faculties, are the telescope and the microscope. These are eyes to his eyes, quickening and intensifying his ordinary vision in an almost miraculous manner. One of these instruments gives us the long view; the other gives us the close view. By the aid of one, our eyesight is indefinitely extended; by the aid of the other, it is contracted but intensified. One is a new door opening into the macrocosm; the other is a new door opening into the microcosm. Applying the one, we stretch out our vision far into infinite space, following the distant track of the planets and beholding them make their magnificent rounds; detecting the remote juxtaposition of the stars, and surprising the coy moon in her very unusual act of stepping full across the pathway of the sun's vision. Applying the other, we suddenly arrest and recall the wandering and diffusive habits of our visual organs, and concentrate them upon the near view; and, lo! just beyond the threshold of our range of sight we discover a new world opening to us, full of infinitesimal creations of the existence of which we had not dreamed, and by the wonders and beauties of which we are straightway astonished and fascinated.

He who has used either of these remarkable aids to sight, has had an entirely new point given to his perception of infinite wisdom and power. But he who has thoughtfully looked through the microscope, has had his eyes opened to the otherwise incredible variety and skill and delicacy, and, withal, minuteness of the Creator's work. He is impressed as never before with the Divine consentiousness; with the infinite patience, carefulness, and fidelity which the Divine Intelligence applies to the doing of the least things, and to the carrying out of the smallest particulars of its comprehensive plans. By the aid of the microscope we discover God right in the midst of his secrets; we penetrate by it into the laboratory of his great work-shop, and behold the beginnings of things, the minutiae of his operations. We find that the true greatness of the Divine power is displayed in the smallness of its execution. We observe that it does not create things all at once, and in the mass, but gradually and increasingly—little by little. After consulting our microscope, we know that this world is not one solid, homogeneous lump or ball, but that it is composed of infinitesimal atoms, rather loosely held together, with spaces between all admitting air and motion; and that with infinite care and labor the Divine mind has brought these into such delicate relations, and keeps them so, well balanced between independence and interdependence. When we look at a forest, all grand and great in its serried assemblage of huge trunks and waving branches, we know that each tree is a bundle of fine molecules which God has built up in successive layers and circles and spiral columns; and that the whole forest itself is really a collection of delicate pollen that once was floating in the air like so much dust, but which now is deposited in this majestic and impressive form. The microscope reveals to us, as by the magician's wand, the minute anatomy of every tree, shrub, plant, flower; indeed of every body in existence: and shows that each is a sum of many atoms, every one of which the Divine hand has touched, bringing it from distant quarters and arranging it with tender care in connection with others. Without the microscope, the botanist especially would be at loss, for he would scarcely know anything of the structure and composition of plants; but with this wonderful instrument he is able to explore his domain with faithful minuteness, to track the dainty to his most obscure hiding place, and to follow him as he retires from all ordinary vision and ensconces himself in the minutest seed or germ, there to work his finest wonders of creation, and thence to project and construct all forms of animal as well as vegetable life.

This revelation of the special and infinitesimal operations of God is a most remarkable and impressive one. It shows us that the great Creator does not scorn details, does not despise the day of small things; but, on the contrary, that it is in the very littleness of his creations that he displays his skill and care and wisdom most markedly. I know of no better religious instruction than any thoughtful person can have, than that which is sure to be found in the microscopic study of the works of Nature. Do you seek for miracles to impress you?—here they are in profusion: miracles of Divine wisdom, power, patience, and conscientiousness! You will find them in the leaf that rustles to your feet in the autumn, or that sparkles with brilliancy on the overhanging bough in spring. You will find them in the tiny seed resting and riding on the bosom of the wind, which deposited here produces mosses or ferns, deposited there produces mammoth trees and forests. You will find them in the delicate anatomy of the flower that holds up its fragrant cup under your window, and in the hardly less delicate anatomy of your own hand that reaches forth to pluck it. By such study you will find that God has never been in a hurry to do things; that he has never hastened forward to secure and grasp results, but has deliberately and patiently come at them by "here a little and there a little." By such study one will be reminded of the debt of gratitude we owe to the great Friendliness for the smallest and commonest blessings, because it has taken such care and pains to produce them for us. One will be led to see that a really appreciative and thankful soul will recognize the goodness of God in the least as well as in the greatest of things; that, while it will be thankful to him for the lustre of the morning and evening sky, for the glories of the golden day and the mellow beauties of the silvery night, for food and raiment, for friends and family, for prolongation of life, for the inward sustenance of hope and faith—that, while it will be thankful for these greatest things, it will not forget also to be thankful for the life-giving air that blows from the hills and the sea, for the pure water that trickles from a thousand hidden springs, for the sweet shape and hue and odor of the field and garden flower, for the fringed gentian that modestly blooms along the road, and the common thistle that grows by the wall; for all, indeed, that the Divine mind has bestowed its thought and care upon, however small and insignificant that may be.

And it will be exceedingly fortunate for one, if one learns from such study to emulate the infinite example; to despise not beginnings, to scorn not small things; in all one dares and does and hopes, to work and wait with patience and perseverance, being satisfied to advance little by little, and being not satisfied to execute anything except in the spirit of fidelity and devotion.

How well it would be for all those who set out in life with business ambitions, if they would learn to be content with little things before they snatch at large ones; to make progress slowly and gradually, and not with rapid and enormous strides! It seems as if every month, almost every week, brought some new account of a misguided and criminal man who has hastened to be rich, who has sought to clutch the prize of fortune by other than honest and legitimate means. Not little by little has he been willing to accumulate honorable wealth, but by rushing into the vortex of speculation, by driving his craft under full sail down the slippery rapids of embezzlement, defalcation, and breach of trust. The insane and utterly foolish desire to live fashionably, and to have one's name ranked among the highest incomes, is more and more luring men on to business rashness and fraud; and unless the strong tide of this ambition can be somehow changed, our commercial life seems destined to become hopelessly corrupt and corrupting, and the honest banker and merchant and trader to be known only as by ancient tradition. Money is very useful and riches very desirable; but all the gold in the coffers of men and the mines of the earth cannot compensate for the loss of manly integrity, or compare for a moment with the worth and value of true and noble character!

Well will it be also if those who are laboring to educate, improve, and reclaim mankind shall keep in mind that patience and perseverance are indispensable qualities in workers and doers of good. The human mind and heart, in most cases, respond but slowly to the word of instruction and the hand of reformation. Not totally perverse or depraved is the will of man, but depraved and perverse enough to require the utmost persistence, steadiness, and faith in those who are striving to lead and guide it for good. But "continual dropping wears away the stone," and gentleness and firmness combined will overcome the most obdurate and obstinate willfulness and indifference. Learn a lesson of those workmen who renew and brighten stained and weather-soiled granite. With their strong but finely tempered instruments they pick and pick away on the dark face of the hard surface, not seeming at first to make much impression or change, yet gradually, though slowly, chipping off the objectionable feature, until at last all the soils and stains of years have been removed, and the whole structure stands forth as with renewed and brightened look! So, let those who are working on human character to improve and benefit it, continue to apply their well-directed and repeated efforts—not too roughly and nervously, lest they break and tear instead of renovating, but gently and steadily, again and again; and as surely as the contact of water and air with the solid continent affect and change its aspect from time to time, just so surely will kind and persevering treatment tell on the most hardened and stubborn human nature, and produce in it alteration and improvement.

Likewise must the teachers of new truth, and of sound but unpopular doctrine, take this lesson to heart. No superstition, or prejudice, or error, gives way easily and all at once; it has to be literally hacked to pieces, and its roots cut one by one, before it will totter to its fall and yield the soil of the mind to better growths. Truth does not travel by telegraph or express, but goes on foot plodding its slow and toilsome way, arriving at its goal by gradual stages, and often coming in all unheralded by any preceding demonstration. Most men do not easily change their beliefs, do not take readily and kindly to the new, but cling tenaciously to the old—to those beliefs they inherited from the past, to those which are approved by popular tradition and respectable custom. It is well on some accounts that this is so; for if all men were possessed with an insatiable desire for mere novelty and change, there would be no stability in our thought and belief, but crudeness and chaos would prevail. The old is venerable, and should not be rudely treated. The new should be admitted only when it brings healthier and richer life and better conditions. Innovations should come only when they can be brought and supported by cool judgment, calm reflection, and sound reasoning. But the order of Nature is that, in due time, the old shall give way to the new. The purpose of things is, unmistakably, progress. The world of matter does not stand still; it is always advancing by degrees to fuller and fairer development. The world of mind, or thought, does not stand still—cannot—but ever is progressing to grander outlook and nobler conclusion. Though the progress of truth is slow and gradual, it is nevertheless sure and steady. Nothing and nobody can stay it. It has seen and unseen auxiliaries. Not only inspired men speak it, but the wind whispers it, the murmur of the rocks open and tell it, the stars sound it along their eternal ways; shut it up in prisons, and it breaks through bars and bolts; drive it into obscurity, and it flashes forth its secret from the darkest corner; banish it from the pulpit, and it springs to the platform; pursue it from the platform, and it finds a vehicle and voice in the omnipresent press; hound it down with persecution of every sort, and when you think you have exterminated and slain it, lo! its immortality outwits you, and it rises in a new place and form! The coming of truth is like the coming of day. Not all at once does the dazzling aurora break upon our unprepared vision; but slightly, at first, it sends us warning in a gentle gleam of light and soft purpling of the eastern sky; then, one by one, it lights its flaming torches and blazes the horizon with their accumulating glory,—until, little by little, all the far-off hills are kindled with morning's beacon fires, the intermediate valleys unroll their panorama as the darkness melts from the earth, and the new day is come when the sun, spurning the last hindrance, marches up his glorious and unimpeded way. And so the full glad day of truth arrives, and its sun shines to illuminate the world. It must overcome the night of ignorance by degrees, and gradually dispel the darkness of superstition. But though opposition be piled against the truth, and the barriers be carried as high as madmen can rear them, its sun will find his horizon line, and its day will break at last all clear and full. The truth is mighty, and must prevail!

Once more, this lesson of little by little should be pondered by those who are striving for self-improvement and perfection. Slowly and toilsomely is this noble task wrought out. We have to take ourselves as we find ourselves, and from that point of departure work out our highest and best. We may find great faults and defects of character to be overcome; very well, they are the obstacles which we must set ourselves to remove; or, rather, they are the crude and raw materials which we must handle, shape, and fashion, working them into the edifice of our uprising character. Any attainment grand and worthy we can afford to come at through many and great difficulties. What aim so exalted as that of a human soul who aspires for perfection? What hindrance so sudden, then, that we will not dare and overcome as we climb that shining way? Be patient and persevering, you who are also aspiring and endeavoring! Pret not though your progress be very slow and toilsome; be satisfied to gain a little, though not much; if you gain in the least, take heart, though you have labored weeks and months to secure this small good. All good you are on the road to, and will arrive there sometime. And suffer no diminution of faith in yourself. Cardinal among your beliefs be the belief in the high dignity of your own origin and destiny. Children of the gods are we; and amongst themselves shall they make place for us when the Olympus of our aspiration shall be won. Climb, then; and be content to climb slowly, if but surely.

Slowly but continually does the coral insect strive, adding mite by mite to his submarine mass, until at length the surface waters are penetrated, and there rises upon the topmost wave a new continent whose foundations are far down upon the floor of the great sea. So rises the manly or womanly character, by daily accretions of strength. Every earnest purpose, every pure desire, every unvoiced aspiration, every patient waiting helps to build up the moral edifice and add stability to the whole. And then, when strength of experience and effort is gained, though all the waves and billows of this uneven life surge and beat against it, it stands secure; for its structure is firm and lasting, and its foundations rest on a rock that may not be moved.

[Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1873, by F. K. ARBON, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.]

PAUL GOWER.

A RATIONALISTIC STORY

ENGLISH AND AMERICAN LIFE.

CHAPTER XXV.

PAUL'S FATHER.

When the father of Paul Gower arrived in New York, and, taking a hack-carriage from Pier No. 1, North River, near the Battery, to the Astor House, was shown upstairs to his son's room, he proved to be a tall man, looking at least ten years older than his real age of five-and-forty, and sufficiently like the young man's late grandfather to both surprise and affect him. We have all met such family resemblances; like and yet unlike, inasmuch that it is difficult to decide whether the similarity or diversity is the greater. Thus John Gower inherited his father's large head, bold features, and deep-set blue eyes, while a premature tendency to baldness increased the general resemblance; and his voice was, at times, curiously suggestive of the old gentleman's; but there the likeness ended. Instead of the hale, placid, almost venerable face of the one, with its fleshy curves and comfortable English plenitude of cheek and double-chin, the other's countenance exhibited the inevitable contrast effected by his long course of Americanization, both of climate and character. His complexion was sallow, his face seamed and worn into sharp, nervous lines; without being attenuated, it looked flabby, and the anatomy of his head was too plainly visible beneath its covering, a peculiarity rendered the more conspicuous by its size, and by the looseness of the skin, which formed wrinkles about the corners of the eyes and mouth. He seemed a handsome man run to seed; and one who might have improved his appearance by brushing his hair, tying his neckerchief carefully, and adjusting his suit of black into something like harmony with his large-boned and rather loose-jointed figure. Probably a little of the slovenliness of plantation life was perceptible in this negligence. His straggling, grizzled beard, growing mostly under his chin, and half tucked away behind a crumpled shirt-collar, imparted additional unconventionality to his aspect, and he had a nervous habit of plucking at it by the ends. Altogether he impressed Paul oddly, though tenderly—this strange father, whose claim to the title was yet apparent in his countenance; and who, shaking his son by the hand for a long time, asked if he would have known him, and called him "sir." Paul was too agitated to reply.

The meeting, in fact, involved some inevitable awkwardness to both. They were very kindly disposed towards one another, and for that reason shy in expressing their feelings. Each, too, had previously rehearsed the interview in his own mind (as we are all apt to do on extraordinary occasions), and in part resolved on the course of conduct that seemed most appropriate, with the usual want of calculation as to the behavior of the opposite party, which commonly necessitates an entire change of programme. On both accounts, therefore, they were too self-conscious, and by so much the less capable of yielding to the natural, spontaneous emotions of the moment. John Gower manifested most perturbation—I have said that Paul resembled his dead mother—but was hardly less master of himself than his son, who would have liked, in the words of Scripture, to have fallen on his father's neck and kissed him, but was afraid to risk the impulse; shaking hands appeared such an inadequate thing, under the circumstances.

What with the one's shamefacedness and sensibility, and the other's diffidence in reviving a claim which, it might be supposed, he had permitted to lapse from long abeyance, sometime expired before they could converse together freely and naturally; when it was with singular gratification that Paul heard himself addressed without the slightest assumption of authority—as if his father recognized his right to be met on equal terms. Habit is a great thing—and the young man had been so mercilessly and so recently henpecked by his sharp old grandmother.

I shall omit John Gower's inquiries about her and his daughter, and kindred topics; also Paul's answers. The doctor (we may as well give him his professional title, as in America we always use it) had of course been informed of his father's decease, by letter; and of his will, with respect to which he now exhibited the same dissatisfaction which had characterized his brothers and sisters in England, but more freely expressed. Indeed, he frankly admitted that it was a great disappointment to him, for reasons unexplained; adding, however, half-cynically, that he might have expected no better fortune.

"I shouldn't have cared a red cent's worth about the money, sir," he said, "if I hadn't need of it, as I shall proceed to inform you. I've got a surprise for you, and perhaps a mighty disagreeable one. Instead of owning a fine plantation in Louisiana, I'm now within a few thousand dollars of being as poor as Job's turkey. Aren't you disappointed?"

Paul was more astonished than anything else, and said so; his father regarding him, in the meantime, with marked attention.

"Do you know anything about the Mississippi?" he continued, after lighting a cigar and giving his son one—precious articles apparently, for they were separately enveloped in a kind of cocoon of dried tobacco-leaf. (Notwithstanding his curiosity and interest in what was coming, Paul received this token of equality in manhood with a sensation of pleasure.)

"Very little," the young man answered.

"Well, then, I'll tell you. One of its peculiarities is a habit of changing its bed on brief notice, or none at all—making short cuts across the innumerable bends and loops and twists and twirls by which it wriggles its way for three thousand miles down to the Gulf. On the map it resembles a rattlesnake in convulsions; and if you look close enough you'll find plenty of places marked 'false river' where it has sloughed its skin. In these feats it thinks nothing of slicing away a plantation or so, especially from the concave side of the bank, and leaving a big lake in its place, or making a present of a few thousand new acres to your opposite neighbor. Well, that's precisely what happened at Burzard's Bend, Carroll Parish, Louisiana. It is an extinct locality—wiped out, sir. You may go over my plantation in a boat, or a steamer, but in no other manner. It is all under water."

Paul thought of the emigrant in Martin Chuzzlewit, on whose farm that element varied from four to six feet in depth in the dry season, and was quite unfathomable in the wet; but said nothing. His father went on in the half-battering tone often adopted by men who are, or who consider themselves, ill-used by fortune.

"It's just my luck, sir. When I was with the army in Mexico I nearly died of the vomito before I got a chance of doctering others; was given over and left behind at Vera Cruz, and only rallied in time to come up with a spent bullet, after Cerro Gordo. At Callao, an earthquake and the small-pox combined to upset my business as a photographer. My store was burnt down three times in San Francisco (though we didn't think much of that, there), and a miner found a nugget worth twenty thousand dollars in a hole, just after I had abandoned it. And now the Mississippi drowns me out of Louisiana; and of course as my father's money might have helped me, it's indefinitely postponed until I can do without it. If I turned undertaker, I believe folks would leave off dying, just to spite me."

Paul smiled at this rather lugubrious pleasantry, as in duty bound, and the doctor resumed. "You'll wonder I didn't mention this last smash-up in my letters, as there was plenty of time?—well, sir, it was partly on your account. I was looking forward to your arrival, and couldn't find it in my heart to hinder your coming. Wheeler picked up enough to make me pretty sure you'd like a change, even deducting the Louisiana cotton-plantation. That so, eh? well, I'm glad I reckoned rightly."

He had been pulling at his beard and watching his son's face nervously, as if he distrusted some expression of dissatisfaction. But as Paul's countenance spoke his obligations no less than his words, his own lighted up with pleasure; he laughed aloud, patted the young man on the back, and again shook him by the hand.

"That's so, eh?" he repeated. "Good boy! You're not sorry to snap granny's apron-strings and go ahead on your own hook in a free country? I guessed as much. All right, eh?" He took one or two appreciative puffs at his cigar and continued, confidentially: "And I don't mind telling you, besides, that I didn't feel like confessing to him that's dead and gone that I was poor again. I knew what he'd think of it. I know what poverty means in England, sir, from bitter experience. So I sold off the hands and what was saved of the cotton, and went to Orleans to wait for you. I might have had my share of a pretty liberal subscription raised by friends and neighbors—they're warm-hearted people down South, sir—only I didn't care about accepting it. There were others who wanted the money more than I did."

The young Englishman experienced a momentary impression that his father's independence conflicted oddly with his matter-of-fact allusion to the "domestic institution" of the South (it was before his countrymen had learned to listen complacently to defenses of the same), but naturally did not give the feeling utterance.

"Here's the Picayune," Dr. Gower resumed, producing a newspaper, "with a full account of the crevasse, in it; you can read it at your leisure, and learn how your chance of becoming a Louisiana planter got nipped in the bud, or mud, which is nearer the literal truth. I hope you are not very much disappointed. It's an easy life, or would be, if it wasn't for the niggers, who worry the very soul out of you with their laziness and devilry, unless you've a heart of stone to deal with 'em—which I haven't. But we won't talk about that now, as of course you've read Uncle Tom, and think 'em angels and savages. Let's get on with my story. I resolved to wait your arrival and then decide what to do, rather inclining to Texas. Well, just before this, news came—he touched the band of crape encircling his hat—"Wheeler turned up with the information that he was going back to Europe to make his fortune. When there he dropped in for a big thing, a contract to run new lines of railway in Russia, under some baron or other, of whom he tells extraordinary stories, and who is opening up the country like all possessed. A great country, Russia, sir—especially for Americans! Finding that I was looking out for something, he proposed that I should accompany him as surveyor, taking England by the way, which would give me an opportunity of stopping in on all of you. There was only one difficulty—you were coming and I had determined not to prevent you. However, as Wheeler's departure wasn't immediate (he wanted till spring to complete his preparations), I had only to hold on to make sure of meeting you in New York. So I concluded to accept. And we shall start on Saturday."

He rose, jerked the ashes of his cigar out of the open window, restored it to his mouth, put one foot in the seat of his chair, and, resting his elbow on his knee and his chin on his hand, gazed at his son more earnestly than ever.

"It's the best thing I can do," he said, twisting his beard. "Now, as concerns yourself. Would you like to stay in America, or go with us to Russia?"

The idea of seeing Kate again so soon and unexpectedly,—of returning, not to old slavery and the house near Hampstead Road, but on his way to a new life and strange experiences in an altogether unlooked-for direction, accompanied by this adventurous, half-cosmopolitan father, whom he must otherwise part with in the very inception of their acquaintance, flushed Paul's cheek with excitement and pleasure. There passed before his imagination a kind of mental panorama of the usual impressions which make up our conception of Russia—a colossal St. Petersburg, a bizarre Moscow, interminable roads stretching away over vast steppes and solitudes, and ornamented with guide-posts like barber's signs; soldiers, serfs, and nobles; a bearded and booted and furred population, drinking tea-lemnades out of tumblers, or gambling, or being drilled or knouted; with ice, sleighs, wolves and bears thrown in, ad libitum. Moreover, he could not help thinking of what "the fellows" would say in Soho Square, when he walked upstairs into the old "tailor's shop" again and invited them to dinner. Influenced by such vain-glorious fancies, he replied eagerly that he preferred sharing his father's fortunes; only it appeared strange to come all the way to America and then go back having seen so little of it.

"Well, it does. And I should hardly have let you, perhaps, if I'd reckoned on your returning right away. I want you should do what's best for yourself, besides consulting your own inclinations."

His father's gravity of manner at once checked Paul's enthusiasm. "You think, sir," he said, "that I had better remain here?"

"Well, if I answered according to my own wishes, I should say no. A man isn't knocked about in the world as long as I've been without feeling lonely at times, and finding it hard to part from his own flesh and blood after he has seen nothing of it for years, and just resumed its acquaintance in the shape of a young fellow like yourself. My boy—"the speaker laid his brown, veiny hand upon his son's shoulder—"don't mistake me. I took some precautions through Wheeler to insure you the means of coming to me, if you wanted to, which may suggest how I wished it. Now we are face to face, thank God!" (they shook hands once more) "and if I propose a separation, and a speedy one, though only for a time, it isn't for my own advantage. About this Russian business you must be guided by your own judgment. I go because nothing better offers, here or anywhere; and a few years, more or less, among the Muscovites aren't of much consequence in such a vagabond life as mine—especially when there's a chance to roll up a pile of roubles. Maybe my luck 'll alter; though, considering it's me, I shan't be surprised if the bears tear up the rails or bolt the theodolites. But with you the case is different. If you go, it'll be for a holiday, that's all. There's no reason why you should, except bearing me company; and perhaps some against it, which I shall be perfectly honest in stating. You are one-and-twenty, and have got your own living to get—at least for the present. Now the question is whether you hadn't better pitch right in at once, here, without wasting any time about it."

Paul's Russian vision faded away as rapidly as it had arisen, and, though rather disappointed, he protested his willingness to abide by his father's decision. The latter went on.

"Here you are in a country where everybody can get a living and a good one—where the conditions of existence are altogether easier than elsewhere on this planet—take right hold of something and stick to it; that's my advice. If you think different, however, only say so and I'll engage a passage out for you with myself and Wheeler tomorrow."

It was so candidly, so earnestly spoken, that Paul could only reiterate his former assurances. The doctor was evidently gratified and warmed into increased confidence.

"My boy, I don't want your life to be a repetition of mine. Whether it is my fault or not, I've never been permanently successful—which is the test of merit all the world over. There are people (mostly well-to-do ones, I've remarked) who don't believe in good or bad fortune—will tell you it's all your own doing, and of course their deserving; but I can't help thinking if that's the rule, I'm an exception. Now, I've sometimes suspected that I'm like the fox in the fable, who had so many dodges and twice the number in a bag, but was gobbled up by the hounds for all that, while the cat ran up a tree and was safe. Do you be pussy—trust to one idea. It's the surest plan, like Napoleon bringing all his forces to bear on one point and hammering away at it. See the blockheads there are who get on solely by perseverance. It doesn't want brains."

These truisms sounded unpleasantly in the ear of the young man; he thought them hard and worldly, and their subject recalled his grandmother's not very dissimilar exhortations. He had reflected very little on the art of success in life and his future career (except in connection with Kate Sabin), and had indulged in indefinite expectations of freedom and independence, which his father's speech seemed to throw cold water upon. It was like saying "work" to a young fellow bent on a holiday. Perhaps a latent consciousness of needing such advice put a sharper edge on it. What followed, however, made him ashamed of his feelings.

"I want you should feel you are independent and fighting the world on your own hook as soon as possible. When I landed in New York, fourteen years ago, I had twenty dollars—I shall leave you a thousand. You'll write me, of course, regularly; and as long as I've a cent it's yours. You'll look around and amuse yourself awhile, as is but natural, and then buckle to at something. I wouldn't go on the spree first, if I was you, and knock down all my money—though that's the thing one might naturally expect from the way you've been brought up in England."

Paul started and blushed and laughed, but was more delighted than ever with his father's free-and-easy confidence. He declared his good intentions, and his readiness to undertake life without the thousand dollars.

"Well, I believe you; and," with a smile, "I shouldn't give you up if you did kick up your heels a bit before settling down as a good square trotter. Some people can't work as long as they've got any money aboard; the knowledge that they must sink or swim is their only incentive to exertion. Pitch 'em into deep water, neck and crop, and they'll strike out like Tritons. Others learn best with a life-preserver, which you'd better have in case of accidents. I want to give you a fair start, my boy. I suppose we shall come out all right in the long run, when my father's money drops in—though God forbid the old mother shouldn't live as long as she wants to!—but it's best to take nothing for granted. The banks where the property is invested may burst up, or somebody invent a new water-gas just to kill the shares. So you'd better sail in at something. I don't know what kind of a prospect New York offers for architects [again Paul was reminded of Martin Chuzzlewit], but as they're always tearing down and building up here, and have more fires than anywhere, except California, it ought to be first rate. We'll ask Wheeler about it. If it won't do, try something else. Be sure you're right, then go ahead—Crockett's motto. Have you seen Wheeler yet?"

Paul answered in the negative. "He has been out of town," he said, "but is expected to return to-day. I was thinking of going there when you came."

"Let us walk then; we can talk as we go." Accordingly Paul put on his hat and accompanied his father, the pair crossing Broadway and the Park in the direction of Nassau Street—a locality with which the young man was destined to become very familiar hereafter.

THE GERMAN PENAL LAWS.—This is the text of the new German law against the liberty of the Catholic clergy of that Empire:—

"We, William, by the grace of God King of Prussia and Emperor of Germany, declare—

"1. That no Catholic priest can publish any disciplinary law or act, excepting for matters purely religious and concerning either the secular or regular clergy.

"2. No priest can indict or publish any disciplinary penalties on account of the fulfillment, on the part of any individual, of the laws of the State, however contrary these may be to priestly tenets.

"3. No priest can publish any disciplinary penalties to be inflicted on individuals of the Catholic faith, either for or not voting at public elections according to circumstances.

"4. No priest can name any person by name in their publication of disciplinary penalties.

"The violation of these laws will be punished by the fine of 1,000 thalers, and by imprisonment of not less than two years. Moreover, the culprit can be suspended by government from the exercise of his duties as a clergyman. What is here decreed for the Catholic priesthood is equally applicable to the clergy of all other denominations."

The meaning of this law is, that any attempt on the part of the bishops and clergy to excommunicate or suspend persons belonging to the Old Catholic party, and who unlawfully exercise their office in Catholic churches, will be punished by two years' imprisonment, and by the heavy fine above mentioned. So that if a bad priest becomes an Old Catholic and preaches heresy, his superior cannot interfere without incurring the risk of being locked up in the dungeon for his pains.—Brooklyn Catholic Review.

RECEIVED.

THE SPIRITUAL DELUSION: Its Methods, Teachings, and Effects. The Philosophy and Phenomena critically examined. By DYER D. LUCE. Philadelphia: J. B. LIPPINCOTT & Co. 1873. (Toledo: BROWN & FAUNCE.)

DIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA: A Complete Explanation of the Physiology of the Digestive Processes, with the Symptoms and Treatment of Dyspepsia and other Disorders of the Digestive Organs. Illustrated by R. T. TRALL. N. Y.: S. R. WELLS, 389 Broadway.

THE BIBLE IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS: Opinion and Decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio in the case of John D. Misor et al., versus the Board of Education of the City of Cincinnati et al. Cincinnati: ROBERT CLARKE & Co. 1873.

FOODS. By EDWARD SMITH, M.D., LL.D., F.R.S. New York: D. APPLETON & Co. 1873. (Toledo: BROWN & FAUNCE.)

THE NEW IRREPRESSIBLE CONFLICT. Letter from H. L. GREEN. Published by the SYRACUSE RADICAL CLUB, 1873.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT: Of, The Sabbath, The Sabbath, The Change, and Restoration. By W. H. LITTLEJOHN. Battle Creek, Mich.: SEVENTH DAY ADVENTIST PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION. 1873.

TWO APPEALS TO THE LEADERS OF SPIRITUALISM IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA. By a DISCIPLE OF ALLAN KARDEC. Florence, Italy, 1873.

GOD, RELIGION, AND IMMORTALITY. An Oration delivered at the Pulse Celebration in Cincinnati, Sunday, January 26, 1866. By JOSEPH TREAT. Cincinnati: Published by the COMMITTEE.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY OF BOSTON UNIVERSITY. Riverside Press. 1873.

OLD AND NEW. August, 1873. Boston: ROBERTS BROTHERS.

PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL AND LIFE. Illustrated. August, 1873. New York: S. R. WELLS.

THE RELIGIOUS MAGAZINE AND MONTHLY REVIEW. August, 1873. Boston: LEONARD C. BOWLES.

THE LADIES' OWN MAGAZINE. August, 1873. Chicago: M. C. BLAND & Co.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY. August, 1873. Boston: J. R. OSGOOD & Co.

THE GALAXY. August, 1873. New York: SHELDON & Co.

THE SANITARIAN. August, 1873. A. N. BELL, M.D., Editor. New York and Chicago: A. S. BARNES & Co.

THE PENN MONTHLY. July, 1873. Philadelphia: 894 Walnut Street.

CASH RECEIPTS.

For the week ending August 9, 1873.

Geo. B. Raymond, $3; Chas. Willis, $1; Minnie G. Fawcett, $1; Wm. L. Heberling, 75 cts.; J. J. Hendrix, 50 cts.; G. C. Bell, 50 cts.; A. M. Jacobs, 50 cts.; R. C. Allen, 50 cts.; Jacob Elverson, $3; John Blaine, $3.50; Julian & Wilson, $2; J. H. Mason, $3; D. C. Potter, $2; J. F. Lockwood, $3; J. Martin, $2; C. E. Scrill, 75 cts.; F. D. Darling, 25 cts.; Julius Churchill, $3.50; W. A. Whitner, 75 cts.; A. M. Lathrop, 30 cts.; J. W. Gibson, 10 cts.; A. W. McAllister, 50 cts.; H. H. Morrison, 25 cts.; Allen & F. Jacob, $1; E. B. Seelye, $3; G. H. Leonard, $3.25; A. S. Chase, 50 cts.; D. W. Payne, $3; J. S. Kingsley, 10 cts.; A. W. Kelsey, 20 cts.; C. G. Glenn, $1; Chas. M. Dennison, $3; A. W. French, $3; C. S. Wemott, $3; John F. Chandler, $3.25; E. P. Hurd, $1.50; Jas. McKenzie, $1.50.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

The Index.

AUGUST 16, 1878.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonise it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B. No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
 ARNOLD WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
 OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOTREY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), Rev. MORGAN D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.

DOLLAR DONATION FUND.

This fund is to be used, first, in meeting any deficiency in current expenses that may result from the recent "Index troubles," and, secondly, in such other ways as the editor shall find most advantageous for the paper. All appropriations will be reported to the Directors.

Acknowledged with thanks for the week ending August 2:—

$1.00 each—Chas. Willis, S. E. Dunn, Julius Churchill;
 $2.00 each—S. Forehand, J. F. Lockwood.

PRIVILEGED PROPERTY.

It seems a sufficiently direct and clear deduction from the principle of "equal rights for all and favors for none" that all property not owned by the State should share equitably the burden of taxation for State expenses. No matter to what uses exempted property may be devoted, it enjoys the protection afforded by the State, and ought to pay honestly its proper proportion of the cost of such protection. As an abstract proposition, it would be difficult to dispute the justice of this position.

Yet there is in this country a very large amount of privileged property, receiving the protection of our laws, yet contributing nothing towards defraying the expenses of sustaining and enforcing them; namely, property devoted to charitable and to ecclesiastical purposes. The total value of the former class we do not know; but the total value of ecclesiastical property thus exempted in the United States from taxation was in 1870, according to the census report, $354,483,581.

Take, for instance, the city of Brooklyn. There are here 239 church edifices, valued at $9,660,000; and the annual taxation on this property would amount to $338,600. There are also 60 clergymen's residences, each of which is exempted from taxation to the amount of $1500; and the aggregate of revenue thus lost to the city of Brooklyn is $3,150. Churches and clergymen's residences together, the sum of $341,750 is thus annually donated by the city of Brooklyn to the Christian Church, the whole of it being raised by taxation from the community at large. For whatever is remitted to the churches must be paid by somebody; and thus, by insisting on their own unjust privilege of exemption, the churches contrive to make every tax-payer, whether Christian or Jew or "unbeliever," pay his money annually to their own support, and thereby defeat the provision contained in most of our State Constitutions that no one shall be obliged to support any form of public worship involuntarily.

Is it any wonder, then, that a Catholic priest should recently deny publicly, in the columns of the Washington National Republican for June 26, that the separation of Church and State is an American principle? He says: "In this country there has always been an established church in the sense that the government recognizes religion to a certain extent. This is manifest from its past legislation exempting church property from assessment." To this argument the editor of the paper very pertinently replies. So far as the National government is concerned, the only legislation exempting church property from taxation, except a few cases of special remission of duties on articles imported by individual clergymen or congregations (such as religious books or church bells), is an act passed by Congress on June 17, 1870, under the supposed influence of Jesuit lobbying. The reasons for this supposition are partly to be found in the fact that the Catholics own one fourth of all the church property in the District of Columbia, and that with their characteristic shrewdness they have put it into the shape of real estate which is rapidly rising in value, and which will make them within ten years richer than all the other denominations combined. When, consequently, this bold correspondent of the Republican declares openly that "religion has a primary importance over civil liberty," meaning thereby the Catholic religion, the great danger of such disgraceful violations both of the letter and spirit of the United States Constitution ought to be faithfully pointed out. It is marvellous that the liberals of America should be so inattentive or blind to the rapidly multiplying proofs of a spirit of encroachment which manifests itself on the part of the Church in an increasingly formidable and menacing manner. We call special attention to this act of Congress of June 17, 1870, a copy of which has been kindly taken for us by a Washington friend:—

CHAP. CXXXI.—An Act exempting from Taxes certain Property in the District of Columbia, and to amend the "Act to provide for the creation of Corporations in the District of Columbia by general Law."

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the passage of this act all churches and school-houses, and all buildings, grounds, and property appurtenant thereto, and used in connection therewith in the District of Columbia, shall be exempt from any and all taxes or assessments, national, municipal, or county. Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That savings banks may be organized within the District of Columbia under the provisions of section four of an act "to provide for the creation of corporations in the District of Columbia by general law," and the limitation of twenty years provided for in said section for the existence of corporations created under and by virtue of the provisions of said section shall not apply to corporations formed only for the purpose of life insurance.

Approved, June 17, 1870.

We hope that every liberal paper will copy this act with appropriate comments, and thus help to give the widest publicity to a dangerous innovation upon the most precious principle of our religious liberty; namely, the complete separation of Church and State. There could be no greater peril to the perpetuity of this Republic than to see Catholic influence as powerful in the lobby at Washington as it has been for years in the heart of New York politics. Let it be promptly rebuked at the next session of Congress by the unconditional repeal of the obnoxious act; and let the States all imitate the example thus set by refusing any longer to permit any species of privileged property to shirk its fair share of the public burdens.

Cheering signs of an awakening to the necessity of action in this matter, on the part of the public, are to be noted here and there. The Boston Liberal League recently voted to "devote its energies for the present towards a repeal of the law exempting church property from taxation." In this enterprise we extend to the League our most cordial sympathy and whatever aid it may be in our power to render. Governor Woodson, of Missouri, recommended in his annual message that church property, which is taxed in that State, should be exempted, saying that "he supposed none but heathen would oppose" the recommendation; but the measure failed to receive sufficient support even to be referred to a popular vote. In the Pennsylvania legislature a church tax bill was recently under debate; and although prompt action was taken by the Presbyterian ministers of Philadelphia, who appointed a special committee to present their protest to the legislature, and declared that "such taxation would grievously oppress many churches, and in all cases require such an increase of pew rental as to make it impossible for many worshippers to continue in possession of their seats," it is said that the cause of justice is likely to triumph next winter. In Wisconsin the same agitation has been in progress for some time; and in other places it is evident that the people are becoming aware of the gross inequality of taxation to which they have submitted so long. It is a subject to which we expect to recur often, until there shall be no such thing as privileged property.

THE INEVITABLE CHRISTIAN NARROW.

Rev. W. H. Spencer, of Haverhill, Mass., preached a sermon not long since, the object of which appears to have been to set forth the moral superiority of the character of Jesus of Nazareth over that of all other men dead or living. The sermon doubtless deserved as it received the compliment of publication in the Haverhill Bulletin; but as THE INDEX was not favored with a copy, I have not had the pleasure of perusing it. The editor of the Christian Register, however, was more fortunate. He received the sermon and read it; and it won his approbation to such a degree that he discoursed of it thus:—

"We have read it with lively interest and great satisfaction. It was a good sermon to preach, and a good sermon to hear; earnest, vigorous, manly, and Christian. It makes us feel sure that we are at least a thousand miles nearer to Mr. Spencer than we supposed we were."

In a later issue the Register gave some extracts from this sermon, sufficient to show how highly the author exalts Jesus among men, and what an immense claim he makes for him as compared with all other good and benevolent men in ancient or modern times.

But it is not now my purpose to discuss the sermon itself. At present I remark only upon the delight of the Register over it, and what that delight signifies. What is it that stirs in the breast of our venerable Christian contemporary such "lively interest and great satisfaction"? Is it that the author of the sermon in question is himself a very excellent man; that he lives in the town of Haverhill and does a great deal of good there as a preacher of truth and righteousness, going about among his fellow-townsmen and blessing many lives with his weekly and daily ministrations; that he advocates everything that tends to promote good morals in that community, and general virtue and intelligence among its people? Surely this is something to rejoice over, and to wake the desire in all true hearts that every town in Massachusetts, and every town all through this land to-day, might have such a living benefactor in its midst, ready to instruct its inhabitants wisely, to counsel them judiciously, to encourage them when they do right and warn them when they do wrong, to be a kind, loving guide to its children, and a warm-hearted, sympathizing friend to its suffering and sorrowing ones. Is this the fact in relation to Mr. Spencer which makes the editor of the Register feel so near to him, and commend him so highly? No, not at all. The fact that lifts the jacket of the Register with such an expansion of its heart's delight is, that Mr. Spencer has delivered a eulogy upon the life and character of Jesus! Mr. Spencer is a radical, and as a radical he was supposed by the Register not rightly to understand or appreciate Jesus. While the Register was thus supposing Mr. Spencer to be estimating Jesus inadequately, it felt, we do not know how many thousand miles away from him, but at least one thousand. Mr. Spencer was just as good a man, and in his community just as great a benefactor, before he pronounced this eulogy upon Jesus as he is since; and the Register knows this fact very well. And yet Mr. Spencer's own goodness, his own beneficence, his own usefulness, were not sufficient to bridge the difference between him and the Register, to draw its grandfatherly heart out towards him, and make it regard him with "lively interest and great satisfaction." But when Mr. Spencer takes occasion to intimate that his estimate of Jesus as a man is not a low one; that, on the contrary, he regards him as the best man who ever lived, and fit to be the spiritual leader of all other men,—then the Register feels the distance between itself and Mr. Spencer lessened by a whole "thousand miles;" it stretches out its arms to him and folds him to its warmest embrace.

But, as Artemus Ward used to say, "Why is this thus?" The simple fact is (and it can now no longer be denied or disguised) that the Regis- ter has a shibboleth; and that shibboleth is, "Praise be to Jesus!" Whoever shouts that partisan slogan the Register regards with "lively interest and great satisfaction;" whoever does not, no matter how good or how useful he may be, it feels very distant from him. The "man of Nazareth" is the Register's "man," and it is more jealous in guarding his personal reputation than in guarding the intelligence and virtue of any community in Massachusetts. It would rather have Jesus praised than good morals inculcated. It would prefer to have the attention and affection of a people called to and fixed upon the merits of a very good man who died two thousand years ago, than to have their attention and affection directed to goodness itself, and to a live impersonation of it in their midst to-day. Deceased good men the Register thinks are more venerable than living good men. It would rather the memory of past virtue should be preserved, than that devotion to present virtue should be kindled and promoted.

The fact is that the Register, although a very liberal Christian, has yet a creed. That creed is, "I believe in Jesus as the Christ." The Register's fellowship is not broad enough to include those in its "lively interest and great satisfaction" who do not accept and advance this creed. I do not say this to blame the Register, but only to state a fact. The Register is one of the Christian party, and as such it is bound to be loyal to Jesus. Jesus is its Master, its Savior, its Lord,—in its view the only rightful Master, Savior, and Lord of all men. To keep the memory and veneration of Jesus alive, therefore, must be more important in its eyes than anything else. Its narrowness in this respect is only the inevitable narrowness of the Christian confession. With all Christians loyalty to Christ is before all things else. To the Christian's eyes Christ eclipses truth—Christ is the truth. A good life is not so important to the Christian as faith in Christ—Christ is that life. To walk in the way of daily righteousness is a smaller matter to the Christian than to "stand up for Jesus"—Jesus the Christ is that way.

Observe and mark, then, the inevitable Christian narrowness.

A. W. S.

"THIS CHURCH IS OPEN ALL SUMMER."

The list of Sunday advertisements in the New York papers is beautifully short in dog-days. The churches are closed, except the Catholic, whose constituency remains in the city all summer and needs as much care in hot weather as in cold—perhaps more—and the Episcopalians, which cling to the tradition of continuity. Among the churches that advertise their services, a few continue to proclaim their willingness to be patronized in July and August; adding, perhaps, the notice that they shall be willing, in all events. Conspicuous among these is the new "Church of the Disciples." I may be uncharitable, but to me the remark has an unpleasant savor of virtue. The announcement has the air of saying: "Look at us; here we are. Our neighbors are taking unhallowed vacations. They have gone away to enjoy themselves, leaving not only their own spiritual wants but the wants of their fellow creatures unprovided for. Their ministers are cooling themselves on the mountain-top, or disporting themselves in the ocean wave, improving 'the season' in London, amusing their idle hours in Vienna, or making excursions in Switzerland. We are at our post; our doors are open. From our desk the Word is spoken; from our gallery the choir dispenses choice music; in our temple the sacrifice is uninterrupted, and souls are saved."

To many it seems an unfortunate custom, that of closing places of worship during the summer season. To us it seems most fortunate; not for the reasons that are obvious to everybody and have become the merest commonplaces,—that the pastors and preachers may have rest from their gigantic labors (the men who work hardest do not have the rest); that the singers may have rest from their arduous duties (of singing three or four selections from opera at the price of ten dollars each for every selection); that the congregation may acquire new vigor for the autumn (to endure the fatigue of sitting through ten months of dull sermons); that the churches may be swept and garnished (which they cannot be unless they are empty). We will not cite the best reason of all,—that the congregation go away first, and leave the minister no alternative but to follow them (for there are always people enough left in a great city to fill every meeting-house if the usual occupants of pews were absent—every one; and if the preachers were live men the people would come to hear them—new people, too, with open ears and fresh minds, so much more desirable than the surfeited audiences that know exactly what the preacher will say, and doze off in perfect assurance that nothing requiring particular attention will be spoken). The summer ought to be the preacher's harvest time, for then he has a chance at the outside world, and can offer vacant seats in plenty (provided the upholstery be not too fine) to the multitude of the unchurched who never have an opportunity to see the inside of a fashionable temple, or hear the gospel from a well-paid minister. The solid argument is rather in favor of keeping the churches open and free to all, during the period of emigration,—or would be but for one consideration of paramount importance; namely, the advantage of breaking up the tradition of continuity which the summer affords.

The notion that the churches should never be closed on Sunday, that it would be a good thing to keep them open every day, that the stream of salvation should be perpetually flowing, that no opportunity of bringing a soul to Christ should be neglected, ranks among the irrational and mischievous errors which it is the duty of sensible people to correct. It is a superstition on which a cluster of superstitious hangs. It ought to be abolished if possible; and the best way to abolish it is to neglect and disregard it by shutting up the churches and keeping them shut for a good round term of weeks, allowing nothing to go on there, but throwing the people back on their own resources. If for three months in the year every church were to be shut, the effect might on the whole be good. Let the time be long enough to make the people feel how much or how little they depend on the Sunday ministrations. Give the congregations a chance to look at the institution of public worship from the outside, from a distance, and to settle in their minds what it is worth. If they conclude that it is worth more than they thought it was, they will go back to it with new zest and resolution. If they conclude that it is worth less than they thought it was, well again; for then they will perhaps be saved from future insincerity. Let the institution stand on its merits. That it may stand on its merits, it must be criticised; and criticised it cannot be so long as people are uninterruptedly under its influence. A habit must be suspended in order that its evil consequences may be checked; and no habit is so purely beneficial or so unqualifiedly good that no evil consequences attach to it. The habit of church-going certainly is not. The habit of preaching certainly is not. In fact, both are habits that would gain in vitality if they were now and then handsomely abandoned.

Hitherto, from time immemorial, religion has claimed a peculiar sanctity for its observances, distinct from that attaching to any other kind of instruction. All consent that scientific lectures shall cease, that schools shall close, that libraries shall be inaccessible. But when it is proposed to shut up churches, the cry of remonstrance is raised. It will be a point gained to disabuse people of an idea so preposterous. The best way to do it is to shut the churches as well as the schools and lecture rooms. We therefore would announce: "This church not open all summer."

O. B. F.

The end of man, or that which is prescribed by the eternal or immutable dictates of reason, and not suggested by vague and transient desires, is the highest and most harmonious development of his powers to a complete and consistent whole. —Wilhelm Von Humboldt.

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but in case after no space will be spared to Errata.
N. B.—Articles for this department should be SHORT, and written only on one side of the sheet.
N. B.—Illegibly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.
N. B.—No responsibility will be assumed for unused manuscripts.

HEALTH AND RELIGION.

Some years ago I attended the ordination of a young Baptist clergyman, in one of the rural towns of Vermont. The principal officiating minister was one of the old hardshell, nasal-toned preachers from New Hampshire, and was richly endowed with "that blessed voice" so mellowed by the unction of direct inspiration. In the ordaining prayer occurred the following sentence:—

"May he take care of his 'arthen vessel—eh, for an 'arthen vessel, when it is broken, it can't ring—eh!"

From all the quaint, comical, saintly, sensible, and senseless sayings of that service I selected this as the only one worth remembering, and have since considered it as the only "good I got" at meeting that day.

Good health, in my opinion, is one of the best preparations, and the securest foundation, for a good religion. If cleanliness is next to godliness, then good health must be, in a large degree, godliness itself. To take care of this "arthen vessel" should be reckoned a primary religious duty, for it is the care of a body which is estimated by all Christians as the noblest workmanship of God.

Without perfection of body it is difficult to attain to the highest intellectual and spiritual excellence. The body is the first growth of man—the first development; it is the fitting up of machinery as the vehicle or expression of the moral and spiritual forces; it is the building of the light-house for the light, or the construction of the locomotive for the steam.

All the invisible and impalpable forces of Nature, all the unseen and mysterious forces of the soul, must have some palpable medium of manifestation in order that they may be known and felt, that they may be feared and revered by man. Not until the body has reached maturity does the soul begin its truest and noblest expansion, and then it calls into requisition all the organs and functions of the body for its infinite variety of expression. The eye speaks, flashing thoughts that go straight to the heart, quick and crushing as bolts of lightning; the lips, though mute, are eloquent of meaning; the attitude, the movement of the body, the lifting of the hand, the pointing of a finger as well as the words spoken or written, all are but the outward expression of an inward man—the seen and palpable exponents of the policy and principles of that invisible soul which holds the helm, or sits upon the throne, of our individual humanities.

It is for this reason we should first study our physical nature, that we should fully understand all its needs and how to supply them, in order that it may be best conditioned for its natural uses, and best fitted to answer the higher and better purposes of its immortal spirit. And it seems to me that the performance of this duty will be more pleasing in the sight of God than any of the sacrificial offerings which reason and common sense have always been required to place upon the altar of dogmatic and fashionable religions.

The system of education as heretofore practised in the schools and colleges of this country has almost entirely ignored the study of the body, and directed its energies to the development of the mental faculties, combined with a saving religious culture of the soul.

This has been the legitimate outgrowth of that old-school theology which taught the total depravity of the natural man, the utter vanity and worthlessness of this earthly life,—that our only business here should be to crucify the body and save the soul. Nearly all our secular common schools and literary institutions not nominally religious, in their methods of teaching are still largely toned and colored by the Pulten's narrow and frigid estimate of humanity.

(Of course there are exceptions to the general rule in the matter of education, and these exceptions show that an advance is being made in the right direction; that even old Orthodoxy, with all its heavy ages of error and superstition, cannot make the world stand still, cannot block the wheels of physical and spiritual progress.)

Let the study of man's physical nature become the leading study in all the common schools of this country; let the laws of hygiene be thoroughly taught and fully understood; let all the children grow into familiar knowledge of the body, its component parts, its anatomy, its organs, functions, how to develop and strengthen it, and all the time to know how to use the body to attain the highest form of physical, mental, and spiritual life possible to earth. Then we shall soon enter upon that golden era when superstition, ignorance, and the folly of fashion will no longer be allowed to mar the true beauty of womanhood; nor to break the strength and nobility of manhood; no longer in the Baker Streets and Five Points of our large cities will children be born and nursed and educated in crime; and no longer will our criminal laws be of revenge and retaliation, but rather disciplinary and reformatory in spirit and execution.

A universal knowledge of physical health, in all its harmonious relations, how to secure and preserve it, would dissipate half the ills and crimes of the world; the low, fierce passions of the animal would gradually fade away, and men would come more and more under the influence and control of their moral sentiments and spiritual qualities of mind.

We should then have a religion of health, or a healthful religion. In either case it would be an advance upon that religion which now forgets the body in its great concern for the welfare of the soul.

HIRAM TORREY.

WISSAHICKON, Philadelphia.

A CRITICISM OF THEISM.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

In the contest between theism and atheism is there not a third position, a middle point? My objection to any clearly defined theism is that it attempts to conceive that which is inconceivable; that it makes an object of thought of a certain something (or nothing) which cannot be brought within the domain of the thinking faculty. I do not bring this as an objection against the older deism only (that which perpetuated a working, world-fashioning deity), but also against that more refined, subtle theism which none the less makes its deity—or tries to do so—an object of conception, though it strips this object of all conceivable attributes and leaves it as a vague potency. The radical distinction between the older "deism" and the later "theism" seems to me to be this: The former makes up its God out of the definite conceptions of the understanding, thus giving finite attributes to what it calls infinite. The latter finds its material for a theomorphism in that intuition of the reason which is implied in the conceptions of the understanding, but which cannot be reduced to the plane of conception; nevertheless it is this very intuition which theism projects as its God, making an object, a conception, however vaguely defined, of that which cannot be conceived. The older "deism" tries to raise the conditioned up to the plane of the unconditioned; the later "theism" tries to bring the unconditioned down to the plane of the conditioned. The one makes its God an impersonal personality; the other makes its God a personal impersonality. Both attempt to join in thought what in thought is forever put asunder. To me both have their essence in idol-worship. The later theism, however, is very subtle, and is continually dodging under on this side or that, in order to keep its God out of limitations. But so long as it attempts to think out God, however far it may carry its removal of the limitations which the intellect sets up, it is simply continuing the old process of idol-making. To the intellect God cannot be postulated, and that is equivalent to saying, there is no God. But is this atheism? That depends upon what is meant by theism. So far as atheism is a denial of any conceived, or half-conceived, or conceived and then un-conceived God, it is atheism. But these theomorphic idols, these images which the art-genius of the race has set up in its temple, symbolize an inexpressible reality. The god-forming tendency of the human mind is simply a spontaneous exercise of the art-faculty which seeks to symbolize, or project into form, those intuitions (or—call them what you will) which are otherwise incapable of expression. Hence the gods and goddesses of polytheism; hence the mediæval god or gods; hence the soulless God of the eighteenth century; hence the obscure, misty god of the nineteenth century. These art forms change their shape and aspect with the advancing culture of the race. Each age sees the inadequacy of the idol of the preceding age and attempts to find in the intellect a justification of its own. But the time, it seems to me, has come for the final recognition of the fact that all these idols—from those that are most definite to those that are vaguest in their outlines—are merely more or less adequate symbols of a reality that is incomprehensible,—that is unutterable by any formula of the intellect not less than by any shaping of wood or stone. So understood, I do not hesitate to say, there is no God. Indeed, it affects me as a kind of blasphemy to say, there is a God, or even, God is: it seems to me the old Miltonic satanism,—a rebellion of the intellect, which, when it abides by its assigned place in the hierarchy of life, finds its highest glory in silent adoration. But if atheism go farther than this and employ a new postulate of its own, it is then only the old theism in a new garb, and its "there is no God" conceals an affirmation that is objectionable on the same ground as is that to which it is opposed.

What, then, remains? The old symbols, before which worshipping nations have bent from age to age, topple from their pedestals; but the heart of man is not left without its food. The contents of these symbols remain,—a reality which cannot be brought within the scope of the intellect and named in words, and can therefore only be embodied in individual life, in speechless worship. A certain spiritual state remains, which realizes in the heart, in the life, in a rapport or harmony or identification with the universe, that which the old idols of the intellect stand for. In the presence of this unutterable, mystic reality, there remains only silence—but a silence that is golden.

Very respectfully,

HOWARD HINTON.

NEW YORK CITY.

"LITERATURE AND DOGMA."

It seems to me that the chief thing to assert of God is, not his personality, but his righteousness. I do not feel like affirming or denying his personality. To affirm it seems to be putting about the infinite something of human limitation; to deny it seems to be stripping him of what is noblest in our conception of being. I can but think that the term righteousness includes all that is really precious to us in the term personality; and Matthew Arnold used it in that sense.

There is something in human personality which we must ascribe to God in order that he may fulfil our largest wants; but what that something is no philosophy has yet made plain. We have not yet cleared human existence of all finite limitations, and seen it shine in the pure splendors of the infinite; and hence, when we talk of God as a person, we are apt to import into that term somewhat of human contraction. Is it not sufficient to believe in God as the enduring righteousness; that all which is most beautiful and excellent to our mortal comprehension is indeed the triumphant force of the universe, the law that lies at the root of all things, the beginning and the end? If we prove the personality of God, a thousand problems yet remain unsolved, and the light does not shine clear; but if we prove the righteousness of God every problem is solved, and the darkness is turned into day.

Channing insisted that the moral grandeur of Christ is the main thing to be considered—not the mode of his being; and so we say that the moral grandeur of God is the supreme thing—not his mode of being. I do not care to believe that he is a person, if I can only believe that he is infinitely wise and good. Perhaps I must believe the former in order to believe the latter; but the last at any rate is the greater term, and, if I believe that in all its magnificent fullness, my faith is strong enough.

Literature and Dogma is to me a very helpful and very wonderful book. It makes the struggle of existence seem diviner. It gives me hope and joy and trust; for I find therein a term in which my heart finds deepest satisfaction,—the enduring righteousness of God.

S. P. PUTNAM.

NORTH PLATTE, Nebraska.

"QUAKERS" AND FRIENDS.

CINCINNATI, 7th, 13th, 1873.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

In obedience to the "Inward Light" which friend Higginson says, in THE INDEX of July 12, "seems as obsolete as the old French monarchy," I feel it right to criticise his article on "Quaker Revivals." Had he stuck to the word and text, "Quaker," I should have remained silent; but when he inquires, "Where is gone the dignity that marked the Friends' Meetings of other days?" I feel it my duty to say that "the dignity, the thoughtful silence, the patience, the gentleness, the solemnity," still remain in Friends' Meetings as of yore. But in Quaker Meetings everything indeed seems changed; and they are, as he truly says, "taking up the poorest parts of Methodism just as the Methodists are laying them down."

In the year 1827, the more Orthodox of the Society of Friends forced the evangelical question upon it, and caused a separation of the Society into the two wings called "Orthodox Quakers" and "Hicksite Friends." The "Orthodox" hold revivals as he has truthfully described; but the Society of Friends, commonly called "Hicksite Friends" (because of their great leader Elias Hicks, who rallied the more liberal and radical around the old yet ever new, living, and inspiring "Inward Light"), still move on in "thoughtful silence," preserving the ancient dignity, solemnity, gentleness, and spiritual restraint in their various meetings; and should he or others visit the Philadelphia Yearly Meeting held in June, or the Richmond, Indiana, Yearly Meeting held the last week in September, they would truly behold an inspiring sight—some two or three thousand persons sitting in solemn silence, restraining the play of the carnal passions, of self, that the Spirit of Truth may have full and uninterrupted sway in their deliberations.

The Society of Friends having suffered all manner of persecutions in securing that priceless boon, "liberty of conscience," now watch closely the wiles of the Evangelicals in their endeavors to subvert our government, and in general sympathize with and are readers of THE INDEX; and, so far as the "Inward Light" permits,—or, in other words, so far as their highest sense of duty and right permits,—cordially co-operate in the "Free Religious" movement. Indeed, Friends really are as radical as the "Free Religionists," if not more so. Although still encumbered with some of the wrecks of the past, which they are rapidly removing, they believe now as of yore in a religion of experience, accepting no truth until experienced, or fully demonstrated to be true. They believe in the "Inward Light" and power of the Spirit, because they have had demonstrated to them its beneficent influences and experienced its operations in their own souls.

Friend Morris Einstein, in this same number of THE INDEX, gave an excellent Friends' sermon—that which he calls conscience being, as I conceive, a God-given guide to every individual to lead him to the "Kingdom of God within," if he will but obey its monitions. Yet though friend Einstein is, I believe, called a materialist, while I stand at the opposite spiritual pole, I extend to him the warm hand of fellowship, believing that he needs but to take the one step from the phenomena to the spirit controlling the phenomena; from the thing created to the creator, to stand in the fulness of spiritual life and become a disciple of the "Inner Light."

The Society of Friends have no creed, each individual simply "minding the Light," rigidly obeying his highest conceptions of truth and right. They believe in and uphold a free press, a free pulpit, so-called, and a free ministry. They are unalterably opposed to all religious traditions, superstitions, bigotry, and such ceremonial forms or observances as tend to hamper the soul in its onward progress toward the infinite.

Respectfully,

BENJ. E. HOPKINS.

TURNING THE TABLES.—The Calcutta correspondent of the London Times, in a letter dated Oct. 4, writes:—

"A lecture, the mere title of which will startle a great many people in England, was delivered in Calcutta last week by the minister of the Adi-Sumaj, the elder body of the Brahmos. The Adi-Sumaj (that is, Adi-Church), although separated from the Hindus on many points, make their chief separation to consist in claiming a return to the Vedas, which they say Hinduism has departed from. The leaders of this section of the Brahmos are a highly respectable body of men, well educated, generally calm and thoughtful, and thoroughly respected by all classes of their countrymen. The minister of this body startled Calcutta, or at least the religious part of it, by announcing a lecture on 'The Superiority of Hinduism to every other Existing Religion.' This was meeting Christians in a very unusual way. The lecturer held that Hinduism was 'superior,' because it owed its name to no man; because it acknowledged no mediator between God and man; because the Hindu worships God in the intensely devotional sense, as the Soul of the soul; because the Hindu alone can worship God at all times, in business and pleasure, and everything; because, while other Scriptures inculcate the practice of piety and virtue for the sake of eternal happiness, the Hindu Scriptures alone maintain that God should be worshipped for the sake of God alone, and virtue practised for the sake of virtue alone; because Hinduism inculcates universal benevolence, while other faiths merely refer to man; because Hinduism is non-sectarian (believing that all faiths are good if the men who hold them are good), non-proselytizing, pre-eminently tolerant, devotional to an entire abstraction of the mind from time and sense, and the concentration of it on the Divine; of an antiquity running back to the infancy of the human race, and from that time till now influencing in all particulars the greatest affairs of the State, and the most minute affairs of domestic life. These are some of the points insisted upon by the lecturer, and many a long day will it be, I fear, before we shall alter the people's faith in these points, which they can reason about as cleverly as any Englishmen among our best theologians here, and with a surprising power of illustration from the general history of nations. The lecture was replied to the other evening by the Principal of the Free Church College, in the College Hall; and he was met there by several disputants on the previous lecturer's ground, by whom his views were roundly questioned. This of itself will show how necessary it is to have an able and thoroughly educated class of men as missionaries in India. The Christian lecturer (an able and gentlemanly scholar) claimed to include among the sacred books of the Hindus the Tantras. A young Hindu, writing immediately after, asked, 'Why, then, do not Christians include among their sacred Scriptures the works of Duns Scotus and Thomas Aquinas?' Be the point discussed what it may, it will not be doubted that in dealing with such persons the only weapon of the slightest use is reason."

That creed is the best which can be reduced most easily to practice.

Advertisements.

GENERAL NOTICE.

On Aug. 8, 1872, I contracted for the two best advertising pages of THE INDEX for the current year. No advertisements objectionable to the editor to be taken." For terms apply to

ASA K. BUTTS, 36 Dey St., New York.
No improper advertisements, no advertisements of patent medicines, and no advertisements known to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be hereafter admitted into THE INDEX. All advertisements accepted before this date will be allowed to run their time.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor,
TOLEDO, O., June 21, 1873.

Children, begin now to save your pennies that, when the long evenings come, you can buy "Avilude, or game of Birds." If your storekeeper has not got it, send seventy-five cents to West & Lee, Worcester, Mass., and it will be sent by mail, post-paid.
"Avilude is a superior game."—Worcester Palladium.

DR. F. E. DENNINGTON'S
HOME FOR INVALIDS,
At Springdale, Northampton,
Massachusetts.

Number limited to thirty.

THE WAYS OF WOMEN

In Their Physical, Moral, and Intellectual Relations.
By A MEDICAL MAN. This is unquestionably one of the most remarkable books issued from the American press in many years. A most beautiful specimen of scientific and practical work-painting on themes of vital importance to every woman. A splendid chance for Agonists. It makes an elegant 8vo vol. of 400 pp., on tinted paper, superbly bound. Price $3. Sent by mail on receipt of price. For territory and agents' terms, apply to the publisher, JOHN P. JAWETT & Co., 3 Dey St., N. Y.

The Religion of Humanity,

BY O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

Second Edition with fine Steel Portrait. 32 mo. cloth. Price, post-paid, $1.33.

Christianity and Materialism Contrasted,

BY B. F. UNDERWOOD.

A handsome 48 page Pamphlet, 50 copies for $1.50, 10 copies for $1.00. Single copy 15 cts.

The Influence of Christianity On Civilization.

8 page Pamphlet. Price 25 cts.
Address the Publishers,
ANA K. BUTTS & CO.,
36 Dey Street, N. Y.

THE GOLDEN AGE.

Every Man and Woman who reads THE INDEX ought to read also The Golden Age, edited by Theodore Tilton. After fifteen years of experience on The Independent, Mr. Tilton two years ago established, in the interest of more liberal thought, The Golden Age,—a journal of his own, to which he gives his constant and toilsome attention, and which has already won a national reputation for honesty, courage, and brilliancy. Probably no other journal in America is so widely quoted from, both by those who agree, and those who disagree with it. Unlike any other weekly paper, either in America or England, it is unique and original in appearance, is thought, and in style. It abounds in brief and spicy paragraphs—shot like swift arrows hitting the mark. Its editorial discussions cover the whole field of current topics—whether religious, political, literary, social, or industrial. It does not pretend, or seek, or want to agree with its readers, or with the general popular opinion. It indulges in the luxury of free speech. It has a mind of its own, and is sometimes wrong—which makes it all the more novel, for it is almost the only journal of the American press that is ever wrong. But whether right or wrong, it is always good natured, and ever believes in fair play. It would be happy to make the acquaintance of the readers of THE INDEX; and though The Golden Age is in no sense a rival to THE INDEX, and does not undertake to do such a work as Mr. Abbot has embarked upon, yet it is fighting a battle for free thought in religion, and free speech in politics, and is conscientiously dedicated to the promotion of whatever helps forward the Emancipation of the Human Mind. Anybody who subscribes for Mr. Tilton's paper will get something to think about, and more than the money's worth. Enclose three dollars in an envelope (before you forget it), and address

THE GOLDEN AGE,
Box 2648,
New York City.

J. F. RUGGLES.

Free Thought Bibliopole,

BROOKLYN, MICH.,

Continues to furnish those who desire them, Liberal and Philosophical books, tracts, etc., that embody the matured thoughts and opinions of the True Salt of the Earth. Being in constant receipt of importations from Europe, I am prepared to supply all works in any department of Literature that are obtainable in the markets of the world. Catalogues free.

THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD;

A SIMPLE ACCOUNT OF MAN IN EARLY TIMES.
By EDWARD CLODD, F. R. S.

For Sale by A. K. BUTTS & Co., 36 Dey Street N. Y.

Second Edition, Crown 8vo. Price, $1.

Extract from a letter from Professor Max Müller to the Author: "I read your book with great pleasure. I have no doubt it will do good, and hope you will continue your work. Nothing spoils our temper so much as having to unlearn in youth, manhood, and even old age, so many things which we were taught as children. A book like yours will prepare a far better soil in the child's mind, and I was delighted to have it read to my children."

E. B. TYLOR, F. R. S., in "NATURE," says:—"This gentle little volume is a child's book as to abstruseness, cheapness, and simplicity of style, though the author reasonably hopes that older people will use it as a source of information not popularly accessible elsewhere as to the life of Primitive Man and its relation to our own."

This book, if the time has come for the public to take so much as having to unlearn in youth, manhood, and even old age, so many things which we were taught as children. A book like yours will prepare a far better soil in the child's mind, and I was delighted to have it read to my children."

Mr. Clood has thought out his philosophy of life, and used his best skill to bring it into the range of a child's view."

IMPORTANT WORKS

FORMING A PORTION OF THE STOCK
OF

Scribner, Welford & Armstrong,

654 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

1. THE ENGLISH LIFE OF JESUS, By Thomas Scott. New Edition, 16mo, cloth. Price, post-paid, $1.00

2. PAMPHLETS ISSUED BY THOMAS SCOTT.

1. The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. By F. W. Newman. 30

2. "James and Paul." By F. W. Newman. 25

3. The Bigot and the Sceptic. By Newman. 25

4. Tree and Serpent Worship. 25

5. Jewish Literature and Modern Education. 75

6. Origin of the Legends of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. 60

7. FORCE AND MATTER: Empirico-Philosophical Studies, intelligibly rendered. By Dr. Louis Buchner, translated by J. F. Collinsworth. Second Edition, with Portrait, 18mo cloth. $ 75

8. MISCELLANEOUS AND POSTHUMOUS WORKS OF HENRY THOMAS BUCKLE, Edited with a Biographical Treatise, by HENRY TAYLOR.

Three Vols. 8vo. pp. 1184, cloth. $22 50

" Half calf, extra. 28 00

" Full Tree calf. 30 00

" Full Tree calf, India. 35 00

9. RIDE STONE MONUMENTS IN ALL COUNTRIES: their Age and Use, By James Fergusson, author of "A History of Architecture," &c. &c. 1 vol., 8vo. cloth; 381 Illustrations. 0 00

10. On the Cause, Date and Duration of the Glacial Epoch of Geology, and the probable Antiquity of Man, with an investigation and Description of a new movement of the Earth, By Lieut. Col. Drayson. 8vo cloth. 4 50

11. CIVILIZATION CONSIDERED AS A SCIENCE. New Edition. By Geo. Harris. 12mo, cloth. 3 00

12. HERESY AND CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE. By E. De Pressence. 8vo. cloth. 6 00

13. AN ENGLISH CODE, its Difficulties and Mode of Overcoming them. A Practical application of the Science of Jurisprudence. By Sheldon Amos, 8vo. cloth. 5 10

14. MUHAMMAD: A Critical Examination of his Life and Teachings. By Syed Amour Ali, Mowled. 12mo. cloth. 3 75

15. AVESHA; The Religious Books of the German Translation of the Original Manuscripts. By Arthur Henry Bleeker. 3 vols. In One, 8vo. cloth. 10 50

16. THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF SATAN, Edited by John R. Board. 16mo. cloth. 3 75

17. ADAM AND THE ADAMITE, or, The History of Scripture and Ethnology by Dominick McCausland. 12mo, cloth. 2 50

18. THE BUILDERS OF BABEL, 12mo, cloth. 1 75

19. SERMONS IN STONES, 10mo, cloth. 1 75

20. THE PORT ROYAL LOGIC, Translated from the French, with Introduction, Notes, and Appendix, by T. Spencer Haynes. 12mo, cloth. 2 00

21. ECCE MESSIAS: or The Hebrew Messiah and Hope and the Christian Reality, By Edward Higginson, author of "Spirit of the Bible," &c. 8vo, cloth. 5 25

22. SYSTEM OF LOGIC AND HISTORY OF LOGICAL DOCTRINES, By Dr. F. Ueberweg. Translated by T. M. Lindsey. 8vo, cloth. 8 00

23. THE MYTHOLOGY OF THE ARYAN NATIONS, By George W. Cox. 2 vols. 8vo. 14 00

18. MISCELLANEOUS WORKS in Limited Numbers, viz:

1. On The Inductive Philosophy. By A. Elley Finch, 8vo, cloth. 9 50

2. Credibilia. Discovered by Rev. James Cranbrook. 12mo. 1 75

3. The Founders of Christianity, By Rev. J. Cranbrook. 12mo. 3 00

4. Oriental Mysticism, By E. H. Palmer. 12mo. 1 75

5. The Secret of Hegel, By J. H. Stirling. 2 vols. 8vo. 14 00

6. Chapters of Man, By C. S. Wake. 12mo. 3 75

7. Papers on the Great Pyramid. By John V. Day. 8vo. 2 00

8. The Forces of the Universe, By George Berwick. 12mo. 2 50

9. An Introduction to the Philosophy of Primary Beliefs, By Richard Lowndes. 12mo. 3 75

10. The Essence of Christianity, By Ludwig Feuerbach. Translated. 12mo. 3 00

11. The Creed of Christendom. By W. R. Greg. 12mo. 3 00

12. Causality, By Rev. George Jambson. 8vo. 6 00

13. Kant's Aesthetic and Analytic, forming vol. 1, Part 1, of Kant's Critical Philosophy for English Readers. By J. F. Mahaffy. 8vo. 2 50

14. Kant's Prolegomena to any Future Metaphysics, forming vol. 2d of the above. 8vo. 4 50

15. Lectures on the Philosophy of Law, together with Whewell's Hegel and Hegel & Mr. W. K. Smith. J. H. Stirling. 8vo. 8 00

16. Idealism, By Wm. Graham. 12mo 3 00

17. The Continuity of Religious Beliefs, By David Griffith. 8vo. 3 00

18. Discourse on Method, Meditations. By Descartes. 12mo. 2 55

19. The Physical Cause of Cholera's Death, By William Sroude. 12mo 2 00

20. The Discovery of a New World of Being, By George Thompson. 12mo. 8 00

21. Any or of the above works sent free of charge to any address on receipt of the price, by S. W. & A.

Standard Liberal Works.

For sale by A. K. BUTTS, 36 Dey Street, New York.

The Philosophical Dictionary of Voltaire.—Tenth American Edition. Two Volumes in one. Containing 576 large octavo pages, with two elegant col. engravings. Price, $5.00; postage, 45 cents. This is the largest and most correct edition in the English language, having, beside the whole of the London editions, several articles from a manuscript translated several years since by a friend of Voltaire's, and others translated immediately from the French edition. The London edition sells at from $10 to $15, and does not contain nearly so much as this American edition.

The Ignorant Philosopher, and Adventures of Pythagoras in India. By M. de Voltaire. Price, 10 cents.

Volney's Ruins; or, Meditations on the Revolution of Empire. Translated under the immediate inspection of the Author, from the latest Paris Edition, with his Notes and Illustrations. To which is added, The Law of Nature, and a short Biographical Notice, by Count Darn. Price, $1.00; postage, 10 cents.

Kneeland's Review of the Evidences of Christianity, in a Series of Lectures delivered in Broadway Hall, New York, August, 1829. To which is prefixed an extract from Wyttenbach's Opuscula on the Ancient Notices of the Jewish Nation previous to the time of Alexander the Great. Price, $1.00; postage, 12 cents.

The Doctrine of Inspiration: being an Inquiry concerning the Infallibility, Inspiration, and Authority of Holy Writ. By the Rev. John Macneil, M. A., Incumbent of St. Chrysostom's Church, Everton, Liverpool, (Eng.) Price, $1.50; postage, 16 cents.

The System of Nature: or, Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach, author of "Good Sense," &c. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Translated from the French by H. D. Robinson. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.00; postage, 25 cents.

The Letters to Eugenius, or, A Preservative against Religious Prejudice. By Baron D'Holbach, author of the "System of Nature," &c. Translated from the French by Anthony C. Middleton, M. D. Price, $1.50; postage, 16 cents.

Good Sense. By Baron D'Holbach. A new edition of this truly valuable book has just been issued, and is now ready for purchasers. Friends who want "Good Sense" (and who does not?) can have a supply sent by mail by forwarding their orders. Price, post paid, $1.00.

Man's Nature and Development. By Henry George Atkinson, F. G. S., and Harriet Martineau. Price, full gilt, $1.50; postage, 16 cents. Cloth, $1.25; postage, 12 cents.

Queen Mab, with Notes. By Percy B. Shelley. Price, 75 cents.

A Legacy to the Friends of Free Discussion: being a Review of the Principles, Historical Facts, and Personages of the Books known as the Old and New Testaments; with remarks on the Morality of Nature. By Benjamin Offen, formerly Lecturer of the Society of Moral Philanthropy, at Tammany Hall, New York. Price, 75 cents; postage, 10 cents.

Letters to the Catholic Bishop of Boston. By Henry George Atkinson, F. G. S., and Harriet Martineau. Price, full gilt, $1.50; postage, 16 cents. Cloth, $1.25; postage, 12 cents.

Antiquity and Duration of the World. By the learned Dr. G. Toulmin. Price, 25 cts.

Equality: or, a History of Lithicons. Price, 15 cents.

Elegant Extracts from the Holy Bible. Price, 10 cents.

Intemperate Drinking. An Exposure of the Causes of this vice, and the means by which it may be obviated. By Thomas Hertell, of New York City. Published by order of the New York Society for the Promotion of Intellectual Improvement, 1819. Republished by order of the will of Mrs. Barbara Amelia Hertell, 1867. Price, 15 cents.

Standard Liberal Works.

For sale by A. K. BUTTS, 36 Dey Street, New York.

The Right of Married Women to Hold Property. Judge Hertell's argument in the House of Assembly of the State of New York, in the session of 1867, in support of the bill to restore to married women "The Right of Property." Republished by order of the will of Mrs. Barbara Amelia Hertell, 1867. Price, 20 cents.

Wat Tyler: a Dramatic Poem in three acts By Robert Southey, Esq. Price, 20 cents.

The Diogenes: being a Discovery of the Origin, Evolutions, and Early History of Christianity, never yet before elsewhere so fully and faithfully set forth. By Rev. Robert Taylor. This work was written by Mr. Taylor while serving a term in Oakham (Eng.) Jail, where he was imprisoned for blasphemy. It contains 440 pages, octavo, and is considered unanswerable as to arguments or facts. Price, $2.00; postage, 25 cents.

The Devil's Pulpit—By Rev. Robert Taylor—with a sketch of the Author's Life—containing Sermons on the following subjects:—The Star of Bethlehem, John the Baptist, Raising the Devil! The Unjust Judge, Virgo Paritura, St. Peter, Judas Iseariot Vindicated, St. Thomas, St. James, and St. John—the Sons of Thunder, The Crucifixion of Christ, The Cup of Salvation, Lectures on Free Masonry, The Holy Ghost, St. Philip, St. Matthew, The Redeemer. Price, $2.00; postage 20 cents.

Astro-Theological Lectures—By Rev. Robert Taylor. Containing the following Lectures:—Belief not the Safe Side, The Resurrection of Lazarus, The Unjust Steward, The Devil, The Rich Man and Lazarus, The Day of Temptation in the Wilderness, Ahab, or the Lying Spirit, The Fall of Man, Noah, Abraham, Sarah, Melchisedec, The Lord, Mezer, The Twelve Patriarchs, Who is the Lord? Exodus, Aaron, Miriam. Price, $2.00; postage, 20 cents.

The Synonyms—By Rev. Robert Taylor, author of the "Diogenes," "Devil's Pulpit," "Astro-Theological Sermons," &c. Price, including postage, $1.00.

Half-Hours with some Ancient and Modern Celebrated Free-Thinkers:—Thomas Hobbes, Lord Bolingbroke, Condorcet, Spinoza, Anthony Collins, Des Cartes, M. de Voltaire, John Toland, Comte de Volney, Charles Blount, Percy Bysshe Shelley, Claude Adrien Helvetius, Frances Wright Darnum, Epictetus, Zeno, Matthew Tindal, David Hume, Dr. Thomas Burnet, Thomas Paine, Epictetus of Mithraed, Baron D'Holbach, Robert Taylor, Joseph Barker, By "Iconoclast," Collins and Watts. Price, 75 cents; postage, 16 cents.

The Infidel's or Inquirer's Text-Book. Being the substance of 18 Lectures on the Bible, by Robert Cooper. Price, $1.50; postage, 16 cents.

Cooper's Lectures on the Soul.—In which the doctrine of immortality is religiously and philosophically considered. This is a work of vast importance to those who look on this life as only a state of probation. Price, 75 cents; postage, 12 cents.

Classified Biblical Extracts: or, The Holy Scriptures Analyzed—showing its contradictions, absurdities, and immoralities. Price, 25 cents.

The Bible of Rational Mind and Religion, Rational Religion and Morals; presenting an analysis of the Functions of Mind, under the operations and directions of Reason; the first, eliciting the necessary, rational, and only religion, Monism, or the Religion of Principles; the second, the Obvious Duties and Precautions of Society. By Thomas J. Valden, M. D., of St. Louis, Mo. This is a large octavo, containing over 1000 pages. Price, $3.50; postage, 50 cents.

Helvetius: or, The True Meaning of the System of Nature. Translated from the French. Price 50 cents; postage 4 cents.

The Divine and Moral Works of Plato—Translated from the Original Greek; with Introductory Dissertations and Notes. First American from the sixth London edition, carefully revised and corrected. Price, including postage, $2.50.

History of Moses, Aaron, Joshua, and others, deduced from a Review of the Bible. Also, remarks on the Morals of the Old and New Testament, and some of the Ancient Philosophers. By J. M. Dorsey. Price, 75 cents; postage 12 cents.

History of all Christian Sects and Denominations—their Origin, Tenets, and Condition. By John Evans, L. L. D. Price, $1.00; postage, 16 cents.

Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients. By G. Vele. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

Studying the Bible: or, Brief Criticisms on some of the principal Scripture Texts. By Elmina Drake Sienker. Price, 75 cents; postage, 8 cents.

Moral Physiology—A Plain Treatise on Population. By Robert Dale Owen. This work is illustrated with a Frontispiece. Price, including postage, 60 cents.

Jehovah Unveiled: or, The Character of the Jewish Deity delineated. A new and valuable book. Price, 85 cents.

Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius VII.—Translated from the French into Portuguese by D. J. Monteiro, and from Portuguese into English by H. D. Robinson. With a Memoir of the Author. Price, 50 cents.

Exeter Hall—A Theological Romance. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper, 10 cents; postage, 4 cents. Cloth, 80 cents; postage, 18 cents.

Complete Works of Thomas Paine—Secretary to the Committee of Foreign Affairs in the American Revolution. Three Volumes. Consisting of his Political, Theological, and Miscellaneous Writings. To which is added a brief Sketch of his Life. Price, $7.00; postage, 94 cts.

Paine's Political Writings—To which is prefixed a brief Sketch of the Author's Life. A new edition, with additions. Two volumes. Price, $5.00; postage, 60 cents.

Thomas Paine's Writings—Theological and Miscellaneous. The most complete edition ever published. Containing his Age of Reason, and all his writings on Theology, with many Miscellaneous and Political pieces. Price, $3.50; postage, 36 cts.

Self-Help!

PREVENTION AND REMEDY.

The Butler Health-Lift

Has been in Successful Operation for Ten Years!

PRINCIPAL OFFICE:

PARK BANK BUILDING, 214 Broadway, N. Y.
BROOKLYN, 128 Remsen St., connecting with Rooms No. 229 Fifth Avenue.

A SCIENTIFIC EXERCISE, concentrated and energetic, a tonic to the nervous system, a rest to tired brains, a cure for chronic difficulties.

Never exhausting; pleasant, agreeable, combined with rest.

The cheapest and best apparatus for private use to competent parties. Call, or send 50 Cents for descriptive pamphlet.

"I know the BUTLER HEALTH LIFT to be an Official tonic, especially to the nervous and digestive systems."—C. L. Mitchell, M. D.

Address at principal office,

LEWIS G. JAMES, Proprietor.

Popular New Music Books.

FOR THE COMING MUSICAL SEAS-ON.

The Standard. EMERSON & PALMER. $1.50
Unexcelled as a Collection of Church
Music.

The River of Life. PERKINS & BEN-
NETT. 50
The Newest and Freshest of Sabbath School Song Books.

Cheerful Voices. L. O. EMERSON. 50
Very beautiful School Song Book.

Gems of Strauss. JOHANN STRAUSS. 2.50
All the best Strauss Music.

Organ at Home. For Reed Organs. 2.50
300 most attractive pieces.

Clarke's Dollar Instructors.
For Reed Organs Piano, and Violin.

Emerson's Chants and Responses. 1.00
Dr. Streeter's Voice Building. 1.50

Sold every where. Sent post-paid for retail prices.

OLIVER DITSON & Co., Boston.
CHAS. H. DITSON & Co.
711 Broadway, N. York.

NEW BOOKS

FOR SUMMER READING.

MUST IT BE?

A Romance From the German of CARL DETLEF.
By M. S., translator of "By his Own Right,"
"A Twofold Life," etc. Illustrated. 8vo.
Paper cover, 75 cents. Fine cloth, $1.25.

Eminently natural, full of charming realism, and abounding in vigorous and exciting action.

WHAT WILL THE WORLD SAY?

A Novel of Every-day Life; and "Only a Woman." By OJOS MORENO. 12mo. Extra cloth, $1.50.

POLITICAL PORTRAITS.

By an Eminent Journalist. 12mo. Extra cloth.
$1.50. Short, pithy, and timely addresses, presented in a condensed and striking manner the political character of England's most representative statesmen.

GONE BEFORE.

Being a Manual for the Bereaved. By HENRY
SOUTHWICK. Extra cloth. Red edges. $3.00.

"The book is one of those specialties in which the writer has already established a reputation on both sides of the Atlantic, and should be in every private and public library in the land."— Boston Globe.

EVOLUTION OF LIFE.

By HENRY C. CHAPMAN, M. D., Member of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia.
Illustrated with numerous Lithographic Plates.
New and Cheaper Edition. Extra cloth. $4.75.

"The best general text that we have seen for readers who desire to know the foundation, steps, results, and reasons employed in the latest scientific theories."—Phila. North American.

MINERAL SPRINGS OF NORTH AMERICA.
How to Reach, and How to Use them. By J. J.
MOOREMAN, M. D. Illustrated. 12mo. Extra
cloth. $2.00.

REASON AND REDEMPTION.

Or, The Gospel as it Attests Itself. By ROBERT
BAKER WHITE, D. D. 8vo. Extra cloth. $2.00.

"Dr. White displays great logical power and acumen, and fearlessly grapples with the objections to the truth of revelation which are drawn from the teachings of geology, astronomy, and ethology."—Boston Globe.

WORK, PLAY, AND PROFIT.

Or, Gardening for Young Folks, explained in a Story for Boys and Girls. By ANNA M. HYDE, author of "Six Hundred Dollars a Year,"
"America's Boys' Life of Washington," etc.
Illustrated. 12mo. Extra cloth.

THE "SPIRITUAL" DELUSION;

Its Methods, Teachings, and Effects. The Philosophy and Phenomena Critically Examined.
By DYER D. LEE, author of "The Early Social Life of Man." 12mo. Fine cloth. $1.50.

WAU BUN.

The "Early Day" in the Northwest. A Novel.
By the author of "Walter Ogilby." New Edition.
12mo.

A Romantic and highly attractive narrative of life in the Northwest during the period of the early settlement.

For sale by all Booksellers, or will be sent by mail post-paid, upon receipt of the price by LIPPINCOTT & Co., Publishers,
715 and 717 Market Street, Phila.

$5 to $20 per day! Agents Wanted!
All classes of working people, of either sex, young or old, make more money at work for us in their spare moments or all the time than in any other line. Particulars
Free. Address G. Stinson & Co., Portland, Me.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO., BANKERS,
LEROY, MINNESOTA.

Money loaned on short time, or for a term of years, on unincumbered improved farms, at 12 per cent. per annum, interest net. Interest payable annually. All expenses for abstract of title and recording mortgage paid by borrower. We collect and remit to any part of the U. S. free of charge.

REFERENCES—First National Bank, McGregor,
Iowa; Gilchrist & Co., McGregor, Iowa; First National Bank, Austin, Minnesota; City National Bank, Chicago, Illinois; Allen, Stevens, &
Co., New York City.

SOMETHING NEW.

LIFE INSURANCE

ON THE

SAME BASIS AS FIRE INSURANCE.

PAY FOR IT AS YOU GET IT.

NO "NOTES," "DIVIDENDS," "RESERVES,"
OR OTHER DEVICES

to collect more money than is actually required to secure all the benefits of Life Insurance.

On this plan the National Life Insurance Co. of Chicago has actually paid the heirs of deceased members $199,664, at a cost to them of only $3,999.10. Had these persons been insured on the old high-rate plan, their heirs would have received only $95,746.13.

INVESTIGATE, AND SAVE MONEY BY INSURING ON THIS PLAN, AND

MAKE MONEY

by securing an agency for it. Address,

NATIONAL LIFE INSURANCE Co.,
78 and 80 Van Buren St.,
Chicago.

"To any one who wants a book that will prove both entertaining and profitable, as good literature always is, and does not know precisely what to ask for, we say select one of

The Leisure Hour Series."

—Boston Advertiser.

LATEST VOLUMES.

INGO. By G. FRETAG, author of "Debit and Credit."

DIMITRI ROUDINE. By IVAN TURGE-NEFF.

ASLIP IN THE FENS. With Illustrations.
WHAT THE SWALLOW SANG. By
F. SPIELHUGER, author of "Problematic Characters," etc.

HERO CARTHEW. By LOUISA PARR, author of "Dorothy Fox," etc.

BABALON. By G. DEOZ.

UNDER THE GREENWOOD TREE.
By THOMAS HARDY.

COUNT KOSTIA. By VICTOR CHERBULINE.
Price, $1.25 per volume.

"These are cool and tasteful outside, and variously attractive within; excellent summer books, and pleasant too when summer is past."—Boston Transcript.

HOLT & WILLIAMS,
25 Bond St., N. Y.

FRANCE.

"The sketches furnish precisely what is needed for a correct comprehension of existing and possible affairs in France."—N. A. and U. S. Gazette.

"Just the kind of information to meet the popular inquiry, written in so bright and readable a style, yet without so scholarly and sagacious, as to unite the fascination of narrative with the soli-dity of history."—Inquirer.

JUST PUBLISHED.

The Leaders of France,

OR,

The Men of the Third Republic.

A series of 26 biographical, historical, and character sketches of Thiers, Mac Mahon,
Gambetta, Casimir Perier, Duc De
Broglie, Duc D'Aumale, D'Audiffert
Pasquier, Dufaure, and the prominent Frenchmen of the present time (supposed to have been written by Granville Murray, credited as the author of "The Member for Paris"), reprinted from the latest English edition. Cloth, extra, 12mo. Price $1.75.

"A collected republication of the very brilliant and well-informed sketches which have excited much attention and speculation on their appearance in the Daily News, and led men to ask whether there could be on the English press two men with opportunity and ability like those of the author of 'The Member for Paris.'"

Such brilliant and sagacious sketches will be read very eagerly; the charm and value of most of them are that they are histories as well as portraits. —British Quarterly Review.

"A brilliant series of short papers."—Westminster Review.

Bible Revision.

The History of our English Bible and its Seven Ancestors.

An Historical Plan for Revision. By Rev.
FREDERICK WALDEN, author of Sunday School Prayer Book, &c., &c. 16mo, tinted paper. Cloth, extra, $1.25

PORTER & COATES,

PUBLISHERS,

Philadelphia.

LADIES!

THE Eureka Machine Twist,
50 and 100 Yard Spools.

AND THE

Eureka Button-Hole Twist,

10 Yard Spools.

ARE THE BEST IN USE.

For Sale at all Trimming Stores.

REAL ESTATE SECURITIES,

paying 8 to 10 per cent. interest, or

Investments in Real Estate

In Chicago and Vicinity,

if judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The old

REAL ESTATE AND LOAN AGENCY

OF

ERNST PRUSSING,

143 Randolph St., CHICAGO.

(Established 1858)

Guarantees perfect title and ample security

in all its Real Estate Loans.

First-class securities always on hand. Interests and principal collected without charge.

Real Estate Investments made on commission and on share; taxes paid, &c.

Orders of capitalists and real estate owners
respectfully solicited.

Iron in the Blood

THE PERUVIAN
SYRUP. Vitiates and Enriches the Blood, Tones up the System, Builds up the Weakens, Cures
Female Complaints,
Dropsy, Debility, Humors, Dyspepsia, &c.
Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy
from weak, sickly,
suffering creatures, to strong, healthy, and happy men and women;
and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.
Caution.—Be sure you get the right article. See that "Peruvian Syrup"
is blown in the glass.
Pamphlets free. Send for one.
SETH W. FOWLE
& SONS, Proprietors, Boston, Mass.
For sale by druggists generally.

strong, healthy, and happy men and women;
and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to
give it a trial.
Caution.—Be sure you get the right article. See that "Peruvian Syrup"
is blown in the glass.
Pamphlets free. Send for one.
SETH W. FOWLE
& SONS, Proprietors, Boston, Mass.
For sale by druggists generally.

THE LIBERAL CHRISTIAN

FOR 1873.

HENRY W. BELLOWES, EDITOR.

Will endeavor, not only to maintain its present reputation as

ONE OF THE BEST WEEKLY JOURNALS OF

Religion, Literature, Science,

and Art

Now published in this country, but to fulfill more completely than ever before, its part of the work of supplying the American people with the Best Thought on the Highest and

Most Vital Themes

Of both general and particular interest, in all departments of human life. To this end, special arrangements have been entered into with able writers and correspondents to keep the columns of THE LIBERAL CHRISTIAN supplied, during the year 1873, with a pleasant variety of good articles and letters on the most stirring topics of the day.

The several departments of the paper—FEL-LOWSHIP OF THE SPIRIT; OUR CONTRIBUTORS;
SIGNS OF THE TIMES; ORIGINAL AND SELECTED ARTICLES; OUR LITERARY RECORD; EDITORIAL;
THE WEEK'S NEWS—ECCLÉSIASTICAL, POLITICAL,
AND GENERAL; CORRESPONDENCE; OUR BOYS' AND GIRLS; OUR SCIENTIFIC RECORD; THE FIRE ACTS—will each receive the special care of the gentlemen and ladies under whose charge they have been placed; and no effort will be spared to provide A WEEKLY FAMILY JOUR-NAL Worthy of the Patronage of American Homes, and of the Enlightened Nineteenth Century.

Price of Subscription, $3 per Annum, Payable in Advance.

Upon application by letter, specimen copies will always be sent free.

Jos. N. Hallock, Publisher,

P. O. Box 6695,

114 Nassau Street, New York City.

LOUIS BLACK,

194 Jefferson Ave., Detroit, Michigan,
MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN,
INVENTOR AND PROPRIETOR OF
Black's Patent Interchangeable Spectacles, and Self-Attaching Spring Eye Glasses. Importer of all kinds of Optical Goods. The best Spectacles fitted to the Eyesight so as to improve it.

Manuals of Mathematical Instruments,
Microscopes,
Magic Lanterns,
Meteorological Instruments,

Physical Apparatus,

Profusely Illustrated and priced, mailed to any address on receipt of 10 cents each.

JAMES W. QUEEN & Co., Opticians,
924 Chestnut St., 601 Broadway,
PHILADELPHIA. NEW YORK.

Mention that you saw this in THE INDEX.

A GREAT OFFER.—Horse Water &
800, 481 Broadway, New York, will dispose of 100 Pianos and Organs of first-class makers, including WATERS', at extremely low prices for cash, or part cash, and balance in small monthly payments. New 7-Octave first-class Pianos, all modern improvements, for $25 cash. Organs, $35 to $75. Double-Breasted Pianos, $100; 4-stop, $110; 5-stop, $125 and upwards.

WATERS' CONCERTO PIANO ORGANS are the most beautiful in style, and perfect in tone ever made. The Concerto Piano is the best ever placed in any Organ. It is produced by a third set of reeds peculiarly voiced, the effect of which is most charming and soul-stirring, while the limitation of the Human Voice is superb. Terms liberal. Illustrated Catalogues mailed for one stamp. A liberal discount to Ministers, Churches, Sunday-Schools, Lodges, &c.

AGENTS WANTED.

THE

COMMONWEALTH

LIFE (GENTLEMEN of standing and ability (either in professional or mercantile pursuits) are desired in all parts of the country to represent this reliable company. Our plans of Insurance are simple, popular, and honest.

INS. Address 178 Broadway,
NEW YORK.

CO.

Are You Going to Paint?

THEN USE

The Averill Chemical Paint.

THE HANDSOMEST AND MOST DURABLE EXTERIOR PAINT.

Costs Less, and will Outwear any other.

Gen. G. R. Smith, Sedalia, Mo., writes:—"You coats of 'Averill' covered better, and lasted longer, than three coats of Lead and Oil, with a coat of varnish thereon. I would not again use Lead and Oil were it given to me."

Levi Shaw, Trustee of the Society of Quakers,
Mt. Lebanon, writes:—"The buildings painted with the Averill White Paint some three and a half years since, I have examined, and find it retains the gloss nearly if not quite as well as when first put on. It is the best paint we have ever used."

Sample card of beautiful colors, and recommendations from owners of the finest residences in the country, furnished free, by the

AVERILL CHEMICAL PAINT CO.

32 Burling Slip, New York,

and 118 Superior St., Cleveland, O.

THE

BOSTON INVESTIGATOR,

THE OLDEST REFORM JOURNAL IN THE UNITED STATES,

Is published

EVERY WEDNESDAY,

AT

84 WASHINGTON STREET,

BOSTON, MASS.

By Josiah P. Menden.

EDITED BY HORACE SEATER.

Price, $2.50 per annum. Single Copies, Seven Cents. Specimen Copies sent, on receipt of a
Two-Cent Stamp to pay the postage.

The "INVESTIGATOR" is devoted to the liberal cause in Religion; or, in other words, in all Universal Mental Liberty. Independent in all discussions, disinterested in all speculations, the what never can be known, it devotes its columns to things of this world alone, and leaves the next, if there be one, to those who have faith in its unknown shores. Believing that it is the duty of mortals to work for the interests of this life in this world, it confines itself to things of this life, and not to things of the life to come, and does not directly. It has just entered its 6th year, and asks for a support from those who are kind of sound reasoning, good reading, reliable news, and dove, science, art, and a useful family journal.
Reader! please send your subscription for six months or one year; and if you are not satisfied with the way the "INVESTIGATOR" is conducted, we won't ask you to continue with us any longer.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Five Cents.

VOLUME 4.

TOLEDO, OHIO, AUGUST 23, 1873.

Whole No. 191.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; J. Gallion, Vice President; F. A. Loggson, L. La Grille, Secretaries; E. K. Thomas, Treasurer.
BOSTON, MASS.—J. M. Rogers, President; A. Davis, J. W. Smith Vice Presidents; J. P. Tilcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries; J. A. J. Wilcox, Treasurer; H. H. Ranney, F. W. Clarke, H. B. Storer, Executive Committee.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. E. Crowell, President; J. E. Curtis, Vice President; A. Giddings, Secretary; E. Wood, Treasurer; L. B. Crowell, M. A. Giddings, D. D. Holmes, Executive Committee.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; L. Magenhelm, Vice President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary; Wm. Fischer, Treasurer; A. C. Stowe, C. G. Hoadly, R. P. Thomson, Executive Committee.
TOLEDO, OHIO.—J. Reedy, President; B. Bruner, Vice President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary; A. W. Harbaugh, Treasurer; L. Westover, J. Bruner, W. Krause, Executive Committee.
VINELAND, N. J.—L. Bristol, President; E. Dickinson, E. B. Duffey, Vice Presidents; E. G. Blaisdell, Secretary; S. M. Clute, Treasurer; John Gage, D. A. Russell, E. G. Blaisdell, D. L. Butler, A. C. Bristol, P. T. Campbell, Executive Committee.
JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; Jas. H. Smith, Vice President; Isaac Baldwin, Treasurer; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
DEATH, ILL.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary; J. N. Haws, B. Panoast, P. Julien, Executive Committee.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary; J. W. Watkins, Treasurer.
BEEKSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Ensmann, President; L. Brown, Vice President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary; C. R. Capin, Treasurer; A. D. Enos, E. O. Barnum, Betsey Brown, Executive Committee.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Nursery Ethics.

BY S. C. HALLOWELL.

"There is a dark figure, thank Heaven, that has been eliminated from the modern nursery by the—what shall I call it?—polarization of modern thought."

"What do you mean by that?" asks my wife; "I don't follow you."

"Polarization, my dear," I reply, turning over my Worcester, "or rather, the polarized ray, gives on being transmitted through a doubly-refracting crystal only one image, when the principal section of the crystal is parallel or perpendicular to the plane of polarization; while it gives two images of inferior and varying intensity in all other positions. In plain English, when we get into line with the light that streams down upon us from the universe, we see but one image there, a great omnipotent good. And the other image, the old fashioned Satan of our childhood, the 'naughty man' of Quaker nurseries, the 'Evil One' of Puritanic memory, look you, is gone in the broad light."

That ever-present evil spirit raging up and down and seeking whom he might devour, on the alert, at my elbow, always, when God seemed ever so far off,—I cannot estimate the influence of that dark shadow on my childhood. Every day was a challenge thrown down to him: "Hold fast what I give you." He was so near, so taunting, and seemed to loom over the whole world with such force, while the counter-acting Goodness sat afar, and only came when he was called. Satan never needed to be called! Why was it?

Oh yes! He was King in those days, or rather a Viceroy of such unlimited power that it scarcely seemed worth one's while to fight. The very bees and honey suggested him, while the boy-rover watched the tiny workers. The awed and reverent delight with which he saw the honey castle grow, were shot across with a shudder.

"Why didn't God find work for idle hands as well? Why did he let Satan have everything his own way in the nursery rhymes?"

My wife had a sunnier childhood; but perhaps because her childish imagination was more vivid than mine, she suffered even more from this spectre of sin. She has often described to me the shadow of an evening lamp, which framed for her a nightly horror. There was a high old-fashioned bureau in the nursery where Bonny's mother slept, when a little girl; and standing on it, a taller and older-fashioned "dressing-glass," as it was called, a quality carved thing, with drawers and knobs and swinging mirror. The evening lamp was placed on a table near and projected the shadow of this ancient frame high upon the wall. There it was, a distinct profile! A dreadful little head, with horrible suggestions of cunning in its low outline, a hooked nose and a mouth that was open to swallow up anything that came near. The Evil One, without a doubt!

So Bonny's mother, poor little girl, shivered and shrank through many a long night, covering up her head, when the horror grew too dreadful; and to smother in safety beneath the warm blanket seemed the only thing left to her. Or sometimes, waking suddenly at midnight, with vague sensation of something left undone in the day, saying her prayers rapidly, and over and over, to God millions of miles away, but before the black shadow watching there.

"Ugh!" says my wife, "even now I am very careful about shadows. I don't know how the thing faded out of my life; with going into the country perhaps, or moving into another and more modern room."

"Or putting out the light, perhaps," I suggested.

"No, indeed; he was a great deal more horrible in the dark. There was more of him then, and he seemed to loom out into the room, come down from the wall, and lean over me. I was very thankful for the light; for then I saw him distinct and fixed upon the chamber wall."

So we have taken lessons of our own childhood, my wife and I; but there is no need to watch our nursery wall. There can be no evil shadows there, for have there been any suggestions of this towering, menacing Satan, this Power of the Air? When our children do wrong in their baby way, we strive to make them feel they are wronging their own natures, wounding themselves, as well as their loving mother's heart.

But my little woman came home indignant, the other day, from church.

"I have no patience with Dr. F.," and she threw down her muff as though it were a gauntlet to the whole order of divines.

"Dr. F.! The most peaceable and lamb-like man in existence—what has he been doing or saying?"

For I remembered that there had been a children's sermon at our church this afternoon, and that Bonny and the rest had gone out in state, very dignified and important at the treat of going to church.

"The children never heard of the Devil until this afternoon!" said my little woman, half crying.

"Why should I take them to church to learn that? Old Goblin! He isn't just the dreadful thing you and I grew up with for intimate friend; but he is a real, live person now to them!"

"What did you say to Dr. F.?" I interposed, for I knew that my wife had not reserved her fire.

"I told him that he had the credit of the introduction anyhow; that my children were not brought up on sin, for daily food; and that their ideas of father and mother were something that did not agree, at all, with his graphic account of the Father of Lies."

"The mild little Doctor was astonished, I know."

"Never heard of the Devil?" he said, quite confused; "don't they manifest him in their daily life?"

"No, sir! I said, with a courtesy, 'they manifest their father and mother! I brought my children to church to hear of good; from you I expected nothing less.'"

"But, mercy on us, that man's children are dead and married long ago; he does not know one thing about little folks. So he just bundled up some old theories and recollections together, and scattered the whole dusty rubbish from the pulpit upon the children's heads."

"Don't your children tell stories, sometimes?" he asked, on the defensive.

"I looked him straight in the face and said: 'Doctor, a child who is not afraid will never tell a mean lie! If you make children cowards with the threat of punishment hanging over them for this or that little mischief or misdemeanor, you will find lies spring up in some timid souls, but you have made them grow. Why should my children lie to me? They couldn't do anything that they wouldn't tell me. They couldn't do anything, short of murdering the baby, that they would not know was light in comparison to the lie that covered it. When children are trusted and not terrified, there is no room for lies.'"

"I was too angry at the Doctor," my wife went on, "to tell him about Bonny."

When Bonny was four years old, he was possessed with the spirit of romance. "Forty cats" was nothing to it. There were wonderful visions in the parlor which vanished as mamma went down, golden glories, a splendid new clock with a silver dog on it, etc., etc. Mary Bradford had been here while mamma was out, and brought lots of sugar-plums, and—and—a cane with a tassel.

"Where is the cane, my dear? Bring it to me."

"It's all broke up, and the pieces—the pieces—frowed away."

Mamma was in despair for three days. "What shall I do? It's clear invention, the whole thing!"

And yet she wisely abstained from punishment, even from reproof. She is a lineal descendant of Davy Crockett, my little woman,—she waits till she is sure.

At last an inspiration came: "It's only imagination; we must balance it with facts."

Just then, a propos, in came Bonny without his leather belt, and his kilted dress hanging from the shoulder.

"Where is your belt, Bonny? Bring it to mamma; she will fasten it for you."

"I tan't," said Bonny, gravely. "It's gived away!"

"Given away? Who to?" (For mamma did not stop for grammar on that day.)

"To a poor little boy. He came to the window without any shoes on, and I gave him my belt."

"Why, Bonny! How did the boy get up to the window?" (We were on the third floor, in a room adjoining the nursery.)

"He climbed up the grape-vine!"

"Come show me," said mamma, leading him to the window. There, curled up in a little bundle, lay the leather belt.

"Then," said mamma, seizing the occasion, "the boy didn't really take it away!"

"No," sighed Bonny, plaintively.

"Bonny put it there so that the boy could have it if he did come up the grape-vine?"

"Yes," Bonny admitted softly, under his breath.

"Why, that's a fairy-story, Bonny, like those mamma reads out of a book sometimes, about Cinderella and the pumpkin. Bonny knows that a pumpkin never could be a coach; it would break all to pieces going round the corner."

"I saw a pumpkin once, mamma," said the little boy proudly, "out at gwandpa's, in a wagon."

"Yes. And it was brought into the kitchen, and then what was done with it?"

"Pies?" suggested Bonny.

"Yes. Susan cut it up into little bits and boiled it, and put lots of sugar and good things to it, and made it into a pie. She didn't touch it with a stick, and make a coach out of it—that's a fairy story; but she cooked it, and mashed it, and stirred it, and it came out a pie; that's real! Now when Bonny tells me that he took a walk this morning and saw the sparrows in the park, that's real, too! But when he tells me that the little boy climbed up the grape-vine, Bonny did not really see him, only thought about it, and wanted him to come! Does Bonny understand?"

"Yes, Bonny fought he did climb up."

"Shut your eyes tight, Bonny," said mamma.

The little fellow screwed up his face in his eagerness to obey.

"Do you see the little boy climbing up the grape-vine now?"

"Yes," said Bonny promptly.

"Now open your eyes and come to the window. Is there any little boy there?"

"N—no," said Bonny, half inclined to doubt the evidence of his senses.

"Well, then, when Bonny tells mamma anything, he must be sure to tell her if he sees it with his eyes shut or with them open! It makes a great difference, and Bonny wants to be true, always. What he sees with his eyes open, he knows is true. When he shuts his eyes, he sees fairy-stories and grape-vine boys!"

"Well," said I, when the lesson ended and Bonny, subdued, had gone back to his blocks again, "that isn't just the way I should have done, exactly. There (taking a white paper parcel from my pocket) is a box of bon-bons I've been carrying for two days. I have kept them perdu, ready to spring them upon Master Bonny whenever he should tell another vision of sugar-plums. I meant to call all the children together, to question Bonny gravely, and then say: 'Well, if Bonny has had his sugar-plums, that's enough for him. He can't have any more; but these are for little brother and sister.'"

"My dear goose," said my little woman, untying the parcel and choosing a bon-bon daintily as she spoke, "don't you know what would have happened then? Bonny with no sugar-plums, and the others with full hands! How long do you suppose it would be before there was a transfer to poor Bonny who had none? You stern parent, I am ashamed of you! Teach Arty and Baby to enjoy themselves while Bonny has need! You couldn't unless you forbade them to share with him, and what a stingy, hateful lesson that would be!"

You see my wife does not believe, any more than George MacDonald does, in the good people enjoying themselves, all serene, at a celestial banquet, while there are any poor starving souls without the door!

"But still," she continued, "we'll nail the grape-vine lesson fast."

"Bonny," called mamma again, and Bonny, belted tight, appeared again at the door, followed by his two-year-old brother.

"Come here, Bonny, shut your eyes again," hiding meanwhile the box behind the sofa-cushion. "Think about sugar-plums. Pink and white ones. Can you see them with your eyes shut?"

"Y-yes," drawled Bonny, opening a little corner of one eye, in his vain effort to keep the other tight-shut.

"Then," said mamma, producing the box suddenly, "look here!"

Holding the delicious little heap of chocolates and sugar-almonds before his astonished eyes—"Which will you have—the sugar-plums you see with your eyes shut, or these?"

The choice was instantly indicated, and Bonny's mouth was full.

"Then," said mamma, holding her little boy squarely before her, "Bonny likes real sugar-plums best! Better than grape-vine sugar-plums?"

Fairly cornered, Bonny, with the strangest working of his face, hid his head suddenly on mamma's shoulder.

"Bonny knows now," continued my oracle, "he will always know when things are real!"

There was never any need to repeat the lesson. The romancing went on, of course, but not with the same spirit, and was always prefaced by—"This is a fairy-story." And Bonny's word was good, as good for facts as his soberer elder brother's, our thoughtful boy, whose share of imagination had evidently been given to his overflowing and radiant brother.

"When I remember," said my wife, "the unreal world I lived in as a child,—how I persuaded myself that I had brothers and sisters at boarding school and had names for them, and different dispositions and traits, and that they were coming home for the Christmas holidays, I can't be very hard on Bonny. If I hadn't been a lone, lorn, only child, with nobody to confide these visions to, I should probably have been bravely punished for story-telling myself. I used to talk them out to the dolls, I remember."

It is well for fathers and mothers to carry their own childhood all through their nursery ethics, to travel back, on occasions of doubt or difficulty, and with a rare sympathy live out the dilemma.

"These things take time!" remarks some overworked papa.

I should think they did! What is time good for else? When neither father nor mother has time to train their children, I propose to repeat daily, at dinner, Charles Lamb's toast: "To the memory of the good King Herod!" Better a hecatomb of innocents than the wholesale starvation of little souls.

DOING GOOD.—There is a book called A Hundred Ways of Cooking Eggs, and a very clever man or woman could cook or she must be who could find out such a variety. Now there are many hundred ways of doing good, and if you cannot find out, I could give you a recipe or two. If you have money, feed the poor and do good. If you have none, feed the sparrow in the winter, and there is something done. If you can preach, be diligent in your ministry; but they who teach babies do good as well as you. There is a sweet smell in little violets, and I have heard choice songs from birds I could not see. If you cannot place a fountain by the roadside, you may be able to mend the leaky cup out of which the traveller drinks.—Spurgeon's Almanac.

No society in which eccentricity is a matter of reproach can be in a wholesome state.—J. S. Mill.

[Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1873, by F. E. ABBOT, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.]

PAUL GOWER.

A RATIONALISTIC STORY OF ENGLISH AND AMERICAN LIFE.

CHAPTER XXVI.

TRANSPIRES IN OR NEAR NASSAU STREET.

Paul and his father had not emerged from the southern end of that enclosure which had formed the subject of a disparaging comparison in the young man's letter to Kate Sabin, when they met her brother sauntering in the opposite direction and reading a newspaper. After a double introduction by Paul, Richard explained that he was going to the Astor House to show his friend something in the journal which had attracted his attention.

"It's about Maberley," he said, "and quite accounts for his presence on board the Cayuga. Now you'll see what compelled him to leave England and necessitated the sacrifice of those whiskers. He should have had a closer crop if we had only known, and sailed on a larger voyage—as far as Botany Bay, perhaps. I happened to be looking into the window of a cheerful shop here, where there's a hatchet that murdered somebody on exhibition, as a kind of advertisement, when I saw the fellow's name on a poster, enumerating the contents of a back-number of the paper published within. So I went in and got a copy—and a nice three cent's worth it is, quite worthy of the occasion. I wonder they didn't devote their big cut to the hero of it and invent a portrait; as I see the bonny face of poor Mrs. Nibbett (a once popular London actress) is made to do duty for the heroine of the chopper. A fine compliment, certainly!" and Dick gave the sheet into the hand of his friend.

It was a sort of a police gazette, or weekly record of native and foreign crime, coarsely printed and vilely illustrated with a sensational murder-picture on the front page, as well as the portrait alluded to by Sabin—one of those low sheets pandering to the worse tastes of the vulgar common to all great cities. Evidently extracted from some London print of similar character, the article about Maberley was garnished with half a dozen titles, in which the fugitive's name and offence figured in large, black, capital letters. Adjourning to a seat near the extinct Park fountain (now abolished by the new Post-office), Paul and his father made themselves acquainted with the details.

It is, happily, unnecessary for the purpose of my story that I should emulate the copiousness of the New York Chronicle of Crime, or do more than mention the particular wickedness which had terminated the career of Mr. James Maberley in England. I would omit it altogether if he had not an indispensable part to play in this novel, and if, when a real scoundrel is introduced in one, it did not argue dishonesty or want of moral courage to shrink from depicting him truthfully. His crime, then, involved the abuse of his profession to a hideous purpose, intended to conceal the result of his own profligacy and that of his victim, a wretched girl of low origin, who had almost died under his hands, as well as her murdered unborn baby. In consequence, the tragedy had exploded into infamous publicity, contemporaneous with Maberley's flight from justice and the apprehension of his accomplice—a horrible Frenchwoman, whom Paul and Richard immediately identified as the female who had originated the street-row at the door of her principal, in Hanover street, Hanover Square. From her confession the details of the case were mainly derived.

Men are so much accustomed to hearing of wickedness that they seldom indulge in very strong expressions about it among themselves, though they may cordially detest its perpetrators. So when Sabin had followed up his previous remarks on Maberley with others of the same nature, when Paul had heartily regretted his escape and wondered what would become of the poor wife—whether, in the collapse of the Hanover-street establishment, she had not, as usual, taken refuge with his grandmother—and when his father had said, "I should like to shoot him!"—which struck Paul as a characteristic Southern sentiment—the subject was virtually exhausted; though they continued to talk it over on their way to Nassau street, Richard going with them, on John Gower's invitation. Whether the circumstance that the scoundrel whose guilt they were discussing was the husband of the pretty cousin whom he had once loved occurred very strongly to the doctor's mind, and intensified his detestation of him, did not appear, though Paul, who observed his father closely, thought so. Certainly his homicidal wish was uttered very fervently.

Arriving in the street which may be termed the journalistic centre of the American continent—inasmuch as there is scarcely a house, or perhaps room, within its narrow precincts, which is not, or has not at some time been, the office of some publication—they ascended the common staircase of one of the buildings, the apartments of which were all let off into offices, as the innumerable names on the walls, the doors, and even the stairs, denoted; and threading several dark and dingy corridors, found the door of Mr. Wheeler's place of business closed. Their knocking proving unavailing, they were about to go away, when a man who emerged from an adjacent room, and locked it afterwards, with an air of proprietorship, paused in passing them, to say civilly:—

"I guess, gentlemen, Mr. Wheeler's gone to lunch. You'll most likely find him at Crook and Duff's."

John Gower was in the act of thanking him, when the man suddenly recognized him, laughed and held out his hand. "Why, Dr.," he said, "where did you spring from? The sight of you is good for sore eyes! Don't you recollect me?"

"The Reverend Jim Scobell, isn't it?" asked the doctor, smiling and shaking hands—or, rather, allowing his own to be shaken.

The other laughed again, loudly and brimfully. "Oh! that's Ferret's gas," he said. "When I was secretary to Mr. Calhoun, I read prayers one morning and Ferret, he happened to be there, and was so tickled by it that he has made a parson of me in the Emerald ever since, just for devilment. Did you see it this morning?"

"No. I've only just arrived from New Orleans."

"Don't say? Well, you get it, that's all, and read the letter by Sam Green, 'the man not nominated Frank Pierce.' I'm giving 'em b— all round. I make — (a prominent Washington editor) hold the President's horse and black his boots for him. Doc! if you stay here there'll be some fun soon. I'm going to start a comic paper—the Pickaxe—what do you think of it for a name? I wrote the Pepperpot up to thirty thousand a week, and now those miserable skunks, Woodruff and Ritchings—the proprietors, you know—have got so conceited on the strength of it that they're going in for a Punch with Jim Brough for editor!—I'm not good enough for 'em, by —! Well, we'll see. I guess the whole caboot of 'em 'll find out before long. But how's things down South? You didn't come through Mobile, I suppose?"

The doctor explained that he had come north by water, disposing of the first question with a comprehensive "first-rate."

"Ah, if you had, I'd have asked you about John Fordyce of the Register—I'm 'Harmony,' his New York correspondent—write twice a week and stir 'em up with a long pole." Talking with extreme volubility, Mr. Scobell led the way down-stairs, John Gower listening to rather than conversing with him, and Paul and his friend following. They could not help regarding the man with some curiosity, which his appearance as well as his speech justified.

He was a coarse-looking person of about forty, of medium height and figure, shabbily dressed and dirty, with hair as coarse and black and straight as an Indian's; not worn particularly long, but noticeable on account of its quality, as well as its unkempt untidiness. It straggled over an unwashed face, whose peculiar, strangely marked features, though of no distinct order, were so full of individuality as to be absolutely unique in their expression of blackguard audacity, cunning and intelligence. His eyes were as bright and sharp as steel beads, and had a singular, peremptory look, suggestive of a tendency towards brow-beating and bullying, which his loud, harsh, brassy, brattling voice fully corroborated. Yet in spite of this, of his frequent profanity, and the general repulsiveness of his aspect—his large mouth was half-full of tobacco, the liquid results of which were visible on his frowzy beard—you would have hesitated before pronouncing him a decidedly bad fellow. Perhaps a reckless, devil-may-care good humor, growing out of his evidently immense conceit and approbation, was the redeeming trait that prevented such a conclusion.

He accompanied the three gentlemen to within sight of Crook and Duff's, pointing out the restaurant in question, and departed, as he said, to the Emerald office, where he had an appointment with Mr. Ferret—mentioning both editor and newspaper with some importance. Involuntarily they looked after him, as did a couple of ragged news-boys, gambling for cents on an adjacent curb-stone.

"That one of the lights of American literature?" asked Sabin of Paul's father.

"Well, not exactly. But he's a character, in his way, is Jim Scobell. I believe he began life as a merchant and drifted into journalism, like a good many better and worse men, when his fortune went to smash elsewhere—it was the panic of '37 that finished him. Then he used to be 'round town drunk in the gutters, I've heard, and nearly killed himself with whiskey—had deltium tremens for weeks together. I remember him as agent to Lola Montez, when she was out here; he engineered puffs and notices for her in the papers, with one of which I was con-

"The name of this newspaper is borrowed from Thackeray, for a reason that will be obvious to all Americans and a good many Englishmen."

"That one of the lights of American literature?" asked Sabin of Paul's father.

"Well, not exactly. But he's a character, in his way, is Jim Scobell. I believe he began life as a merchant and drifted into journalism, like a good many better and worse men, when his fortune went to smash elsewhere—it was the panic of '37 that finished him. Then he used to be 'round town drunk in the gutters, I've heard, and nearly killed himself with whiskey—had deltium tremens for weeks together. I remember him as agent to Lola Montez, when she was out here; he engineered puffs and notices for her in the papers, with one of which I was con-

"The name of this newspaper is borrowed from Thackeray, for a reason that will be obvious to all Americans and a good many Englishmen."

Digitized by Google needed. He has been all sorts of things—was really secretary to Mr. Calhoun of South Carolina, for a short time before his death (how it came about I don't know), and travels extensively on it in talk and in writing, being—I will say that for him—a good Southern-states-rights man, though he was born in Connecticut. He'd no kind of position on the press in my time, and I reckon it's much the same now, in spite of his talk about the Emerald and Ferret—whom, they say, he helped to some of Mr. Calhoun's private papers. But he knows politics and politicians, and writes in a reckless, outrageous rowdy style that's rather amusing. And he has a stupendous capacity for lying.

[To be continued.]

THEODORE PARKER.

After the indictment was quashed which included Theodore Parker on the technical offence of obstructing an officer by a speech made at Faneuil Hall before the rendition of Anthony Burns, he wrote and published the Defence which, in substance, he would have made at the trial. To his friend Desor he wrote: "For a few days it looked as if I might get indicted and have a trial. It would have afforded me a splendid opportunity for a speech in my own defence. I would not value six months in jail for an occasion to do service to the cause of liberty in America." Near the close of his Defence occurs the following passage:—

"I drew my first breath in a little town not far off—a poor little town where the farmers and mechanics first unsheathed that revolutionary sword which, after eight years of hewing, clove asunder the Gordian knot that bound America to the British yoke. One raw morning in spring, it will be ninety-eight years ago the next nineteenth of April, 'Hancock and Adams, the Moses and Aaron of that great deliverance, were both at Lexington; they also had obstructed an officer with brave words.' British soldiers, a thousand strong, came to seize them, and carry them over the sea for trial, and so nip the bud of freedom, auspiciously opening in that early spring. The town militia came together before daylight 'for training.' A great, tall man, with a large head, and a high, wide brow, their Captain,—one who had 'seen service,'—marshalled them, numbering but seventy, into line, and bade 'every man load his piece with powder and ball.' 'I will order the first man shot that runs away,' said he, when some faltered. 'Don't fire unless fired upon; but if they want to have a war, let it begin here.' You know what followed: those farmers and mechanics 'fired the shot heard round the world.'"

"I was born in that little town, and bred up amid the memories of that day. When a boy, my mother lifted me up one Sunday in her religious, patriotic arms, and held me while I read the first monumental line I ever saw:—

"Sacred to Liberty and the Rights of Mankind."

The spirit of liberty, the love of justice was early fanned into flame in my boyish heart. That monument covers the bones of my own kinsfolk; it was their blood which reddened the long, green grass at Lexington. It is my own name which stands chiselled on that stone. The tall captain who marshalled his fellow farmers and mechanics into stern array, and spoke such brave and dangerous words as opened the war of American Independence—the last man to leave the field,—was my father's father. I learned to read out of his Bible; and, with a musket he that day captured from the foe, I learned also another religious lesson, that—

"Rebellion to Tyrants is Obedience to God."

I keep them both, 'Sacred to Liberty and the Rights of Mankind,' to use them both 'in the sacred cause of God and my Country.'"

Thus he traces the moral vigor of his manhood back to one of his roots in the old soil. But there is another which is derived from an incident of his childhood. As he was about to throw a stone at a turtle in a brook, his arm was suspended by a vivid impression that it would be wrong. And on asking his mother what it was which changed his mind, that soul of conscience replied to him that it was the voice of God in man. So, equipped with a moral sense adequate both to combat and forbearance, he approached his life-long illustration of absolute religion.

The tender and fastidious souls are constructed of identical material in all creeds and countries. Madame Swetchine, the famous Catholic, at six years of age "desired a watch with an ardent wish transpired in all her movements; and her father had promised her one. During her years of expectation, she never slept, and was a prey to feverish preoccupation. The watch came, and was worn with the keenest enjoyment. But suddenly a new thought seized upon her mind: she reflected that there was something better than a watch. To relinquish it,—namely, of her own accord; she hurried to her father, and restored to him the object of her passionate desires."

The arrested arm of the radical preacher, and the renouncing gesture of the devout Catholic, come from the same source of power, which sets aside the creeds of men in favor of their natural piety.

When Theodore Parker lived at Lexington, and taught school during the winter months, he went up to Lincoln to offer himself for the district school. The old chairman of the committee was an up-country specimen, born before grammars had settled in town. He said gruffly, "What's your name?" "Theodore Parker." "Where do you belong?" "Lexington." "Be you the son of Capt. Parker who fit the battle of Lexington?" "No: I am his grandson." "What! be you Capt. Parker's grandson, who fit that battle?" "Yes, sir." "Well, then, I guess you'll do to keep our school." This was in the days when to fight a whole district school was the wholesome preliminary to teaching it. The old chairman unconsciously preluded his whole career; for he who could make the most unruly scholar love him became the best-hated man in America, because he attacked moral evil and superstitious usage with the broad-shouldered vigor which flowed down his pen.

Although he knew how to secure obedience, there was so little sternness in his composition that the boys soon discovered the one weak spot of his sense of humor and joyous capacity to appreciate fun. His usual artifice when the accidents of the school-room threatened to upset his dignity, was to effect a retreat into the entry, that his face might waste its risibility on the desert air. The boys, conscious by what a frail tenure he kept the magisterial repose, used to lay little traps to catch a laugh whenever the routine grew larksome.

"What are you doing, Briggs?"—"Nuthin', sir."—"Who is helping you?"—"Tom Barrett, sir."—"Both of you stand out here and let me see how you do it." Arrived in the space before the desk, Briggs shows the master how he was doing nothing by suddenly taking his props out of his pocket, with the sharp question, "heads or tails?" Theodore had barely time to reach his asylum in the entry.

[The above is the beginning of a most eloquent and noble tribute to Parker by John Weiss, just published by Roberts Brothers, Boston. We purposely tantalize our readers with one bite only of a luscious peach, in order that their appetite may be quickened for the rest. No lover of one of the grandest characters yet grown in the New World can afford to lose the pleasure of reading this admirable discourse; and we cannot help counselling our readers to send their twenty-five cents at once to the publishers,—a paltry price for what must make every free and generous heart throb with a warmer devotion to the beautiful, the tender, and the morally great.—E.D.]

TESTING PRAYER.—Couldn't the Rev. Dr. Fiske find a precedent in Scripture for a test of the efficacy of prayer something after the manner of that proposed by Professor Tyndall? Surely what was right in the days of the prophets cannot be wrong in the days of the preachers. And why are not these conditions satisfactory? Professor Tyndall does not propose to prescribe the mode in which the praying shall be done; those who believe in its efficacy have the privilege of approaching the throne of grace in any manner and as often as they think judicious or likely to secure proof of the efficacy of the means to the end proposed. If it is proper to pray for any blessing whatsoever, what sinfulness is there in praying for the restored health of a given number of sick persons? Are not prayers offered daily, in private and in public, for the recovery of the sick; and if, in spite of the doctors, a patient should be restored apparently in answer to prayer, would not the fact be widely heralded as another proof of the efficacy of the means employed? When the revivalist, Hammond, whom all the Protestant clergy, we believe, recognize as a divinely ordained means of bringing sinners to repentance, prayed that the tongue of a heretical preacher might be paralyzed, and it was done in direct answer to his petition, was it not quoted as an instance of the efficacy of an appeal through faith? Since, then, it is through faith that the recovery of the patients in the hospital ward are to be prayed for, why may not an answer as satisfactory as in the case of Hammond be vouchsafed, and the wicked, including the unbelieving Tyndall, be confounded? Why, there is a home for homeless children now in England, which is supported solely in answer to prayer, and it is prosperous almost beyond precedent. The founder never solicits contributions. Whenever he wants provisions, or clothing, or food, or anything else for the comfort of his wards, he kneels down and prays, and before he is fairly off his knees the postman or the expressman comes with the means to relieve all necessities. When we have such abundant evidence of direct answer to prayer, why shrink from a test that might result not only in the recovery of many sick, but in the conversion of one of the foremost scientific men of any age?—Chn. Commercial.

MAKING MONEY.—Professor Agassiz is reported as having told a shrewd business man who suggested that he could make a fortune by the right use of his scientific knowledge: "But, my dear sir, I have no time to waste in making money." This sounds well, but will hardly bear analysis. Prof. Agassiz himself finds it very necessary to use the money to support his schools that other people have made. It is well enough for him to talk in this way. He has other gifts, but without money the world would be little better for them. This cant about the folly of making money is very foolish for people in general, else how could we put our children under the instruction of Agassiz, or anybody else? It is foolish to make money if you have no use for it; but if you have noble ends to accomplish, make all you can, and then use it as wisely as you can. You will be healthier and happier for it.—Herald of Health.

CASH RECEIPTS.

For the week ending August 16, 1873.

Miss Julia Hall, 75 cts.; N. E. Boyd, 50 cts.; Lulu C. Childs, 50 cts.; John Gilmer, 50 cts.; Wm. Hamburg, 50 cts.; A. C. Folson, 50 cts.; Mrs. C. H. Nelson, 50 cts.; M. P. Martin, 50 cts.; H. Davis, 50 cts.; W. H. Kent, 50 cts.; D. Porter, 50 cts.; Julia Perkins, 50 cts.; F. E. Abbot, 50 cts.; M. D. Wade, 50 cts.; F. J. Dunnett, 50 cts.; K. Helderly, 50 cts.; Sidney Drake, 50 cts.; George Maunfield, 50 cts.; Thos. Tribe, 50 cts.; David Critchton, 50 cts.; Ollie B. Squier, 50 cts.; Sam. W. Treat, 50 cts.; F. W. Kline, 50 cts.; A. Starbird, 50 cts.; T. B. Skinner, 50 cts.; M. H. Mixer, 50 cts.; M. L. Waite, 50 cts.; Jacob Jackson, 50 cts.; H. W. Stanton, 50 cts.; J. C. Kearney, 50 cts.; Nelson Davis, 50 cts.; Henry Drew, 50 cts.; Wm. J. Stuart, 50 cts.; Hyatt Cobb Jr., 50 cts.; E. P. Robeson, 50 cts.; Jas. Hiddle, 50 cts.; F. W. Fendley, 50 cts.; J. C. Reeve, 50 cts.; Lucetta Goodspeed, 50 cts.; J. B. Jay-report, 50 cts.; M. Sumfield, 50 cts.; John Mills, 50 cts.; William I. Bowditch, 50 cts.; A. M. Howland, 50 cts.; Matthew Luce, 50 cts.; George Young, 50 cts.; John Briggs, 50 cts.; Asahel Wheeler, 50 cts.; Nath. T. Allen, 50 cts.; John C. Wilson, 50 cts.; Fred. A. Green, 50 cts.; Benjamin A. Mueller, 50 cts.; G. A. Schmidt, 50 cts.; S. R. Roehrer, 50 cts.; Edmund Jackson, 50 cts.; L. S. Hayswood, 50 cts.; "A Friend," 50 cts.; E. Heldenreich, 50 cts.; A. Friend, 50 cts.; Mrs. Sarah Shaw Russell, 50 cts.; J. Flint, 50 cts.; Mrs. S. L. Morgan, 50 cts.; J. C. Delano, 50 cts.; Mrs. Wm. Cummings and Miss Cummings, 50 cts.; John A. Hayes, 50 cts.; P. L. Howland, 50 cts.; Mrs. C. A. Tucker, 50 cts.; A. Payne, 50 cts.; E. S. Aldrich, 50 cts.; G. A. Tait, Jr., 50 cts.; Thos. Davis, 50 cts.; Howard Oke, 50 cts.; J. A. Barker, 50 cts.; Thos. Davis, 50 cts.; E. H. Aldrich, 50 cts.; T. M. Lamb, 50 cts.; E. V. Lapham, 50 cts.; E. W. Hooper, 50 cts.; Samuel Cheever, 50 cts.; H. M. Twining, 50 cts.; Henry Jones, 50 cts.; James Ford, 50 cts.; Joseph E. Peck, 50 cts.; Bond & Martin, 50 cts.; American News Co., 50 cts.; A. Williams & Co., 50 cts.; George Walker, 50 cts.; Melissa U. Palmer, 50 cts.; Isaac Farnall, 50 cts.; A. Sullivan, 50 cts.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipts unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their contributions acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

DOLLAR DONATION FUND.

This fund is to be used, first, in meeting any deficiency in current expenses that may result from the recent "Index troubles," and, secondly, in such other ways as the editor shall find most advantageous for the paper. All appropriations will be reported to the Directors.

Acknowledged with thanks for the week ending August 16:—
$2.00—William Jones; $5.00—Mrs. E. P. Robeson.

RECEIVED.

WOMAN IN AMERICAN SOCIETY. By ABRA GOULD WOOLSON. Boston: ROBERTS BROTHERS. 1873.
DIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA. Illustrated. By R. T. TRALL, M.D. New York: S. H. WELLS. 1873.
DIALOGUES AND RECITATIONS. Adapted to the Children's Progressive Lyceums. By MRS. LOUISA SHEPARD. Cleveland: AMERICAN SPIRITUALIST PUBLISHING COMPANY. 1871.
LECTURES ON MR. DARWIN'S PHILOSOPHY OF LANGUAGE. Delivered in the Royal Institution in March and April, 1873. By F. MAX MUELLER, M.A. London: LONGMANS, GREEN, & Co. 1873.
REFORM IN BURIAL RITES, AND THE CUSTOM OF WEARING MOURNING: Letters by the Rev. CHARLES VOSSEY, reprinted from THE INDEX.
THE RESURRECTION: AN EASTER SERMON. By Rev. ROBERT RODOLPH SUFFIELD.—THE RENAISSANCE OF MODERN EUROPE. By J. ADDINGTON SYMONDS.—THE PENTATEUCH IN CONTRAST WITH THE SCIENCE AND MORAL SENSE OF OUR AGE. By A. PHYSICIAN. Part II.—RELIGION: Its Place in Human Culture. By JOHN MCLEOD.—THE PROVINCE OF PRAYER. By W. E. B.—THE HISTORICAL DEPRIVATION OF CHRISTIANITY. By F. W. NEWMAN.—JESUS versus CHRISTIANITY. By A. CANTAB.—All published by THOMAS SCOTT, Esq., London, 1873.
THE BIBLE IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS. Opinion and Decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio, in the Case of John D. Minor et al., vs. the Board of Education of the city of Cincinnati, et al. Cincinnati: ROBERT CLARKE & Co. 1873.
CREDIT MOBILIER. Speeches of Hon. Job Stevenson, of Ohio, in the House of Representatives; &c., &c. Washington: F. & J. RIVES. 1873.
SEVENTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT of the Board of School Inspectors of the city of Peoria, &c., &c. Peoria, Ill.: NATIONAL DEMOCRAT Office. 1873.
JOURNAL OF SPECULATIVE PHILOSOPHY. April, 1873. St. Louis: E. P. GRAY.
OLD AND NEW. August, 1873. Boston: ROBERTS BROTHERS.
THE RELIGIOUS MAGAZINE AND MONTHLY REVIEW. August, 1873. Boston: L. C. BOWLES.
THE HERALD OF HEALTH. July, 1873. New York: WOOD & HOLBROOK.
THE MONTHLY MIRROR. July, 1873. New York: B. J. STOW.
THE PENN. MONTHLY. August, 1873. Philadelphia: 306 Walnut St.
THE LADIES' OWN MAGAZINE. August, 1873. Chicago: M. C. BLAND & Co.
THE PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. August, 1873. New York: S. R. WELLS.

The Index.

AUGUST 23, 1873.

N. B. No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HOLLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Rev. CHARLES VOTSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), Rev. MORCURE D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS TO INDEX STOCK.

Mrs. F. W. Christern,	New York City,	One Share	$100
Rich'd B. Westbrook,	Boston,	"	100
R. C. Spencer,	Milwaukee, Wis.,	Two "	200
R. W. Howes,	Boston,	Miss. One "	100
Chas. W. Story,	"	"	100
E. W. Meddaugh,	Detroit, Mich.,	Five "	500
Jacob Hoffman,	Cumminsville, O.,	One "	100
John Weiss,	Boston,	Mass.,	100
W. C. Russell,	Utica, N. Y.,	"	100

Send twenty-five cents to Roberts Brothers, Boston, for a copy of Mr. Weiss' magnificent eulogium on "Theodore Parker."

Mr. H. L. Green has recently written a letter on the "Future Political Issues of This Country—the most Prominent one Religious Liberty." It was printed in the Syracuse Daily Standard, and republished as a tract by the Syracuse Radical Club. Mr. Green clearly discerns the "New Irrepressible Conflict" between Christianity and Freedom.

Elmira, New York, is agitated over the Sunday street-car question. The Common Council unanimously requested Mr. Cowell to run street-cars on Sunday, and he refused. On this Mr. N. M. Sherwood remarks in the Elmira Advocate: "The Lord has put the street railway into the hands of a man who knows His institutions and laws; and now what is the Devil going to do about it? I say simply—if he wants to howl, why, let him!" By the "Devil," this elegant writer means any and every one who wants to ride on Sunday out to Eldridge Park. But Elmira must be a "city set on a hill," if within that favored municipality the "Lord" elects the street railway superintendent. In this heathen city of Toledo, he either elects a superintendent who does not "honor His institutions and laws," or else neglects to vote altogether. The street-cars run here regularly on Sunday, and as yet no tempest of fire and brimstone has burned up this Ohio Sodom. Is the "Lord" less particular on the car question than his followers imagine? Or has the Adversary stolen a march on him? A Toledo partisan of the "Devil" might make a droll but dreadfully wicked retort about the "howling."

The Methodists are greatly exercised over their "decay of vitality," which they deplored at length in New York lately, and the causes of which they anxiously probed the overgrown "body" to find. May the "infidel INDEX" (as Bishop Haven, while editing Zion's Herald, delighted to designate this poor little paper) suggest an explanation? What ails Methodism is what ails escape-steam. As the steam pours blissing-hot from the open valve, it wonderfully expands in volume, but as wonderfully falls in temperature, because it mixes with the atmosphere at large. Methodism is growing rapidly in its membership; but the more it mixes itself with the world, the more it cools off under the influence of free secular thought. Rationalism is killing Methodism, as it is killing all other forms of Orthodoxy; and all the more rapidly because Methodist preachers cannot themselves withstand the subtle influence of the world they rush forth to convert. The only way to keep up their "vitality" is to shut the valves, and keep the steam within a close enclosure. "Liberal Orthodoxy" is in all cases dying Orthodoxy. If the Methodists wish to be "vital," meaning by that "Orthodox," they must weed out the semi-rationalists from their pulpits and pews; but if they wish to be popular, numerous, and "liberal," they must say good-by to their "vitality." The outside world will gain if they choose the latter alternative.

FAITH AND IDEAS.

Absence from home, from which we have very recently returned, has somewhat delayed the appearance of the following letter from Mr. Towne, to which we gladly give place now in these columns:—

MY DEAR ABBOT,—I am very glad to see in THE INDEX which has just come to hand your admirable editorial on "Radical Calvinism." The spirit of your criticism of my position is in keeping with your personal friendship, which I so highly prize; and the view which you take is for the substance of it strikingly just. I am a Radical Calvinist. Before I had ever left New Haven, I called my belief "New Calvinism," using the epithet "new" in the sense in which Paul speaks of the "new" man, or regenerate spiritual man. I am a devotee of faith rather than of mere ideas of the understanding. It was my faith in God, and not at all my doubts suggested by reason, which brought me out of Orthodoxy, and I wouldn't give a cent for all the science and all the mere truths of opinion in the world apart from the principle of faith. I have always claimed that I was in the path of legitimate evolution of Puritan Orthodoxy, a Christian of Christians in my acceptance of the very truth of law and gospel. You, in the main, do but simple justice to my position. I stand just as squarely against you as possible. For good will, and candor, and charity, I would divide my rations with you every time, if any such thing were in my power; but your method and work I regard as profoundly mistaken and mischievous. You may look upon me in some such way, at the same time that you try to understand me and do me justice.

But you must allow me to take exception sharply to an incidental feature of your criticism. You say that my claiming to be a "Calvinist" "appeared to many at the time as a freak of eccentricity bordering on derangement." You must see that it is unjust to explain a claim made by a person at all scholarly and thoughtful by "a freak of eccentricity," and that it is very unjust and cruel to suggest "derangement." If it were true to any degree at all, it would be very cruel to allude to it. But being as wretched an invention as calumny ever resorted to, it should be let alone by respectable criticism. I do not indeed care much about it now, I am so used to lies and calumny of all sorts, and have so implicit a faith in the providence of my life and my work; but I must ask you either to discover some shadow of proof in the matter or not to touch the insinuation, even incidentally.

You make too much of my reference to my having been for fifteen years an extreme radical. Of course I meant that I had been considered such. In fact I have not claimed to be anything of the sort. I have been much more disposed to claim that I was really Orthodox or Evangelical in the true sense, than that I was an extreme radical. But when you call my radicalism imperfect, you beg the matter in dispute. I have as much right to define radicalism as you have, and I have not the least doubt that you will go to the wall in the struggle to decide what is the true radicalism in religion.

You say that I have "said and written things about Jesus which even to the radicals seemed extravagant, bitter, and unjust." But you do not understand me in these things, and you should assume that perhaps you do not, and suspend your judgment, rather than judge as you do. I have a perfect right as a scholar to discriminate in my own way, and in that way I claim to have spoken only as Jesus himself did when he met a particular view of himself, taken by his chief apostle, by saying to Peter, that apostle, "Get thee behind me, Satan." I do not ask anybody to be at the trouble to find out what I mean, but I do ask of candid criticism not to use such epithets as you use without having made sure of their justice.

It is certainly possible that THE INDEX position may be wrong, and that the intelligence of the coming time may decide for my position. I am willing to lose, if I am in the wrong; but I see no ground for charges which rest upon a begging of the question. For your purpose, however, to do me justice, and your substantial success in it, I heartily thank you, and am cordially yours,

EDWARD C. TOWNE.

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 2, 1873.

It gives us great satisfaction to find that we did not even innocently misrepresent Mr. Towne's position in our late criticism of it; and we are sorry that he should have occasion to object even to casual expressions. The judgment passed by some upon his claim to be a "Calvinist," and now strongly protested against by him, we were so far from indorsing, that we took pains to show how intrinsically consistent this claim is with his general thought and tendency. Of course, we should otherwise have made no allusion to it.

With regard to the other point raised, however, Mr. Towne referred to his "fifteen years of being an extreme radical," not of being called such; and we are greatly surprised now to learn that he prizes a reputation for "Orthodoxy" more highly than one for "radicalism." Others, we think, will be as much surprised as we are to learn that he has not himself claimed to be an "extreme radical." Our own impression has certainly been quite to the contrary. Accepting the present statement, however, we cannot help pointing out that it suggests a disposition to return to the bosom of "Orthodoxy" which logically follows from his increasing adhesion to "faith" rather than to ideas. Not that we suppose he is conscious of drifting back towards the church by which he was excommunicated, although we dare say it would please him to be received again into its fellowship; but whoever plants himself on faith as opposed to ideas is just as surely tending back towards the church of Evangelicalism as water tends to run down hill. Faith is the very life of Orthodoxy and Orthodox ecclesiasticism; ideas are the life of radicalism, rationalism, science, and the natural fellowship of unchurched humanity. Hence he who lives by faith is drawn towards the church by a power of attraction which he may or may not resist, but which governs the flight of the comet in its wildest eccentricity as irresistibly as it governs the course of the planet in its sober and contracted orbit.

Whether he is aware of it or not, the above letter of Mr. Towne illustrates the impossibility of comprehending the real nature of science so long as one cleaves to "faith" instead of ideas. "I wouldn't give a cent," he says, "for all the science and all the mere truths of opinion in the world apart from the principle of faith." The Pope would applaud that utterance to the echo. But what a total inversion of fact to conceive of science as coördinate with "mere truths of opinion"! It is Orthodoxy, Christianity, the Christian Church, not science, which rests on opinion, and lives by opinion, and feeds its followers with opinion, and opinion alone. Its dogmas are opinions buttressed by nothing more solid than illusions and superstitions. Faith hatches opinions by the brood, and, when they are endangered, has no defence but to cluck them out of sight under her own wings,—where darkness becomes their safety. But science proscribes opinion, because it is belief not based on facts. She demands either KNOWLEDGE or an HONEST CONFESSION OF IGNORANCE. She allows no one to palm off opinions for verities; and to despise her is to despise the filtered and clarified experience of mankind. Science is sifted knowledge,—nothing more, and nothing less. What shall be preferred to it? Guesses? Dreams? Convictions without a basis of known truth? These may serve a purpose in the absence of science, but in her presence? The "principle of faith" without the restraining hand of science has been prolific of crimes, mistakes, and miseries. Ideas must supersede it, or the world's future will be no betterment of its past.

The great issue between faith and ideas should be widely canvassed; for the discussion goes deep.

The London Spectator, referring to a recent demonstration by 200,000 people on Newcastle Town Moor in favor of universal suffrage, deprecatingly says: "Universal suffrage has never yet been worked without losing all check over the voter's qualification." That is the beauty of it. The attempt by the few to require in the many this or that "qualification" for voting is the root of immense mischief. No doubt the multitudes make as great fools of themselves as do individuals, in the use of the ballot. But the only way to learn to swim is to jump into the water. The only "check" necessary upon bad voting is the smart that follows mistakes. There will be smarts enough under universal suffrage; that may be conceded. But are there no smarts under restricted suffrage? England's appalling condition to-day is the answer to that question. The people must learn to govern themselves; there is no possibility of governing them much longer. Mr. Lowe's counsel to the aristocracy was the quintessence of wisdom: "Educate your masters."

AN UNWISE QUESTION.

I once knew a bright young girl, of a disposition inconveniently frank, who was asked by a languid youth whether she liked flowers. She simply looked up at him and answered—"What a silly question!"

To the oft-repeated inquiry of religious journals, why the advocates of Free Religion do not call themselves infidels, it is difficult to make a more respectful answer. It seems anything but a wise question. I should think it would be clear to anybody who had ever attended a Free Religious Convention, that the simple reason why such people do not commonly claim to be infidels is because they are not. That is at least the reason, if I know myself, in my own case. I should prefer not to call myself an infidel, just as I should prefer not to call myself a Christian—because I honestly do not feel fitly described by the epithet.

The New York Independent, which is apt to be as liberal as an honest Evangelical paper can be, puts this same question in a manner which shows some glimpse of the facts. "Is it," it says, "because the Free Religionist does not wish to encounter the reproach connected with the word infidel, or is it because there is a lingering feeling in his breast that belief, rather than denial, is the condition of life and growth?"

I should say that it is the last reason, except that what the Independent calls "a lingering feeling" is, I should suppose, a feeling as firm as the everlasting hills. This is precisely why the word infidel is distasteful, because it attributes a negative state of mind to those who consider their attitude eminently one of assertion. The followers of Comte, who claim for themselves the name "Positive Philosophy," are not more essentially positive in their self-assumed attitude, than are many of the followers of Herbert Spencer, on the one side, and of Emerson, on the other. There are some persons inside the Free Religious movement, doubtless, whose conscious mental attitude is best described by the word "sceptic"—which implies predominant doubt and questioning. And there may be some whose conscious attitude is that of vehement unbelief,—who dwell chiefly on what they reject. Such persons might properly call themselves infidels, and it seems to me that I should, were I in their place. There are too many brave and noble infidels to make a man unwilling to bear the name if it belongs to him; but why should he bear it otherwise? It is from no disrespect to the name of John or Frederick that I do not answer to it or assume it; it may be a better name than mine, but it is not mine. That is the whole story.

I can honestly say, for one, that it is not the facts of negation that greatly interest me; and so far as they do interest me, it is because they are advanced so persistently in the churches that it is impossible to ignore them altogether. I would fain believe, I do believe, in the existence of a paternal God; but tracts are left at my door which portray him in such a light that, if I believed them, I should wish there were no God. I would fain believe, and I do believe, in personal immortality; but if I go to church, I am liable to hear views of the future life which would make that immortality a curse and annihilation a blessing. I have not the slightest wish to deny, nor do I deny, the divine illumination of Jesus; what troubles me is the persistent denial in all the churches round me, of all divine illumination in anybody else. I can read the Hebrew and Christian Scriptures with the greatest pleasure; but the amazing thing is that, if I read to people the same noble thoughts in the sacred books of other nations, my neighbors shake their heads, and immediately express the hope that there may be some error in the translation. Which now is the believer,—which the unbeliever or the infidel?

It is strange how many good people cling to the impression that everybody who differs from them must be struggling with agonizing doubts and full of mental torture! This Natural Religion, which has grown up in many of us so spontaneously that it is like grass and roses in our lives, they persist in treating as a matter of burnt-out desolation, made up of volcanic scorrie and cinders. When will they discover that the process of natural vegetation is one thing, and that of geological upheaval another?

T. W. H.

THE SONNETS OF MICHEL ANGELO.

Even in this reading age these sonnets are hardly so well known as they ought to be. They have great value as revealing the intimate personal feelings of a grand, reserved nature like the great Italian's. They sometimes seem to me like a deep shaft which enables the geologist to learn the secrets of the earth with all its hidden history; while the form of expression on religious themes is often that of his own age, the thought is so broad and free that it seems as if this master mind lived out its own life unfettered by the superstition and bigotry around him. It is extremely difficult to do any justice to these poems by a translation. Wordsworth, who admired them very much, was only well enough satisfied with his versions of two or three of them to be willing to publish them. Those translations, however, stand among the very best in our language, and almost fulfil Mr. J. F. Clarke's canon of translation, that it should be done with as much thought as was required for the original poem. Mr. Harford and others have since tried to introduce these beautiful poems to the English reader with more or less success.

One of the most remarkable and beautiful sonnets is that on "Marriage," of which I have never seen any rhymed version. It is full of the profoundest meaning and shows how entirely noble and just this great artist was in his estimate of woman and the marriage relation. In these days, when every crude theory and every wild speculation on these subjects finds utterance, there is a refreshing serenity and strength in this sonnet, which has tempted me to the effort of rendering it familiar to the readers of THE INDEX. I am not guilty of the presumption of supposing that I have given the melody and beauty of the original, but I think I have preserved the thought, and I hope to tempt at least all young readers of Italian to study the original for themselves.

E. D. C.

SONNET.

If pure chaste love, if piety supernal,
Two lovers bearing fate with equal will,
To whom is common every joy and ill,
One spirit binding both in love fraternal,
One spirit in two bodies made eternal,
Rising to heaven both on equal wing—
If mutual fire and upward impulse spring
In both so high, so deep, and so internal
That one the other loves, and self no more,
And Love all guerdon but of Love resigns,
And what one seeks the other still will choose,
And mutual love a mutual rule impose,
When these of endless truth are certain signs,
What envious fate such loving tie can loose?

DOGBERRY IN THE SANCTUM.

The Young Men's Christian Association in Poughkeepsie has been achieving a laughable notoriety by shaking its head over the writings of the greatest thinkers that this country has yet produced. But we have never seen anything so inimitably asinine as an editorial article in the Poughkeepsie Daily Eagle of July 28. After mildly complimenting Theodore Parker as, "though not a great, yet no doubt a thoroughly honest man," while yet "he was not a safe teacher," &c., &c., this eminent journal continues to bray with a vigor and persistency which forbids charity herself to doubt what species it belongs to:—

"As to Emerson, we confess we never read anything of his, and never expect to. We might have done so if we had not once heard him deliver a lecture—a two-hours long mess of wishy-washy vamping and pretentious nonsense, that so thoroughly disgusted us that we concluded life was too short and other things too important to allow us to waste any time wading through the stuff such a man could produce for the sake of any chance thoughts that might be found in his writings. We may do him injustice, but, if that lecture was a fair specimen, we don't believe Emerson is capable of influencing any man with brains."

Verily, there is no answering such a criticism as that.

An odd story was told of an instrumental concert said to have been once given by an English ambassador to the Emperor of China. At the end of the performance, the ambassador inquired deferentially which piece had most pleased his imperial majesty; to which the Brother of the Sun and Moon replied, "The first," and added a request to be favored with it once more. The orchestra in vain went through the entire programme a second time; his majesty did not recognize his favorite piece. At last the exhausted players began to tune their instruments, producing the inevitable but intensely disagreeable pot-pourri so familiar to concert-goers; whereupon the Emperor clapped his hands with delight, declaring that this was the very part of the programme which had ravished the imperial fancy. If he had only remarked in addition that he "didn't believe Beethoven was capable of pleasing any man with an ear!" That would have rivalled the critical genius of our editor, who might have been compassionately forgiven for going into ecstasies over Fulton or Talmage, but who, like honest Dogberry, deserves to be "written down an ass," when he "doesn't believe Emerson is capable of influencing any man with brains."

A LUDICROUS BLUNDER.

At the recent session of the Presbyterian General Assembly in Baltimore, tracts in favor of the Christian Amendment were circulated through the audience containing the "Demands of Liberalism," accompanied by such comments as would naturally be made by the friends of that Amendment. An old gentleman who was evidently not a little muddleheaded rose indignantly, and called attention to the fact that an "infidel document was being distributed through the house." A great sensation was at once produced. The Moderator requested the Committee of Arrangements to preserve the proprieties, and the wicked tracts were confiscated. It turned out that the old gentleman had read only the "Demands of Liberalism," and did not comprehend that they were merely quoted as showing the horrible nature of the demands now made by free thinkers. Notwithstanding the explanation made at the time by the editor of the Christian Statesman, the New York Independent, which has proved itself more than once capable of any amount of unfairness and misrepresentation in dealing with its opponents, declared soon after that the Assembly condemned the "old editorials of the Christian Statesman" as "infidel documents". Nothing could be more unjust or apparently more malicious. But the joke of the thing is that the Independent promptly indorsed the "Demands of Liberalism" when first published in THE INDEX, and even sneered at them as not half strong enough! Hence what the General Assembly really condemned as "infidel" had been emphatically indorsed by the Independent itself; and in trying to cast the stigma of "infidelity" on the Christian Statesman, it launched on the air a boomerang which returned with an ugly thwack on its own head. While the Independent is ruefully rubbing the sore spot, we suggest that greater scrupulousness in its tactics would save it from an occasional headache.

The Dover (N. H.) Morning Star complains that Sunday trains are run under pretence of carrying milk to the cities, "on roads where there isn't a drop of milk carried in a month;" and it therefore utters a genuinely Puritanic groan on the occasion. But the only fault we have to find with the companies in this matter is that they truckle so slavishly to a public superstition as to dish up to the feeble-minded a miserable excuse for doing what in itself is perfectly right. One need not apologize for minding his own business; and what legitimate business have the companies but to run trains for the public accommodation? Running Sunday trains is simply part of this regular business. The Star should be devoutly thankful that the New Hampshire companies amuse themselves with Sunday trains, if they refrain from corrupting State politics and demoralizing legislation at Concord.

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but hereafter no space will be spared to errata.

N. B.—Articles for this department should be SHORT, and written only on one side of the sheet.

N. B.—Illegibly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.

N. B.—No responsibility will be assumed for unused manuscripts.

IS "UNIVERSAL CONSCIOUSNESS" IMPOSSIBLE?

MR. ABBOT.—I have just finished reading your lecture on "The Idea of God," in No. 184 of THE INDEX. You state: "I cannot think it is a mere figure of speech to call him intelligent, conscious, moral, personal."

I have no desire to take exceptions; but there is one point suggested upon which I desire you would—as briefly as possible—endeavor to shed some faint ray of light. This difficulty of mine may be best expressed by a quotation from Mansel's Limits of Religious Thought, as given in Spencer's First Principles:—

"The very conception of consciousness, in whatever mode it may be manifest, necessarily implies distinction between one object and another. To be conscious, we must be conscious of something; and that something can only be known as that which it is, by being distinguished from that which it is not. But distinction is necessarily limitation; for, if one object is to be distinguished from another, it must possess some form of existence which the other has not, or it must not possess some form which the other has."

A second characteristic of consciousness is that it is only possible in the form of a relation. There must be a Subject, or person conscious, and an Object, or thing of which he is conscious. There can be no consciousness without the union of these two factors; and in that union each exists only as it is related to the other."

If consciousness, then, be necessarily relative, how are we to understand your expression—"universal consciousness"?

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.

[It is denied by many philosophers that we can be conscious of anything but self and its modifications. But no one denies that we can be conscious of self. If self, however, is conscious of self, it must be at once the subject and the object of thought; and indeed it appears that consciousness is neither more nor less than identification of the subject and object of thought.]

It is plain, therefore, that consciousness, which simply presents self to self, as simultaneously the knower and the known, does not involve limitation, although it does involve relation. So long as the things related are only different phases of the same thing, it is sophistry to represent the distinction as involving limitation of one thing by another thing. How can any thing limit itself? Mansel destroys the very idea of consciousness by representing the knower and the known as two; whereas they are one. It is not enough to speak of their "union;" we should speak of their identity.

That consciousness, therefore, is finite, the causes of whose modifications are external to itself. But that consciousness is infinite or "universal" which contains all these causes within itself. That is our idea of God, as the All in All. Mansel fails to establish his point.—[Ed.]

AN INCREASING PUBLIC EVIL.

BY C. K. WHITTLE.

In the morning prayer-meeting of the Boston Young Men's Christian Association, a member, confessing his faults for the benefit of his fellow-members, said he had indulged too much in the habit of reading newspapers. He had found that, by this means, his mind was unduly drawn to worldly things. He therefore avoided the reading of newspapers and magazines, and now read only the Bible.

At another meeting of the same body a young convert said: "I don't want none of your theatres, nor your course of lyceum lectures. What I want is the prayer-meeting. I want to be where Jesus is."

There is certainly evil as well as good in the periodical press. The newspaper, however, is one of the necessities of civilized life; and while we are residents in this world, there is manifest fitness in giving some attention to the daily record of how the world is going on.

In theatrical entertainments, as they are now and always have been conducted, there are certain obvious advantages and certain obvious evils. On the one hand, they afford recreation, one of the manifest necessities of human nature; on the other hand, some portions of the recreation they offer tend to corrupt the morals of those who attend them.

Lyceum lectures, originally intended for instruction only, are now made to minister largely to recreation also. They accomplish much in both directions, and the complaints of them which we occasionally hear spring not from any alleged evil character, but from the assumption that they might be and ought to be still better than they are.

There is, however, another way of viewing these matters. The prayer-meeting spirit, tendency and influence, which are accurately expressed in the remarks of the two young men above quoted, are hostile to the good features of the theatre as well as to its evil ones. They frown upon recreation, as such, apart from any particular evil influence which may be associated with it. They esteem the desire for amusement a fault in him or her who feels it. They reckon as positive ill-doing the arrangements made to gratify this desire, and regard recreation as not only a waste, but a perversion of time.

It is a noteworthy fact that, though some of the conductors of and participants in the meeting above-mentioned are really intelligent persons, in matters apart from religion and theology, not one of them attempted to correct the error into which their ignorant brethren had fallen. The Orthodox prayer-meeting, as conducted by the Boston Young Men's Christian Association, assumes, as settled points, that human nature is "base," that the human body is "vile," that the human mind is "carnal," and that getting oneself "saved" should take precedence of every other thought and action. And when ignorant young converts insist upon the inferences growing out of these propositions, the more intelligent ones let them pass uncorrected.

The prayer-meeting influence has always been hostile to the theatre; but many will be surprised to hear that the exercises of the lyceum, whether amusing or instructive, come under the same ban; and that the prayer-meeting spirit and tendency are hostile to the lyceum as well as to the theatre. To understand this hostility, one must comprehend the stand-point of the Young Men's Christian Association.

The central idea of the prayer-meeting, as conducted by this body, is their church theory that God is dangerous to men.

This is not the whole of their faith, but it is the essential part of it, and the main motive of their prayers and exhortations. They teach, and try to have it believed, that God, before creating mankind, had determined to keep vast numbers of them burning alive forever. They teach that he threatens this fearful doom to every man and every woman; that he will execute it upon every one who does not take certain specified measures to avert it; and that he knew, before creating mankind, that vast numbers of them would fall into this misery and continue in it forever!

A part of the strange theory upheld by these people is that, even in maintaining and administering hell, God does not cease to be a God of love and mercy! This proposition is irrational and self-contradictory, but the members of the Young Men's Christian Association seem quite unconcerned about that, since another part of their theory is that reason is "carnal," and the exercise of reason in religious matters dangerous. I heard it said in one of their meetings: "Reason has nothing to do with religion; nothing to do with it." And he who thus repeated and emphasized this declaration was an elderly man, of intelligent as well as serious aspect. God's "mercy," as interpreted by these people, consists in sparing from eternal flames a certain proportion of those for whom the Merciful himself arranged and prepared that fate. Nero spared more Roman citizens than he killed; but who ever thought of calling him "merciful" for that?

This irrational theory of the Young Men's Christian Association leads to a result not only irrational but false, calumnious, and monstrous, namely, this: Finding that Universalists, Spiritualists, and some Unitarians represent God as proving himself just and merciful by a providential arrangement for the ultimate welfare of every human being, the prayer-meeting people cry out against these as wicked and dangerous persons! They even call them unbelievers! As if the vindictive element which they themselves assume to belong to God's character, and the parts of his system growing out of that, were the only things worthy of being believed in, the only appropriate objects for the exercise of faith!

Ridiculously inconsistent with themselves as are the prayer-meeting people in some points, they are logical in others. Assuming the eternity of future punishment as the essence of their system, their meetings are conducted in conformity with that doctrine. The young men whose words are quoted at the beginning of this article used those expressions because they were thoroughly imbued with the prayer-meeting spirit. What, to them, are either the instruction or the amusement contained in a lyceum lecture? These things will not "save the soul." Nay, these things are dangerous, and may be pernicious, since they occupy the attention of men and women with something other than "salvation." The attractions of the lyceum, as of the theatre, are "worldly" attractions; and this world, in the phraseology of the prayer-meeting, is a "vile world," a "vain world," a "wicked world," a "vale of tears," a "dark wilderness," a place chiefly occupied by "temptations and snares." The only legitimate employments of this mortal life, according to the prayer-meeting idea, are, first, to get your own soul saved, and next, incessantly to beset your fellow-men to get their souls saved.

This prayer-meeting idea, to those who are thoroughly imbued with it, is the sufficient answer to every plea for improvement of the bodies or minds of human beings. Suppose you invite one of the young men who furnished the text for this article to attend a lecture on grammar, or chemistry, or drainage, or ventilation, or the improvements needed in our common-school system. He looks at you with pity and astonishment. Will any of these things save the soul of the hearer? Will they not lazily occupy an hour's time which might have been devoted to the salvation of his soul? He is going to a prayer-meeting, and he advises you to accompany him.

Offer him Dr. Channing's book on Self Culture. His first thought is: "Was not this written by a famous unbeliever?" The "self" which that dangerous man proposed to cultivate is to be subjugated and crucified, according to the prayer-meeting idea.

Ask him to go to a gymnasium. What! Develop and strengthen "this vile body," the source of so many temptations, the very means which Satan uses to lead the soul astray? The body is to be kept under, denied, resisted, opposed, according to the prayer-meeting idea. If it can be saved from everlasting flames, this is all that needs to be accomplished for it!

The prayer-meeting idea, logically carried out, regards with indifference or hostility every form of art, science, social amelioration, or human improvement, not bearing upon what its devotees call "salvation." This is the direct and legitimate tendency of the sort of assumption, admonition and exhortation in vogue in prayer-meetings. Fortunately, many of the sustainers of those meetings do not carry out this idea in their lives. Many of them give liberally for the supply of bodily wants, and some of them recognize the usefulness of science and art. Still more: such power has precedent, and such boldness is inspired by the example of true believers in New York and other cities, that the Directors of the Boston Young Men's Christian Association have actually introduced "parlor croquet" as a justifiable alleviator at their semi-monthly "social gatherings." And when, in their recent purchase of a new building, the most eligible one was found to have a well furnished gymnasium in its upper story, with a fair list of paying subscribers, these Directors boldly took the establishment under their protection, and advertised the opportunity for gymnastic exercise as one of the attractive features of their own Association. Thus civilization works some slight changes even in ascetic pietism. Nevertheless, the natural tendency of the style of thought and feeling cultivated in the prayer-meeting is precisely expressed in the quotations above given.

Many persons, on talking with a young man under the influence here described, and finding him utterly deaf to reason and indifferent to truth, may be disposed to rate his fanaticism as harmless. They do not consider that he and his associates are all the time deluding other ignorant young people, producing in them also an arrest of mental development, drawing them away from the pursuit of knowledge, and sealing up their minds against even the desire for it. The young, through the ignorance belonging to their time of life, are the most frequent victims of this system. This system, then,—directly operating to continue and maintain juvenile ignorance, to check the desire for knowledge by assuming its uselessness, and to recommend a dogma coming down to us from an uncivilized age as the only thing in this world worth knowing,—is undoing the work of civilization, and checking art, science, the diffusion of knowledge, and all that belongs to the true idea of a liberal education. And it works such harm not less surely because the great majority of its advocates are heartily and earnestly sincere in advocating it. The question then arises—

Are we to go on ignoring this evil influence, and allowing its systematic perpetuation without remonstrance? Or shall we plainly point out the evil, and so rescue some, at least, of the many young people exposed to it?

Take notice, reader, that this exposure of the spirit and tendency of prayer-meetings, as conducted by the Young Men's Christian Association, does not in the least imply a doubt of the unspendable value of true prayer, the affectionate communion of the individual soul with its Maker.

A large portion of the noblest and most valuable moral teaching has been the work, not only of men who did not know, but of men who knew and rejected, the Christian faith.—John Stuart Mill.

Advertisements.

GENERAL NOTICE.

On Aug. 8, 1872, I contracted for the two best advertising pages of THE INDEX for the current year. "No advertisements objectionable to the editor to be taken." For terms apply to ANA K. BUTTS, 36 Dey St., New York.
 No improper advertisements, no advertisements of patent medicines, and no advertisements known to be fraudulent or injurious to any one, will be hereafter admitted into THE INDEX. All advertisements accepted before this date will be allowed to run their time.
 THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.
 TOLEDO, O., June 21, 1873.

Children, begin now to save your pennies that, when the long evenings come, you can buy "Avilude, or game of Birds." If your store-keeper has not got it, send seventy-five cents to West & Lee, Worcester, Mass., and it will be sent by mail, post-paid.
 "Avilude is a superior game."—Worcester Palladium.

DR. E. E. DENNISTON'S
HOME FOR INVALIDS,
 At Springdale, Northampton,
 Massachusetts.
 Number limited to thirty.

THE WAYS OF WOMEN

In Their Physical, Moral, and Intellectual Relations.
 By A MEDICAL MAN. This is unquestionably one of the most remarkable books issued from the American press in many years. A most beautiful specimen of scientific and practical work-painting on themes of vital importance to every woman. A splendid chance for Agents. It makes an elegant two vol., of 400 pp., on tinted paper, superbly bound. Price $3. Sent by mail on receipt of price. For territory and agents' terms, apply to the publisher, JAMES P. JAVETT & Co., 5 Dey St. N. Y.

The Religion of Humanity,
 BY O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

Second Edition with fine Steel Portrait. 12 mo. cloth. Price, post-paid, $1.50.

Christianity and Materialism
Contrasted.

BY B. F. UNDERWOOD.
 A handsome 48 page Pamphlet, 50 copies for $1.50, 10 copies for $1.00. Single copy 15 cts.

Mr. Underwood's best Lecture is now ready, entitled
The Influence of Christianity
On Civilization.

32 page Pamphlet. Price 25 cts.
 Address the Publishers,
ANA K. BUTTS & CO.
36 Dey Street, N. Y.

THE GOLDEN AGE.

Every Man and Woman who reads THE INDEX ought to read also The Golden Age, edited by Theodore Tilton. After fifteen years of experience on The Independent, Mr. Tilton two years ago established, in the interest of more liberal thought, The Golden Age—a journal of his own, to which he gives his constant and toll-free attention, and which has already won a national reputation for honesty, courage, and brilliancy. Probably no other journal in America is so widely quoted from, both by those who agree, and those who disagree with it. Unlike any other weekly paper, either in America or England, it is unique and original in appearance, in thought, and in style. It abounds in brief and spicy paragraphs—shot like swift arrows hitting the mark. Its editorial discussions cover the whole field of current topics—whether religious, political, literary, social, or industrial. It does not pretend, or seek, or want to agree with its readers, or with the general popular opinion. It indulges in the luxury of free speech. It has a mind of its own, and is sometimes wrong—which makes it all the more novel, for it is almost the only journal of the American press that is ever wrong. But whether right or wrong, it is always good natured, and ever believes in fair play. It would be happy to make the acquaintance of the readers of THE INDEX; and though The Golden Age is in no sense a rival to THE INDEX, and does not undertake to do such a work as Mr. Abbot has embarked upon, yet it is fighting a battle for free thought in religion, and free speech in politics, and is conscientiously dedicated to the promotion of whatever helps forward the Emancipation of the Human Mind. Anybody who subscribes for Mr. Tilton's paper will get something to think about, and more than the money's worth. Enclose three dollars in an envelope (before you forget it), and address
THE GOLDEN AGE,
 Box 8648,
 New York City.

Popular New Music Books.

FOR THE COMING MUSICAL SEASON.

The Standard. EMERSON & PALMER. $1.50
 Unexcelled as a collection of Church Music.
The River of Life. PERKINS & BENTLEY. 50
 The Newest and Freshest of Sabbath School Song Books.
Cheerful Voices. L. O. EMERSON. 50
 Very beautiful School Song Book.
Gems of Strains. JONAS STRAUSS. 2.50
 All the best Strains Music.
Organ at Home. For Reed Organ. 2.50
 200 most attractive pieces.
Clarke's Dollar Instructions.
 For Reed Organ, Piano, and Violin.
Emerson's Chants and Responses. 1.00
Dr. Streeter's Voice Building. 1.50

THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD;

A SIMPLE ACCOUNT OF MAN IN EARLY TIMES.
 BY EDWARD CLODD, F. R. S.

For Sale by A. K. BUTTS & Co., 36 Dey Street, N. Y.

Second Edition, Crown 8vo. Price, $1.

Extract from a letter from Professor Max Müller to the Author:—"I read your book with great pleasure. I have no doubt it will do good, and hope you will continue your work. Nothing spoils your temper so much as having to unlearn in youth, manhood, and even old age, so many things which we were taught as children. A book like yours will prepare a far better soil in the child's mind, and I was delighted to have it read to my children."

E. B. TILTON, F. R. S., in "NATURE," says:—"This genial little volume is a child's book as to shortness, cheapness, and simplicity of style, though the author reasonably hopes that older people will use it as a source of information not popularly accessible elsewhere as to the life of Primitive Man and its relation to our own."

This book, if the time has come for the public to take it, will have a certain effect in the world. It is not a mere compilation from the authors mentioned in the preface, but takes its own grounds and stands by and for itself. Mr. Clopp has thought out his philosophy of life, and need his best skill to bring it into the range of a child's view."

Will be ready Sept. 15th, an excellent reprint of the above charming book. 12mo. paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.
ASA K. BUTTS & CO.,
 31 Dey St., N. York.

NEW BOOKS
FOR SUMMER READING.

MUST IT BE?
 A Romance From the German of CARL DETLEV. BY MS., translator of "By his (own) Might," "A Twofold Life," etc. Illustrated. 8vo. Paper cover, 75 cents. Fine cloth, $1.25.

Emphatically national, full of charming realism, and abounding in vigorous and exciting action.

WHAT WILL THE WORLD SAY?
 A Novel of Every-day Life; and "Only a Woman." BY OLGA MORENO. 12mo. Extra cloth. $1.50.

POLITICAL PORTRAITS.
 By an Eminent Journalist. 12mo. Extra cloth. $1.50. Short, pithy, and timely addresses, presenting in a condensed and striking manner the political character of England's most representative statesmen.

GONE BEFORE.

Being a Manual for the Bereaved. BY HENRY SOUTHWATE. Extra cloth. Red edges. $2.00.
 "The book is one of those specialties in which the writer has already established a reputation on both sides of the Atlantic, and should be in every private and public library in the land."—Boston Globe.

EVOLUTION OF LIFE.

By HENRY C. CHAPMAN, M. D., Member of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia. Illustrated with numerous Lithographic Plates. New and Cheaper Edition. Extra cloth. $2.75.

"The best general text that we have seen for readers who desire to know the foundation, etc., results, and reasons employed in the latest scientific theories."—Phila. North American.

MINERAL SPRINGS OF NORTH AMERICA
 How to Reach, and How to Use them. By J. J. JOHNSON, M. D. Illustrated. 12mo. Extra cloth. $2.00.

REASON AND REDEMPTION.
 Or, The Gospel as it Affects Itself. By ROBERT BAKER WHITE, D. D. 8vo. Extra cloth. $1.00.

"Dr. White displays great logical power, and, and fearlessly grapples with the objections to the truth of revelation which are drawn from the teachings of geology, astronomy, and ethnology."—Boston Globe.

WORK, PLAY, AND PROFIT.

Or, Gardening for Young Folks, explained in a Story for Boys and Girls. By ANNA M. HYDE, author of "Six Hundred Dollars a Year," "America's Boys' Life of Washington," etc. Illustrated. 12mo. Extra cloth.

THE "SPIRITUAL" DELUSION:
 Its Methods, Teachings, and Effects. The Philosophy and Phenomena Critically Examined. By DR. D. L. LEM, author of "The Early Social Life of Man." 12mo. Fine cloth. $1.50.

WAVE RUN.

The "Early Day" in the Northwest. A Novel. By the author of "Walter Ogilby." New Edition. 12mo.

A Romantic and highly attractive narrative of life in the Northwest during the period of the early settlement.

For sale by all Booksellers, or will be sent by mail post-paid, upon receipt of the price by

LIPPINCOTT & CO., Publishers,
 715 and 717 Market Street, Phila.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twentieth year of this Family and Day School begins Wednesday, September 17, 1873. For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN, West Newton, Mass.

JUST PUBLISHED.

MATERIALISM.

Its Ancient History.

Its Recent Development.

Its Practical Beneficence.

By DR. L. BOEKHNER.

"The author of 'Force and Matter,' 'Man in Nature,' &c., &c. Translated from the author's manuscript by Prof. A. Loos.

A. K. BUTTS & CO., Publishers,

36 Dey Street, N. Y.

J. F. RUGGLES,

Free Thought Bibliophile,

BRONSON, MICH.

Continues to furnish those who desire them, Liberal and Philosophical books, tracts, etc., that embody the matured thoughts and opinions of the true Salt of the Earth! Being in constant receipt of importations from Europe, I am prepared to supply all works in any department of Literature that are obtainable in the markets of the world. Catalogues free.

Address

A. BRIGGS DAVIS, CLINTON, MASS.

Independent Tract Society.

CLINTON, MASS.

The object of this organization is the publication and dissemination of radical sentiments from all sources.

Yearly Subscription.....$2 25

Life Membership.....5 00

Address

A. BRIGGS DAVIS, CLINTON, MASS.

VALUABLE BOOKS

OF BOUND MUSIC:

GEMS.

Gems of Sacred Song.

Gems of German Song.

Gems of Scottish Song.

Wreath of Gems.

PEARLS.

Shower of Pearls.

The best Vocal Duets.

Operatic Pearls.

Best Opera Songs.

Price of each book, Bds. $2.50; Cl., $5.00; Full Gilt, $4.00.

The above volumes are quite unsurpassable, as each one is filled and crowded with the very best Vocal Music of its kind. Books are large, and wonderfully cheap. Pages full sheet music size. (200 to 350 pages.)

REMEMBER OUR NEW Organ at Home, $2.50

Home is not complete without it.

LOOK AT THE Standard, for Chords, &c. $1.50

Cheerful Voices, for Schools. 50

River of Life, for Sunday Schools. 63

The above books for sale by all dealers. Sent post-paid on receipt of price.

OLIVER DITSON & Co., Boston.

CHAS. H. DITSON & Co.

711 Broadway, N. York.

Standard Liberal Works.

For sale by A. K. BUTTS, 36 Dey Street, New York.

The Right of Married Women to Hold Property.

Judge Herrell's argument in the House of Assembly of the State of New York, in the session of 1867, in support of the bill to restore to married women "The Right of Property." Republished by order of the will of Mrs. Barbara Amella Herrell, 1867. Price, 30 cents.

Walt Tyler; a Dramatic Poem in three acts, by Robert Boutley, Esq. Price, 30 cents.

The Diogenes; being a Discovery of the Origin, Evolutions, and Early History of Christianity, never yet before or elsewhere so fully and faithfully set forth. By Rev. Robert Taylor. This work was written by Mr. Taylor while serving a term in Newham (Eng.) Jail, where he was imprisoned for blasphemy. It contains 440 pages, octavo, and is considered unanswerable as to arguments or facts. Price, $2.00; postage, 34 cents.

The Devil's Pulpit. By Rev. Robert Taylor—with a sketch of the Author's Life—containing Sermons on the following subjects:—The Star of Bethlehem, John the Baptist, Raising the Devil; The Unjust Judge, Virgo Paritura, St. Peter, and the Pharisee; The Sons of Thunder, The Crucifixion of Christ, The Cap of Salvation, Lectures on Free Masonry, The Holy Ghost, St. Philip, St. Matthew, The Redeemer. Price, $2.00; postage 20 cents.

Astro-Theological Lectures.—By Rev. Robert Taylor. Containing the following Lectures:—Belief not the Safe Side, The Resurrection of Lazarus, The Unjust Steward, The Lion of the East, The Rich Man and Lazarus, The Day of Temptation in the Wilderness, Ahab, or the Lying Spirit, The Fall of Man, Noah, Abraham, Sarah, Melchisedec, The Lord, Moses, The Twelve Patriarchs, Who is the Lord? Exodus, Aaron, Miriam. Price, $2.00; postage, 20 cents.

The Synagma.—By Rev. Robert Taylor, author of the "Diogenes," "Devil's Pulpit," "Astro-Theological Sermons," etc. Price, including postage, $1.00.

The Infidel's or Inquirer's Text-Book.—Being the substance of 12 Lectures on the Bible, by Robert Cooper. Price, $1.00; postage, 18 cents.

Standard Liberal Works.

For sale by A. K. BUTTS, 36 Dey Street, New York.

The Philosophical Dictionary of Voltaire.—Tenth American Edition. Two Volumes in one. Containing 870 large octavo pages, with two elegant steel engravings. Price, $5.00; postage, 65 cents. This is the largest and most correct edition in the English language, having, beside the whole of the London editions, several articles from a manuscript translated several years since by a friend of Voltaire's, and others translated immediately from the French edition. The London edition sells at from $10 to $16, and does not contain nearly so much as this American edition.

Helvetius; or, The True Meaning of the System of Nature. Translated from the French. Price 20 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The Divine and Moral Works of Plato.—Translated from the Original Greek; with Introductory Dissertations and Notes. First American from the sixth London edition, carefully revised and corrected. Price, including postage, $2.50.

History of Moses, Aaron, Joshua, and others, deduced from a Review of the Bible. Also, remarks on the Morals of the Old and New Testament, and some of the Ancient Philosophers. By J. M. Dorsey. Price, 75 cents; postage 12 cents.

History of all Christian Sects and Denominations.—their Origin, Tenets, and Condition. By John Evans, L. L. D. Price, $1.00; postage, 16 cents.

Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients. By G. Vais. Price, 50 cents; postage, 2 cents.

Studying the Bible; or, Brief Criticisms on some of the principal Scripture Texts. By Elmina Drake Sleucker. Price, 75 cents; postage, 8 cents.

Moral Physiology.—A Plain Treatise on Population. By Robert Dale Owen. This work is illustrated with a Frontispiece. Price, including postage, 68 cents.

Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius VII.—Translated from the French into Portuguese by D. J. Monteiro, and from Portuguese into English by H. D. Robinson. With a Memoir of the Author. Price, 50 cents.

Half-Hours with some Ancient and Modern Celebrated Free-Thinkers.—Thomas Hobbes, Lord Bolingbroke, Condorcet, Spinoza, Anthony Collins, Des Cartes, M. de Voltaire, John Toland, Comp. de Volney, Charles Blount, Percy Bysshe Shelley, Claude Adrien Helvetius, Frances Wright, Darnett, Epicurus, Zeno, Matthew Tindal, David Hume, Dr. Thomas Burnet, Thomas Paine, Baptiste de Mirabaud, Baron D'Holbach, Robert Taylor, Joseph Barker. By "Iconoclast," Collins and Watts. Price, 75 cents; postage, 16 cents.

Cooper's Lectures on the Soul.—In which the doctrine of Immortality is religiously and philosophically considered. This is a work of vast importance to those who look on this life as only a state of probation. Price, 75 cents; postage, 12 cents.

Classified Biblical Extracts; or, The Holy Scriptures Analyzed—showing its contradictions, absurdities, and immoralities. Price, 25 cents.

Man's Nature and Development. By Henry George Atkinson, F. G. S., and Harriet Martineau. Price, full gilt, $1.50; postage, 16 cents. Cloth, $1.25; postage, 12 cents.

Queen Mab, with Notes. By Percy B. Shelley. Price, 75 cents.

A Legacy to the Friends of Free Discussion; being a Review of the Principles, Historical Facts, and Personages of the Books known as the Old and New Testaments; with remarks on the Morality of Nature. By Benjamin Offen, formerly Lecturer of the Society of Moral Philanthropists, at Tammany Hall, New York. Price, 75 cents; postage, 16 cents.

Letters to the Catholic Bishop of Boston. Proving that the Roman Catholic Religion is opposed to a Republican form of Government. By an Independent Irishman. Price, 15 cents.

Antiquity and Duration of the World. By the learned Dr. G. Toulmin. Price, 35 cts.

Equality; or, a History of Lithuania. Price, 15 cents.

Elegant Extracts from the Holy Bible. Price, 10 cents.

Intemperate Drinking. An Exposure of the Causes of this vice, and the means by which it may be obviated. By Thomas Hertell, of New York City. For sale by order of the New York Society for the Promotion of Internal Improvement, 1819. Republished by order of the will of Mrs. Barbara Amella Hertell, 1867. Price, 15 cents.

The System of Nature; or, Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach, author of "Good Sense," &c. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Translated from the French by H. D. Robinson. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.00; postage, 25 cents.

The Letters to Eugenia; or, A Preservative against Religious Prejudice. By Baron D'Holbach, author of the "System of Nature," etc. Translated from the French by Anthony C. Middleton, M. D. Price, $1.00; postage, 16 cents.

Good Sense. By Baron D'Holbach. A new edition of this truly valuable book has just been issued, and is now for purchase. Friends who want "Good Sense" (and who does not!) can have a supply sent by mail by forwarding their orders. Price, post paid, $1.00.

Complete Works of Thomas Paine.—Secretary to the Committee of Foreign Affairs in the American Revolution. Three Volumes. Consisting of his Political, Theological, and Miscellaneous Writings. To which is added a brief Sketch of his Life. Price, $7.00; postage, 94 cts.

Paine's Political Writings.—To which is prefixed a brief Sketch of the Author's Life. A new edition, with additions. Two volumes. Price, $5.00; postage, 62 cents.

Thomas Paine's Writings.—Theological and Miscellaneous. The most complete edition ever published. Containing his Age of Reason, and all his writings on Theology, with many Miscellaneous and Political pieces. Price, $3.50; postage, 35 cts.

Thomas Paine's Writings.—Theological and Miscellaneous. The most complete edition ever published. Containing his Age of Reason, and all his writings on Theology, with many Miscellaneous and Political pieces. Price, $3.50; postage, 35 cts.

Thomas Paine's Writings.—Theological and Miscellaneous. The most complete edition ever published. Containing his Age of Reason, and all his writings on Theology, with many Miscellaneous and Political pieces. Price, $3.50; postage, 35 cts.

Thomas Paine's Writings.—Theological and Miscellaneous. The most complete edition ever published. Containing his Age of Reason, and all his writings on Theology, with many Miscellaneous and Political pieces. Price, $3.50; postage, 35 cts.

Thomas Paine's Writings.—Theological and Miscellaneous. The most complete edition ever published. Containing his Age of Reason, and all his writings on Theology, with many Miscellaneous and Political pieces. Price, $3.50; postage, 35 cts.

Thomas Paine's Writings.—Theological and Miscellaneous. The most complete edition ever published. Containing his Age of Reason, and all his writings on Theology, with many Miscellaneous and Political pieces. Price, $3.50; postage, 35 cts.

Thomas Paine's Writings.—Theological and Miscellaneous. The most complete edition ever published. Containing his Age of Reason, and all his writings on Theology, with many Miscellaneous and Political pieces. Price, $3.50; postage, 35 cts.

Thomas Paine's Writings.—Theological and Miscellaneous. The most complete edition ever published. Containing his Age of Reason, and all his writings on Theology, with many Miscellaneous and Political pieces. Price, $3.50; postage, 35 cts.

Thomas Paine's Writings.—Theological and Miscellaneous. The most complete edition ever published. Containing his Age of Reason, and all his writings on Theology, with many Miscellaneous and Political pieces. Price, $3.50; postage, 35 cts.

Thomas Paine's Writings.—Theological and Miscellaneous. The most complete edition ever published. Containing his Age of Reason, and all his writings on Theology, with many Miscellaneous and Political pieces. Price, $3.50; postage, 35 cts.

Thomas Paine's Writings.—Theological and Miscellaneous. The most complete edition ever published. Containing his Age of Reason, and all his writings on Theology, with many Miscellaneous and Political pieces. Price, $3.50; postage, 35 cts.

Thomas Paine's Writings.—Theological and Miscellaneous. The most complete edition ever published. Containing his Age of Reason, and all his writings on Theology, with many Miscellaneous and Political pieces. Price, $3.50; postage, 35 cts.

Thomas Paine's Writings.—Theological and Miscellaneous. The most complete edition ever published. Containing his Age of Reason, and all his writings on Theology, with many Miscellaneous and Political pieces. Price, $3.50; postage, 35 cts.

Thomas Paine's Writings.—Theological and Miscellaneous. The most complete edition ever published. Containing his Age of Reason, and all his writings on Theology, with many Miscellaneous and Political pieces. Price, $3.50; postage, 35 cts.

Thomas Paine's Writings.—Theological and Miscellaneous. The most complete edition ever published. Containing his Age of Reason, and all his writings on Theology, with many Miscellaneous and Political pieces. Price, $3.50; postage, 35 cts.

Manuals of athematical Instruments, icroscopes, agic Lanterns, eterological Instruments, Physical Apparatus,

Profusely Illustrated and priced, mailed to any address on receipt of 10 cents each.

JAMES W. QUEEN & Co., Opticians,
924 Chestnut St., 001 Broadway,
PHILADELPHIA. NEW YORK.

Mention that you saw this in THE INDEX.

LETTER FROM

O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

"I have used THE HEALTH LIFT nearly every day for the past year, and with manifest advantage. A tendency to sleeplessness at night has been corrected, my animal spirits have been raised in tone, and my elasticity of frame increased. The sense of repose imparted is quite as great as the stimulus."—O. B. Frothingham.

For circulars descriptive of THE BUTLER HEALTH LIFT and its apparatus, address—

LEWIS G. JAMES, Manager.

Principal Office, Park Bank Building, 214 Broadway, N. Y.
Brooklyn—158 Remsen St., connecting with Mr. Holbrook's rooms, 180 Fifth Avenue.

Patrons always welcome.

WILL BE READY SEPT. 15.

The Essence of Religion.

GOD THE IMAGE OF MAN;
MAN'S DEPENDENCE UPON NATURE
THE LAST AND ONLY SOURCE OF RELIGION.

Translated from the German of Ludwig Feuerbach by ALEXANDER LOOS, A. M.

Of the author Mr. O. B. Frothingham says: "That he was a prophet and a true one—a seer and a keen-eyed one—an interpreter of truth and a searching one—I for one believe. His books are a spiritual biography, I had almost said, a spiritual romance. They are full of animation; they glow with enthusiasm; they surprise with novelty; and unexpected turns of thought and expression occur on every page. They fairly transport the reader to new regions of the intellectual world; they open fresh views to the mental vision; introduce him to new heavens and a new earth; make him walk by the light of new constellations over territory hitherto unexplored."

[Horticultural Hall lectures, course of 1873; See THE INDEX, Feb. 1, 1873.]

Price 60 cents in paper. In cloth, 12mo, $1.
Published by A. K. BUTTS & CO.
36 Dey Street, N. Y.

PORTER & COATES,

PHILADELPHIA.

WILSON & BONAPARTE'S

AMERICAN ORNITHOLOGY.

The most magnificent Book of the kind ever Published.

CONTAINING:

The Natural History of the Birds of the United States, illustrated with 108 superb Colored Plates, engraved by Lawson, from original drawings taken from Nature. By ALEXANDER WILSON; with a life of the Author, by GEORGE ORIN, F. R. S. With continuation, by CHARLES LEWIS BONAPARTE (Prince of Montebello) 3 vols. Imperial 8vo. of text and 1 folio vol. of plates carefully colored by hand, embracing about 400 figures of birds, mostly life size.

Elegantly bound in Cloth, gilt top, $85 00
Half Turkey Morocco, gilt edges, 100 00

Also, the SAME. 3 vols. Imperial 8vo. of text and 2 vols. folio of plates.

Cloth, gilt top, $97 00
Half Turkey Morocco, gilt edges, 110 00

SEND FOR CIRCULARS.

PORTER & COATES, Publishers,
322 Chestnut St. PHILADELPHIA, Pa.

$5 to $20 per day! Agents Wanted!
All classes of working people, of either sex, young or old, make more money at work for us in their spare moments or all the time than in anything else. Particulars Free. Address G. Stinson & Co., Portland, Me.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO., BANKERS,
LEROY, MINNESOTA.

Money loaned on short time, or for a term of years, on unincumbered improved farms, at 12 per cent. per annum, interest net. Interest payable annually. All expenses for abstract of title and recording mortgage paid by borrower. We collect and remit to any part of the U. S. free of charge.

References—First National Bank, McGregor, Iowa; Gilchrist & Co., McGregor, Iowa; First National Bank, Austin, Minnesota; City National Bank, Chicago, Illinois; Allen, Stevens, & Co., New York City.

SOMETHING NEW.

LIFE INSURANCE

ON THE
SAME BASIS AS FIRE INSURANCE.

PAY FOR IT AS YOU GET IT.

NO "NOTES," "DIVIDENDS," "RESERVES," OR OTHER DEVICES

to collect more money than is actually required to secure all the benefits of Life Insurance.

On this plan the National Life Insurance Co. of Chicago has actually paid the heirs of deceased members $199,664, at a cost to them of only $3,999.10. Had these persons been insured on the old high-rate plan, their heirs would have received only $96,746.12.

INVESTIGATE, AND SAVE MONEY BY INSURING ON THIS PLAN, AND MAKE MONEY

by securing an agency for it. Address,
NATIONAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.,
74 and 80 Van Buren St., Chicago.

"To any one who wants a book that will prove both entertaining and profitable, as good literature always is, and does not know precisely what to ask for, we very select one of

The Leisure Hour Series."

—Boston Advertiser.

LATEST VOLUMES.

INGO. By G. FREYTAG, author of "Debt and Credit."

DIMITRI ROUDINE. By IVAN TURGENIEFF.

ANSLIP IN THE FENS. With illustrations. WHAT THE SWALLOW SANG. By F. SPIELHUYER, author of "Problematic Characters," etc.

HERO CARTHEW. By LOUISE PARR, author of "Dorothy Fox," etc.

BABOLAIN. By G. DROS.

UNDER THE GREENWOOD TREE. By THOMAS HARDY.

COUNT KOSTIA. By VICTOR CHERBULIEZ.

Price, $1.25 per volume.
"These are cool and tasteful outside, and variously attractive within; excellent summer books, and pleasant to read when summer is past."—Boston Transcript.

HOLT & WILLIAMS,
25 Bond St., N. Y.

FRANCE.

"The sketches furnish precisely what is needed for a correct comprehension of existing and possible affairs in France."—N. A. and U. S. Gazette.

"Just the kind of information to meet the popular inquiry, written in so bright and readable a style, yet withal so scholarly and sagacious, as to unite the fascination of narrative with the solidity of history."—Inquirer.

JUST PUBLISHED.

The Leaders of France,

OR,

The Men of the Third Republic.

A series of 26 biographical, historical, and character sketches of Thiers, Mac Mahon, Gambetta, Casimir Perier, Duc De Broglie, Duc D'Aumale, D'Audiffret Pasquier, Dufaure, and the prominent Frenchmen of the present time (supposed to have been written by Granville Murray, credited as the author of "The Member for Paris"), reprinted from the latest English edition. Cloth, extra, 12mo. Price $1.75.

"A collected republication of the very brilliant and well-informed sketches which have excited much attention and speculation on their appearance in the Daily News, and led men to ask whether there could be on the English press two men with opportunity and ability like those of the author of 'The Member for Paris.' Such brilliant and sagacious sketches will be read very eagerly; the charm and value of most of them are that they are historical as well as portraits."—British Quarterly Review.

"A brilliant series of short papers."—Westminster Review.

Bible Revision.

The History of our English Bible and its Seven Ancestors.

An Historical Plea for Revision. By Rev. TREADWELL WALDEN, author of Sunday School Prayer Book, &c., &c. 16mo, tinted paper. Cloth, extra, $1.25

PORTER & COATES, PUBLISHERS,
Philadelphia.

LADIES!

Eureka Machine Twist,
50 and 100 Yard Spools.

AND THE

Eureka Button-Hole Twist,
10 Yard Spools.

ARE THE BEST IN USE.

For Sale at all Trimming Stores.

REAL ESTATE SECURITIES,
paying 8 to 10 per cent. interest, or

Investments in Real Estate
In Chicago and Vicinity,

If judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The old REAL ESTATE AND LOAN AGENCY

OF
ERNST PRUSSING,

143 Randolph St., CHICAGO,
(Established 1853)

Guarantee perfect title and ample security in all its Real Estate Loans.

First-class securities always on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge. Real Estate investments made on commission and on shares; taxes paid, &c. Orders of capitalists and real estate owners respectfully solicited.

Iron in the Blood

THE PERFECT SYRUP Purifies and Enriches the Blood, Tones up the System, Builds up the Broken-down, Cures Female Complaints, Dropsy, Debility, Haemorrhage, Dyspepsia, &c. Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy from weak, sickly, suffering creatures, to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

Caution.—Be sure you get the right article. See that "Pervunia Syrup" is blown in the glass. Pamphlets free. Send for one. SETH W. FOWLE & SONS, Proprietors, Boston, Mass. For sale by druggists generally.

BABCOCK
407 Broadway, N.Y.
Near Canal St.
FIRE APPARATUS
EXTINGUISHERS,
HOOK & LADDER TRUCKS,
ENGINES & TANKS,
P. M. FARMER,
Des't.

THE LIBERAL CHRISTIAN

FOR 1873.

HENRY W. BELLOWES, Editor,
Will endeavor, not only to maintain its present reputation as

ONE OF THE BEST WEEKLY JOURNALS OF Religion, Literature, Science,
and Art

Now published in this country, but to fulfill, more completely than ever before, its part of the work of supplying the American people with the

Best Thought on the Highest and Most Vital Themes

Of both general and particular interest, in all departments of human life. To this end, special arrangements have been entered into with able writers and correspondents to keep the columns of THE LIBERAL CHRISTIAN supplied, during the year 1873, with a pleasant variety of good articles and letters on the most stirring topics of the day.

The several departments of the paper—FELLOWSHIP OF THE SPIRIT; OUR CONTRIBUTORS; SIGNS OF THE TIMES; ORIGINAL AND SELECTED ARTICLES; OUR LITERARY RECORD; EDITORIAL; THE WEEK'S NEWS—ECCLIASTICAL, POLITICAL, AND GENERAL; CORRESPONDENCE; OUR BOYS' AND GIRLS; OUR SCIENTIFIC RECORD; THE FINE ARTS—will each receive the special care of the gentlemen and ladies under whose charge they have been placed; and no effort will be spared to provide A WEEKLY FAMILY JOURNAL Worthy of the Patronage of American Homes, and of the Enlightened Nineteenth Century.

Price of Subscription, $3 per Annum, Payable in Advance.

Upon application by letter, specimen copies will be sent free.

Jos. N. Hallock, Publisher,
P. O. Box 6060.

114 Nassau Street, New York City.

LOUIS BLACK,
194 Jefferson Ave., Detroit, Michigan,
MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN,
INVENTOR AND PROPRIETOR OF
Black's Patent Interchangeable Spectacles, and Self-Attaching Spring Eye Glasses. Importer of all kinds of Optical Goods. The best Spectacles fitted to the Eyeight so as to improve it.

A GREAT OFFER.—Homes Water & Son, 451 Broadway, New York, will dispose of 100 Pianos and Organs of first-class makers, including WATERS', at extremely low prices, for cash, or part cash, and balance in ready monthly payments. New 7-Octave first-class Pianos, all modern improvements, for $20 cash. Organs, $35 to $75. Double-Reed Organs, $100; 4-stop, $110; 8-stop, $135 and upwards.
AGENTS WANTED.

PROGRESSIVE

PUBLICATION HOUSE.

A. J. DAVIS & CO., Standard Books on Harmonical Philosophy, Spiritualism, Free Religion, and General Reform. Constantly on hand all the STANDARD FIDELITY PUBLICATIONS, in paper and cloth bindings, at wholesale and retail, and sent by mail to any part of the world on receipt of the price and postage. Address No. 21 East Fourth St., New York. (P. O. Box No. 38, Station D.)

ARITHMETICAL CARDS & GAMES.

With these Cards the drill of Men-ajants Arithmetic is made more palatable—besides many (including common card) games can be played. Teachers, and pupils, and everybody should use them for instruction and amusement. AGENTS WANTED. One part with book of instructions, sent post-paid for fifty cents. Address P. H. RATESON, Drawer 90, Toledo, O.

THE

COMMONWEALTH

LIFE GENTLEMEN of standing and ability (either in professional or mercantile pursuits) are desired in all parts of the country to represent this reliable company. Our plans of Insurance are simple, popular, and honest.
Address 178 Broadway, NEW YORK.

CO.

Are You Going to Paint?

THEN USE

The Averill Chemical Paint.

THE HANDSOMEST AND MOST DURABLE EXTERIOR PAINT.

Costs Less, and will Outwear any other.

Gen. G. B. Smith, Sedalia, Mo., writes:—"Two coats of 'Averill' covered better, and looked finer, than three coats of Lead and Oil, with a coat of varnish thereon. I would not again see Lead and Oil were it given to me."

Levi Shaw, Trustee of the Society of Quakers, Mt. Lebanon, writes:—"The bulldozers painted with the Averill White Paint some three and a half years since, I have examined, and found it retains the gloss nearly if not quite as well as when first put on. It is the best paint I have ever used."

Sample card of beautiful colors, and recommendations from owners of the finest residences in the country, furnished free, by the

VERILL CHEMICAL PAINT CO.

32 Burling Slip, New York, and 118 Superior St., Cleveland, O.

THE

BOSTON INVESTIGATOR.

THE OLDEST REFORM JOURNAL IN THE UNITED STATES.

Is published

EVERY WEDNESDAY,

AT

84 WASHINGTON STREET.

BOSTON, MASS.

By JOSIAH P. MENDEN.

EDITED BY HORACE SKEATE.

Price, $3 50 per annum. Single Copies, Seven Cents. Specimen Copies sent, on receipt of a Two-Cent Stamp to pay the postage.

The "INVESTIGATOR" is devoted to the liberal cause in Religion; or, in other words, to Universal Mental Liberty. Independent in all its discussions, discarding superstitious theories of what never can be known, it devotes its columns to things of this world alone, and leaves the next, if there be one, to those who have entered its unknown shores. Believing that it is the duty of mortals to work for the interests of this life, it confines itself to things of this life, and, strictly, it has just entered its 50th year, and asks for a support from those who are fond of sound reasoning, good reading, reliable news, accurate science, art, and a useful Family Journal. Reader! please send your subscription for six months or one year; and if you are not satisfied with the way the "INVESTIGATOR" is conducted, we won't ask you to continue with us any longer.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Five Cents.

VOLUME 4.

TOLEDO, OHIO, AUGUST 30, 1873.

WHOLE NO. 192.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; J. Gallion, Vice President; F. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries; E. K. Thomas, Treasurer.
BOSTON, MASS.—J. S. Rogers, President; A. Davis, J. W. Smith, Vice Presidents; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries; J. A. J. Wilcox, Treasurer; R. H. Ranney, F. W. Clarke, H. B. Storor, Executive Committee.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; J. E. Curda, Vice President; A. Giddings, Secretary; E. Wood, Treasurer; L. B. Crowell, M. A. Giddings, D. D. Holmes, Executive Committee.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; L. Magenheimer, Vice President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary; Wm. Fischer, Treasurer; A. C. Stowe, C. G. Hoadly, R. P. Thomson, Executive Committee.
TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; H. Bruner, Vice President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary; A. W. Harbaugh, Treasurer; L. Westover, J. Bruner, W. Krause, Executive Committee.
VINELAND, N. J.—E. Bristol, President; E. Dickinson, E. B. Duffey, Vice Presidents; G. Bialdell, Secretary; S. M. Clute, Treasurer; John Gage, R. A. Russell, E. O. Bladell, D. L. Butler, A. C. Bristol, P. T. W. Campbell, Executive Committee.
JUNCTIONVILLE, NER.—J. W. Eastman, President; Jas. B. Smith, Vice President; Isaac Baldwin, Treasurer; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
OLATHE, KAN.—R. B. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary; J. N. Haws, R. Fancoast, P. Julien, Executive Committee.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary; J. W. Watkins, Treasurer.
BREMEN, MICH.—A. G. Enslman, President; L. Brown, Vice President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary; C. R. Capin, Treasurer; A. D. Enos, E. O. Barnum, Betsey Brown, Executive Committee.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Mental Freedom.

ADDRESS DELIVERED BEFORE THE PITTSBURGH RADICAL SOCIETY, NOV. 24, 1872.

BY GEORGE H. HOLTZMAN.

I wish to allude to an expression used in this Hall recently by a distinguished and able liberal. It was this: "A man who has no creed is a fool." This remark has dwelt prominently in my mind ever since it was made here some weeks since, and the result of my reflections upon it is that it is wrong,—at least without qualification. Such a doctrine is calculated to mislead young liberals who have already so much to contend with in their aspirations after mental liberty. True, it may be said that a creed held loosely, for the day or hour, to be altered or amended as new convictions arise, may not be inconsistent with tolerable freedom of mind; but this is not the generally conceived sense of creed. We rather understand a definite summary of belief, codified after much reflection and conclusion, and henceforth stored upon the shelf of unalterable conviction for reference and guidance,—a standard by which new thoughts and revelations are to be tested. If a creed in this sense be evidence of wisdom, serving as a double-twisted cable to hold firmly the bark of reason lest she might escape upon the uncertain and troublesome sea of doubt and speculation,—then two points are settled at once: first, the sooner we are provided with such a saving rope the better, and secondly, the only consideration worth our solicitude is that it be strong enough. The particular stuff of which it is made, or how twisted, is of no importance,—all creeds being, I have the best evidence for saying, alike perfect!

The first step towards liberty is to cut this cable at once; and, if need be, trust to sheer luck to cut the compromise alluded to—the sliding cable creed—suggests that we must have an anchor at least. Wherefore, if we have chart and compass? We are embarked for perpetual soundings of the great sea of truth,—a waste whose confines are yet undiscovered and perhaps undiscoverable.

As a further use of this metaphor might suggest sensations of sea-sickness, I abandon it, and submit this proposition: Is positive and entire mental freedom consistent with any sort or kind of creed?

A creed, as it seems to me, involves the idea of completeness,—a budget, comprising whatever is required to settle (for the time being at least) the questions of the origin, the duty, and the destiny of the assenting individual. It is hardly a creed unless it includes this much; it is only then a part of a creed not yet wholly demolished. Now I ask, can a creed in this sense, I have defined it truly, be assented to by any free mind, in view of the incompleteness of discovery upon these points up to the present time? I incline to think not,—not even for a day or an hour; not even with all the saving clauses that might be invented, nor with entire openness to further conviction. For if a thing be not demonstrated to its ultimate, and thus absolutely known and concluded, how can it be accepted for a moment, and the mind still be free?

But I propose to go further than this in defining mental freedom, and to speculate thus. It seems to me doubtful that the period should ever arrive when a definite creed will be compatible with free thought. Its occupation would be gone, and "FINIS" written upon the last page of the Book of Nature.

However true or otherwise future ages may prove this proposition, I maintain that it is at least true to-day, that the transitory state of knowledge concerning man, his origin and destiny, declares that the time has not yet arrived when the free mind can indite its creed.

Where then stands the genuine liberal, the man of no creed, to-day? The truly emancipated mind, active in desire after truth, maintains a receptive condition distinct from mere credulity. He receives without affirming; he doubts without denying. He occupies a position of the truest humility before men. He will not cry "absurd" or "ridiculous" as to anything not yet fathomed by his mind, nor will he assume that beyond some stated line nothing further is to be ascertained. I think he will discard the word "unknowable" as savoring of dogmatism as truly as any creed. At the same time, he is perhaps the boldest of men. Fear neither of God, hell, nor the devil will suppress the inquiries which he is prompted to make of his own mind or other men's on all subjects whatsoever, and nothing will deter him from pushing the investigation to a satisfactory result if obtainable. He will, as Jefferson advises, "question boldly even the existence of a God," satisfied that, if there be such a personage, he is too wise and exalted to be offended with intelligent doubt which has for its object reliable knowledge on the subject.

He will, as a rule, abandon the aggressive method of argument. He knows too little indeed as yet to assume authority in teaching. Yet he will modestly suggest that this or that thought appears reasonable to him. He will listen with interest to views new or old presented by a more positive mind, but he will not be "taken in" by the sophistry of assertion, eloquence, or vehemence of expression. He will test all propositions in the laboratory of his mind, assisted by such aids as actual discovery affords. He will be persevering in his tests, but will not announce his conversion without clear and indubitable proof. Even then, it will be subject to amendment on receiving further light. True, if dogmatism takes him by the throat, and without argument or reason presents the alternative "believe or be damned," he will very properly show fight, and be apt to retort, "I'll be damned if I do."

A very important condition accompanying mental freedom is that the mind is assimilated to Nature in respect to mode of operation and progress. Nature will not be hurried in her work. We cannot see the great changes going on in her realm, yet researches into the past show how vast and regular these are. Do what we will, we cannot even detect the process of growth in the rapidly forming blade of grass. All seems still and stationary, and yet how surely is all matter in unceasing motion. Thus the freed mind learns how blessed it is to wait and be patient, both in regard to its own progress in knowledge and the general dissemination of the truth in the world. It does not distress him that all are not as he is, knowing as he does that mind as well as matter is silently and imperceptibly working in all its particles, and that inevitable Truth is the tendency of all intelligence, whatever may be the apparent deviation in ages present and yet to come.

I wish to say a few words, as an individual free-thinker, as to what seems to be the natural attitude of this class of persons towards traditional authority, especially that great bug-bear of our time, the Christian Bible. I do not see how a free mind can tamper for a moment with the idea that antiquity has any just claim to impose upon it ANY BURDEN WHATSOEVER. Claiming as we do (and this we cannot relinquish without returning into bondage) the right to settle for ourselves the question whether there be a God or not, it necessarily includes the right to judge as to how such a being might reasonably be expected to communicate with mankind. On this basis we will examine the Bible, as a history, as a revelation, as a command, as a teacher of pure morals. It must stand in our estimation, in whole or in part, just as it meets the tests with which we are provided; and if we perform this duty honestly, we are responsible for the results arrived at to ourselves alone.

While on this branch of my subject, I hope our New Church friends will allow me to express myself plainly and candidly in reference to the prodigious claim set up by them in regard to revealed truth. If I misunderstand this claim, the misconception is shared by not a few others with whom I have compared notes, and the fault lies in part at least at the door of the exponents of the doctrine, who have failed to make it clear. I state it as it seems to me fully warranted by their language. The formula is about thus: "The Bible is the word of God. It is meaningless without the key. We HAVE THE KEY!"

A parallel to this assumption occurs to me, and if it should seem in any way discourteous, I ask our friends (who are very good-natured) to overlook it for the sake of its humorous aptness. On one occasion, when a very pretentious petition was presented to the English parliament, purporting to be from a large body but having only a few insignificant names to it, Sir Robert Peel said it reminded him of three tailors in Tooley street, who met in the Reform Bill excitement, and drew up a solemn League and Covenant, commencing "We, the people of England!"

Now perhaps the New Church folks hardly realize that the impression made by such a claim as theirs upon one standing outside of their system—a mind, too, resolved upon entire freedom—is mainly amazement at the coolness of it. I know not how else to express it. The demand upon us is scarcely different, so far as I can see, from that made by the Romish Church. Let us see. Article 1st—There is a God. 2d—There is a written word of God. 3d—The interior sense of this word—the actual meaning in fact—is only perceived through a study of the doctrine of correspondences first taught by Swedenborg about one hundred years ago, he having had his spiritual vision opened by Divine interposition for the purpose of enlightening the world. 4th—The New Church enjoys this enlightenment and holds it in trust for all who desire to be led into pure Truth. Reasonable inference—the real article is not to be found outside of the New Church or apart from its method of discovery. The New Churchman, however, imagines he evades this dogmatic position by saying, "We don't claim credence for our doctrine on the authority of Swedenborg or any other of its teachers. Its inherent truth will convince the candid explorer." This appears to be a distinction without much of a difference. It involves the idea that we have not done our whole duty in the search after truth, until we have investigated the New Church method of discovery. This must inevitably follow, if the truth par excellence be there. Now the free mind rebels right here. He says, Upon what compulsion must I dive into your mysteries? I cannot yield the point that anything can demand authoritatively my investigation, unless the evidence exists in and of my own mind that it is worthy of investigation. I cannot conceive of anything that possesses this INHERENT RIGHT TO BE INVESTIGATED except Nature herself, of which I am indubitably a part. I infer, therefore, that an investigation of New Church method should be a matter of choice to me, and consequently that it is possible to arrive at truth without concerning myself about it. In other words, I have the right to say, Nature's claims upon my thought are so plain and so exacting, that I cannot afford to divert my attention from a certain fountain of wisdom to listen to that which is as yet to me but the voice of a man!

Is not a mind to be so untrammelled as this? Or must we perforce hearken to the voice of Swedenborg as to the voice of God? Affirming this, how could we consistently disregard the command of the Pope, and where would the obligation cease, short of the subversion of mental freedom?

I conclude with a reflection or two upon the superiority of the position occupied by the mind freed from the shackles of superstition and hereditary belief. I can conceive of no greater cause for self-congratulation, when one looks around at the vast multitude who are slaves to credism, and considers how firmly riveted are the chains which bind a large portion of mankind, and how few comparatively seem to desire to be free,—than to reflect, "From this bondage I am happily delivered. Though as yet the structure of my theory upon the great questions of my origin and destiny may be but barely begun, and I am subject to the taunt that I 'have no belief and must therefore be unsettled and unhappy,' yet I feel myself soaring aloft without restraint. I suck honey from this or that flower without hindrance. I calmly survey the field of theological strife with all the satisfaction of indifference, knowing that all the while GREAT NATURE is gradually settling the question in the interest of PURE TRUTH. It isn't our fight, nor shall it be our funeral." Now ought not the man to be happy who feels thus, and grateful too,—for God only knows how some of us ever managed to clamber over the wall surrounding the great city of Superstition.

A favorite indulgence of the pious Christian—a sort of selfish joy—consists in the reflection that in heaven he will be more blessed than the angels who never fell from grace,—these latter being barred the more exquisite bliss of redemption through Christ. Though this is akin to the philosophy of rejoicing in the tooth-ache, because of the necessary sequence of delicious recovery, there is yet a reality in the diversity of experience described. The reprieved criminal is suffocated with joy in possessing that which stirs no emotion in the breasts of those who never forfeited liberty. The escaped slave experiences an intensity of happiness unknown to those who have always breathed the air of freedom. The free-thinker, too, redeemed from credism, appreciates his new-found birthright at a higher rate than he whose reason has never been fettered. But, viewing the whole life at once, I am satisfied that the latter experience is the more enviable. It is the more rare, too, and the man who possesses it may well prize it above power, or fame, or riches.

COMMENTARY ON THE BIBLE

BY BISHOPS AND OTHER CLERGY OF THE ANGLICAN CHURCH, COMMONLY CALLED THE SPEAKER'S COMMENTARY.

AN ARTICLE PUBLISHED BY JOHN MURRAY, LONDON.

There is an old but very true saying that "one man may enter a field and steal a horse, while another may not so much as be seen looking over a hedge." This saying is exemplified by the manner in which the writings of the bishops and clergy in the above-mentioned Commentary and the writings of Bishop Colenso have respectively been received by the public in general, but more especially by the Anglican clergy and ministers of all Orthodox denominations.

The Commentary contains a host of passages which would, only a few years ago, have been considered suspicious, dangerous, and even highly heretical if Bishop Colenso had published them. Take the following as a few instances: In Vol. I., Part I., page 830, at Exodus xx. 1-17, we find written—"It may be noticed that, while it is here said that 'God spake all these words,' and in Deut. v. 4, that 'He spake face to face'—in the New Testament the giving of the Law is spoken of as having been through the ministrations of angels. Acts vii. 53, Galatians iii. 19, and Heb. ii. 2."

At Section 2 of the Notes on Exodus xx., page 335, we have: "But there is a question which rightly claims precedence of these—What actually were the words of Jehovah that were engraved on the Tables of Stone? We have two distinct statements, one in Exodus xx. 1-17, and one in Deut. v. 6-21, apparently of equal authority, but differing from each other in several weighty particulars. Each is said, with reiterated emphasis, to contain the words that were actually spoken by the Lord, and written by him upon the stones."

Again, page 336: "It has been generally assumed that the whole of one or other of these copies was written on the Tables. Most Commentators have supposed that the original document is in Exodus, and that the author of Deuteronomy wrote from memory, with variations suggested at the time. Others have conceived that Deuteronomy must furnish the most correct form, since the Tables must have been in actual existence when the book was written. But neither of these views can be fairly reconciled with the statements in Exodus and Deuteronomy, to which reference has been made. If either copy, as a whole, represents what was written on the Tables, it is obvious that the other cannot do so."

And on page 343: "Adopting the conclusion as by far the most probable one, that the Book of the Covenant included from chapters xx. 22 to xxiii. 33, it is evident that the document cannot be regarded as a strictly systematic whole. Portions of it were probably traditional rules handed down from the patriarchs and retained by the Israelites in Egypt. Probable trace of pre-Mosaic antiquity may be seen in xx. 24-26, xxi. 6, xxiii. 19, &c. Some of the laws relate to habits of fixed abode, not (at least, if taken in their strict form) to such a mode of life as that of the Israelites in their march through the wilderness. (See xxii. 5-6, 29, xxiii. 10-11.) Some, especially those relating to slavery, would seem to have been modifications of ancient usages. (See on xxi. 20-21.) These more or less ancient maxims have been associated with such decisions on cases of difference as had been up to this time pronounced by Moses and the Judges, whom he had appointed by the advice of Jethro. (See xviii. 13-26.)"

Also: "The adoption of Patriarchal maxims accords with the spirit of the Mosaic legislation as expressed in the Fifth Commandment."

For further instances reference has only to be made to the Commentary itself, or to the "Critical Examination of it by Bishop Colenso," in Five Parts, published by Longmans and Co., at about four shillings each part. Now, after reading such quotations, what are people to think? They are not so ignorant or wilfully blind or prejudiced as not to see what the so-called Orthodox bishops and clergy frankly declared as unsound and perilous in Bishop Colenso is now taught by themselves as TRUTH. What must be the effect on the minds of multitudes when they find their pastors (after the utterances of eminent divines in the Commentary) still content to teach the contrary through the Church Catechism in their schools, and to proclaim the contrary through the Communion Service in their churches?

Surely, not without cause, and not too soon, does Bishop Colenso, at pages x., xi., in the Preface to the Second Part of his Criticisms on the Bishop's Commentary, call the serious attention of the Clergy to the glaring inconsistency (to use no harsher term) of such proceedings, and give some plain, rational, and wholesome advice, in the following words: "It is to be presumed, however, that this result of modern criticism, at all events, as now avouched in this Commentary under the sanction of the Archbishops and Bishops of England, will no longer be kept a secret from young people when catechised, or from the people at large: that no Clergyman of intelligence will read these words any longer as the Divine words actually uttered 'with a loud voice' on Sinai, without relieving his character—may, his conscience—from the charge of 'speaking lies in the name of the Lord,' by explaining to his flock from time to time the real truth with respect to the Decalogue," etc., etc.

Such being the present state of the case, need we be surprised at so many of the people clamoring for secular education, and objecting to send their children to denominational schools, when they are forced to doubt the sincerity of their clergy, who, knowing these things, keep back the truth in unrighteousness; and not only so, but do their utmost to prevent their flocks from looking into such matters!

And let me respectfully ask the Bishops, Clergy, and Laity of the Church of England, whether they do not consider the present time a fitting opportunity for a thorough revision and remodelling of the Church Prayer-Book with its Catechism and Thirty-Nine Articles, together with the Constitutions and Canons Ecclesiastical?

Before I conclude, I must call attention to the way in which the Bishops, alias the Speaker's, Commentary, shirks many difficult and contradictory passages. E. g., it does not say one word about the striking contradiction between Deuteronomy ix. 1 and Deuteronomy xxxiv. 8; Joshua i. 11, ii. 16-22, iii. 1-2; although its authors are candid enough to allow that there are grave contradictions between Joshua i. 11, ii. 16-25, and iii. 1-2, in these words: "Thus eight days must have intervened between the sending of the spies ii. 1, and the actual passage of the river iii. 2. Thus the declaration of Joshua in the text would not in fact have been carried out."

So much, alas! for the dogma of the Infallibility of the Bible, and also for the teaching of the Clergy of the Church of England, and ministers of other denominations.

Truth obviously demands much more, or much less, than the concessions of the recent champions of Orthodoxy. When they give up the theory that every sentence of the Scriptures (mistakes of the copyists and translators, etc., etc., apart) is the Word of God, when they admit with reference to any single sentence that God did not say and do what the Bible declares that he did say and do, they yield the key of their position to the foe, and the fall of their citadel, Orthodoxy, becomes but a matter of time and detail. Inquiry is no longer to be prevented. Criticism is not repulsed. Reason and conscience are no longer to bow to an unerring guide, but are at liberty to hear, investigate, and verify. We have come to this, and every thinking layman must soon perceive the fact; the clerical denouncers of Bishop Colenso really, but in a most reluctant and unhandsome manner, accept principles which, when honestly applied, lead pretty much to the same results at which Bishop Colenso has arrived, and by adopting them they in their turn most likely will disturb, more than ever Bishop Colenso has done, the credulous confidence of non-thinking and non-reading professors of Christianity, whether they be Laics or Clerics.

CANTAU, A. M.

[Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1873, by P. K. Annot, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.]

PAUL GOWER.

A RATIONALISTIC STORY

OR

ENGLISH AND AMERICAN LIFE.

CHAPTER XXVI.—Concluded.

TRANSPIRES IN OR NEAR NASSAU STREET.

"We should call such a man a nuisance and a blackguard in England," said Sabin.

"Well, I don't know that we do anything else here," responded the doctor, as they entered the restaurant together.

It was high noon socially at Crook and Duff's, being midway between that hour and one, when business New York snatches a brief interval from its feverish pursuit of "the almighty dollar" for the purposes of rest and refreshment. The place was crowded throughout with a lively concourse of eaters, drinkers, and talkers, most of those present combining the three characters in one person. Mr. Wheeler was not at the lunch-counter—where a long row of customers, seated on tall, slim stools, were disposing of remarkably large oysters, segments of fruit pie, and coffee—but John Gower soon discovered him in one of a standing group of drinkers and smokers, whom he promptly quitted to join the new comers.

The fifteen minutes conversation that ensued between the Americans relating almost entirely to business (after the first mutual recognition and complimentary inquiries) would possess but little interest for the reader, and is therefore omitted. During its progress Paul and Dick ordered cigars and sherry-cobblers, and amused themselves, as was by no means difficult to do, by watching the surrounding scene. The older men joining them, the talk became general, when Mr. Wheeler (who looked much the same as he did seven months back, in England, and told Paul that he never expected to have seen him alive in America) proposed to introduce his new acquaintances to the group he had recently quitted, informing Sabin that it might prove advantageous to him professionally. So the presentation took place accordingly.

"Mr. Brough, Mr. O'Byrne, Dr. Ritchings, and Mr. Woodruff." The first was a portly, rather handsome man, with a jolly, shaven face and carefully trimmed moustache; his uncouth voice had a mellifluous flavor of the brogue in it, at once imparting raciness to his speech and betraying his nationality. Somehow—probably from his oratorical manner—Sabin immediately set him down for an actor. The second was an Irishman also, but younger and shorter in stature, a peculiarity especially manifest in his legs, though the rest of his anatomy did not lack symmetry or muscularity. He had a bold, aquiline nose, large, insolent blue eyes, not much forehead, and a very receding chin, likewise moustaches and scanty side-whiskers; his appearance denoted extreme conceit and self-importance. The third was a good-looking, chubby man, with a fair complexion and a shrewd American countenance. The fourth had dark hair, neither beard, whiskers, nor moustaches, rather a high color, and a business-like manner. All the party were very well dressed, and inclining to hats, boots, and gloves of the newest and glossiest description.

Paul thought he had heard some of the names before, and was puzzling where, when Sabin furnished the clew by saying quietly, "The Reverend Scobell's rivals." It was intended only for his friend's ear, but Ritchings, who stood close by, caught it and smiled so significantly that Dick added,

"We were directed here by somebody who was talking of you—Mr. Scobell."

"Indeed!" he said. Ritchings laughed. "Then I guess he wasn't complimentary." "Oh, Scobell!" interrupted Mr. O'Byrne, with sonorous scorn. "I wonder somebody hasn't cowed the ruffian before now!" And he looked round, tossing his head disdainfully, as if to imply that he, Mr. O'Byrne, was ready to undertake the proposed chastisement on the slightest personal provocation, or none at all, if anybody expressed a desire to that effect.

"Pho! he's not worth powder and shot," remarked Mr. Brough, magniloquently. "Keep on never minding him, I tell you, and don't be after fighting a scavenger with mud. You were saying, Woodruff—"

"He might have been sub-editor if he had kept a civil tongue in his head," returned the person addressed, before complying with the suggestion. "I was going to propose that all the fellows should think it over and send in their notions. We might offer a premium of twenty dollars for the one adopted."

"Twenty! fifty, begad! and cheap at the money!" said Mr. Brough. "Punch" was an inspiration. Gentlemen, we are discussing the title for our paper. Does anybody know where there's a commodity of good names to be bought? Because it would be as convenient for us as for Jack Falstaff. My friend Woodruff, here—for Mr. Ritchings, I understand, succeeds from the enterprise, intending to devote himself exclusively to the Pepperpot—our excellent publisher, I say, will be happy to negotiate with anybody for the desideratum in question, exhibiting his accustomed spirit and liberality. It being a well-known fact that all Yankee-Doodledeem languishes for some appropriate medium through which the combined rays of wit and humor, collected from all points into one brilliant focus, should radiate through the length and breadth of—"

"Spare us your preface, Brough!" interrupted O'Byrne, whereat the others laughed, including the good-humored future editor, who jocularly shook his stick at his compatriot by way of reply.

"Sure, it is in the preface," he said. "I'd be to blame if I hadn't it ready—with the name left out for future insertion. I begin by stating there's absolutely no necessity for a preface at all, which is a good Irish reason for supplying one. Gentlemen, what'll you take? We are going to start a first-class comic weekly that shall knock old Punch higher than a kite and make all our fortunes, and have every requisite in the world but a title—not but what there's lashings of 'em already suggested by ingenious artists and contributors, only they happen to be entirely unsuitable and therefore below the lofty standard of our fastidious aspirations. Myself has proposed at least half a dozen, one of which, at present, has the pre-eminence, but it will be readily and cheerfully withdrawn in deference to any gentleman's superior inspiration. We want something tremendous—something irresistible."

"There ought to be a supper," said O'Byrne importantly, "where the thing should be talked over and definitely settled. That's how Punch originated. We shall all be at sixes and sevens until we have agreed upon a name. We can't even begin advertising."

"By the powers, but we have, though!" replied Mr. Brough, "in all the daily papers, announcing our anonymous intentions and the unequalled talent at command. Didn't ye observe it in the Emerald, Tripod, and Time-server? But, Fitz, the supper is a good notion, and shall be carried into effect. Woodruff, me boy, you shall pay for it, I'll take the chair, and we'll have a glorious night of it. It's but reasonable that such a bantling as ours is going to be should have a christening. Here's its health and prosperity; and may we live to celebrate its hundredth birthday in as big a bowl of punch as we'll see the bottom of at Windust's next Saturday, plaze the Lord!"

So it was settled that there should be a supper at Windust's, to which Paul Gower and Richard Sablin were presently invited, as artists and possible contributors to the unborn periodical. And both young men felt decidedly elated in consequence, and interchanged congratulations on the prospect of the speedy establishment of a vehicle affording ample scope for their abilities, and an introduction to the world of American journalism.

People are apt to get into mischief by offering impertinent, or at least undesired, advice. A droll example has been quoted from the writings of Voltaire, as follows:—

A Frenchman had the audacity to write to Law, the famous controller-general, telling him that he was the greatest blockhead, the greatest simpleton, or the greatest knave, in propagating the belief that a nation can be made rich by the mere issue of what is called paper money. The Frenchman was correct in his opinion as to the folly of Law's scheme, but he did not act prudently in so addressing him. Being considered a dangerous individual, the authorities conducted him to prison at St. Lazarus.

When he got out of St. Lazarus, where he studied a great deal and fortified his reason, he went to Rome. He demanded a public audience of the Pope, on condition that no one should interrupt him during his speech; and he thus addressed him: "Holy Father, you are Antichrist; and mark how I shall prove it to your Holiness. I call him Antichrist whose life and acts are contradictory to what Christ did and commanded. Now Christ was poor, and you are very rich. He paid tribute, and you exact it. He submitted to the powers of this world, and you have become one of these powers. He went about on foot, and you go to Castel-Gaudolpho in a sumptuous equipage. He ate of anything that was given him, and you compel us to eat fish of Friday and Saturday, though we live far from the sea and from rivers. He forbade Simon Barjona to protect himself with the sword, and you have many swords to protect you. Therefore, in this sense, your Holiness is Antichrist. I reverence you very much in every other capacity, and I ask of you an indulgence in articulo mortis." As might have been expected, they put the man of pure reason into the Castle of St. Angelo.

When he got out of the Castle of St. Angelo, he hastened to Venice, and demanded an audience of the Doge. "Your Serene Highness," said he to him, "must commit an extravagant folly in espousing the sea every year. For, in the first place, one does not marry himself twice to the same person. Secondly, your marriage resembles that of Harlequin, which was only half a marriage, since the consent of the other party was wanting. Thirdly, who can assure you that the other maritime powers will not one day step in and dispossess you of your bride?" Thus he spoke, and they shut him up in the tower of St. Marks.

When he regained his liberty, he went to Constantinople, procured an audience of the Mufti, and spoke to him thus: "Your religion, though it may comprehend many good things, such as the worship of the Supreme Being, and the necessity of being just and charitable, is only a patchwork of Judaism, and a tiresome collection of old wives' tales. If the Archangel Gabriel did bring from the other world the leaves of the Koran to Mohammed, all Arabia would have seen him descend. Nobody saw him; therefore, Mohammed was a bold impostor, who deceived those who were weak enough to believe him." Scarcely had he uttered these words, when he was impaled.

Nevertheless, as Voltaire remarks, he always spoke pure reason. His error was excessive indiscretion. The naked truth must not always be told.

HOW TO TURN OUT.—The Duke of Wellington always slept on an iron bedstead eighteen inches wide. "When a man wants to turn over," he said, "it is time for him to turn out." The Emperor Nicholas did the same, Mr. Owen says. The principle is well enough, but I think the detail is wrong. Sleep itself is far too important to be made uncomfortable. My old friend Rossiter fixed his alarm so that, at the fore-ordained moment, the bed-clothes were dragged from the bed, and Rossiter lay shivering. I have myself somewhere the drawings and specifications for a patent (which I never applied for) which arranges a set of chains and wheel-work under the bedstead which, at the moment appointed, lift the pillow end six feet, on the now horizontal foot-board. He is not apt to sleep long after that. Rossiter found another contrivance, which worked better. The alarm-clock struck a match, which lighted the lamp, which boiled the water for Rossiter's shaving. If Rossiter stayed in bed too long, the water boiled over upon his razor, and clean shirt, and the prayer-book his mother gave him, and Coleridge's autograph, and his open pocket-book, and all the other precious things he could put in a basin underneath when he went to bed; so he had to get up before that moment came.—Old and New.

Mr. Elliot, a Baltimore aeronaut, some years before the war, ascended from Charleston, S. C. It was a very calm day, and after remaining in the air two or three hours, just as it was getting dark, he descended on one of the islands in the bay. The white folks had all gone to the city. In a cabin lay a dead negro, Dick, and around the cabin door sat half a dozen superstitious negroes. Elliot and his balloon descended noiselessly in front of them. Just before he reached the ground the darkies caught sight of him. They stood not upon the order of their going, but went at once. The anchor had reached the ground, and one of the darkies, in his haste to get away, stumbled over it just as it commenced to drag. He knew at once who had got hold of him, and his piercing shrieks were truly heart-rending as he cried: "Oh! Oh! I see not the nigger! Oh! massa Debbie! good massa Debbie! I see not the nigger! Dick's in dah! Dick in dah!" By this time he got loose and made for the swamp.

The number of stars visible to the naked eye in the entire circuit of the heavens has been usually estimated at about 6,000. An ordinary opera glass will exhibit something like ten times that number. A comparatively small telescope shows 200,000, while there are telescopes with which there is reason to believe, not less than 25,000,000 stars are visible.

Grace Greenwood relates as an instance of the extravagance of New England humor that, when a young farmer's wife made her first boy's pants precisely as ample before as behind, the father exclaimed: "Goodness! he won't know whether he's going to school or coming home!"

PERSIAN LAWS.—All the Persian laws, like those of every Mohammedan country, are supposed to be based upon the precepts of the Koran, and though the power of the Shah is practically absolute, in theory it is only in so far as it is not opposed to the accepted doctrines of the Mohammedan religion, as expounded in the sacred book of the Prophet, in his oral commentaries and sayings and in the interpretation given to them by the High Priest. Hence the enormous authority and influence of the Persian and Turkish clergy. The Shah is regarded as the Vice Regent and representative of the Prophet upon earth; and it is in this semi-sacred capacity that he claims implicit obedience by divine right from the faithful. Under him the executive government is at present carried on by the mockery of a Ministry, who are mere creatures of the Shah's breath and who have no independent will of their own; neither would they dare to express it if they had one. They may be raised to honor or degraded to infamy at any moment, and surely one of the most undesirable positions even in this slippery world is that of a Persian Minister.—Grenville Murray, in N. Y. Herald.

This notable episode in Agassiz's address of dedication at Penekese Island, the other day, strikes the Christian Union as worthy of being perpetuated upon canvas by some great artist. After a few opening words, felicitously suited to put all their minds into fellowship, Agassiz said tenderly, and with touching frankness: "I think we have need of help. I do not feel that I can call on any one here to ask a blessing for us. I know I would not have anybody pray for us at this moment. I ask you for a moment to pray for yourselves." Upon this, the great scientist—in an age in which so many other great scientists have concluded that praying is quite an unscientific and very useless proceeding—bowed his head reverently; his pupils and friends did the same; and there, in a silence that was very solemn and very beautiful, each spirit was free to crave of the Great Spirit the blessing that was needed.

What gives the modern movement against Christianity its most formidable character, is a sentiment which has found heroes and martyrs, the love of truth at all risks and despite of consequences, for the sake of truth, and for its sake alone.—Gutzot.

It is so far from being true that the effort to lift religions to a common level is antagonistic to the humanities of the age, that these humanities could not possibly dispense with such an effort.—S. Johnson.

Among the barbarisms which law and morals have not yet ceased to sanction, the most disgusting surely is, that any human being should be permitted to consider himself as having a right to the person of another.—J. S. Mill.

The Boston Herald asserts that the "fact that a newspaper is an 'organ' of any party, Church, or man, throws a doubt upon its veracity. The independent press can afford to tell the truth."

We want an intelligent race of Christians, not an affected race of boasters of culture, mental fops, who pretend to know a great deal and know nothing.—Morning Star (Baptist).

A ruler who appoints any man to an office when there is in his dominions another man better qualified for it, sins against God and against the state.—The Koran.

An Irishman, leaning against a lamp-post as a funeral procession was passing, was asked who was dead. "I can't exactly say, sir; but I presume it is the man in the coffin."

CASH RECEIPTS.

For the week ending August 23, 1873.

Thos. Nye, $3; Isaac Bierman, $3.05; Wm. Jones, $3; J. H. Ordway, $1.50; W. Austin, 10 cts.; George Hudson, 50 cts.; Mrs. F. D. Doring, 25 cts.; Mrs. Carrie Hicks, $3; Henry Muxson, $3.75; Henry Lantz, $1; Wm. Smith, $3; Thomas Howland, $3; T. Sullivan, $2.60; Alexander Reed, $5; Robert Lyon, 30 cts.; Mary E. Nye, $3; Thos. Maskell, $1.50; Howes Chapman, $1; Andrew Seaman, $1.50; J. W. Gibson, 50 cts.; Jno. Schofield, $2.70; Mary S. Nichols, $2; Grinnville M. Dillon, 75 cts.; David Watson, $4; Nathl. Robinson, $5; Geo. Draper, $7; Alfred Robinson, $1.50; W. S. Bennett, Jr., 10 cts.; Mrs. Julia O. J. Perkins, 25 cts.; J. B. Fletcher, 10 cts.; R. C. Spencer, $2.00; S. Wilkinson, $3; H. L. Daniels, $1; W. B. Gray, $3; Edward Berrian, $1; George Hamilton, $3; Frank S. Hillings, $1.50.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Postage on THE INDEX is five cents per quarter, dating from receipt of the first number, payable in advance at the place of delivery.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on New York. Cheques on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or Single Numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

The Index.

AUGUST 30, 1873.

N. B. No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
 ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
 OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, THOMAS WENTWORTH HENNINGSON, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD F. HOLLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CUNNEY, ROY CHARLES VORSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), Rev. MORGAN D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS TO INDEX STOCK.

Mrs. F. W. Christern,	New York City,	One Share	$100
Rich'd E. Westbrook,	Somerset, Pa.	"	100
R. C. Spencer,	Milwaukee, Wis.	Two "	200
R. W. Howes,	Boston, Mass.	One "	100
Chas. W. Story,	"	"	100
E. W. Meddaugh,	Detroit, Mich.	Five "	500
Jacob Hoffman,	Cumminsville, O.	One "	100
John Weiss,	Boston, Mass.	"	100
W. C. Russell,	Ithaca, N. Y.	"	100

He is to be pitied who has no beautiful outlook from his windows. Yet none is less pitiable than he before whom Memory spreads a landscape lovely with noble deeds.

"Rationalists are not welcomed to our order," says Rev. Dr. Ryder, speaking for the Universalist ministry; "we have no place or work for them." Be at ease, good Doctor. Rationalists will not trouble your "order" with importunities for admission; they find place and work elsewhere. Who is the loser?

At the Perkins library sale in London, on June 3-6, a vellum copy of the Mazarin Bible was sold for £3,400, or $21,400 of our currency,—a sum sufficient to buy a large library of the very best books for one who thinks that the use of books is to be used. Such a waste of means reminds us of the kindred folly of tulipomania, which induced men by the sheer contagion of fashion to spend whole fortunes for a single tulip-bulb. Wherein is this rage for rare copies, merely on account of their rarity, one whit more respectable? For all purposes of "salvation," a twenty-five cent Testament is as good as a twenty-thousand-dollar Bible. But "a fool and his money are soon parted."

Mr. W. P. Wilson, so well known to many of our subscribers as an active, efficient, and trustworthy agent for the Index Association, will devote the month of September to canvassing for subscriptions to the Association's capital stock. It is extremely desirable that the losses entailed by the troubles of last spring should be fully made good, and we hope that he will be kindly received by all who are friendly to the aims of THE INDEX. Owing to the past abuses of the commission system, it is necessary to state that Mr. Wilson will receive no commission at all, but will be remunerated for his time and labor at what we consider a fair rate of compensation. This we state at his own request; and we cordially commend him to the confidence of our friends.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Report, in pamphlet form, of the Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association for 1873 will be published September 1.

It contains full proceedings of the meeting, including essays by Samuel Johnson on "FREEDOM IN RELIGION" and by John Weiss on "RELIGION IN FREEDOM;" speeches by O. B. Frothingham, W. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, S. Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, Lucretia Mott, and the Annual Report of the Executive Committee.

Price, thirty cents a copy; in packages of four or more, twenty-five cents each. It can be obtained by addressing the undersigned at New Bedford, Mass., or, in Boston, of A. Williams and Company, and at Loring's.

WM. J. POTTER,

Secretary.

NOTICE.

On and after September 1, the publication office of THE INDEX will be at No. 1, Tremont Place, Boston. All letters, papers, and other communications, should be henceforth addressed to "THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, BOSTON, MASS."

Correspondents and Exchanges will please take notice.

"STICKLING" FOR JUSTICE.

In the last December Term of the Supreme Court of Ohio, as probably all of our readers learned at the time from the daily press, a final decision was reached in the well-known Cincinnati Bible-in-schools case; unless, indeed, the defeated party shall find some pretext for carrying the case to the United States courts.

The Cincinnati Board of Education, some three years since, passed the following resolutions:—

"Resolved, That religious instruction and the reading of religious books, including the Holy Bible, are prohibited in the common schools of Cincinnati, it being the true object and intent of this rule to allow the children of the parents of all sects and opinions, in matters of faith and worship, to enjoy alike the benefit of the common school fund.

"Resolved, That so much of the regulations on the course of study and the text-books in the intermediate and district schools (page 213, annual report) as reads as follows—'The opening exercises in every department shall commence by reading a portion of the Bible by or under the direction of the teacher, and appropriate singing by the pupils'—be repealed."

Application was immediately made to the Superior Court of the city, by a large disaffected part of the citizens, for an injunction restraining the Board from enforcing these resolutions. The injunction was granted; but the Board of Education appealed to the Supreme Court of the State. The December decision was on this appeal, and reversed the action of the Superior Court, thus ruling (to quote the language of the twenty-third volume of the Ohio State Reports) that—

"The Constitution of the State does not enjoin or require religious instruction, or the reading of religious books in the public schools of the State;" and that—"The legislature having placed the management of the public schools under the exclusive control of directors, trustees, and boards of education, the courts have no rightful authority to interfere by directing what instruction shall be given, or what books shall be read therein.

It will be noticed that this decision does not really settle the main question at issue, which is not whether the local school authorities have power to forbid the reading of the Bible, as a religious book and as part of the regular school exercises, but rather whether they have power to permit it. The Court has ruled that Boards of Education may lawfully prohibit such reading; it has not ruled that they may require it. If Bible-reading as practised in the common schools were analogous to the use of ordinary text-books, the whole matter would undoubtedly rest in the hands of school Boards or Committees. But the gist of the objection to the practice is that the Bible is not read as an ordinary text-book, but as a sacred book unlike all others; and that the reading of it is not ordinary instruction, even in morals, but rather a common act of worship participated in by the whole school. It is because the use of the Bible in schools turns them for the time being into churches, that grave objections lie against it. No matter whether the metamorphosis lasts for ten hours or only for ten minutes; the principle is the same, and the inherent wrong is the same in exacting church tithes under pretence of raising school taxes. Have school Boards a legal right to pervert the school funds, levied by taxation avowedly for educational uses alone, to the practical support of ecclesiasticism? If all tax-payers should consent, the objection contained in this question might be waived as merely technical; but so long as one man protests against being forced to contribute to the support of a form of worship he does not conscientiously approve, so long is the objection real, and not merely technical. We hold that every school Board or Committee which permits Bible-reading in the public schools, as a regular devotional exercise, is guilty of usurpation of power, of perversion of public funds to improper uses, and of flagrant injustice towards a considerable and respectable portion of the citizens; and we further hold that such permission ought to be declared illegal by the courts, so long as that clause is left unrepealed in the "Bill of Rights" which was designed to protect every citizen against being taxed for the support of a form of worship not his own. No quibbling or cavilling can break the force of this objection; and the force of it is making itself felt more and more by the upright-minded and clear-headed portion of the community.

In its customary tone the New York Nation remarked, at the time the decision of the Ohio Supreme Court was announced: "For the benefit of the sticklers on either side, we may point out that Protestants can no more make a history or a philosophy, or perhaps a reading-book, for a certain large section of their fellow-citizens, than they can translate the Bible for them after a satisfactory fashion, or so read it as to please them. The matter is a deep one, which merely issuing school rules is not going to settle finally, and all parties may as well consider carefully what ground they will take, and why." For our own part, we have carefully considered what ground we shall take, and why; and even at the risk of being classified with the "sticklers," we propose to abide by it, as already explained. While we agree, therefore, with the New York Evening Post, that "the decision is in full accord with the theory and spirit of our civil institutions," we must qualify the praise by adding—"so far as it goes." It would have been a juster, a profounder, and a more truly American solution of the problem, if the Court had assigned as its reason for removing the injunction, that no Board of Education in the State had the least legal right to adopt any other policy on the Bible-in-schools question than that embodied in the obnoxious resolutions of the Cincinnati Board. The present decision is well enough as far as it goes; but that it does not go far enough, will, we believe, be made abundantly plain within the next dozen years.

There is so much, however, that is admirable, and weighty, and timely, in the opinion pronounced by Judge Welch, that we heartily recommend it to the careful attention of all. An excellent reprint of the case, extracted from the State Reports, has just been issued by Robert Clarke & Co., of Cincinnati, for a copy of which we return our acknowledgments to the publishers. It has furnished the occasion of the foregoing remarks, and will doubtless furnish the occasion of much thinking in the community on a question which is gradually assuming great importance,—not so much on its own account as on account of other questions lying beneath and back of it. It is time for every intelligent man to have an opinion on the subject.

Mr. E. A. Holbrook delivered before the Liberal League of Watertown, New York, on June 23, a vigorous poem entitled, "God in the Constitution." Being published by request of the League, a copy of it has been kindly sent to us; and we extract from it a passage that embodies in few words a most telling argument:—

"Our neighbors the Confederates in pious council met,
 And framed a Constitution; but what became of that?
 They placed God's name within it, their government to shield;
 But somehow its defenders have failed to hold the field.

Although the Name Eternal was voted in command,
 The great Confederation proved but a rope of sand;
 And though our Constitution may boast no name or shrine,
 With wisdom, love, and justice, its spirit is divine."

We had received no information of the existence of this League. It must be doing a good work, as this poem proves. Will the Secretary be so good as to forward its list of officers?

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but as after no space will be spared to errata.

N. B.—Articles for this department should be SHORT, and written only on one side of the sheet.

N. B.—Illegibly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.

N. B.—No responsibility will be assumed for unsigned manuscripts.

CAMP-MEETING METHODISM: A NEW SLAUGHTER OF THE INNOCENTS.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

I have just spent a day at a Methodist camp-meeting. I think I appreciate more than ever the importance of the great movement in favor of Free Religion. It was enough to turn the heart of any sensible man to listen to the bolstering bellowings of the preachers, and the agonizing groans of the sinners. Still I would not have cared so much about it if I had not attended the children's meetings and seen the workings there. I suppose a hundred children were congregated in the large tent, ages from five to fifteen,—mainly good children who ought not to go to meeting at all, but to be taught at home to be civil, respectful, kind, truthful, and natural. What did these Methodist sisters do? Talked to them, worked over them, begged of them for more than two hours to "Come to Jesus." They told them about death, hell, the devil, an angry God, the dreadful thing it was to die in their sins unrepented, in the most wild and extravagant manner, until the little ones were bewildered and worked to such a state of fear that they did not know what they were about. Friend Abbot, I felt like walking into the midst of that meeting and breaking it up. I believe I would have done so if I had had one or two to back me,—though I should no doubt have been arrested for disturbing the peace. More than ever am I given to a religion that is without superstition, progressive, not afraid to take the world as it finds it; making it better through science and law rather than blind feeling and disorder. Go on, dear friend, and let not your ardor dampen till Free Religion is established and the world shall know what it is. Then, I think, they will not fail to love it.

Faithfully, M. L. H.
New York City, Aug. 15, 1873.

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS.

MR. ABBOT,—For six months the Christian Church has carried on the most unrelenting persecution against the radicals—two women and one man—and against a free press. In full sight of this, the professedly liberal press, which claims to stand for the defense of mental freedom, with one exception has been nearly or quite dumb. From the first, every sane and intelligent mind must have seen this most bitter persecution,—the violation of law in an effort to crush a free press. Admitting Mr. Beecher's entire innocence, all this is true. Mrs. Beecher Stowe wrote what she, no doubt, believed true of the dead Byron. Mrs. Woodhull wrote what she believed true of a living Beecher. The last being true or false, a suit for libel was in order. But, in any case, such illegal persecution was infamous. Was this silence—in one instance much worse than silence—in the radical press an indication of the condition of the general radical mind? I hope it did not fairly represent that mind. If it did, there is no hope for us except through sufferings which Americans have not yet dreamed of. The radical press was mostly closed against short articles asking any such justice to Mrs. Woodhull as all admit should be granted to the murderer. Did or did not the so-called liberal public—Free Religionists and Spiritualists—require this? I fear too many of them did.

Mr. Abbot, I am an old man. I shall not long trouble even the radicals. I wrote—"Who killed Horace Greeley?" I could find no editor who dare and was disposed to print it. I beg you print this short protest. There is one man—I am sure many thousands—who will never bow, while living, to despotism.

Fraternally,
AUSTIN KENT.

EAST STOCKHOLM, N. Y.

[The prosecution of Mrs. Woodhull for obscenity instead of libel was indefensible, being as cowardly and mean as it was illegal. We do not know who was at the bottom of it; but it is frivolous to attribute the act of a few individuals to the "Christian Church." If it were clear that the "freedom of the press" had been assailed, the "radical press" (what is it?) might be justly blamed by Mr. Kent. But the "free press" which can find no better occupation than making indiscriminate personal assaults of the most cruel kind is simply an intolerable nuisance. It remains to be shown that Mrs. Woodhull was right in her attack on Mr. Beecher and others.

If, as we strongly suspect, she was the dupe of her own imagination and the cunning instigation of Mr. Beecher's private enemies, we should scout the plea of "freedom of the press" as a justification of her course. A free press is just as much bound to respect the rights of private citizens as a slave press. Unless the charges brought by Mrs. Woodhull are true, she is entitled to no sympathy from decent people, except so far as her victims were stung to illegality by the venom of her pen. We go upon the principle that every man should be presumed to be innocent until he is proved to be guilty; and, for one, we wait this proof before expressing or feeling sympathy with any personal assaults. It has been claimed that Mr. Beecher's own letters would convict him. He has given public permission to print them. Where are they? We have learned that innocence is no protection against vilification; and it makes little difference whether the vilifier is a liar or a dupe. Let the conclusive proof be forthcoming, or let this clamorous demand for sympathy with the assailants be stopped.—[Ed.]

USURY.

IN THE INDEX of January 4, Mr. Abbot stated that the common sense of mankind rejects the notion that taking interest on money loaned is a crime.

Now I wish to take issue with him upon that opinion, and will endeavor to show that the apathy and apparent acquiescence in interest-taking is not caused by the assent of common sense, but by a false idea of business morality. The moral principle on which interest-taking is justified may be proved to be false by the following analysis of its practical results: A, being in want, craves the favor of a loan of B's surplus money, which would be of no pecuniary profit to him to keep, and which B grants on condition that it shall be paid back with as much more as the pecuniary advantage is expected to be to A, even if it takes an amount equal to that loaned. A accepts the condition. Then the transaction is claimed to be all right, and no violation of any moral principle, the civilized world assenting to the claim.

Now, to those who have unenslaved, keen moral perceptions, this principle is seen to be terribly false, and as cruel as death; for it enables the rich to take advantage of the necessities of his brother, and reduce him to poverty and pecuniary slavery. In fact, it is this false moral principle that has enabled the capitalists of Europe, by applying it to rents and profits, to reduce nine-tenths of the inhabitants to abject poverty. The taking of twenty per cent. interest, thirty per cent. rents and a hundred per cent. profits in trade, finds its justification in this same wicked principle which in the practical business life of the whole civilized world, is in direct and complete antagonism with all the principles of natural justice and equity. As is evident, these sentiments in all unsophisticated souls stand foremost in defence of equal rights and are imperative in their demands, never yielding to any other claim, but demanding first justice, then pity and mercy. This universal refusal to confer benefits that add to the wealth of the receiver, but which cost nothing to bestow, shows the moral blindness of the people, and is an outrage upon the highest and most beautiful sentiments of all noble souls. There is no pleasure so great, no happiness so serene, as the consciousness of conferring great happiness upon humanity. There is no other action which common men look upon with so much admiration, as is attested by the universal homage paid to those who have devoted themselves to the good of mankind. They not only admire this self-devotedness, but feel it to be the highest duty to alleviate distress and confer happiness whenever possible; and it is also felt to be unmanly and even criminal in any one to neglect to do it.

As I have stigmatized taking interest as being a great crime, I will make a further analysis of interest itself. It is the hard-earned results of labor surrendered for favors that cost nothing peculiarly to bestow, creating at once a pecuniary distinction between the borrower and lender, and a miniature aristocracy which, when carried to its logical results, reduces the borrower to poverty, while the lender rolls in luxury without labor.

EUGENE HUTCHINSON.

REED'S FERRY, N. H.

[To exact excessive interest from the borrower is certainly cruel and harsh in the lender. But is it wrong to charge a fair rate for the use of money lent? If so, why is it not iniquitous in livery stable keepers to charge for the use of their horses and vehicles? We are so hard-hearted as to see no crime in a transaction which benefits both parties, and to see no reason why the borrower should monopolize the benefits. It is a great mistake to think it costs the lender nothing. He foregoes the use of the money lent, and runs the risk of never being repaid. If the use of the money is worth so much to the borrower that he must have it even at high interest, it is plain that the use of money has a real, direct value, for which he ought in common justice to pay. Men charge for their merchandise, their services, their time; why not for their money?—[Ed.]

CRITICAL NOTICE.

CHRISTIANITY THE SCIENCE OF MANHOOD. A Book for Questioners. By Minot Judson Savage. Boston: Noyes, Holmes & Co. 1873. pp. 187.

This book, considered as the production of an Orthodox Congregational minister, and written, as he tells us, with the cooperation and approval of his brother, another minister in the same denomination, is not a little peculiar and remarkable.

To be sure, any Orthodox minister might call the doctrine he preaches "the science of manhood"; but the characters produced by that doctrine, even the specimens pointed to as most successful, are usually so narrow and one-sided that you and I, Mr. Editor, would hardly consider them good illustrations of manhood. Our author's premises, however, differ materially from those of his denominational brethren, and thus his conclusions also differ. I will try briefly to give you an idea of both.

Mr. Savage's definition of religion, and also of Christianity, agree in the main with that given by Theodore Parker. That is to say, he regards religion to be voluntary obedience, by each person, to what he understands to be the will of God, and Christianity to be the love of God and man as announced and explained by Jesus, called Christ. (Let me say here that these definitions seem to me also more correct than any different ones that have fallen under my notice.)

Mr. Savage, taking for granted the wisdom and goodness of God, and finding that he has made man to consist of body, mind, affections, and a spiritual nature, all capable of and fitted for progressive development, concludes that they all ought to be so developed, and that thus only can full "manhood" be attained. He thinks that, while such development, attempted by each individual in his own person, and cultivated to the extent of his power among the people around him, is certainly a carrying out of God's idea, it is also a dictate of that doctrine of love to God as a father and to men as brothers, in which Jesus summed up his religious system. If the Church accepts this central idea of Jesus, its one sole business, Mr. Savage thinks, is to apply itself to the "building of men." The true manhood being inclusive of all things that are true and right, all these things should be forwarded by the church, and none of them should be hindered by it.

This includes a good deal, does it not? But, to make his meaning quite plain, Mr. Savage goes into further specification. The creeds, he says, and methods of church government, and ordinances, and forms of service, and sacred days, and orders of the ministry, churches, and sacraments, are all subordinate things, to be used, varied or disused according as they promote or hinder the proper development of manhood.

Still further: to the question—What is heresy, then? Mr. Savage replies: "Any teaching that hinders the making of manhood." And he specifies as dangerous heresies, exclusiveness, uncharitableness, bigotry, and partisanship, and whatever doctrine misrepresents God and gives men wrong conceptions of his character and relation to them.

In the course of the book Mr. Savage mentions "the Christ," but by this expression he seems to mean the man Jesus as a power of personal love, an ideal of moral beauty, a model by which to measure our endeavor. He never speaks of him either as atoning sacrifice or mediator. He makes no depreciatory mention of human nature, or of the world in which God has placed human nature for its development. He does not allude to Satan, or original sin, or total depravity, or eternal punishment; and as to the saving of men, the proper meaning of it, he says, is the building up of true manhood in them; neither does he assume or imply that in the future state any human being will be debarred from making such progress, and reaping due benefit from it.

He cautions his readers against supposing that belief in prophecy, or in miracle, or the theory of infallible inspiration in Scripture, or membership in a church organization, or any conversion except from a bad life to a good one, is an essential to Christianity. Your belief will of necessity follow the evidence which comes to you. Do right, and you will be right.

Mr. Savage has no fear of science, or of inquiry, or thorough investigation in any department. Let Genesis and Geology fight it out. Let Colenso investigate and publish as much as he pleases. Truth is always to be welcomed, never to be feared. "He is a poor friend to Christianity who sanctimoniously offers its sacredness as a reason why it should not be looked at. . . . If it is true, it will bear scrutiny. . . . It must prove its right by its ability to adapt itself to the world's highest needs."

In regard to the theories of the Orthodox church respecting Biblical inspiration, prophecy and miracle, Mr. Savage frankly says: "In no ministerial association with which I have ever been acquainted, would it be possible to conduct a calm and judicial discussion of questions like these. He who should plead for such a discussion would be laying himself liable to suspicion of heresy." Our author's boldness in setting forth his own ideas, liberalized to the extent above described, is a cheering and hopeful omen for the future. C. K. W.

RADICAL "INTOLERANCE."

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

I am sorry that any of your readers should feel called upon to accuse THE INDEX of even a slight degree of intolerance or uncharitableness. It is a serious charge to make against a paper devoted to the radical cause; for radicalism itself is as far from intolerance as light is from darkness. I suspect, however, that in this case the criticism is unjust,—that it is the critics themselves who are so befogged by the atmosphere of superstition, that surrounds us all, that they cannot distinguish between a manly zeal for "liberty and light" and a spirit of uncharitableness. I have read THE INDEX with considerable attention for more than a year, and the only evidence of illiberality I remember to have seen in its columns comes (singularly enough) from a gentleman who himself complains of radical aggressiveness. This writer says: "The great body of the Christian sects, who honestly believe Sunday to be a divinely appointed holy day, show a tolerance and charity toward the few who do not believe which radicals would do well to emulate. I like the rest and quiet of Sunday, and bless the superstition that makes it quiet."

It seems odd to have to remind one who is not himself a slave to superstition that Christians have no more right to dictate to others in a matter of religious observance than others have to dictate to them; and that the mere assumption on their part of such a right marks a depth of intolerance which it is impossible for radicalism ever to reach. As for the other statement, that he "likes the quiet of Sunday and blesses the superstition that makes it quiet," I cannot believe that the writer really means what his words imply. The Christian has, for his interference with the rights of others, at least the poor excuse of religious zeal; but the man who would force a particular line of conduct on his neighbors for no better reason than because he "likes" it, must be a despot indeed. As a matter of fact, the stillness of Sunday, broken as it is by the mournful call of church bells, has no such pleasant effect on me as it has on this gentleman. To me it is oppressive and irksome in the extreme. And yet, though a radical of the "intolerant" sort,—intolerant in the sense to be immediately explained—I should hardly think of asking, much less of compelling, my neighbors to bestir themselves and make a noise on my account.

Hereafter, if any one has any charge of intolerance to bring against radicals, let him by all means make it distinct and explicit, so that it can be fairly met. First, however, let him be reasonably sure his accusation is just. And above all, let him remember that there is one thing of which radicalism is in its very nature intensely intolerant, and that is intolerance.

C. E. M.

ETHANASIA.

Quite a discussion has sprung up in the English papers on the double question of suicide and of putting out of the way those who wish to die but cannot without assistance. A Mr. Lionel Tollemache had a paper in the Fortnightly Review for February, advocating the right of the hopelessly suffering to die, whether by their own hands or with the aid of a doctor and parson. The idea is that dying in this way, like getting married, might be under the supervision of the law, to be carried out only with the double aid of a physician and a clergyman, as witnesses to the propriety of it; that is the cutting short by it of great hopeless suffering. The Saturday Review says that there is an undoubted basis of fact for the case set up to justify the proposal; that in many cases cruel suffering is endured without the smallest prospect of ultimate relief; and that the absolute prohibition of suicide sometimes causes great and unnecessary misery. But the Review is of opinion, nevertheless, that permission to take life thus at the call of humanity would lead to taking it on the sly at the bidding of inhumanity; that no practice could be more directly destructive of the sanctity of life; and that it would make average men greater brutes than they are, when in fact they are quite brutal enough already. The Spectator similarly argues that the practice would change the care of the sick from a discipline of patient tenderness into a school of harsh impatience with helpless suffering. In reply to this view Prof. F. W. Newman writes in the Spectator that many years ago he had reason to believe that a friend withdrew himself from life somewhat prematurely to escape a hopeless lingering between life and death; that this led him to ask various persons now and then what they thought of doing such a thing; that his inquiries satisfied him that the thing is secretly done to no slight extent, and would be justified if people dared to speak out; that many do hold the opinion that a painful, useless, and hopeless life ought to be ended; and that if discussion of the subject should lead to freer avowals of opinion, without fear or odium, it would be valuable. Prof. Newman further says that facts have led him to the conviction that we overstrain our reluctance to shorten life, and that he cannot see why, under suitable legal precautions, a hopeless sufferer, whose desire to die is well attested, should not be permitted aid to that effect, especially when the desire of every merciful looker-on is that death may come.

It may be mentioned in this connection that a young physician of New Haven, a man of very fine mind and very high character, but afflicted with a disease for which no cure is known, and which destroys the mind's action before it finally kills the body, took his life with the utmost deliberation and firmness, on the fifth of this month, in order to secure his friends against the burden and perhaps the danger of his sinking into an insane condition. He had meditated the deed for a year; he waited evidently as long as he dared; he made all his preparations with the utmost consideration; his last letters and interviews were unusually cheerful and tender and pleasant; and when all was ready he arranged his person on a bed in a room at a hotel, fired one shot through his heart, and, laying his hand back on the pillow, fired another through his head. A full analysis of the whole case proves beyond a doubt that, whatever may have been his mistake in thinking that he ought to do this, he did think so, and acted accordingly with more than Roman firmness. Nor is there the slightest room to say that he was not in full possession of his mind. He had suffered fearfully in mind, and was in peril of breaking down at any time, but as yet he was himself entirely, both in mind and in character, and showed this in all the details of the last days of his life, and especially in the letters written during his last hours, at night and alone. E. C. T.

BLOOD ATONEMENT AGAIN.

The world loses a man, and the church gains a member. One Mr. Nicholson, of the Monumental City, for the sake of a little money, plunges a family into grief, fills up columns in the newspapers and consequently becomes notorious, and creates another sensation for the church, whereby they have an opportunity to show to the world the unaccountable virtue of a sacrifice made eighteen hundred and fifty years ago.

Under the most revolting circumstances, this cool-blooded sinner, acting on the total depravity principle, butchered a weak, inoffensive old woman a few weeks since, and last Friday was sent to Paradise direct, franked through by the Reverends Messrs. Dale and Wilson.

His conversion was complete, they tell us, and there can be no doubt about his eternal safety.

They fall to inform us or give us the least idea regarding the meeting between this villain and his victim, "over the river." But there is not the slightest doubt about his soul being at rest in the New Jerusalem, and henceforward engaged in singing psalms and hallelujahs.

The Young Men's Christian Association were in his cell, and the conferences were long and enthusiastic, no doubt; which finally worked this fiend up to such an enthusiasm that he uttered the following prayer:—

NICHOLSON'S PRAYER.

"Oh, merciful Father, increase my strength. Let me bear it to-day with resignation. I feel that, Father, I shall see the beautiful faces on high. I feel that thy precious blood has washed me free from all guilt, and I can go safely to the realm of light. I commit myself to thy hand. I know I have done wrong, but the atoning blood is sufficient. I am thy child, Father, while I have been in firm, thou hast been with me. I commit my poor wife and children to thee. May they be led to salvation. Strengthen me with the Holy Spirit. It is hard to bear, but we are going to a better place to-day. I shall see my mother, sister and brother. I shall see you again. Strengthen my beloved brother in the fearful trial he is now enduring. Give me the strength of thy blessing, so that on the scaffold, I can die with a smile upon my face, whispering the name of sweet Jesus. Father, I commit myself wholly to thy hand."

The hymn "Rock of Ages" was then sung, after which Nicholson took a farewell of his brother Thomas; the brothers cordially embracing each other. Thomas, weeping, said: "I did all I could for you, Josh."

"Yes," was the reply, "and more that I could do for you, God bless you."

PRIVATE DEVOTIONS.

The ceremonies were then concluded at the cell, and the prisoner, accompanied by the clergymen, at 8:35 A. M., moved through the main hall and entered the directors' room, where an hour was passed in private devotional exercises. Nicholson was dressed in a black suit, and Holchman in gray. As they they passed through the main hall, both prisoners were smiling and cheerful, and nodded pleasantly to such acquaintances as they met. The exercises in the directors' room consisted of singing, prayer, and short religious addresses by both prisoners, who were quite calm and composed, and who expressed their confidence in Christ. The sacrament was then administered by the Rev. Pennell Dale, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Wilson. The reporters and the public were excluded from the directors' room, it being intended that the sacramental service should be as private as possible.

Thus we see that one more sinner is saved from a never-ending hell and the church is glorified.

Remember all this is done against the positive statements of the Bible that no murderer can enter into the kingdom of God.

J. E. H.

CLIPPINGS FROM THE LONDON 'GRAPHIC.'

An Italian curate has been sentenced to fifteen days' imprisonment and three hundred francs fine, for preaching an inflammatory sermon against the Government of the country, damning them to all eternity as unshriven, excommunicated devils, for interfering with the property of the Church.

The School Board Chronicle says that the "ticket of admission to heaven," as sold by a Papal missionary, is an elegant little card on which is printed—"Admit to heaven: obtained through the divine school of patience." Round a cross one reads: "None shall be crowned but he who has fought the good fight. Here I am! O Mary, help us! Price 50 cents."

A disgraceful scene took place at a Liberation meeting at Exeter last week. As soon as the chairman appeared, some of the friends of the Church let off detonating balls, and cast loose a number of sparrows and blackbirds. This was succeeded by singing, hooting, yelling, and some fighting. No speaker could obtain a hearing, and the disorder was only stopped at last by the gas being put out. We can hardly believe the statement that some of the disturbers were "young lawyers, doctors, bankers' clerks, and others moving in respectable society." People of education and culture cannot surely believe that such conduct will be of any service to the Establishment.

Dean Goulburn preached a remarkable sermon last Sunday at St. Paul's Cathedral. The subject was—"The Personality of the Devil," and the dean argued that our Savior was a personal champion sent to destroy a personal tyrant. He did not deny that it was possible to accommodate, or rather strain, certain Scripture texts to the view that the devil meant the system of evil; but what were we to say to the many instances where the devil's personal agency is distinctly declared? By the denial of the personal existence of the Evil One, the entire scheme of redemption was robbed of its significance, its most fundamental proportions were destroyed, and a long stride was made towards moral scepticism and soul-destroying infidelity. The most pestilent German rationalist maintains that Jesus Christ is a myth, the representative of all that is good. The miserable so-called philosophy of the day would cheat us of our faith in persons, and give us cold, passionless ideas. He admitted that there were difficulties in the account of the temptation in the first lesson for the day; but could the philosophers invent a theory which could better explain the riddle of our nature?

STATE OF EDUCATION IN PERSIA.—The upper classes in Persia can generally read and write and cipher a little. Their learning seldom goes beyond that; and there is a pious reason for their ignorance. The Caliph Omar sagaciously observed that "there was no need of any book but the Koran; because whatever could by any possibility be good in literature was to be found in it." Thus, although many of the Persian Khans are almost as good scholars as American village children in the first year of their studies, yet writing is not an art in Persia, but is a distinct profession practised by Meerzas, who go about with an inkhorn and a reed, and are much esteemed. There can hardly be said to exist a Persian literature in modern times. There is a newspaper (a sort of court journal) printed at Teheran, and now and then a rambling tale, attributing marvellous deeds and gifts to kings, and chiefly occupied with "Napoleon" (Napoleon), finds its way into print and a limited circulation. There is no such person as a Persian book-publisher, and no such thing as a Persian bookseller's shop. Such ancient books as are read by the learned are still mostly in manuscript, and bear a very high price.—Grenville Murray, in N. Y. Herald.

The Brooklyn Union states that, previous to leaving for Europe, Mr. Stewart made a will. It was thought advisable to prepare a schedule of his real and personal estate. Upon the completion of the schedule, much to the surprise of Mr. Stewart, and to the great surprise of his friends, it was found that he was worth one hundred millions of dollars. The truth of the foregoing statement is well authenticated.

Advertisements.

GENERAL NOTICE.

On Aug. 8, 1872, I contracted for the two best advertising pages of THE INDEX for the current year. No advertisements objectionable to the editor to be taken." For terms apply to
A. K. BUTTS, 36 Dey St., New York.

No improper advertisements, no advertisements of patent medicines, and no advertisements known to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be hereafter admitted into THE INDEX. All advertisements accepted before this date will be allowed to run their time.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.
TOLLEDO, O., June 21, 1873.

Children, begin now to save your pennies that, when the long evenings come, you can buy "Arctide, or game of Birds." If your storekeeper has not got it, send seventy-five cents to West & Lee, Worcester, Mass., and it will be sent by mail, post-paid.
"Arctide is a superior game."—Worcester Palladium.

DR. E. E. DENNISTON'S
HOME FOR INVALIDS,
At Springdale, Northampton,
Massachusetts.

Number limited to thirty.

THE WAYS OF WOMEN

In Their Physical, Moral, and Intellectual Relations.

By A MEDICAL MAN. This is unquestionably one of the most remarkable books issued from the American press in many years. A most beautiful specimen of scientific and practical work-painting on themes of vital importance to every woman. A splendid chance for Agents. It makes an elegant 400 pp. vol. of 400 pp., on tinted paper, superbly bound. Price $3. Sent by mail on receipt of price. For territory and agents' terms, apply to the publisher, JOHN P. JEWETT & Co., 55 Dey St., N. Y.

The Religion of Humanity,
BY O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

Second Edition with two Steel Portraits. 12 mo. cloth. Price, post-paid, $1.50.

Christianity and Materialism
Contrasted,

BY E. F. UNDERWOOD.

A handsome 43 page Pamphlet. 50 copies for $1.50. 10 copies for $1.00. Single copy 15 cts.

Mr. Underwood's best Lecture is now ready, entitled

The Influence of Christianity
On Civilization.

32 page Pamphlet. Price 25 cts.

Address the Publishers,
ANA K. BUTTS & CO.
36 Dey Street, N. Y.

THE GOLDEN AGE.

Every Man and Woman who reads THE INDEX ought to read also The Golden Age, edited by Theodore Tilton. After fifteen years of experience on The Independent, Mr. Tilton two years ago established, in the interest of more liberal thought, The Golden Age, a journal of his own, to which he gives his constant and tollsome attention, and which has already won a national reputation for honesty, courage, and brilliancy. Probably no other journal in America is so widely quoted from, both by those who agree, and those who disagree with it. Unlike any other weekly paper, either in America or England, it is unique and original in appearance, in thought, and in style. It abounds in brief and spicy paragraphs—shot like swift arrows hitting the mark. Its editorial discussions cover the whole field of current topics—whether religious, political, literary, social, or industrial. It does not pretend, or seek, or want to agree with its readers, or with the general popular opinion. It indulges in the luxury of free speech. It has a mind of its own, and is sometimes wrong—which makes it all the more novel, for it is almost the only journal of the American press that is ever wrong. But whether right or wrong, it is always good natured, and ever believes in fair play. It would be happy to make the acquaintance of the readers of THE INDEX; and though The Golden Age is in no sense a rival to THE INDEX, and does not undertake to do such a work as Mr. Abbot has embarked upon, yet it is fighting a battle for free thought in religion, and free speech in politics, and is conscientiously dedicated to the promotion of whatever helps forward the Emancipation of the Human Mind. Anybody who subscribes for Mr. Tilton's paper will get something to think about, and more than the money's worth. Enclose three dollars in an envelope (before you forget it), and address

THE GOLDEN AGE,
Box 2548,
New York City.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twentieth year of this Family and Day School begins Wednesday, September 17, 1873. For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN, West Newton, Mass.

Independent Tract Society.

CLINTON, MASS.

The object of this organization is the publication and dissemination of radical sentiments from all sources.

Yearly Subscription.....$3 25
Life Membership.....5 00

Address
A. BRIGGS DAVIS, CLINTON, MASS.

VALUABLE BOOKS

OF BOUND MUSIC!

GEMS.

Gems of Sacred Song.
Gems of German Song.
Gems of Scottish Song.
Wreath of Gems.

PEARLS.

Shower of Pearls.
The best Vocal Lucra.

Operatic Pearls.

Best Opera Songs.
Price of each book, Bds. $2.50; Cl., $1.00; Full gilt, $4.00.

The above volumes are quite unsurpassable, as each one is filled and crowded with the very best Vocal Music of its kind. Books are large, and wonderfully cheap. Pages full sheet music size. (300 to 350 pages.)

BREKERS OUR NEW Organ at Home, $2.50

Home is not complete without it.

LOOK AT THE Standard, for Chorus, &c. $1.50

Cheerful Voices, for Schools. 50

River of Life, for Sunday Schools. 35

The above books for sale by all dealers. Sent post-paid on receipt of price.

OLIVER DITSON & Co., Boston.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.
711 Broadway, N. York.

NEW BOOKS

FOR SUMMER READING.

MUST IT BE?

A Romance From the GERMANS OF CARL DETLER. By M. S. translator of "By his Own Might," "A Twofold Life," etc. Illustrated. 8vo. Paper cover, 75 cents. Fine cloth, $1.25.

Emminently natural, full of charming realism, and abounding in vigorous and exciting action.

WHAT WILL THE WORLD SAY?

A Novel of Every-day Life; and "Only a Woman." By OON MORENO. 12mo. Extra cloth. $1.50.

POLITICAL PORTRAITS.

By an Eminent Journalist. 12mo. Extra cloth. $1.50. Short, pithy, and timely addresses, presenting in a condensed and striking manner the political character of England's most representative statesmen.

GONE BEFORE.

Being a Manual for the Bereaved. By HENRY SOUTHGATE. Extra cloth. Red edges. $2.00.

"The book is one of those specialties in which the writer has already established a reputation on both sides of the Atlantic, and should be in every private and public library in the land."—Boston Globe.

EVOLUTION OF LIFE.

By HENRY C. CHAPMAN, M. D. Member of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia. Illustrated with numerous Lithographic Plates. New and Cheaper Edition. Extra cloth. $2.75.

"The best general text that we have seen for readers who desire to know the foundation, aims, results, and reasons employed in the latest scientific theories."—Phila. North American.

MINERAL SPRINGS OF NORTH AMERICA

How to Reach, and How to Use them. By J. J. MOHRMAN, M. D. Illustrated. 12mo. Extra cloth. $2.00.

REASON AND REDEMPTION.

Or, The Gospel as it Attends Itself. By ROBERT BAKER WHITE, D. D. 8vo. Extra cloth. $2.00.

"Dr. White displays great logical power and acumen, and fearlessly grapples with the objections to the truth of revelation which are drawn from the teachings of geology, astronomy, and ethnology."—Boston Globe.

WORK, PLAY, AND PROFIT;

Or, Gardening for Young Folks, explained in a Story for Boys and Girls. By ANNA M. HYDE, author of "Six Hundred Dollars a Year," "American Boy's Life of Washington," etc. Illustrated. 12mo. Extra cloth.

THE "SPIRITUAL" DELUSION:

Its Methods, Teachings, and Effects. The Philosophy and Phenomena Critically Examined. By DINA D. LUNA, author of "The Early Social Life of Man." 12mo. Fine cloth. $1.50.

WAU BUN.

The "Early Day" in the Northwest. A Novel. By the author of "Walter Ogilby." New Edition. 12mo.

A Romantic and highly attractive narrative of life in the Northwest during the period of the early settlement.

For sale by all Booksellers, or will be sent by mail post-paid, upon receipt of the price by

LIPPINCOTT & CO., Publishers,
715 and 717 Market Street, Phila.

A SPLENDID SABBATH SCHOOL BOOK:

RIVER OF LIFE.

River Verily a River of Life.
Beauty. Abounding in bright, taking, singing music, which the Sabbath School children and home boys and girls will not need much drilling to learn and appreciate. As in our unequalled Church Book, the "AMERICAN SABBATH SCHOOL BOOK,"—and in this we have drawn on many well-known writers of Sabbath School Music, the very best in the country, to whose united efforts we owe this new and popular Sabbath School Book, edited by
P. K. K. & BENTLEY.

Its Success cannot be Doubted.

SEND ORDERS EARLY.

Sample copies 30 cts. each. Sent post-paid.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO., 711 Broadway, N. Y.

Standard Liberal Works.

For sale by A. K. BUTTS, 36 Dey Street, New York.

The Right of Married Women to Hold Property. Judge Bell's argument in the House of Assembly of the State of New York, in the session of 1837, in support of the bill to restore to married women "The Right of Property." Republished by order of the will of Mrs. Barbara Amelia Hertell, 1867. Price, 20 cents.

Wat Tyler: a Dramatic Poem in three acts, by Robert Southey, Esq. Price, 20 cents.

The Diegesis; being a Discovery of the Origin, Development, and Early History of Christianity, never yet before or elsewhere so fully and faithfully set forth. By Rev. Robert Taylor. This work was written by Mr. Taylor while serving a term in Oakham (Eng.) Jail, where he was imprisoned for blasphemy. It contains 440 pages, octavo, and is considered unanswerable as to arguments or facts. Price, $2.00; postage, 24 cents.

The Devil's Pulpit. By Rev. Robert Taylor. With a sketch of the Author's Life—containing sermons on the following subjects:—The Star of Bethlehem, John the Baptist, Raising the Devil! The Unjust Judge, Virgo Paritura, St. Peter, Judas Iscariot Vindicated, St. Thomas, St. James, and St. John—the Sons of Thunder, The Crucifixion of Christ, The Cop of Salvation, Lectures on Free Masonry, The Holy Ghost, St. Philip, St. Matthew, The Redeemer. Price, $2.00; postage 20 cents.

Astro-Theological Lectures—By Rev. Robert Taylor. Containing the following Lectures:—Belief not the Safe Side, The Resurrection of Lazarus, The Unjust Steward, The Devil, The Rich Man and Lazarus, The Day of Temptation in the Wilderness, Ahab, or the Lying Spirit, The Fall of Man, Noah, Abraham, Harah, Melchisedec, The Lord, Moses, The Twelve Patriarchs, Who is the Lord? Exodus, Aaron, Miriam. Price, $2.00; postage, 20 cents.

The Bytagnas. By Rev. Robert Taylor, author of the "Diegesis," "Devil's Pulpit," "Astro-Theological Sermons," etc. Price, including postage, $1.00.

The Insider's or Inquirer's Text-Book. Being the substance of 13 Lectures on the Bible, by Robert Cooper. Price, $1.50; postage, 16 cents.

A Legacy to the Friends of Free Discussion: being a Review of the Principles, Historical Facts, and Personages of the Books known as the Old and New Testaments; with remarks on the Foretold of Nature. By Benjamin Offen, formerly Lecturer of the Society of Moral Philanthropists, at Tammany Hall, New York. Price, 75 cents; postage, 16 cents.

Equality, or, a History of Lithocopia. Price, 16 cents.

Elegant Extracts from the Holy Bible. Price, 10 cents.

Intemperate Drinking. An Exposure of the Causes of this vice, and the means by which it may be obviated. By Thomas Hertell, of New York City. Published by order of the New York Society for the Promotion of Internal Improvement, 1810. Republished by order of the will of Mrs. Barbara Amelia Hertell, 1867. Price, 15 cents.

The System of Nature; or, Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach, author of "Good Sense," etc. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Translated from the French by H. D. Robinson. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.00; postage, 25 cents.

The Letters to Eugenia; or, A Preservative against Religious Prejudice. By Baron D'Holbach, author of the "System of Nature," etc. Translated from the French by Anthony C. Middleton, M. D. Price, $1.00; postage, 10 cents.

Good Sense. By Baron D'Holbach. A new edition of this truly valuable book has just been issued, and is now ready for purchasers. Friends who want "Good Sense" (and who does not?) can have a supply sent by mail by forwarding their orders. Price, post-paid, $1.00.

Complete Works of Thomas Paine: Secretary to the Committee of Foreign Affairs. Consisting of his Political, Theological, and Miscellaneous Writings. To which is added a brief Sketch of his Life. Price, $7.00; postage, 94 cts.

Paine's Political Writings—To which is prefixed a brief sketch of the Author's Life. A new edition, with additions. Two volumes. Price, $5.00; postage, 62 cents.

Thomas Paine's Writings—Theological and Miscellaneous. The most complete edition ever published. Containing his Age of Reason, and all his writings on Theology, with many Miscellaneous and Political pieces. Price, $2.50; postage, 26 cts.

Standard Liberal Works.

For sale by A. K. BUTTS, 36 Dey Street, New York.

The Philosophical Dictionary of Voltaire.—Tenth American Edition. Two Volumes in one. Containing 876 large octavo pages, with two elegant steel engravings. Price, $5.00; postage, 65 cents. This is the largest and most correct edition in the English language, having, beside the whole of the London editions, several articles from a manuscript translated several years since by a friend of Voltaire's, and others translated immediately from the French edition. The London edition sells at from $10 to $18, and does not contain nearly so much as this American edition.

Helvetius; or, The True Meaning of the System of Nature. Translated from the French. Price 20 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The Divine and Moral Works of Plato.—Translated from the Original Greek; with Introductory Discourses and Notes. First American from the sixth London edition, carefully revised and corrected. Price, including postage, $2.50.

History of Moses, Aaron, Joshua, and others, deduced from a Review of the Bible. Also, remarks on the Morals of the Old and New Testament, and some of the Ancient Philosophers. By J. M. Dorsey. Price, 75 cents; postage 12 cents.

History of all Christian Sects and Denominations—their Origin, Tenets, and Condition. By John Evans, L. L. D. Price, $1.40; postage, 10 cents.

Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients. By G. Vale. Price, 50 cents; postage 2 cents.

Studying the Bible; or, Brief Criticisms on some of the principal Scripture Texts. By Elmina Drake Slenker. Price, 75 cents; postage, 8 cents.

Moral Physiology—A Plain Treatise on Population. By Robert Dale Owen. This work is illustrated with a Frontispiece. Price, including postage, 60 cents.

Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius VII.—Translated from the French into Portuguese by J. J. Monteiro, and from Portuguese into English by H. D. Robinson. With a Memoir of the Author. Price, 60 cents.

Half-Hours with some Ancient and Modern Celebrated Free-Thinkers.—Thomas Hobbes, Lord Bolingbroke, Condorcet, Spinoza, Anthony Collins, Des Cartes, M. de Voltaire, John Toland, Compt de Volney, Charles Blount, Percy Bysshe Shelley, Claude Adrien Helvetius, Francis Wright, Darnmouth, R. Paine, Zeno, Matthew Tindal, David Hume, Dr. Thomas Burnet, Thomas Paine, Bapiste de Mirabeau, Baron D'Holbach, Robert Taylor, Joseph Barker. By "Iconoclast," Collins and Watts. Price, 75 cents; postage, 15 cents.

Cooper's Lectures on the Soul.—In which the doctrine of Immortality is religiously and philosophically considered. This is a work of vast importance to those who look on this life as only a state of probation. Price, 75 cents; postage, 12 cents.

Classified Biblical Extracts; or, The Holy Scriptures Analyzed—showing its contradictions, absurdities, and immoralities. Price, 25 cents.

Man's Nature and Development. By Henry George Atkinson, F. G. S., and Harriet Martineau. Price, full gilt, $1.50; postage, 16 cents. Cloth, $1.35; postage, 15 cents.

Queen Mab, with Notes. By Percy B. Shelley. Price, 75 cents.

Letters to the Catholic Bishop of Boston. Proving that the Roman Catholic Religion is opposed to a Republican form of Government. By an Independent Irishman. Price, 10 cents.

Jehovah Unveiled; or, The Character of the Jewish Deity Delicately. A new and valuable book. Price, 35 cents.

Exeter Hall—A Theological Romance. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper, 60 cents; postage, 4 cents. Cloth, 80 cents; postage, 15 cents.

Paine's Theological and Miscellaneous Writings—12mo. edition. Price, $1.50; postage, 18 cts. This edition contains the last Will and Testament of THOMAS PAINE, wherein he disposes of his real and personal property, amounting to some thousands of dollars, which completely disproves those pious stories respecting Paine's poverty and destitution in his last hours.

Paine's Age of Reason. Examination of the Prophecies, Essays on Dreams, etc. A very handsome edition in green cloth. Price, 75 cents; postage, 14 cents.

Paine's Age of Reason; being an investigation of True and Fabulous Theology. Paper, cloth, 50 cents; postage 12 cents; paper, 25 cents; or five for $1.00.

Paine's Common Sense—A Revolutionary Pamphlet, addressed to the Inhabitants of America in 1776. To which is added a brief Sketch of the Author's Life. Price, 50 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The Life of Thomas Paine—Author of "Common Sense," "Rights of Man," "Age of Reason," &c., with Critical and explanatory Observations of his Writings. By G. Vale. Price, $1.00; postage, 16 cents.

Testimonials to Thomas Paine—Author of "Common Sense," "The Crisis," "Rights of Man," "English System of Finance," "Age of Reason," &c. Compiled by Joseph N. Moreau. Price, 15 cents.

Thomas Paine—The Author Hero of the American Revolution. Price, 10 cents.

The Yahoo—A Satirical Rhapsody. By the author of "The Great Dragon Cast Out." Price, 70 cents.

The Light of the Age; or, Miracles Examined. By Franklin D. Orcutt. Price, 40 cents.

The Logic of Death; or, Why should the Unbeliever or Atheist fear to die? By G. Jacob Holyoake. Price, 10 cents.

My Religious Experience, and What I Found in the Bible. Remarks of J. W. Pike, at a "Revival" in the "West School House," Windham, Ohio, on the evenings of Oct. 18th and 24th, 1865. Price, 10 cents.

The Clergy a Source of Danger to the American Republic. By W. F. Jamieson. Price, $1.75; postage paid.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 4.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 1873.

WHOLE No. 193.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for sectarian educational and charitable institutions shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the several States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

Therefore, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

- ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.
- ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ———. Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.
- ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, discourses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.
- ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.
- ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.
- ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be as commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.
- ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

As far as I am concerned, the above is the platform of the INDEX. I believe in it without reserve; I believe that it will yet be accepted universally by the American people, the only platform consistent with religious liberty. A Liberal League ought to be formed to carry out its principles wherever half a dozen earnest and resolute Liberals are got together. Being convinced that the movement secure compliance with these just "Demands" must ely, even if slowly, spread, I hope to make THE INDEX means of furthering it; and I ask the assistance and co-operation of every man and every woman who believes in it. Multiply Liberal Leagues everywhere, and re-promptly the names of their Presidents and Secretaries. Intolerance and bigotry will tremble in proportion that it grows. If freedom, justice, and reason are let, let their organized voice be heard like the sound of many waters.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor,

October, Sept. 1, 1873.

GLIMPSES.

BY F. E. A.

THAT was a good toast by Mr. Hatch at San José last winter: "The Two Great T. P.'s—Thomas Paine and Theodore Parker, par nobile fratrum: both 'Thoroughly Practical' and 'Terribly Persistent.'"

BISHOP LOUGHLIN has been confirming one hundred and sixty children. What is the difference between a confirmed Catholic and a confirmed infidel? Is not one kind of confirmation as good as another?

THE Methodist papers do not like reporters to be present at their "preachers' meetings." No wonder. It must make some of the ministers feel as foolish as geese to see their speeches in cold print. Or do they only feel foolish for each other? Human nature works in that way sometimes.

It is curious to watch the attempt at "religious watering places" to serve God and please the flesh at the same time. But Martha's Vineyard, Ocean Grove, and Sea Cliff, as it seems, are watering their religion so profusely as to drown it out. Query—is it any worse to water stock than to water religion?

It is funny to see the religious papers wrangling over "Mr. Beecher's Theology." Why, the good man hasn't any! How some people worry themselves to take the parallax of a shooting star, or determine the focus of a lively grasshopper! Mr. Beecher, the star, and the grasshopper all come under one rule—"now you see him, and now you don't."

THERE is confusion among the doxologies at Rev. Mr. MacFadyen's church in Brooklyn. Some of the congregation sing one stanza, while some sing another; whereupon a discontented "stranger" complains to the Eagle. What an unreasonable stranger! Does he not perceive that the theologies are as badly mixed as the doxologies, and that the discord after all is a new proof of the "eternal fitness of things"?

"We must agree upon a clean-cut statement of doctrinal truth which shall preserve our congregations from the intrusion of Romish and infidel teachers." So says an Orthodox journal, in behalf of "Church Union." Aye, but who is to frame it? Evidently a man with rooted antipathies against meat and conscientious scruples against potatoes, whose arduous mission shall be to convince the world of the superlative beauties of boarding-house hash.

MANY kind-hearted radicals find pleasing auguries of the future of Christianity in the manifest motion of the sects towards each other, as if that meant the overthrow of all barriers on account of belief. Such misreaders of the times should note the following strong statement by a paper devoted exclusively to the union of the sects: "The division lines between the Church United and the world are to be just as high, and strong, and well guarded, as they are between the Church Divided and the world."

WHAT an annihilating blow was dealt to Professor Tyndall, when a pert little Evangelical paper [since deceased—did it die like a bee in consequence of using its own sting?] pronounced him a "charlatan," and crushingly added—"We shall not go near him"! Such abstention must embitter Tyndall's subsequent existence. But this calling science charlatany as the best way to escape its influence raises in our irreverent mind visions of an ostrich with its beak stuck deep in the desert, while its tail-feathers wave magnificently in the breeze.

A POOR fellow who "had been connected with the New York press fifteen years," and [as a natural consequence?] "was going to ruin," hid himself out of sight in one of the galleries at the Fulton Street Prayer Meetings, until he was fairly prayed out of his hiding-place by a blind Kansas minister who had discovered him. Then he was converted, of course.

Well, "coming to Jesus" is better than "going to ruin"; but is not "coming to oneself" better still? If we remember rightly, that is what the Prodigal Son did. With some personal solicitude, however, we inquire whether the fate of this New York Bohemian awaits those who are "connected" with the Boston press. Perhaps it was rash to quit Toledo. But we shall insist on those "fifteen years" first.

THE Church Journal very sensibly reproves the sensational press reports and "interviews," got up to gratify a morbid curiosity about eminent criminals. It points out that such sudden and pernicious prominence given to them feeds the insane hunger of notoriety in multitudes of callow robbers and murderers, practically stimulating them to outdo each other in atrocity. But the Journal forgets that the same result is reached in a different way by the great ado made over the conversion of these very criminals, as in Nicholson's case, commented on by a correspondent in the last INDEX. The ministers are every whit as much to blame as the reporters for making heroes of cut-throats and assassins.

MR. A. T. STEWART went to Europe lately. Many other persons do the same thing, but not many leave $100,000,000 of their own behind them. The Christian Union talks sour grapes in the most approved style of Evangelical solemnity, and exultingly remarks that "his shroud will not have a pocket in it." But perhaps Mr. Stewart does not want a pocket in his shroud. If he takes the Union's advice, however, and puts on the "robe of Christ's righteousness," will he find a pocket in that? We do not see much difference between a pocketless shroud and a pocketless robe of Christ's righteousness—so far as pockets are concerned. In all other respects the honest shroud has the advantage over the dishonest robe, which is stolen finery at the best, and turns a genuine jackdaw into a bogus peacock.

DR. DURYEA, of New York, declares that "Christ was the highest style of a gentleman; and that which is the distinctive element of gentlemanliness in man is the infinite in God." The idea is not wholly new; but it is comforting, in this plebeian age of shoddy and petroleum gentility, to be assured that we shall owe our salvation to no parvenu Redeemer. Nowadays true Christians require an opera-troupe for a choir, a Beau Brummel for a minister, and a select circle of fashionables for fellow-sinners in the most gorgeously decorated pews. How soothing to remember that Jesus was a gentleman,—none of your dirty, vulgar, ragged vagabonds in whom the odor of onions quite overpowers the odor of sanctity, but a genuine gentleman, whose polite mission is to get us into the very best society in Heaven, and introduce us to his own gentlemanly Father! With the best of kids and a japonica in his button-hole, he will blandly greet the élite of New York, and do the honors of the "house of many mansions" in the most approved style of celestial etiquette. Undoubtedly the New Jerusalem is to be patterned after the excellent hints furnished to the Divine Architect by New York City, and the crowning sensation of the resurrection will be the discovery that Fifth Avenue and Central Park have been resurrected too. Dr. Duryea is a benefactor of the age, and mankind are really under the greatest obligation to him for his annunciation that the gospel is no affair of vulgar honesty and morals, but rather of good manners, and good society, and all the delightful etceteras. It was a mistake about the manger, and the carpenter's bench, and the houselessness, and the devoted life passed among outcasts, publicans, sinners, and other low-lived people; the Savior had an unexceptionable pedigree, and modern converts from upper-tendom need fear from him no shock to the most delicate sensibilities, or the most fastidious tastes. All this is charming; our only perplexity arises from our unregenerate incapacity of distinguishing between Heaven and Vanity Fair.

(FOR THE INDEX.)

The Dream of Unity.

BY O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

There is no sweeter word in our language than the word UNITY; it is pleasant to the lips and dear to the heart. We love to think of the unity of brethren, the unity of states, the unity of races, of languages, interests, purposes. Especially delightful is the word to religious men. The unity of the faith has always been a delicious dream. The Roman Church boasts of its unity, feeling that there is a spell in the idea potent over the imagination above all others. The Protestant Churches grieve over their variations, apologize for them, reduce them as far as possible in number and importance, and make the most of such fraternity as they have. How comforting to the soul are the words of the Christ, praying "that they all may be one; as their Father in me and I in thee, that they also may be one in us." We forget, as we repeat them, that they have reference only to the true believers, and contemplate the unity of the elect alone; forget that the Christ prays "not for the world" but "for them that were given him out of the world,"—or, if he has a thought for others, it is only for as many as shall believe "through the disciples' word." The bare use of the phrase, "all one," so fascinates the imagination that the most generous interpretation is given to it at once. Can "all" mean less than all? Can oneness imply exclusion? We repeat with unctious the passages in the Epistle to the Ephesians: "There is one body and one spirit; one calling and one hope; one Lord, one faith, one baptism; one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all." As it the fine language expressed an existing fact, and that fact a union of the spirit in bonds of peace among all spiritually faithful men; and there is a habit of looking back on that early time as an epoch of sweet communion, too soon broken and never afterward recovered. But the Epistle to the Ephesians and the Gospel called of John did but anticipate a unity that they believed was possible and hoped was near. The time for such hopeful anticipation had come, but not the conditions of its fulfilment.

When the scriptures I have quoted were written, there was room for thinking that these conditions were soon to be met. The great schism which had divided the Church and caused bitter feelings was healing. The city of Jerusalem, the head-quarters of the narrowest party and the stronghold of conservatism, was destroyed; and the believers, scattered abroad in Greek and Roman cities were learning the lessons of mutual understanding, forbearance, and charity. The radical party did more justice to the conservatives, the conservatives conceded something to the radicals; the old hatreds were mitigated, the old jealousies subsided, the old bitterness ceased; the original leaders were dead, and compromise under the name of reconciliation became possible. The advocates of centralization felt the need of universality; the champions of universality accepted the policy of centralization. The churches of St. Peter, and the churches of St. Paul were making overtures towards each other which were later to result in a great church dedicated to both St. Peter and St. Paul at Rome. The memory of Jesus, too, came up, and the feelings of a common discipleship warmed alienated hearts towards each other. Thus a partial unity among believers was slowly effected.

Necessity hastened its formation. Heresies were rising and spreading, threatening the church with fatal divisions. Those knowing people, the Gnostics, were disseminating their enticing speculations, to the confusion of the simple and the dismay of the learned. There was danger that, instead of two great parties, there would be a dozen small ones, biting and tearing each other and reducing the body of Christ to a mangled mass. Under these circumstances, the hitherto contending sects laid by their differences, and joined forces in order the better to resist the common foe. The unity of the church must at all hazards be preserved; and, as the surest way of preserving it, a policy of centralization was adopted which resulted in a system of episcopacy. In order to counteract the destructive tendencies of an excessive intellectual freedom, stress was laid on the idea of unity; the monarchical element prevailed over the democratic, and the church, as a visible institution, grew up. Ecclesiastical institutions involve ecclesiastical tradition; and it was not long before these crept along to the support of the defences against the aggressions of heresy. Soon, sooner than one would think possible, forms of doctrine raised themselves in line, and added to the forces already arrayed for the defence of the body of the Christ; while under the same impulse, and at about the same time, the effort was made to collect a few writings that might serve as a rule of faith. The New Testament canon, far from being the artless compilation it is commonly assumed to be,—very far from being a collection of writings prized for their genuineness of their authorship and the authenticity of their contents,—was formed on the principle of reconciliation. The books chosen were not taken on the ground of their historical value, but on the ground of their elaborate diversity and the faithfulness with which they presented and blended all views. They were documents of peace. They represented precisely the kind of unity that the church had effected, a unity that was a league for defence; unity suggested by prudence, confirmed by danger, and cemented by authority; unity in the bond of peace, but not in the spirit of love. Of course it was made to look as holy and beautiful as possible. The Christians gave their walled town the loveliest names. It was the bride of Christ, holy and beloved, the habitation of God; its foundation stones were apostles and prophets, its corner stone Jesus Christ himself. They called its inhabitants fellow-citizens with the saints and of the household of God, a mysterious fellowship, a heavenly family. The church was "the fulness of Him that filleth all in all."

To this strongly marked, sharply outlined unity, the Roman church laid claim. This unity she represented, maintained, defended. The means by which she did it were the councils, general and local, the whole number of which is estimated to have been something over sixteen hundred. The object of these councils was to mend breaches in the walls and heal dissensions in the camp; to guard, in a word, the compactness of the organization. Gibbon says: "The representatives of the Christian republic were regularly assembled in the spring and autumn of each year; and these synods diffused the spirit of ecclesiastical discipline and legislation through the hundred and twenty provinces of the Roman world." Writers in better repute speak more severely of them than Gibbon. Bishop Gregory Nazianzen said: "I am so constituted that, to speak the truth, I dread every assembly of bishops; for I have never yet seen a good result from any one of them,—never have been at a synod which did more for the suppression than it did for the increase of evils. An insatiable thirst for contention and for rule prevails in them." Neander, speaking of the great council of Nice, says: "Although these councils were to serve as organs to express the decision of the Divine Spirit, yet the Byzantine court had already prejudged the question as to which party ought to be considered pious, and which impious; and however emphatically the emperors might declare that the bishops alone were entitled to decide in matters of doctrine, still human passions proved mightier than theoretical forms." And Milman adds his testimony to the same effect: "Nowhere is Christianity less attractive than in the councils of the church. It is in general a fierce collision of two rival factions, neither of which will yield,—each of which is solemnly pledged against conviction. Intrigue, injustice, violence, decisions on authority alone and that the authority of a turbulent majority, decisions by wild acclamation rather than after sober inquiry, detract from the reverence and impugn the judgments, at least of the later councils. The close is almost invariably a terrible anathema in which it is impossible not to discern the tones of human hatred, of arrogant triumph, of rejoicing at the damnation imprecated against the humiliated adversary." "A General Council is a field of battle, in which a long train of animosities and hostilities is to come to an issue. The dominant party, when it could obtain the support of the civil power for the execution of its intolerant edicts, was blind to the dangerous and unchristian principle which it tended to establish." Strong language that for a churchman! It is a singular illustration of this boasted unity of the spirit in the bond of peace that in the council of Ephesus called the "Robber Council," one bishop was so kicked and beaten by the followers of another, and in that other's presence, that in a few days he died of his wounds. In the contested election of a pope of Rome, the voting was so fierce that one hundred and thirty-seven corpses were found in one of the churches. This was establishing unity with a vengeance.

Allow that these were wild times, and that party feeling ran high; that is only admitting that the unity involved no fellowship, was merely the compact organization of the strongest, a league for defence against the unbelieving enemy, a rally for the expulsion of wolves from the fold. The range of sympathy was strictly limited by the creed. St. Augustine reckoned eighty-eight sects as existing in his time, the last half of the sixth century; and each of these sects was an armed camp on the watch for an opportunity to surprise and overwhelm its enemies. Each claimed to be the body of Christ; the unity was the unity of each with itself. If the unity was extended, it was done after the imperial fashion by subjugation and annexation. The church might have adopted the motto: "Ense petit placidam sub libertate quietem,"—She seeks tranquil peace under liberty, by the sword." Only she did not seek it under liberty, but with liberty under her.

The famous council of Nice, in the fourth century, was called by the Emperor Constantine to extinguish once and for all the disputes that had broken out on the subject of the Trinity,—disputes, be it understood, among the Christians themselves and to establish the one Lord and one Faith on permanent foundations. The Nicene Creed, one of the most, perhaps the very most binding formula in Christendom, the one faith of the Roman, Anglican and Lutheran churches, was roughly outlined here. It was the hour of (Orthodoxy's) supreme triumph over heresy. Three hundred and eighteen bishops obeyed the imperial summons, and of ecclesiastics it is computed that there were present two thousand and forty-eight. The session lasted two months. The emperor, when present, as he often was, sat on a low stool in the middle of the hall. His guards were at the doors. The scene has been described by brilliant pens, from Gibbon to Dean Stanley, the last of whom gives the most powerful description of the fury that ruled the conferences, the uproar amid which the votes were taken, the savage glee with which the believers in the essential identity of the Father and the Son greeted the discomfiture of their enemies, and the cruelty with which the judgments were executed on the brethren who refused to enter into the new bond of peace. The doctrine of the Trinity being favored by the majority, the Catholic world had nothing to do but submit; and they who refused to submit were forthwith excluded from the Catholic world by main force, persecuted, hunted, outraged, killed. Their property was confiscated, their houses burned. But for the emperor, the recusants might have been extirpated. The ecclesiastical members of the Christian Family were quite ready to make a desolation and to call it peace. No matter which party triumphed in the efforts to recover the holy citadel of Faith. If the heretics got the upper hand and constituted themselves the Body of Christ, the Orthodox were drowned and massacred in cold blood; widows were scourged, and virgins stripped naked were whipped with thorns, or roasted over fires. If the Catholics triumphed, plunder, outrage, murder, poison, sacrifice were the means employed for cementing the unity of the church. Charles Kingsley's brilliant romance Hyppatia tells how that noble, gifted, pure and beautiful woman was dragged from her chariot, murdered, mangled, stripped naked, and the shreds of her body flung into the flames. Even bishops great in influence and high in dignity, men like Athanasius, men like Augustine, meant by unity nothing more than a league, offensive and defensive, against what they deemed error. Of any other unity they dared not dream.

The story of one council is the story of all, and there is no more discouraging story in history. Whether told of Egypt, Asia, Northern or Southern Europe,—of Constantinople, Ephesus, or Rome,—it is a story of dissension and anarchy, of peace only so long as one form of dissent prevailed for a time over the rest, of order only when anarchy for a time got organized, and secured a temporary sway. It is fearful to think of the "persuasions" by which the famed unity of the church of Rome was maintained. The mention of the Holy Inquisition and its gentle solicitations suggests well enough, the kind of unity that was desired. "May they who divide Christ be divided!" was the prayer of those whose "Christian love" was of the warmest. In the fourteenth century, when the question under discussion was the nature of the light that shone at the Transfiguration, they who would not admit that the light was uncreated were refused the honors of Christian burial. So imperious was the spirit of unity, that so small a question as that must not be allowed to disturb it; so jealous was the soul of harmony that a single discordant note, though of pipe or whistle, was punished by exclusion.

We must not forget that these were wild times and wild men, that passion was hot and reason feeble, that faith meant fanaticism, and that the extremes of love and hate met, the same fire serving for both. It is not strange that savage men were not restrained from tearing each other in pieces by the circumstance that they were all labelled Christians. Labels are not guarantees of genuineness, when the question is of pepper and vinegar, of molasses and sugar; much less are they so when the question is of justice, truth, and charity. But why, then, pretend that they are? Why call lust of dominion love of souls, when it is not? Why talk of brotherly love, when we know that the receptacle so stamped contains bitterness and blood? The cross on a banner does not change a legion of mail-clad warriors into a legion of angels. Praise, if you will, the strength of the castle walls, the vigilance of the guards, the discipline of the garrison, the completeness of the arsenal, the view from the summit of the towers;—but why call it an asylum, a sheep-fold, a home of peace and plenty?

Christian unity has never from the beginning been anything but a league for defence. It signified power, not love, even to those within the enclosure. They were one for safety, not one for joy; one for policy, not for peace; one for compactness, not for communion. The most majestic and perhaps the most earnest attempt at unity was made by the Council of Trent in 1545. Its objects were two fold: first, to strengthen the Church by new definitions and more stringent laws against the encroachments of Protestantism, which in spite of menace, maledictions, excommunication, and the dire penalties of the block and stake, was making rapid inroads; and next, to induce, if possible, the Protestants to return to the old faith. The first object was pretty well secured; so well, indeed, that the second could not be thought of. The Nicene creed was read and adopted as the basis of all proceedings, thus flouting all but strict believers in the deity of Christ. Tradition was declared equally with the Bible a rule of faith, an article not of conciliation, but of defiance; for Protestantism set up the Bible against tradition. The church was pronounced to be the only authorized interpreter of the Bible, and the Vulgate Translation the only legitimate version,—another gauntlet flung down in the face of the young enemy the hope was of propitiating. On the great doctrinal points at issue, original sin, justification, the sacraments, the Catholic dogma was reaffirmed, and solemn anathemas uttered on all who rejected it. This was not promising. The olive branch was not conspicuous; no doves went in search of it. Even the sainted Borromeo thought that twigs of another sort would be more to the purpose. At a late day, after many interruptions, representatives of Protestant princes appeared in the Council, and at least one celebrated Protestant theologian was summoned to attend. But to what end? The case had already been prejudged. They were not prepared to submit; and they were not invited to share. They retired, and the Council adjourned, after flinging one more heavy stone at their neighbors by reiterating solemnly the Catholic doctrine in regard to the Eucharist, confession, and extreme unction, all of which implied the extreme anti-Protestant opinions. On reassembling, further fortifications were thrown up. The whole papal system was declared obligatory, the priesthood, the mass, celibacy of clergy, monastic vows, penances, absolution. The worship of saints, images, relics was sanctioned. The practice of selling indulgences for sin, the very scandal that roused the soul of Luther, and brought the thunderbolt of the Reformation down, was authorized; and, as if to add the last insult to the last injury, a list of books was prepared which no good Christian must read on pain of everlasting fire. In 1563, seventeen years after its opening, this great effort at saving the body of God from dismemberment was brought to a close. The decrees were signed by legates, cardinals, patriarchs, archbishops, bishops, abbots, generals of religious orders, and delegates, the number in all of 255. Secular governments signed them through their ambassadors. The pope, with the unanimous consent of the College of Cardinals, confirmed them. "The Council of Trent," says Guizot, "secured the definitive triumph of the Court of Rome in the ecclesiastical order." That was the result then, the definitive triumph of the Court of Rome! The church had saved itself from sinking by throwing into the sea the most precious part of its cargo. The schism was declared fatal, and unity was restored. It was not unity in diversity, but unity with the diversity lopped away. The nation consisted of what was left, when secession had been ratified and accomplished.

Was there no better way? Suppose that what could not have happened had happened, and that unity not of an army but of a family had been sought; suppose that the spirit of fellowship had been the controlling spirit, that the prayer that all might be one had been as fervent as when first uttered by the master's lips,—how different would have been the results both for church and world! The church of Rome had the elements in it of an all but universal religion. It had the prestige of universality and antiquity. Its vast communion embraced worshippers of all tribes and tongues. Its ministers discharged every conceivable office for the soul, meeting the needs of the most superstitious and the most cultivated with equal skill. They reached the most abject, they were on a level with the most aspiring; they knew how to touch every string of that wonderful instrument, the human heart, and could at will draw from it strains of penitence and songs of praise. Its cultus was perfect; its apparatus of rites and ceremonies, borrowed from all faiths and tested in every part by the experience of men in all conditions of life, for hundreds of years, was as complete as time and practice could make it. It furnished all that imagination required, all that fancy coveted. It came down even to the demands of the eyes and ears, the fingers and the tongue, so that they who could apprehend spiritual things no otherwise might taste them. It had mysteries for faith, problems for reason, rules for conscience, holy forms of angel, madonna, and saint, for the affections, images for the sight. Architecture devoted to it its loftiest genius; art glorified it with its most transcendent creations; music built for it great organs, composed strains for every mood of feeling; trained bands of singers developed for its worship the wonderful capacities of the human voice, and compelled wood and even the baser metals to its beautiful mission of lifting souls to heaven. It had pomp and splendors; it had simplicities and austerities; silent cloisters and marble courts, gorgeous dresses and serge coats, religious houses for the men and women who were weary of the world, splendid enterprises for the men and women who, by effort and sacrifice would serve the world. It had authority for such as needed shelter, and liberty for such as needed range. Its doctrines, when it was not put on the defensive to preserve their unity, were large, indefinite, many-sided, very far from being oppressive to the mind, often stimulating, ennobling, emancipating. The brightest intellects of the modern world had room enough to spread themselves there and soar. For what could not be translated into every-day speech could be rendered in the language of symbol—the chambers of intellectual imagery opening indefinitely behind them. They were all most impressive to the spiritual mind, and science might have its way with them and yet leave them as good as ever for the uses of the higher reason. Genius, culture, philosophy, science dwelt peacefully in her mystic communion, kept there by the fascinating attractions of her opulent nature. Heroism, philanthropies, reforms, humanities, were fed at her full breasts.

Previous to the Reformation of Luther, the religion of Rome was the religion of Europe. There was no other. There need have been no other. Savonarola formed a home in it for his soul and refused to be separated from the church triumphant; Huss and Jerome asked no better. Luther could pray heartily to its communion, and broke with it reluctantly. Could the church have remembered this world of facts and been satisfied with it; could it have remembered that, having the souls of men in its communion, it could afford to let their minds go where knowledge bade; could it have remembered that the days of suspicion, jealousy, antagonism were over, and that the days had come when the kingdom, having given way to a republic, it could throw down its walls and be an open city instead of a fortified town; could it have loved unity for the sake of unity and not for the sake of power; could it have interpreted unity as meaning fellowship, and not as meaning exclusion; could it have seen the wisdom, the safety, of sacrificing everything for the sake of Brotherhood, which then was no fond dream as it has become since, but a solid organized and organizing fact; could it have remembered that peace and purity were inseparable, and in the interest of her own peace have reformed the vast abuses that had crept into her communion and were eating out her heart; could she, in a word, have done what she could not have done possibly,—the religion of Rome might have been the religion of Christendom at this day, a kingdom not of this world, and for that reason sweetening and sanctifying this world, leaving this world to go on its way by the help of science, invention, literature, commerce, education, and yet keeping it always in mind of the divine realities of the world above. The story of the last three hundred years would have run much more smoothly. Germany would not have revolted; England would not have thrown off her allegiance. No thirty years' war would have devastated Europe. No duke of Alva would have made the Netherlands a shambles. The sun of St. Bartholomew's day would have set serenely in the west. History would not have had to record the frightful reign of Philip II, or the wretched enterprise of the Armada; neither bloody Mary nor bluff King Harry would have lighted Smithfield with piles of faggots, consuming the noblest men and women in the realm; the miserable tale of modern Ireland would never have been penned, and the fructifying germs that struck root in New England, instead of being blown across the Atlantic by the blasts of hatred, would have been wafted over the on wings of heaven.

But thus it was not, and thus, of course it could not have been. Instead of unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace, there was unity of the flesh in the array of battle. Such unity created an opposing unity to meet it. As Romanism was one, in like manner Protestantism made itself one. Its safety lay in the solidity of its mass. Luther constituted himself unwittingly an anti-pope. The task of organizing the Reformation cost him a world of pain. He wished at times that he had the power to excommunicate. A burgess of Wittenberg, who had bought a house for thirty florins repaired it and offered it for sale at four hundred florins. Said Luther: "If he persists, I excommunicate him. We must revive excommunication." The divisions among the reformers vexed him past endurance. "Pray for me," he cries out at another time, "and help me to trample under foot this Satan that has arisen at Wittenberg against the Gospel in the name of the Gospel. It will be difficult to persuade Carlstadt to give way; but Christ will constrain him, if he does not yield of himself. For we are masters of life and death, we who believe in the Master of life and death." "I reject," he says, "and condemn as mere error all doctrine which assumes the will to be free." "If I live, I will with God's aid purge the church of this ordure." 'Tis Erasmus who has given birth to these visionaries and Epicureans. Be it thoroughly understood, I will no more recognize him as a member of the church." The reading of its the Protestant Confession of Faith at Augsburg, and signature by five electors, thirty ecclesiastical princes, twenty-eight secular princes, twenty-two abbots, thirty-two counts and barons, and thirty-nine free and imperial cities, filled his soul with joy. "They would have us neglect to prepare for the war with which they have been so long threatening us, so that we may be slaughtered unresistingly like sheep by the butcher. Your servant, my good friends, I a preacher of the word, ought to endure all this, and all to whom this grace is given ought equally to endure it. But were I publicly to recommend our party so to do, the tyrants would take advantage of this and I will not spare them the fear they entertain of our resistance." Such was the inevitable spirit of Protestant unity. It was not allowed to be different. Luther loved peace, labored for it, prayed for it. But peace was not granted, and he prepared, as all good soldiers prepare for war, by drumming the malcontents out of the army.

Calvin saw no Christian unity possible with men like Servetus busy breaking it up. This system had been accused of laxity; it had no cohesion, his enemies said; there was neither order nor discipline. To refute the charge, Servetus was arrested. The brotherhood was a very close one indeed. That the edges of it might not be frayed away, it was bound with iron. That none might go out of it, it was fringed with flame.

The idea that the church must be guarded like an entrenched camp, hooped round by moat and wall, has become so inveterate that the falsity of it is not suspected yet. Not only is the absurdity of it unnoticed, but the incongruity of it with the first principles of religion passes unobserved. These mailed corporations are still called the Body of Christ, and their efforts to subdue their Christian enemies are spoken of as endeavors to enlarge the Christian communion, and simply as in the earlier days when this kind of conspiracy was indeed necessary to existence. Every Missionary Society is an invading army sent forth in the service of this imperial kingdom to conquer foreign religions. The Bible Societies and Tract Societies are instruments of subjugation. The Sunday Schools are police organizations. Heterodoxy is the other man's doxy, and must be either cast out or whipped in. Every other faith is a foe.

The last great Council at Rome was less conciliatory than that of Trent, which at least avowed a purpose of healing the dissensions of Christendom and restoring unity to the divided church. Pius IX and his counsellors professed no such design. The purpose of the Council was to consolidate Romanism for more deadly resistance to the encroachments of the Protestant spirit. It was preceded by the famous Syllabus, which flung out a haughty defiance and challenge to the whole anti-catholic and uncatholic world; none but devoted adherents of the papal See sat in its deliberations, and the decree by which the work of the Council was consummated and its meetings crowned, the proclamation of papal infallibility, was a mortal affront to the rest of Christendom, a plain declaration that Catholic unity meant Roman unity, and that Roman unity meant concentration for defence against a mortal foe. The last demonstration in favor of Catholic unity was the most absolute declaration that unity was impossible.

Protestantism in similar strain retorts. The Evangelical Alliance announces a grand Council, its sixth general Conference to be held next autumn in the city of New York. Previous Conferences have met in London, Paris, Geneva, Berlin, and Amsterdam. Dr. Philip Schaff, in explaining the principle of the alliance, said that it was designed to promote Christian liberty and union among Protestant denominations throughout the world. It was not, he said, a sectarian body, that is, a body identified with any particular sect or group of sects, but "might rather be compared to a militia force"—mark the war-like character of the phrase! a militia force! to what end? For the promotion of liberty—how far? For the promotion of unity—of what kind and to what end? A militia force is for defence—against whom? The Romanists on the one side, the Rationalists on the other. The "Evangelical Alliance" is an organization for battle. The many sects constituting the mass of Evangelical Protestants, agree to lay aside the points whereon they differ, to forget in a special emergency that they are Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, Lutherans, Congregationalists, Episcopallians, and to remember those only whereon they agree, namely, the divine nature and redemptive mission of the Christ. They bury their private feuds as neighboring States do when menaced by a common enemy. The proposition has a generous aspect, as if proceeding from hearts touched by the gracious charity of the Gospel, and bleeding at the sad spectacle of a mangled Lord. In fact, the movement is caused by the long roll of the drums calling the scattered regiments to arms. The abandonment of sectarian peculiarities for essential doctrine is simply retiring from the outworks into the citadel, a precaution against surprise and assault. The sects do not, by this manoeuvre, show their love for one another, but their fear of the foe. The results of the measure appeared at once in a more rigorous policy toward Unitarians and other unorthodox sects. They were excluded from fellowship; they were dropped from committees; they were omitted in the making up of lecture courses; their writings were prohibited in Sunday Schools; their presence was not invited at conventions; they were gently or rudely pushed outside.

That this old parody of religious union should be kept up in America is strong enough, and only proves once more the inveteracy of habit. It is as if we were to wall in our towns, after the old European fashion. The modern city is distinguished from the ancient by the absence of wall and moat. Religion in America has no enemies that are not also the enemies of society. The Christian Church has no enemies that are not equally the enemies of the State. Protestantism has no enemies that are not public enemies as well. In Europe Romanism is a power in temporal affairs; here it is not. There the State protects it; here it has no position in the State. Dogmatism has enemies; Sectarianism has enemies; Ecclesiasticism has enemies; but these are not the Church. They are the ramparts that were erected to defend the Church in stormy times, useless and even worse than useless in times of peace. Who wage war against the substance of religion, love, joy, peace, long-suffering, goodness, gentleness, faith, meekness, temperance? All right-minded people, whatever their religious connections, honor the same law, respect the same goodness, venerate the same holiness, uphold the same standard of justice and purity, cherish the same good-will; all seek brotherhood and cultivate charity. Christianity has no foes but those she declares to be such, and pushes to the defensive. Even Mr. Abbot would raise the siege and retire, if the "Evangelical" citadel he is encamped before would surrender, and the power it stands for would enter into a league of amity with other spiritual powers, as China and Japan are doing. He levels no weapon at the heart of Jesus. Nobody does. The aggressive attitude of the Church provokes aggression. But for that there would be none. Science is reverential. Philosophy is large, comprehensive, wise. Literature is generous. Ethical systems are broad and wholesome. Even "Infidelity," so called, has outgrown the coarseness of Paine and the bitterness of Voltaire. Nay, Atheism itself, the days of d'Alembert and d'Holbach being passed, has become ideal and poetic. The Church is poorer, lacking the sympathy of men like George Holyoake in England, and Ludwig Feuerbach in Germany. If the soul of religion be humanity, the soul of the so-called irreligion is humanity too. Indeed there would be no such thing as irreligion, if religion were kind. Let the Church be truly a house of the Lord, and all the tribes of Christendom, with many more, will be found sitting in peace beneath its roof. But the world cannot live in a fort, and they who live outside, deafened by the noise and suffocated by the smoke of its guns, will complain.

The sum of my argument is that no such thing as unity in the sweet, paternal sense of the word has been known in Christendom. I might even venture to say, it has never been sought for. At the beginning, it was forced on the Church as a necessity, not adopted as a principle. Through the successive periods of history, it has been maintained from motives, sometimes of real, but sometimes of fancied, necessity; and now it is kept up, when no grounds of necessity can be longer urged, through the force of prejudice and habit alone.

Unity in religion is a dream; not a state once actual, afterwards fallen away from, now lost, but a vision the fulfillment whereof is to be sought in the future. A vision, fair, but so distant! Who shall venture even to paint it? A unity of Faith it cannot be, unless Faith be taken to be that spiritual apprehension which gives substance to things hoped for and evidence to things not seen. If by "faith" be meant dogmas, doctrines, opinions, however large, however general, on any speculative point whatever, the character of Jesus, the reality of Providence, the existence of God, unity there is impossible. Knowledge has gone too far. Intellectual culture forbids it. Philosophy has made it impracticable. Neither inside of Christendom nor outside of it can a common ground of definition be obtained. Subsoil as deeply as we will, surrender as many non-essentials as we may, dig lower and lower for foundations till every ecclesiastical structure is undermined, the "Rock of Ages" will not be reached. The prospect of obtaining one Lord, one Faith, one Baptism, even one God and Father of all, in a doctrinal sense, has become so dim as to be hopeless of attainment. Even if all were willing to attempt its realization, it could not be realized.

A unity of Work it cannot be, for views of work differ almost as widely as views of Truth. The workers form nearly as many groups as the believers. Some advocate doing every thing, some doing a little, some doing nothing. Equally good men contend that helping saves and that helping ruins. Questions of what shall be done, and how shall it be done, are as fiercely disputed as ever were questions touching the persons in the Trinity or the rank of the Christ. The champions of Future and of Present, of alms-giving and refusal of alms-giving, the missionaries and the anti-missionaries, the socialists and the anti-socialists, the internationalists and working men's parties of all degrees, the woman suffragists and the anti-woman suffragists, the temperance men of all shades, the friends of paternal, or in other words, repressive government, and the equally earnest, sincere, and high-minded disapprovers of all government whatsoever, stand by their respective theories as stoutly as the theological sectarians stand by theirs, and exhibit no better disposition to combine in a common cause. The army of reform is as much disorganized as the army of speculation.

Unity in the Spirit of Truth it will not be for a long time, for the spirit of Truth is still identified with dogmas. Few have any distinct conception of what the love of truth may be. The love of Truth is the love of that which each regards as Truth, namely, his opinion; and the intensity of his love for this appears in his zeal to bring his neighbors round to it. And as for Lessing's fine saying: "Give me the search for truth; pure truth is for Thee alone,"—not many, even of those who admirably quote it, appreciate its force. It is more comfortable to have the truth than to search for it, more exciting to defend it than to hunt for it. Reason has a long journey to make before it reaches the point at which even cultivated and enlightened minds can meet as lovers of truth. Our Free Religious Association aims to create "fellowship in the spirit" as opposed to fellowship in organization, or discipleship in a creed. But it cannot claim to have extended that fellowship widely, or to have illustrated it on any large scale. It is a sentiment and a hope; a sentiment pure, perhaps, because it is so far removed from practical experiment,—a hope, bright in proportion to its distance above the murky atmosphere of the planet.

The work in hand is preliminary. It is the removal of partition walls, the destruction of towers and ramparts, the dismantling of casemates, the filling up of moats, opening avenues of intercourse, establishing outward conditions of sympathy in order that those who ought to be one may have opportunity of becoming one. Before the water will run, the channels must be cleared. Vast heaps of ecclesiastical rubbish must be removed, sectarian barricades and dams must be broken down. These obstructions taken away, the water may be trusted to obey its own laws. It is not for us to establish unity,—unity establishes itself. Spiritual things gravitate to unity. The spiritual laws conspire to produce unity. Knowledge is a network of sympathies. Faith, hope, and charity imply unity. It is a necessity of Reason. Without it, Love cannot so much as be thought of. Religion by its definition is unity; for it binds all things in heaven and earth together. We can trust the great powers to vindicate their own supremacy. They need not that we should help, only that we should not hinder. The objection to the establishment of spiritual unity is that in it all separate creeds, sects, and churches, yes, all separate faiths, will disappear; the dividing lines between the great religions being obliterated, the religions themselves will vanish from the earth, and nothing will remain. If we speak of religions, the objection is fatal. They cease to exist with their limitations. But to say that nothing remains is to misapprehend the situation. That remains which includes the religions as the ocean includes its waves, and is most beautiful when they are still. RELIGION remains. The HUMAN MIND remains. Give it free play, and joyously it will adjust itself to the spiritual laws as to all others. The Creator is more than his work.

"THERE was sufficient occasion, in writing of Rousseau and his times, to celebrate mortality and the worm at the expense of those fond hopes of eternal life which most of us cherish; but Mr. Morley largely spares our weakness. Only once, we believe, does he elaborately bring forward his dismal convictions; and that is when he speaks of Rousseau's inexpensive trust that Madame de Warens would be compensated in another world for her sufferings in this; then Mr. Morley asks whether we should not really be tenderer and careful in our earthly relations if we once frankly accepted the fact that death absolutely separated and ended us all—a question which the champions of a future life will have no difficulty in answering. But there is another feature of the book which constantly occurs, and which is really an offence, and, we fear, a folly. Science having exploded the Supreme Being, Mr. Morley will not print the name of the late imposture with a capital letter; throughout he prints God, 'god'; even when he quotes from another writer, he will not allow us poor believers the meagre satisfaction of seeing our God shown the typographical respect which Mr. Morley would not deny to Jove, or Thor, or Vishnu, or even Jones or Smith. Mr. Morley must admit, on reflection, that this is at least a trifle intolerant, for a philosopher; especially, as at other points he is really very considerate and gentle with us. In fact, he is at some pains, we have fancied, to exhibit the Christian virtues in the mind of an atheist; he is even a little goody in his patronage of purity of life and the decencies; and he has the air—though perhaps we have unwarrantably imagined this—of desiring us to behold a man who can dismiss God (or god, as he prefers to call him) without going to the devil."

A story is told of a French gentleman, who, having lost the bulk of his property through the rascalities of friends in whom he trusted, crowned it all by the loss of his mental balance, and for the remainder of his days found his only delight in riding in omnibuses and passing fares from the passengers to the driver, taking care when change was returned to add to it a sou or two from his own pocket, and watch the effect on the receiver. In nine cases out of ten, as the story goes, the passenger, counting over his change, and finding, as he supposed, that the driver had cheated himself, would look bewildered for a moment, and then pocket the change with a quiet chuckle. The special delight of the lunatic was in satisfying himself in this way that nine-tenths of his fellow men were dishonest if they only had the opportunity.

[Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1873, by F. E. ABBOT, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.]

PAUL GOWER.

A RATIONALISTIC STORY.

—OF—

ENGLISH AND AMERICAN LIFE.

CHAPTER XXVII.

MORE NEW FACES.

When the party at Crook and Duff's broke up, Mr. O'Byrne was complaisant enough to accompany Paul and Dick across the Park and for some distance up Broadway, in the rear of Dr. Gower and Mr. Wheeler; an act of condescension which, at least in the opinion of the young Irishman—he could not have been over thirty—certainly laid them under considerable obligations. Why he did so I shall not pretend to decide; perhaps he was idle and disposed for conversation, perhaps influenced by the circumstance that Paul's father had been introduced to him as "from the South," words which then sounded auspiciously in Northern ears; and of all things Mr. O'Byrne admired social position. He was something of a character and, as such, worthy of a more extended description than has been accorded him.

He had come to the United States in 1852, a year identified with one of those spasmodic developments of periodical literature to which our great Republic is chronically liable; and also remarkable for an unusual influx of English and Irish adventurers, whose pretensions were commonly in inverse proportions to their merits. Then he gave himself out to be the cousin of a political celebrity in his native country, whose rash attempt at revolution, in 1848, commanded a good deal of American sympathy, and terminated in his transportation. Mr. Fitzgerald De Courcy O'Byrne (he had since dropped the De Courcy) was accustomed to lament that his own opinions had conflicted with those of his unfortunate relative and withheld him from taking that prominent part in the movement which his friends naturally expected. "I knew it was hopeless," he said, "and told him so; they could do nothing against the British Government." On the credit of this consanguinity he had obtained some sort of entrance into New York fashionable society, where his claims to personal and literary distinction were considerable. It was said that he had been an officer in the Guards, the editor of a London magazine, "on" the Times, a contributor to various leading periodicals—a superlative in general. Unluckily, however, when another distinguished Irish exile broke his parole in Australia and turned up in the United States, he didn't recognize Mr. O'Byrne, and even denied his relationship to their illustrious compatriot; after which nothing further was heard of it. Then certain stories which he had claimed to have written, on their appearance in English serials, were reprinted with the name of a popular author on the title-page; and Bottom, the manager of the Reade Street Theatre, insisted that he remembered "Fitz" as a penny-a-liner in Dublin, where he was known simply as Garry Byrne; also that instead of being, as he boasted, the descendant of ancient Milesian kings and closely allied to a distinguished historical family, he was merely the son of a petty attorney in a small country-town on the borders of Cork and Kerry. And though this might be exaggeration—for Bottom notoriously detested him, inasmuch as O'Byrne had severely criticised him, both as manager and actor, in the Times, during an attempt to reform the American stage by means of a series of slashing articles (which resulted likewise in the writer's getting thrashed by a captain of police, who was interested in one of the actresses ridiculed in O'Byrne's strictures, and his premature retirement from the post of theatrical critic)—the imputation did him considerable damage, especially among his fashionable acquaintances. He had, therefore, rather sunk out of their society, except in the shape of a few fast young men, who liked to know "literary fellows" and were willing to pay for it, in drinks, suppers, and loans. Sometimes, however, they pigeoned him, through the medium of his extraordinary vanity. In the meantime he had attained a recognized though indefinite position on the New York press, which might have enabled him to defy past scandals, if his behavior had not given constant occasion for fresh ones, to which his conceit and assurance afforded additional notoriety.

He was really a clever man of comparatively good education and brilliant, if superficial, talent. He had read very little, but his acquaintance with surface literature and knowledge of the world, combined with a positively marvellous faculty of assumption, deceived most people into accrediting at least some portion of his enormous pretensions. He wrote both prose and poetry; tales, sketches, criticism, editorials—anything for which he found a ready market—with that fatal Irish facility of composition which trusts entirely to the imagination for success and recognizes no higher standard; least of all that of exact truth and adherence to Nature. It may be questioned whether he did not think the latter a mistake altogether; any way it was not to his taste; he believed only in effect and called it art. Thus his style was redundant, his plots theatrical, his characters only bent on cutting a figure, his aim to excite mere astonishment and admiration. As a critic he wrote flashily, chiefly to show his wit and information, but without intentional injustice—unless he had a spite against the author or actor whom he was reviewing. In his graver efforts he took his tone from the pages descanted upon, imitating their drift and manner; which he explained by saying that he had unconsciously become absorbed by the subject in hand: originality, properly so called, he had none whatever. But his productions were generally clever, always readable and invariably characterized by extreme audacity and self-complacency. Essentially temporary, though amusing, they lacked depth, thoroughness, and honesty of purpose, and gave no promise of higher attainment. Secretly he believed that those who had earned the first honors in his craft were only luckier than he. In short he was a remarkably clever, self-conscious quack and literary adventurer, with a passion for notoriety and social distinction.

Bent on pleasing, he rendered himself as agreeable as possible to the young Englishmen, and would have been entirely successful but for what Sabin subsequently termed "the infernal consequential airs he couldn't help giving himself," which, however, Dick's nonchalance considerably abated. He talked sonorously of America and Americans, and very much as Columbus might have done of amiable savages, to whom he felt it his duty to be exceedingly kind and tolerant, as long as they preserved a proper respect and deference towards himself. They must, he said, for some time, largely depend upon Europe for their writers and artists, though they had some of both of more than average merit; for instance his friend Darling, who had promised, at his solicitation, to draw the cover of the new comic paper—he was unparalleled. The publisher might produce a good paper, if he got the right set of fellows and made it worth their while. Brough was a first-rate fellow, but not the man for editor—manager of a theatre that was going to the dogs. Then he nodded familiarity to a passing celebrity, stared at a pretty, over-dressed woman and entertained his companions with a satirical account of both, highly-spiced with scandal. He seemed to know everybody—that is to say everybody who was anybody in New York City; and boasted that it contained few phases which he had not explored, speaking of them like a man of the world and a professed viveur. He told two or three gross stories. He criticised Broadway and talked of the Boulevard Italien and Unter der Linden as cleverly as if he had seen them. He inquired in an intimate, off-hand manner, after English celebrities and did not betray much surprise when it appeared that Sabin was acquainted with some of them. Ultimately he parted from the young men at Wackall's Theatre, where he said he had a piece in rehearsal, evidently thinking he had created an extremely favorable impression, and after asking them to visit him at an up-town boarding-house.

"Rather a clever fellow," said Dick, adding the qualifying remark previously reported. "I wish he wasn't an Irishman. I don't like Paddies, they're so confoundingly impulsive. An impulsive man always goes off at half-cock, and it's a toss-up whether he doesn't do more mischief to his friends than his enemies. Morally he is a mad bull in a china-shop. But to do this one justice he seems free enough from that sort of nonsense."

"He was too civil by half and is too conceited," answered Paul, who was disposed to take a much less tolerant view of Mr. O'Byrne than his friend, and indeed felt a dislike to him rather disproportionate to his behavior and conversation—perhaps their natures were instinctively antagonistic. "I think the man's a self-satisfied humbug."

"Oh, well, you know, you mustn't expect too much from people," was Richard's answer. And then a firemen's procession, or a military company, or some other Broadway spectacle, came by and changed the conversation.

The walk included sundry business-calls on the part of Mr. Wheeler and Paul's father, in the course of which the young men could not but observe the sharp, incisive tact of the former, and that the latter seemed involuntarily to defer to him, with the sort of respect commonly accorded by unsuccessful to shrewder or luckier persons. It terminated in the return of all but the American by omnibus to the Astor House, where they presently dined and then ascended to their own rooms. As the two Gowers had agreed to rejoin Mr. Wheeler that night at his lodgings (he invited Sabin, who declined, on the plea that he was engaged to go to the theatre, in company with a Cuban, whose acquaintance he had made in the hotel bar-room), as soon as the evening shades prevailed and the newly-lighted gas was doing its best to enlighten them, father and son walked up West Broadway (a very different locality from that without the prefix, though nothing like so shabby and squalid as at present) to a street diverging off towards the North River, and soon arrived at a plain old-fashioned house, not far from a small, triangular inclosure and an immense liberty-pole (now removed). After a second application at the bell—no single ring ever produced an answer at a boarding-house—the inevitable Irish servant-girl showed them into an adjacent parlor, where they found Mr. Wheeler, with two ladies. As he immediately introduced them and, after a little general conversation, proposed that the Doctor should accompany him up-stairs to his room, to look over some papers—saying, with a smile, that young man Paul would prefer remaining below, that young man was, nothing loth, left to the society of Mrs. and Miss Livingston, for by such names had they been made known to him. They were the first American ladies whom Paul had had an opportunity of speaking to; he was fresh from a five weeks' sea-voyage, and in high good humor with everything; so the reader may imagine his satisfaction.

In the elder of the two—they were mother and daughter—he saw only an under-sized woman of spare figure, with a small head, rather cunning eyes and keen, self-complacent countenance, which was almost weakened with lines, though she was not more than five-and-thirty. She sat in a rocking-chair, with her feet in a basket before her, and had the air of a person on exceedingly good terms with herself, and willing to be propitiated. Her daughter lay on a sofa—I had almost written was reclining on it, so fitfully-rivacious were her movements—at a little distance. Paul had never seen anything like this girl: her appearance irresistibly attracted him.

She resembled her mother in shortness of stature, but in nothing else. Her figure was plump and rounded, perhaps suggestive of stockiness in after life, but at present too youthful to be otherwise than symmetrical, for she could not be more than eighteen. She had big, brown eyes, looking wonderfully alert and animated, and fringed with black curled eyelashes, as fine as if drawn by a pencil; they were also rendered additionally brilliant by the dark shade surrounding them; a peculiarity not uncommon to her sex and complexion, especially in America. The latter was rather sallow and further disfigured—if the word be not too harsh—with freckles. Her eyebrows were dark and thick, the space between them being wider and more distinctly defined than is common with brunettes. Her nose exhibited the upward curve forbidden by the stricter canons of beauty, and was rather fleshy at the nostrils, but extraordinarily characteristic. Her mouth—the most peculiar feature of her countenance—was at once arch, shrewish, voluptuous, wilful, and girlish, and all this without erring on the side of too full or too thin lips, or being otherwise than singularly fascinating. She had just the least suggestion of a mustache, in perfect harmony with her face, which, rather square at the forehead, became a charming oval below and terminated in an absolutely faultless chin. Her cheeks were soft and rounded, most deliciously so when she smiled or laughed; and her countenance was framed by such a rich, copious, tangled fall of curls, of the very deepest shade of brown—the color ordinarily mistaken for black—that you might easily have perpetrated the worst of American insults by involuntarily suspecting her of having a tinge of negro-blood in her veins. Indeed she looked not at all unlike a very pretty, intelligent quadroon or "yellow-girl," a comparison which will not be thought uncomplimentary by those acquainted with the beauty derived from such a mixture of races. Collectively and seen from a not too near point of view, she appeared positively bewitching; though perhaps the admiration she ordinarily excited in the other sex—which her own seldom shared—was not of a very pure, or gentle, or refined nature. Dressed in a plaid silk of rich, rather than showy colors, with a little lace collar and cuffs, she lay, as aforesaid, tossing about on the sofa; and, if the truth must be told, displaying glimpses of more than a neat white satin boot; apparently indifferent to, or disdainful of, or contemptuous towards everything.

For some time this young lady allowed the responsibility of entertaining the stranger to devolve entirely upon her mother, who proved fully equal to it, at least in the article of conversation. She talked very fluently, in a loquacious, elaborate manner, uttering an infinity of commonplace sentiments on a great variety of topics, evidently to her own perfect satisfaction, and under the impression that she was vastly intellectual and amusing; an amiable delusion which Paul's behavior as a good listener only tended to confirm; as also to recommend him to Mrs. Livingston's favor—though he couldn't help, now and then, glancing towards the sofa. Perceiving this, and perhaps willing to reward him for his attention, the mother made several indirect appeals to "Lizzie," to induce her to speak, as asking her opinion, referring to her recollection, inquiring whether she had heard so and so, to all of which hints the girl returned brief, indifferent, or snappish answers. At length Paul became piqued at her silence, and, seizing the opportunity presented by Mrs. Livingston's asking about his recent voyage, gave a sprightly and humorous account of it (in which he drew, perhaps, on the letter he had written to Kate Sabin), being desperately satirical at the expense of his late fellow-passengers; whereupon Miss Lizzie looked up, laughed three or four times, showing a row of very pearly teeth, and seemed to think that the young Englishman might be worth notice. Following up this success with a lively narration of a "chicken-fight" between little Mr. Bowers and a great, hulking Dutch sailor, who, when overthrown on the deck, could only express his wrath in his native language, Paul attained such victorious recognition that Miss Livingston presently sat up and laughed and chatted in such an animated manner as to excite surprise in her mother, who gave utterance to it, saying:

"Why, Lizzie, I thought you were out of sorts for the night, because Charley Fox disappointed you about the opera?"

"I wouldn't talk nonsense, mother, if I was you!" was the tart reply. "And as to Charley Fox, when I consent to go to the opera with him again he'll know it, that's all!"

Perceiving from the expression of the elder lady's countenance the imminent danger of an acrimonious retort and probable quarrel, Paul made haste to avert it by remarking on the open piano and asking Miss Livingston to oblige them with some music. To which responding, "I'll sing for you, Mr. Gower!" with an accent on the personal pronoun which rendered it rather more of a rudeness towards her mother than a compliment to the visitor, she complied by going at once to the instrument, drawing the music-stool under her by putting her foot out behind, and beginning immediately.

She both sang and played with almost professional brilliancy and effectiveness, her voice being singularly sweet and rich in the lower notes, though ill-regulated in the upper. But he must have been either a churl or a musician who would have criticised the singer; whose evident enjoyment of the performance caused her to be ten times more fascinating than before. Her eyes sparkled, her cheeks mantled and glowed, and her red, smiling mouth looked so delicious, that Paul, as he turned over the music (doing it very clumsily) could not help falling a little in love with her. You see he was only twenty-one, naturally sentimental, and three thousand miles away from Kate Sabin; besides he had not been on speaking terms with a petticoat for six weeks. If these considerations be not enough to secure his excuse, I know of no other, and must abandon him to the ladies' indignation.

Miss Lizzie sang to him again and again, for a good hour, always with immense willingness and satisfaction; and thus the time passed away most delightfully. It was with some self-reproach for his want of politeness that Paul presently discovered that Mrs. Livingston had quitted the room, leaving the young people to their unmistakable enjoyment of each other's company. But her daughter took it very coolly, saying that no doubt mother had some orders to give to the servants relative to to-morrow's breakfast. This observation brought up the subject of boarding-houses, when Paul very naturally wished himself a denizen of that establishment.

"I guess you can come if you like," retorted the girl, brusquely. "There'll be a room when Mr. Wheeler goes. I wish you would."

"Do you?" cried Paul, transported in spite of himself; "then—" And here, very opportunely, Dr. Gower and Mr. Wheeler returned.

There was some rallying of the young man, on the part of the elders, which Miss Lizzie did not condescend to notice. After a little more music from her at the request of the doctor, the father and son took their departure and, walking home to the Astor, Paul began to think he was in a fair way towards seeing a good deal of various kinds of New York society.

HEATHEN POETHY.

[From the Pall Mall Gazette.]

Recent regrets as to the temptations of heathenism seem to have been anticipated in India itself; for we find in the Friend of India half a dozen verses from translations of Tamil poetry which are confessed to be beautiful, the quaint comment being added: "The above, we regret to say, are all heathen." The extracts thus referred to were taken from two papers on Tamil popular poetry, contributed to two recent numbers of the Indian Antiquary (Bombay) by Mr. Cardwell, of Madras, wherein the writer undertakes to discuss the characteristics of Tamil poetry, and to prove by ample illustration that Tamil popular poetry contains gems of art of which any European language might be proud. Here is a specimen of a popular Tamil poet. The original text is given in The Antiquary, and these translations, though rhymed, are asserted by one of the most eminent Tamil scholars to be almost absolutely accurate:—

THE SHEPHERD OF THE WORLDS.

(A detached piece from the poems of Sivavakkiyar.)

How many various flowers
Did I, in by-gone hours,
Call for the god, and in his honor strow;
In vain, how many a prayer
I breathed into the air,
And made, with many forms, obeisance due!
Beating my breast, aloud
How oft I called the car! How oft I strayed
To drag the village car! Row oft I strayed
In manhood's prime, to lave
Sunwards the flowing wave:
And, circling Siva's fane, my homage paid!
But they—the truly wise—
Who know and realize
Where dwells the SHEPHERD OF THE WORLDS, will ne'er
To any visible shrine,
As if it were divine,
Deign to raise hands of worship or of prayer.

Such is the tone of the most popular of Tamil poets against what is called gross idolatry, not dissimilar to some phases of devotion nearer home. Such is a philosophy popular among the peasantry of India, and altogether undervalued from what is called Western civilization. From about thirty stanzas by the same poet, given in Tamil and English by Mr. Cardwell, we select the following three having a like theme with the preceding:—

Fools! with continual searching,
The gods, the gods! ye cry.
Even the way ye know not
To seek for them whereby.
Tell me, is it religion
To say, The gods are three?
To attain to God, within you
Your search for Him must be.

The tethered ass, become it
A swan, if God's adored!
Ye sinful fools, can Siva
Become the one true Lord?
A wholly spiritual object
In the Benares he stands,
The Original, the Endless,
Whom no mind understands.

Not Vishnu, Brahma, Siva,
In the Beyond is He;
Nor black nor white nor ruddy,
This Source of things that be.
Not great is He, nor little,
Not Female, and not male;
But stands far, far and far beyond
All being's utmost pale.

And also the two following, on religious symbolism—a subject the solution of which seems to be quite as earnestly and intelligently aimed at, and as hopelessly missed, by the Indian as by the European intellect. To devotees thus:—

How many your devotees!
Although ye mortify
Your bodies, go through mantras,
To temple-chourinsies,
Ye will not know the Splendor
Who hath in space His seat.
They with minds cleared can only
Reach the true Siva's feet.

My thoughts are flowers and ashes
In my breast's fane enshrined;
My breath, too, is therein it
A linga unconfined.
My senses, too, like incense
Rise, and like bright lamps shine;
There, too, my soul leaps over
A dancing-god divine!

Mr. Cardwell says the drift of this last stanza, which, in his opinion, is one of the finest ever written by Sivavakkiyar, is as follows: "You popular Hindus have your temples; you have your flowers and sacred ashes; you have your phallus, or emblem of divine creative power; you have your incense and lamps; and you have your divine dancer, Siva. I, too, have my flowers and ashes, but they are of the mind. I, too, have my linga, but it is my breath or spirit. I, too, have my incense and lamps, but they are my five senses. And I, too, have my deity leaping in divine sport within me, but that is my soul. In a word, mine is the true spiritual worship." From the lamentations of the same poet we select the English version of the second half:—

When, ah! when
Will the best time of bliss attained arrive,
When I annihilate these senses five,
Suppress my pride, and my fire being steep
In that existence which is sleepless sleep?

When, ah! when
Cleaving through all this birth's illusions vain,
Shall I to my last spiritual state attain?

When, ah! when
Burning the Shastras, deeming the Vedas four Mine lies, shall I the Mystery explore,
And perfect bliss attain for evermore?

When, ah! when
Laying aside, bound fast, the Shastras' lore,
Wholly distrusting, too, the Vedas four,
Shall I the Mystery know, and grieve no more?

When, ah! when
Though I the Vedas four may hoarsely shout,
The secret of the heavens shall I find out?

When, ah! when
Shall this poor soul within this body set,
Disquieted like fish within a net,
Find the True Priest, and offer, as is meet,
Perpetual homage to His sacred feet?

When, ah! when
Will all my carnal lusts have utter end?
And I, with eyelids dropt, to heaven ascend,
And with God's being my own being blend?

From the various writings of Pattanattu Pillai, "characterized more by melodious verbiage than by striking thought," Mr. Cardwell gives a dozen stanzas, of which the following is the English version of the first couple. The first is a meditation on death, and runs thus:—

When dead, my mother scorns me, saying, But a corpse is he;
My gold-bought wife, with weeping, cries out, Depart from me!
My sons, my pyre construing, their wonted pots let fall,
There is no love but Thy love, O Thou that ownest all!

Another stanza, by the same writer, contrasts the vulgar idolatry with the omnipresence of Siva:—

In speech and its conclusion, and in the Vedas too,
In darkness, and in heaven's stainless expanse of blue;
In hearts of true ascetics, and in each loving mind,
The Lord's unbounded presence ye certainly may find:
But how, in stone and copper, can ye the god deary
Who in his forehead beareth the terrible one eye?

For seven centuries the Ramayanam of Kamban has been the folk-song of Southern India, alike popular in the bazar, among the peasantry of the villages, and at the social gatherings of the great. It was in elaborately-studied imitation of this national heathen epic (which he wished to supplant among native Christians) that Beschi produced his Tembavan, relating in his fashion the Gospel narrative. To illustrate the general character of these translations, we add one stanza from this poem. "It is," says Mr. Cardwell, "impossible in any translation to reproduce the spirit and melody of the original stanza. Even those who have studied Tamil deeply must be struck with the remarkable verbal structure of these eight lines." The measure in which they are written is common in Tamil popular verse. In the original, as given in Romanized form, the first words of the first, third, fifth, and seventh lines are perfect rhymes to the Tamilian ear; the second and last words in all these lines are identical; the first words of the first two lines form a perfect rhyme. The verse has other peculiar harmonies, and is, says Mr. Cardwell, the most famous verse in a famous poem:—

Oil nakkodu van andar pugala,
Oil nakkodu pan andar pugala,
Kail nakkodu par pul pugala,
Kamal nakkodu ka malai pugala,
Toli nakkodu niruppal pugala—
Finnam pugala paduvoy ni!
Al nakkoru nan unci pugala,
Ariya mugai unartayo?

Whilst Thee, with tongues of splendor, the orbs of heaven praise;
Whilst gems of Thee their voices, with tongues of brilliance, raise;
Whilst unto Thee wood-warblers, with tongues of joyance, sing;
Whilst wood-flowers Thy sweet praises, from tongues of fragrance, bring;
Whilst Thee, with tongues of clearness, the water-floods applaud;
Thus, day by day, from all things dost Thou receive not land;
Wilt Thou not deign to suffer the tongue Thou gavest me—
Though I be dumb and thoughtless—to offer praise to Thee?

We close these extracts from Mr. Cardwell's interesting papers with this interesting Te Deum. They may serve to remind us that neither faith, virtue, nor truth is the exclusive property of either Christian or heathen. We hope Mr. Cardwell will be encouraged to republish and extend his researches in Tamil folklore and poetry, the rich inheritance of ten millions of our fellow-subjects in Southern India.

"I VERY largely attribute the decline of religious interest in some directions to the interest which has been taken in the questions which naturally arise out of the adulterous connection at present existing between religion and the state in this land. We should never be satisfied until we stand upon an equal footing, all of us in matters of religion. An Established Church is an established tyranny. We wear upon our wrists each one of us, as dissenters, fetters that call us worse than if they were made of steel. We have to support a church whose business it is to oppose the truth we try to preach; we have to maintain an institution which tries to pull down that which we would be willing to die to maintain. Popery is this day paid for in this land; that which our fathers died and rotted in prison to put down, we have to contribute to support, and we cannot help feeling indignant—we should be less than men, certainly less than the sons of the Puritans who made the Cavaliers feel the strength of their right arms, if we do not feel in our souls that we cannot long submit to the tyranny which galls us every day. Down with it! Down with it! We will be free as God lives. This question must be answered and settled once for all, and the sooner it is done with, the better; and we mean that it shall be done with, by God's help, ere long."—Mr. Spurgeon on the Disestablishment of the English Church.

The Index.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY

BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Toledo Office: No. 35 MONROE STREET. Julius T. Frey,
Agent and Clerk.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD F. HOLLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHEWY, REV. CHARLES VOSEY (England), PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), REV. MONROE D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.

BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 4, 1873.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS TO INDEX STOCK.

Mrs. F. W. Christern,	New York City,	One share, $100
Richard B. Westbrook,	Sonman, Pa.	" " 100
R. C. Spencer,	Milwaukee, Wis.	Two " 200
R. W. Howes,	Boston, Mass.	One " 100
Chas. W. Story,	Boston, Mass.	" " 100
E. W. Meddaugh,	Detroit, Mich.	Five " 500
Jacob Hoffner,	Cumtinsville, O.	One " 100
John Weiss,	Boston, Mass.	" " 100
W. C. Russell,	Ithaca, N. Y.	" " 100
A. W. Leggett,	Detroit, Mich.	" " 100

NOTICE

On and after September 1, the publication office of THE INDEX will be at No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. All letters, papers, and other communications should be henceforth addressed to "THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass."

Correspondents and Exchanges will please take notice.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Report, in pamphlet form, of the Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association for 1873 will be published Sept. 1st.

It contains full proceedings of the meeting, including Essays by Samuel Johnson on "FREEDOM IN RELIGION" and by John Weiss on "RELIGION IN FREEDOM," Speeches by O. B. Frothingham, W. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, S. Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, Lucretia Mott, and the annual Report of the Executive Committee.

Price, 35 cts. a copy; in packages of four, or more, 25 cts. each. It can be obtained by addressing the undersigned at New Bedford, Mass., or, in Boston, of A. Williams & Co., and at Loring's.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec'y F. R. A.

MR. W. P. WILSON, so well known to many of our subscribers as an active, efficient, and trustworthy agent for the Index Association, will devote the month of September to canvassing for subscriptions to the Association's capital stock. It is extremely desirable that the losses entailed by the troubles of last spring should be fully made good, and we hope that he will be kindly received by all who are friendly to the aims of THE INDEX. Owing to past abuses of the commission system, it is necessary to state that Mr. Wilson will receive no commission at all, but will be remunerated for his time and labor at what we consider a fair rate of compensation. This we state at his own request; and we cordially commend him to the confidence of our friends.

In the confusion and turmoil of removing our publication office eight hundred miles from Toledo to Boston, it is quite likely that mistakes will be made in the ordinary office business. Indulgence is asked for all such mistakes. The utmost pains have been taken to avoid them, and as little derangement as is perhaps possible will be experienced by our subscribers; but they will readily forgive the few slips that are inevitable.

WHAT a miserable performance is the tuning of a piano-forte! Nothing but a harsh pounding of the wires, a wearisome torture of that which was made for music! Yet without it the poor instrument would be worse than dumb, neglected by the master of harmonious sounds. What is Life but a piano-tuner? And what art thou, O victim of circumstances, but a piano tuning for Nature's touch?

REMOVAL AND ENLARGEMENT.

THE INDEX greets its readers this week in an entirely new typographical dress, and signalizes its first appearance in Boston by being enlarged to twelve pages. We hope that it will be kindly welcomed by all who take any interest in its welfare, and by all who have it at heart to sustain a worthy organ of the freest, finest and most practical religious thought of the age. Whatever can be done to improve THE INDEX will be done as fast and as far as circumstances permit; and we would thank most sincerely the generous friends whose liberality now starts it on a new and promising career. Much yet remains to accomplish before the paper will be in a condition to do all the work we have planned for it; but steady industry and indomitable energy, seconded by hearty co-operation, will yet, we are confident, triumph over all the obstacles and difficulties of the undertaking. Now that THE INDEX is fairly established in Boston, with the prospect of permanence, increased interest, and wider usefulness before it, we trust that its readers and friends will vigorously push its circulation, sending in the names of new subscribers till our mail-list groans under its load, and sending us also long lists of possible subscribers to whom sample copies may be sent. Now is the season when a little active exertion will be plentifully rewarded. The summer fugitives are flocking home from their vacations by sea-side and mountain-side; business will soon be brisk again; and now is the time for the good word fitly spoken that shall secure the addition of many a new name to the list of INDEX readers. It will be our most earnest endeavor to make every number of the paper an improvement on its predecessor; and we rely on all who are willing to help to give at least one day's solid work to the swelling of our subscription list. "A long pull, and a strong pull, and a pull all together!"

AGITATION.

THE INDEX is an agitator. Its work is agitation,—the strenuous endeavor to apply the highest religious ideas of the times to a state of society not yet brought up to their level. Its aim is therefore intensely practical, and can only be attained by the securing of such changes in the political and social condition of the nation as shall bring the national life into entire harmony with the principles of the Declaration of Independence and the United States Constitution. The freest and highest possible development of humanity which shall at the same time be universal,—this is the object of all true radicalism; and the practical realization of this object will be impossible until the political and social changes which are its necessary conditions shall have been accomplished. THE INDEX works for practical reform; and all practical reform begins with agitation.

Instead, therefore, of devoting itself exclusively to the task of promoting reform in speculative thinking on religious subjects, although this also is a vital part of its work, THE INDEX has never forgotten this thoroughly practical part of it, but has always advocated the most direct application of ideas to facts. Its speculative thought has always had an immediate practical bearing. It has always urged such improvements in legislation, for instance, as tend to enlarge and strengthen liberty, especially in its highest aspects; it has always argued for a more complete separation of Church and State; it has always pointed out that the Christian Church still exercises usurped power in many ways over the community, and demanded that all such usurpations shall cease. Although many radicals are for various reasons indisposed to carry out radical principles to their full logical extent, THE INDEX has in substance always unflinchingly insisted on the "Demands of Liberalism"; and all these things it hopes to do with increased power and influence in the future. In fine, it is not only in favor of thought, but also of action; and it will fail of its true mission if it forbears to add to speculation agitation.

With this conception of the work to be done, the proposal to organize Liberal Leagues was made at the beginning of the present year. Only a moderate response has been hitherto made to the proposal, yet enough to convince us that the times are rapidly ripening for an energetic and vigorous prosecution of the movement. Be this as it may, we do not intend to be in the least discouraged. We believe in the movement more than ever, and should still believe in it though every Liberal in the land voted it indiscreet, untimely, and dangerous. The "Demands of Liberalism" are intrinsically just. They cannot be denied to be just except on Christian grounds. They are right, and therefore wise. Consequences are none of our business: we take our stand on justice, and mean to demand it until the people hear. While we have strength enough to hold a pen, and ink enough to fill it, and an INDEX in which to print the words, we mean to protest against the tyranny by which the Christian Church puts a yoke on the neck of mankind, and harnesses freemen to her car. If we drop by the way-side before that yoke is broken, a thousand better men shall press forward to transmit the protest to their children and their children's children, till its work be done. Let the Church take warning; a cry has gone forth that shall never again be silent till her sceptre is broken, her head uncrowned, and her slaves set free.

WHAT TO AGITATE.

The Radical Club and the Liberal League have widely different objects. The one aims at thought and its expression; the other aims at thought and its application. The one thrives by conversation, discussion, essay-writing; the other must thrive by concerted action for definite practical objects. Both live by thought; but the one is the head and directs, while the other is the hand and executes. Of course, the Liberal League should be also a Radical Club, so far as the discussion of ways and means is concerned; but while the Radical Club, as hitherto organized, seldom if ever takes up the task of practical agitation, the Liberal League is designed for nothing else, and will be of little use if it does not carry out its original purpose.

The Radical Club, consequently, is a union for the maturing of convictions on speculative and practical questions of religious reform; but the Liberal League assumes that convictions have already been sufficiently matured to warrant combined action in carrying them into effect, and organizes itself to take any steps, political or otherwise, which may be necessary to carry them into effect. In short, the League contemplates direct practical agitation for the purpose of securing the general adoption of special measures; and its existence will be as fruitless as short-lived if it forgets that deeds, not words, are its reason of being.

"But what shall be agitated?"

All such plans as are suggested in the "Demands of Liberalism." Plans for securing the equitable taxation of all church property; for securing the abolition of the chaplaincy system; for securing constitutional guarantees against sectarian appropriations of public money; for securing the direct prohibition by statute of Bible-reading as a religious exercise in the public schools; and so on. For instance, six or eight courageous Liberals, not afraid of the clamor and opposition that are sure to be raised by the church party, associate themselves in a small town as a League, proceed to circulate petitions for signature favoring the exclusion of the Bible from the schools, hold public meetings to discuss the subject, and persistently agitate it till it is impossible to ignore it any longer; and, if possible, they oblige the School Committee or Board to act on it in some way, either adopting or rejecting the measure proposed. Consider what an amount of invigorating thought will be awakened in the community by bold and temperate agitation of such a question as that,—what an amount of new information will be imparted, what a stimulus will be given in many ways to the progress of liberal ideas. All the preaching and lecturing of a year would accomplish less towards the enlightenment of the public mind than would be accomplished by a few weeks of effective agitation of this sort.

"But all this requires bravery, devotion, willingness to incur unpopularity and to make self-sacrifices. People even of radical convictions do not care enough for them to be at so much trouble and expense in their behalf,—still less to rouse the certain ill-will of their Orthodox neighbors for the redress of such shadowy grievances."

Possibly. But we disbelieve it. We believe that there are many people, men and women too, who inherit the spirit of the anti-slavery movement, and are as willing to be mobbed or rotten-egged for an idea as ever they were. The grievances are not shadowy. The present partial union of Church and State is no shadow, but a substantial reality, costing the community millions of dollars every year. It is fraught with most grave dangers to the continued existence of our republican institutions. Every reflective mind will see ample cause why bravery and devotion and self-sacrifice should be exhibited in the new movement as luminously as in the old. Nor is the heart of America so dead as to be incapable of enthusiasm at the present day. Are there not young men and young women everywhere who will respond more quickly to a summons to dangerous service than to an invitation to inglorious ease? Not yet shall we despair of the republic. It is precisely such a warfare of ideas as this that is required to brace the public conscience, quicken the public intelligence, and train the rising generation in the high heroism of battling for the truth. The dry rot of business corruption and political demoralization can be cured in no way so sure as by stirring up the sluggish public to a deeper and broader appreciation of the great principles on which rests the whole fabric of American liberties, and to greater fidelity in making them the law of all political administration. It is "Christian statesmanship" which defends Crédit Mobilier and salary-grab legislation; let in a little wholesome secularism into Congress and State Legislatures,—aye, a little wholesome heathenism, if you please,—and mark what beneficent results will follow. The rights of Christianity as a private form of faith are to be most scrupulously respected; but when it arrogates general authority, battens on the public treasury, and steals the prestige of State and National government, it is time to learn that America is not built on Jesus Christ as its cornerstone, but on the Rights of Man.

Agitate, then, agitate! And form Liberal Leagues everywhere to the end that you may agitate with effectiveness and power!

THE ONENESS OF TRUTH AND THE FELLOWSHIP OF THINKERS.

One of the finest results of true education or culture is the perception of that relationship which exists between every part of truth, or between one truth and all other truths. The universe is one. Beneath all variety there is a deep and central unity, and the most joyful discovery of every thinker is to penetrate to this. This is what the old Greek philosophers so strove after, from Thales down through the whole long glorious line of them. Their outward vision beheld variety; their thought grasped the idea of unity. Only the latter they felt could explain the former.

All truth is one, and all truth-seekers should be one in the high fellowship of a common spirit. It is impossible for the real truth-seeker to be narrow. He is like the thirsty traveller in a desert, who seeks amidst the sandy waste for the green oasis and the deep fountain full of cool waters. He is glad that others are out on the same quest; and though they are scattered far and wide on either side of him, and before and behind, and are pursuing different trails, his keen interest and warm sympathy reach to and include them all, and he rejoices when any one of them makes the least discovery that argues an approach to the common goal of the whole company. Though no one truth-seeker can himself enter into every path of special investigation, he yet has a brotherly feeling for every special inquirer; for he knows that all real results produced in any department of the wide field of human inquiry are so much contribution to his enlightenment and to the true knowledge of mankind. It is the height of absurdity and folly that there should be jealousy between the various thinkers and investigators of the day, or indifference on the part of one to the success of all the others. Neither can dispense with the other; each complements the other. Let trophies be brought from every field, and let the conqueror of any and every realm of knowledge be crowned with the green bay of honor. Let Müller, and Darwin, and Tyndall, and Spencer, and Dale Owen, and Josiah Warren, and Livingstone, and Martineau, and Emerson hall each other as brothers. Let the poets and artists—nay, let the mechanics, and engineers, and surveyors, and miners all come in and join the high brotherhood. Who shall say which is the more important? Who shall say which brings the most valuable contribution to the combined wisdom of the whole? Every fact hints its relation to every other fact. It is impossible to get hold of one thread of truth without coming to perceive that it is woven in with countless other threads, and that altogether they make up the bright fabric of that truth which is infinite and one.

True culture produces breadth and catholicity of mind. Thought makes a man a cosmopolitan. The thinker discovers that he is an inhabitant of the whole world; he reads and speaks all languages as it were, and finds himself sitting in his own home circle whenever he is invited to the contemplation and discussion of high themes. One may have vigorous opinions and positive convictions of one's own without being narrow or partisan in the holding of them. We may be quite sure that in a given case we are right and our opponent wrong, and still be neither arrogant nor exclusive. Indeed, the very highest assurance we can have that our position is truer than that of another is that we can understand and do justice to the opposite position, can draw a circle around it, and see how it is related to ours and to all that comes after and goes before. There is a germ of truth in every honest opinion, for the sincere truth-seeker cannot go forth in search of truth without being more or less successful. The great triumph is to find the key to related truths, and to hold fast to one truth in utter candor and hospitality towards every other. Special investigators and special reformers are liable to become narrow and superficial, to lay so heavy an emphasis on their speciality as to distort it out of all proportion to everything else. Safer and better far it is to be the champion of principles rather than of causes, for principles underlie all causes and show the relation between all. The devotees of measures and men harden into bigotry and grow smaller in partisanship year by year, while those who are faithful to great principles increase in intellectual and spiritual stature as the suns wax and wane. Those who belong to no sect or party seem to those who do to have no ruling principle and no guiding idea; but how is it possible for the mole who burrows in the ground, and only emerges into the light of day with the dirt of his subterranean home clinging to his head, ever to get an adequate idea of the real breadth of the earth or the sweep of the heavens? The sectarian cannot do justice to the unsectarian; the narrow man never can comprehend the broad one. The truth-seeker has no party except the party of the whole; he has no sympathies narrower than those that embrace all candid and earnest inquirers. Intellectual honesty, fidelity to personal conviction, and contemporary justice, these he deems of chief importance. And as for ideas, he has all that are going; for his hospitality to them makes them flock to his door. A. W. S.

ALLEGED MURDER OF URIAH: DID DAVID, SON OF JESSE, MURDER URIAH THE HITTITE?

BY PROF. F. W. NEWMAN.

According to the summary improperly called the Second book of Samuel (ch. xi), David, when in the height of his greatness, conceived a guilty passion for Bathsheba, wife of Uriah, which he forthwith proceeded to gratify; and next, in hope of concealing his baseness, murdered the husband. As far as I am aware, no one has hitherto doubted the facts. Opponents of Christianity have in general been even glad to believe the worst of David, and Christians have felt bound to abide by the letter of a narrative which they esteem sacred. Three editions of my Hebrew Monarchy have come out, without a suspicion crossing my mind. To doubt of the adultery, or of the death of Uriah in battle, would seem to me a very needless and causeless incredulity; but having accidentally been led to fix my thoughts on the alleged murder, I find it very difficult to believe.

To obviate misunderstanding, a few preliminary words may be in place. A religious man who commits one grave sin or crime is more apt to be carried into another by the hope of hiding the first than is a notorious profligate; just as a seduced girl is driven by the agony of shame and despair to kill her newborn infant, precisely because she is not hardened and impudent. If a prince or other conspicuous man has been forward in religious profession, yet, when pampered in prosperity, falls into some shameful act, no one can measure the possible atrocity of the second crime into which he may rush in the hope of concealing the first. Hence it is not upon any general ground of improbability that I call the narrative into question. The improbabilities involved are here special.

David is represented as sending a letter by the hand of Uriah to Joab, chief captain of the Hebrew army, with the following orders: "Set ye Uriah in the forefront of the hottest battle, and retire ye from him, that he may be smitten and die." David knew something of real battles, and must have been well aware how clumsy and uncertain was such a mode of murder; which had tenfold the infamy of direct assassination, as exposing so many others to slaughter and endangering general defeat. And if David, blinded by passion, did not see this, Joab must have seen it. Since David had publicly uttered a solemn curse on Joab for his assassination of Abner (2 Sam. iii, 29, 30), Joab would now have had power to retaliate on him by revealing to Uriah and others the contents of the dispatch, and it is hard to believe that David did not foresee this danger. But if again we suppose him blind, and Joab to have been preternaturally obedient, though ordinarily a very wilful man, yet at least the latter would try to provide for his own safety by doing everything in perfect secrecy. He must have foreseen that it was a moral impossibility to command the obedience of soldiers in future, if this dastardly crime became public; and that he would instantly lose the prize for which he had assassinated Abner,—namely the chief-captaincy,—if once the army learned that he had thus sacrificed a brave soldier's life. Nay, to throw away one particular life is not so easy. Had he purposely put ten in jeopardy, the one man whom he wished to slay might have escaped, and nine have perished whom he desired to save. To suppose the comrades of Uriah accomplices in the plot, is of course absurd. If Joab obeyed, he must have obeyed quite secretly: how then did it become known, if the two persons who alone were in the plot, revealed nothing? Will it be said, The army perceived how unwise was the exposure of Uriah, and inferred that there was treachery? To say so, is nearly to confess that there was no crime on Joab's part, but only error of strategy, and that the imputation of crime was credulous invention. But since Joab remained chief-captain until the insurrection of Adonijah, we must infer that the army knew nothing of his guilt during the whole interval: hence it must have been hushed up by Nathan the seer; and we are required to believe that he knew it by a special divine revelation only, and that it remained a secret between him and Joab and David, until after David's death. The narrator does not say that any fourth person knew it during David's life. What Joab says to the king (2 Sam. xix, 7) after the death of Absalom, he might well have said with slight change on the earlier occasion: "If this deed be noised abroad, I swear by the Lord there will not tarry one of thy servants with thee; and that will be worse unto thee than all the evil that befell thee from thy youth until now." And this leads us to discern what almost inevitably would have been Joab's conduct, if he had received such a letter from David. He would have represented the deed as impossible to be done without wilfully sacrificing many lives, and concealment also to be impossible; hence, that it would alienate the whole army and endanger David's throne. By such a reply he would have got all the advantage for himself over David's conscience which obedience could give him, and none of the guilt and danger. But now the narrative represents David as conscious of Joab's crimes, but unconscious of his own, making him say privately to Solomon words which on other grounds I have impugned as impossible: "Thou knowest what Joab did to the two captains of the host of Israel whom he slew, and shed the blood of war in peace,"—as if David himself had not done worse still.

It may further be inquired, whether it is not anachronistic to represent David as sending a secret letter to Joab. Did not kings and generals at that era, and long after, communicate by the living voice of messengers only? Thucydides tells us that the first military dispatch ever sent home by an Athenian general was one sent by Nicias from Syracuse, after the death of Pericles, some 600 years later than these Hebrew events. However, I lay no particular stress on this point.

Nevertheless on the whole it seems to be by far the most probable, that the death of Uriah by the Ammonites in battle was a military accident in which Joab had no complicity and no blame; but that, because it happened opportunely, and conveniently enabled David to add Bathsheba to his harem, the whisper of his enemies attributed Uriah's death to his machination; and after Joab was sacrificed to the policy of Solomon, the whisper was converted into a certainty. Public credulity generally imputes worse guilt to great criminals and to fallen tyrants, than truth will justify.

WE are indebted to Dr. Mergler, of Wheeling, Illinois, for the following interesting information:—

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATIONS IN GERMANY.—According to the reports of the Free Religious Almanac for the year 1873, edited by Dr. A. Specht and published by Hollberg in Gotha, there are now existing in Germany one hundred and fifty-two free congregations, belonging to the "Union of Free Religious Societies of Germany." The number of speakers or preachers actively at work in behalf of these congregations is not more than thirty-one. Three preachers, amongst them the indefatigable Leberecht Uhlich, one of the best men that ever lived, died during the last year; two others left Germany for America in consequence of invitations. Two Free Religious periodicals are now published in Germany. Amongst the above-mentioned societies are not comprehended the Free Religious Associations in the kingdom of Saxony (of which there are about seventeen). For twenty years these have been, by way of governmental brutality, prevented from joining the German Union of Free Religious Associations. The whole Free Religious movement was put into organizations about 1844 or 1845, and, although constantly persecuted by the clergy and government officials, could never be extinguished entirely. It has been ten years on the increase again. Free thinkers and liberals are abundant in Germany, and, if their doings were consistent with their convictions, the churches would come to mourning pretty soon.

"MAN is the measure of the universe," said the old Greek sage with complacency. Man is at least the measure of it for himself. We comprehend no more than we are.

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but hereafter no space will be spared to Errata.
N. B.—Articles for this department should be SHORT, and written only on one side of the sheet.
N. B.—Illegibly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.
N. B.—No responsibility will be assumed for unused manuscripts.

"REVEREND."

EDITOR OF THE INDEX: Dear Sir,—It seems to me that we who claim to be "radical" should see to it that we present to our opponents as few points of attack as possible, and it occurs to me that every number of your paper is liable to severe animadversion.

I refer to the list of Editorial Contributors as given on the 4th page, in which Mr. Voysey and Mr. Conway are styled "Reverend." The use of this word is to my mind objectionable.

I "revere" Frothingham, Higginson, Abbot, Mrs. Howe, Voysey, Conway and others, in the sense that I have learned much from their teachings, just as also do I "revere" Longfellow, Emerson, Froude, Darwin, Beecher, Tyndall and others—each for the good I have derived from his writings on the subject of which he has made a specialty.

But I protest against the assumption of a title by any one which distinguishes her or him from the great body of teachers in the way that this one of "Reverend" does.

Let Mr. Voysey and Mr. Conway rely upon the reverence which their life and teachings inspire, and not depend on an empty time-worn usage which, but for their well-known characters, would savor of arrogance.

Yours,

SAM'L R. HONEY.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 24, 1873.

[The title "Reverend" is distasteful to us now, and we have not "assumed" it for years. But it simply indicates a particular profession, and has lost the fullness of meaning our correspondent ascribes to it. So long as one is willing to remain a clergyman, we see no more objection to "Rev." than to "Dr." or even "Mr." These titles are mere formalities, against which there is little occasion to prosecute a crusade; and we make it a practice to use them or disuse them in THE INDEX according to what we suppose to be the preference of the persons named. In England there may be more reasons than here for retaining them; but in this country radicals will undoubtedly come to prefer the simplest modes of address, without cleaving to titles the real significance of which has passed away.—ED.]

"RELIGION: THE NAME AND THE THING."

The point in this Lecture which chiefly interests me is the author's definition of his own conception of religion.

It is, of course, very difficult to give a satisfactory definition of religion. As we use the term, it is obvious that it is made to serve for two distinct things. There is religion a principle, and there is the concrete, particular thing, a religion.

Now the thing sought to be arrived at is a definition of that principle which has expressed itself in the different religions of the world.

Religion, says the writer, is The Influence of Nature upon the Individual, presenting him with an idea of perfection, and impelling him towards it. The idea of God, he says, has not necessarily anything to do with religion. Make up your minds that there is such a thing as religion first, and then consult science as to whether there is a God.

Now, when the writer spells Nature with a capital N, is he not virtually introducing the idea of God into his definition? Would it not be more true to fact, if we were to say that some idea of God is necessarily contained in every form which the religious principle has assumed? It seems to me that, immediately we talk of the "Power of Nature," of "Natural Law," and so on, we use expressions which really involve Theism, though we may be unconscious that they involve it. If, however, we have confronted the great problem of life, and can find no solution for it but Theism, then for us our definition of religion will always be a Theistic one.

I suppose the intention of the writer is to make his definition acceptable to Non-Theists; and so he uses words which he thinks capable of reflecting each man's particular faith, or indecision. Now a Theist would have no difficulty in conceiving that a Non-Theist might be religious—i. e., might have the disposition, sentiment, faculty, or principle from which all religions spring. The religious principle might not have so much power with him as it would have, if it were recognized as such; but it might be more plainly evidenced than it is with some persons who profess belief in a God.

In the sentiments of the Lecture there is much with which I entirely sympathize. It always gives me pleasure to feel that there is a common ground on which I can meet any thoughtful and sincere man, even one whose philosophy has not expressed itself in Theism. In love of truth and right, and in a perception of the beauty, grandeur, and mystery of the world around us, we can at least be agreed; and perhaps in this we are both nearer to the "Kingdom of Heaven" than those who claim it as their own in virtue of their alleged orthodoxy, or by special favor of God.

ALEXANDER MACDOUGALL.

HIGH GARRETT, Essex, [England], July 3, 1873.

P.S.—Mr. Abbot in his Lecture gives Buddhism as an example of a religion without a God.

Now Budha, the Buddhist name for the supreme object of worship, means Wisdom. Buddha (with double d) means an Emanation from Budha. Another Buddhist name for the Divine is Adi-Budha, which means first, original, or primeval Wisdom. Adi also means Grandfather, so Adi-Budha might be translated Grandfather-Wisdom. The first messenger of God is sometimes called Adi-Buddha (with double d). Buddha seems thus equivalent to the logos of the Platonists and Neo-Platonists. If these meanings are correct, they seem to show that Buddhism, whatever it may have become in the hands of priests, was originally Theistic. A. M. D.

[The above criticism of our last Horticultural Hall lecture (which will be found in the Index Tract No. 14) was kindly forwarded by the Rev. Charles Voysey, and is very willingly published here.

1. The spelling of "Nature" with a capital N is only intended to be practised when the universe as a whole is spoken of, in order to indicate that unity of the cosmos which is so frequently forgotten—to the great detriment of exact thinking. In speaking of "human nature," of the "nature of the case," and so forth, the capital would be out of place. But the use of it by no means surreptitiously assumes the "idea of God," which to the general conception of a unitary force adds that of intelligence, at least in the common acceptance of the word God. The philosophical atheist, who would colligate all phenomena by some inner, though unintelligent, principle of necessity, would easily comprehend the advantage of not losing sight of so grand a thought as that of the oneness of "Nature." Hence it is not true that we "virtually introduced the idea of God" by capitalizing the initial letter referred to. We wished simply to suggest the unity which must on any hypothesis underlie the vast variety of comical phenomena.

2. We do not, after much reflection, think it is true that "some idea of God is necessarily contained in every form which the religious principle has assumed." We have instanced Buddhism as a case to the contrary. But we cannot here justify the illustration, though the considerations urged against it by Mr. MacDougall do not seem conclusive.

3. It was not so much our wish to "make our definition acceptable to non-theists," as to point out the profound and inspiring principle which animates all earnest religion, even in its atheistic forms. The truth-seeker cannot afford to think overmuch of pleasing others: he is too closely absorbed in his quest.

4. Mr. MacDougall seems to concede the justice of our main thought in saying that "a theist would have no difficulty in conceiving that a non-theist might be religious." If this is true, the religious principle must lie deeper than any mental opinion or belief, and in fact be independent of the belief in God. We do not perceive how to reconcile Mr. MacDougall's two positions, 1st, that the religious principle necessarily contains "some idea of God," and 2d, that a "non-theist may be religious." We are obliged to dissent from the first because we assent to the second.

5. For the sympathy expressed with part of our lecture we would return very sincere thanks, as also for the very courteous and kindly tone of the criticism in general. The closing sentences of it must strike a responsive chord in every earnest and liberal soul. They utter the heart of that "fellowship of the spirit" which Free Religion aims above all to cultivate.—ED.]

IS IT JESUITRY?

DEAR INDEX:—More than once Dr. Bartol,—honored by all who know him for his rigid sincerity,—has thought it necessary to arraign Mr. Beecher for insincerity of one kind or another. Some time ago, he called him to account for keeping back truths that he (Mr. Beecher) considered it were premature to utter to his congregation at that time. In this instance most radicals agreed with Dr. Bartol in judging Mr. Beecher. But a statement by Mr. Beecher which the editor of THE INDEX presented to his readers made his position appear quite otherwise than that he was called upon to defend. He had thoughts, not truths, which he deemed it best to withhold for further maturing.

What wise man in Mr. Beecher's place would not have the same? Dr. Bartol, indeed, with his poetic and independent mind, addressing, as he does for the most part, kindred minds, may give free play and expression to thought and fancy, and always delight his audience, although they are incapable of following him, as he would have them, to the mount of vision where only he can really partake of that ecstasy which in him it is so charming to behold, even from great depths below.

But Plymouth Pulpit! Of what use to present a moral phantasmagoria there? Or where were the eyes in the vast auditorium to delight in a literary sunset, however ravishing to some souls? Dr. Bartol himself lately said: "We see three ways—with our eyes, through our eyes, and without our eyes." The latter is the only mode of vision by which one can behold the splendors of Dr. Bartol's own imagination. But we may suppose Mr. Beecher's auditors to be limited rather to the other two, and we may easily forgive him for not addressing an undeveloped faculty; while may we not also credit him with sincerity and effectiveness in speaking to the understanding, perception, and inquiry which sit at his feet? There are higher schools for those who are graduated at Plymouth church.

But the matter to which my caption refers is the condemnation of Mr. Beecher in the discourse by Dr. Bartol printed in No. 180 of THE INDEX. Dr. Bartol says: "A famous clergyman, in a lecture to young men, candidates for the ministry, in Yale College, tells them: 'When it comes to preaching, if you have not the feeling, you must act as if you had, that you may carry your congregation with you.' Is not that Jesuitical teaching, likely to make a Jesuit's College, even in Connecticut? Is not that to turn the church into a theatre, the preacher into an actor, the pulpit into a stage?" "Does the minister, then, whom orthodox and radical and Unitarian liberal critics in our newspapers pronounce the greatest preacher in the land, himself pretend to be when he is not touched by the emotion appropriate to the passage in his discourse?" "Does he, the captivating lecturer, assume the sighs, gestures, facial expressions, tender or piercing looks of love, lowliness, justice, frankness, when the qualities are far from him? And in prayer take on the posture, air, and manner of gratitude, penitence, pleading entreaty, ardent devotion, when, so far as the inward experience is concerned, it is all a masque and a farce?"

To ask these questions is the same as to infer that the "famous clergyman" must plead guilty to their accusation, at least if his own practice is in keeping with his advice to the young men.

Now I have but one purpose in mentioning (with profound deference to Mr. Beecher's venerable accuser) that such an inference cannot be just; and that is, to vindicate my own self-respect as a very young, and, I trust, very docile minister, of about Dr. Bartol's own faith; because, I feel that Mr. Beecher's advice has an applicability to every preacher so complete as to leave it without the slightest vulnerability to the charge of hypocrisy.

In The Country Parson (1832), George Herbert wrote: "The Country Parson, when he is to read divine services, composes himself to all possible reverence; lifting up his heart, and hands, and eyes, and using all other gestures which may express a hearty and unfeigned devotion. This he doth—First, as being truly touched and amazed with the majesty of God, before whom he then presents himself; yet not as himself alone, but as presenting with himself, the whole congregation." "Secondly, as this is the true reason of his inward fear, so he is content to express this outwardly to the utmost of his power; that, being first affected himself, he may affect also his people; knowing that no sermon moves them so much to reverence (which they forget again when they come to pray) as a devout behavior in the very act of praying. Accordingly his voice is humble, his words treatable, and slow; yet not so slow neither as to let the fervency of the suppliant hang and die between speaking; but, with a grave liveliness, between fear and zeal, pausing yet pressing, he performs his duty." Again he says: "When he preacheth, he procures attention by all possible arts, both by earnestness of speech (it being natural to men to think, that where is much earnestness, there is somewhat worth hearing), and by a diligent and busy cast of his eye on his auditors, with letting them know that he marks who observes and who not."

Here, of course, Herbert insists that the preacher should have the emotion he is to express; he is to be filled with "a hearty and unfeigned devotion." But what appears to me in the above passages relevant to the present case is Herbert's unqualified recognition of the legitimacy of the elocutionary art in assisting to express the deepest emotion. In his view, the adjustment of the art to the feeling is, to be sure, somewhat mechanical and clumsy; but it is nevertheless only what to-day is taught, with greater refinement, in every school of oratory.

I have cited this from Herbert because I think that really Mr. Beecher's advice is intended to encourage nothing less "unfeigned" than Herbert himself contemplated. Beecher must have spoken then as elocutionist, not as moralist; and, so speaking, his advice would have been as welcome at Cambridge as at New Haven. Why the chapel rehearsals at Cambridge? And why does the student in training for the pulpit find something to accept in the criticism that his delivery "wants feeling," when he is fully conscious of emotion corresponding to the sentences of his discourse? Does not art reinforce emotion? And is not the "feeling" that is wanting something that belongs to delivery and not to mind or heart? Herbert commended art to heighten the effect of feeling; and Beecher, going further, commends it, I think, as a partial substitute for feeling, when feeling is to a certain extent, and for the moment, absent; perhaps as the recoverer of absent, or the awakener of dormant feeling. Few men can profess a constancy of feeling that needs neither arousing nor supplementing by action whenever they are called upon to make public address. Feeling in most men is subject to tidal influences. When it is ebb-tide, and the audience before him, what can the preacher do but sit down, unless he may draw upon artificial reservoirs? His standing in the pulpit presupposes his constitutional emotional fitness, as it does the circulation of his blood. But if his emotions are tardy of expression, as his pulse is sometimes slow, may he not try to quicken them by the best means at his command, or even to put in their place, for the time being, the best substitute within his reach?

If Mr. Beecher did not speak in this spirit, then I deplore his speech; but I think he did. I do not believe that he intended to make way for a deliberate hypocrite to stand in the pulpit and go through a mockery of service; nor can I see, if the man of sincere mind but of fluctuating powers may not seem to be in full possession of the deserting feelings, how every preacher—except some be blessed with exemption from occasional depression—must not be compelled very often to dismiss the expectant congregation, or to forfeit his sincerity in what seems to be a conscientious attempt to perform his duty under great disadvantage. Does he not owe his hearers something which, if he fail to render, should prick a sensitive conscience as sorely as the consciousness of feebleness that leans upon outward support when the inward fails it? J. H. C.

"TALK KINDLY, BUT AVOID ARGUMENT."

This decision of a grand Convention of Young Men's Christian Associations, in reply to the question "Should we argue with infidels?" contains elements which need, it seems to me, to be better understood, and which may appropriately receive further notice in THE INDEX.

Any intelligent and rational person, not holding the Orthodox faith, who attends a meeting of the Young Men's Christian Association, will hear there, taken for granted, assumed as unquestionably true, in prayer, hymn, or exhortation, various things which ought not to be so assumed; some being unproved and unprovable, some having been disproved, some being absurd, and some shown to be untrue by facts obvious to all. Knowing that the whole public are invited to attend this meeting, hearing from the leader that it is a free meeting, and finding all present earnestly requested to take part in it, the visitor perhaps rises, when a proper opportunity occurs, to ask for information. Having heard Sunday there assumed to be God's holy day, designated for observance as a Sabbath in the Bible, he ventures to inquire where in the Bible such a statement is made. Being referred, in answer, to the fourth commandment of the decalogue, he respectfully asks whether the seventh day of the week, Saturday, was not there designated as the day of Sabbath observance. Receiving for an answer that a "change of the day" came in with the Christian dispensation, he further asks whether there is Scriptural authority for this change, since he has heard the Bible there spoken of as the supreme and infallible rule in all points of doctrine, and since Paul, the great apostle, argued strongly against Jewish ordinances in general, and against special observances of days in particular.

The leader of the meeting here informs the inquirer that their rule is to avoid "controverted points," and that this strain of remark cannot be allowed. If the reproved person ventures to ask whether quotation from the infallible rule to settle a controverted point is out of order, he is peremptorily directed to sit down.

If, after the close of the meeting, this silenced person ventures to ask of any of the individual Young Christians prominent in conducting it, whether his citation of Scripture was not correct, and whether any New Testament authority can be shown on the other side—then begins the policy recommended by the Convention, the refusal to enter upon argument or evidence, and the substitution for these of "kind talk." Let us see of what this kind talk consists.

Beginning with a smile and grasp of the hand designed to express sanctified affection, the Young Christian sets forth that—it has been found prudent not only to exclude controverted points from the meetings, but to avoid entering on them with sceptics even in private conference. The fact is that spiritual discernment is needed for spiritual things, and our position, plain as it is, could not be made clear to the carnal mind, whatever time should be spent in discussing it. What we advise in such cases is a giving up of the will; a turning away from carnal reason; and faithful study of the Bible, with prayer for illumination by the Holy Spirit. The Young Christian closes the interview by volunteering to pray with and for the person he has been lecturing, assuring him that he feels the deepest interest in his spiritual welfare, and that he hopes yet to see him renewed and sanctified.

The above accurately represents the substance and spirit of the interviews in which "kind language" is systematically substituted for argument, however the form of expression may vary. Let us now look into the meaning of the "kind language."

The sort of "kind talk" used by the Young Christians on these occasions, whatever its semblance of humility and affectionateness, assumes respecting the speaker that he is "one of God's people," converted, renewed, and sanctified, gifted with spiritual discernment, able to speak confidently of God's doings and purposes, enjoying the special presence and favor of the Holy Spirit, and having such "interest at the throne of Grace" that his prayers for the person to whom he is speaking would "avail much" for that person's spiritual welfare.

Of that person it is assumed, in a conversation of this sort, that he is at enmity with God, in the gall of bitterness and the bond of iniquity, an unbeliever, a lost sinner, a person carnally minded, and thus so incompetent to judge of spiritual things that, unless he swallows without question the doctrine presented, it is of no use for the spiritual man to talk to him.

Now, if one considers the amount of meaning inherent in the classification here assumed—the self-glorification by one man, and the deliberate and vast depreciation, by him, of the other human being to whom he is speaking—this would seem to come under the head of enormous arrogance rather than of kindness. But the whole case has not yet been presented. A special aggravation of this arrogance is still to be mentioned.

The counsel to "talk kindly, but avoid argument," was decided upon by the Convention of Young Men's Christian Associations in reply to the question "Should we argue with infidels?" By "infidel" is meant, in the phraseology of those people, any one who requires reason or evidence before accepting their doctrine.

How came such a question to be asked of the Convention? Clearly it was because sundry of its members had found themselves at disadvantage, unable to maintain their own ground by argument, and unable to answer counter allegations, in debate with those of a different persuasion.

How came the Convention to recommend "kind talk," in such a case, in place of argument? Clearly, because they knew the poverty of their own side in this particular. They knew very well that much can justly be said against their doctrine, to which there is no reply. They wished to help their partisans to seem victorious, by this assumption of spirituality on their side and carnality on the other, when in fact they are defeated.

To be clearly understood, I will here give two specimens of the sort of cases in which the Convention recommends to its members to decline argument and try "kind talk" instead.

These people talk about "God's holy Sabbath," meaning Sunday, and accuse some of their fellow citizens of "Sabbath breaking," and violation of the fourth commandment. If the person thus accused is acquainted with the Bible, and quotes against them successfully, as he can, both the Old Testament and the New, proving that they are the Sabbath-breakers, since, holding the fourth commandment to be binding on them, they neither rest on the seventh day, Saturday, as it enjoins, nor work on the first day, Sunday, which it also enjoins—just there the Convention comes to the relief of its defeated members, saying, "Avoid argument; talk kindly instead." Of course, in such a case, they are very glad to avoid argument.

Again, these people talk about the Bible as "the word of God," declaring it so infallibly inspired by him that all its statements are to be received as true, all its precepts and injunctions accepted as binding. Suppose the outsider to whom this assumption is made turns to the General Epistle of the Apostle James, and reads this command, enforced by a most encouraging promise:—

"Is any sick among you? Let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; AND THE PRAYER OF FAITH SHALL SAVE THE SICK, AND THE LORD SHALL RAISE HIM UP."

The outsider asks the Young Christian if he receives that as God's command to him, in case of sickness in his family; and if the other members of the Association, and the members of the churches with which they are connected, so receive it and act upon it.

What could the poor Young Christian say, if he trusted to argument, or to frank confession of the facts? But here the counsel of the Convention comes in as a blessed relief. "Avoid argument; talk kindly!"

Now think of the two persons here supposed, utterly defeated and silenced by citations from that very Bible which they call infallibly inspired, falling back, as the Convention advises, upon "kind talk" instead of argument. Fancy them saying kindly—"We are spiritual, you are carnal; until you are enlightened from above, it is useless for us to talk with you; but we are truly interested for your souls, and we will pray that you may see these things aright."

Such are the cases in which, and such the purpose for which, "kind talk" is recommended instead of argument. It is simply a strategical movement to conceal defeat, in the very case where honesty requires acknowledgment of defeat. It is a cowardly retreat from superior force concealed under the false and impudent pretence of a victory. Open contempt is the proper treatment for those who assume a sanctimonious aspect to escape from exposure of their false pretences. C. K. W.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

An article in a late INDEX calls attention to a very important subject, in asking the question—"Will Free Religion have Sunday Schools?"

We know that the religions that are not free are doing in that way. Their sagacious leaders see that it is only by impressions made on the minds of children that they can keep their hold on the world. The doctrines which they preach to their orthodox congregations are so irreconcilable with reason,—the views they present of the benevolent Author of our being are so repugnant to the best feelings which he has implanted in our hearts,—that it is simply impossible they could be received in the present enlightened age by the adult mind. But it is different with children: for them, the more marvellous the story, the deeper the impression. Or rather, what we call a miracle is no more strange to them than the commonest event in the order of Nature. That Joshua should stop the sun (for a worthy cause) is not more wonderful to their inexperience than its rising and setting every day. Whether the whale swallowed Jonah, or Jonah swallowed the whale, is all the same to their unlimited faculty of swallowing marvellous tales.

A natural result is that the Sunday School has come to be viewed as the foundation and main support of the old theology.

It is quite a noteworthy circumstance that the Society of Friends has recently been much stirred up, in regard to the establishment of "First Day Schools." At first, the idea met with considerable opposition, chiefly among the older members. It was regarded as an innovation. Indeed the Friends have always shrunk even from the semblance of "teaching religion." The methods pursued in the schools trench somewhat on their cardinal principle, that each individual soul can be taught alone of God. But the younger and more active spirits among them, inspired by the progressive influences of the times, have prevailed: and now the First Day Schools form a growing, interesting and important institution in the Society. The Friends do not seek to make proselytes; but they naturally object to seeing their young people drawn away into other sects. There is no doubt, I think, that the new enterprise is doing good.

The teachings of amiable young women, enthusiastic in the cause, and their sweet personal influence and example, cannot fail in benefiting the little children, who are generally eager to attend the schools. No depressing doctrines of infantile depravity, no horrid pictures of eternal torment are set before them. They escape all such miserable training.

But when the inquiry is made, as to what they positively learn of the knowledge capable of furnishing solid food that the mind can live by, there seems to present a great void. I greatly fear "the high faith" which Mr. Stevens desires to implant cannot find deep root, or substantial sustenance there. The source they draw from is still, mainly, the Bible. Its lessons of doubtful tendency, are of course well sifted: yet the certain, if indirect, influence of the instruction used in those schools is to deepen a faith in the Book; to instil the religion of authority; to preserve a superstitious reverence, which is so hard to shake off, and which now serves only to shackle free thought, and to perpetuate gross errors.

We are thus brought back to Mr. Stevens' question—what can be done to secure a solid foundation for liberal Sunday Schools? Where find the material to furnish the substantial food required to nourish the young mind and heart? We may rest assured the man and woman will be made out of the food thus furnished. Reforms that are to move the world must begin there. A wide field is there opened to true reformers: "a field, whose harvest is plenteous, but the efficient laborers are few."

Thus far my remarks may hope to meet with sympathy from the Editors and Editorial Contributors of THE INDEX, from Mr. Abbot to Mr. M. D. Conway: but the important part of the communication which yet remains, I fear, will fall upon cold and unsympathizing ears. The writer of this article firmly believes that a satisfactory answer may be given to the questions just propounded, in regard to a basis for Sunday Schools. There is, in his long and deeply cherished opinion, a solid foundation and support for the high faith we would build up in our children. It is found in the teachings of a Science which goes to the very root of the matter; that lays bare to the intelligence alike of the man and the child the primal springs of all thought, feeling and action; that necessarily imparts the full knowledge what to teach, and how to teach it, in disclosing all the simple, primary faculties of our nature, and their evident sphere and use.

For it is painfully clear to those who have received the Science of Human Nature, as revealed by Gall, Spurzheim and Combe, that until it is accepted by the world, no permanently successful methods of instruction for Sunday or other schools, no effective systems of social reform, are possible. It may naturally be deemed surprising that a discovery making such high claims should have been before the world for nearly a century without general acceptance; but there are strong reasons in man's nature for the slow progress of its doctrines. History furnishes other examples of a similar reluctance to adopt important discoveries of new truths. W. H. F.

"BEAR YOUR OWN BURDEN."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX: Sir,—The Rev. Charles Voysey, in a sermon on "True Religion an aid to Virtue" preached at St. George's Hall, Langham Place, July 27, made the following remarks: "The Pantheist may also be a very optimist of content and hope, abiding in the immutability and certainty of Nature's operations; but he can never feel that rest and peace which those souls feel who know what it is 'to cast their burden on the Lord.'" Very pleasant indeed, doubtless, to get some one else to do your work, but to my mind scarcely fair. Is it not playing a more manly part to shoulder your own difficulties? And is it not a fact that we actually have to do it? I have lived long enough to know that every transgression of a moral, intellectual, or physical law is followed by suffering (the burden), and I am the individual who invariably has had to bear it—and let me add that I am a sufficient philosopher to recognize the great service which such experience has been to me. The lesson which I learn is as follows: "Obey the laws of your being. If you disobey, you must bear the burden."

Yours truly, FRIDERIC R. HONEY.
NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 25, 1873.

THE latest strike in Germany is that of the street beggars. It was not against pauper competition, however, but to get up a corner on prayers. From time immemorial, at stated intervals, the mendicants of Treves assemble in the market place, and marching through the principal streets implore the blessing of all the saints upon the city, concluding with a grand benediction in chorus. In return the citizens, from time out of mind, have been accustomed to bestow a kreutzer on each beggar. A few days since they assembled as usual for this ceremonial. But instead of going through with it, the beggars, from the sturdy knave down to the miserable, toddling, deformed child, agreed that a single kreutzer was not enough, and that not a prayer would they say for less than two kreutzers. The good townsfolk fearing that the blessings of Heaven might be withheld, yielded to the strikers, paid the amount, and the ceremony proceeded as of old.—Chicago Post.

A LONDON correspondent is accountable for the following:—The story goes that one night lately Mr. Knatchbull Huggessen and another honorable member, were in conversation in the lobby of the house, when young Mr. Levy, the managing proprietor of the Daily Telegraph, entered and nodded familiarly to the Parliamentary dignitaries. "An extraordinary man that," remarked the Colonial Secretary to his honorable friend, "have you heard that he has bought the Times?" "You do not tell me so?" was the reply, "he must have paid an enormous sum for it." "Oh, no," said the secretary, "only threepence."

THE Jewish Times gives an account of a boy ten years of age, the son of Jewish parents, in Albany, who five years ago was enticed by a Roman Catholic servant-girl to visit a priest, without the knowledge of his father and mother. The boy was baptized by the priest, and was so completely ensnared in the wiles of this crafty cleric that he came to regard his parents as damned to everlasting perdition, and, therefore, to keep his relation to the Catholic Church completely hidden from them. To do this, it was necessary for him, of course, to resort to an elaborate system of lying, which was not only excused, but encouraged by his confessor. At home he was a Jew and went with his parents to the synagogue. On Sundays he clandestinely went to the cathedral and performed all the Catholic rites. Not long ago his parents desired to have him confirmed in the Jewish Church, and the rest of the story is well told by the Times:—

"Since he had become a Catholic he had practiced dissimulation so much that he was a perfect master of hypocrisy. He feigned to be sick and not able to stand on his feet. The doctor was called, and, though he could not see any symptoms of sickness, he coincided with the family to leave him in bed. Nevertheless it appeared suspicious. From other sides the rumor had spread that the boy had been lured into the arms of the Catholic Church, and so he was closely watched by his parents. They resolved to have him confirmed on the next Sabbath, and he was apparently glad to have this solemn rite performed on him. As a convalescent, he had to stay at home; but toward evening he stole away and hastened to the said Bridget to ask her advice. There he was found out, and, when pressed hard, he confessed all. The following conversation of the writer with the boy will give an idea of the child's mind: 'Do you mean to be religious?' 'Yes.' 'Is it religious to lie?' 'No.' 'Is it religious to deceive?' 'No.' 'Is it religious to dissimulate?' 'No.' 'Did you lie to your parents?' 'Sometimes.' 'Did you deceive your parents?' 'Sometimes.' 'Did you dissimulate?' 'Sometimes.' 'And you mean to be religious?' 'I want to confession, told all to the priest, and was absolved and forgiven.' 'Did you tell the priest that your parents knew nothing about your conversion, that you had to deceive them?' 'Yes.'"

The boy is now removed by his parents from the reach of those propagandists; but the indignant outcry of the Times against acts like these will find a response in many quarters.—New York Independent.

DIRECT EVIDENCE.—A revivalist in Athol is reported to have told this story, a few Sundays ago, to illustrate coming straight to the point. When a boy, he was summoned to testify in a case of assault, in which one man had hit another with a hoe. A host of witnesses had been called, who "beat about the bush" in a most tedious and provoking manner, without giving one iota of incriminating proof. This exasperated the lawyer for the prosecution, who broke out as follows: "Here, boy, we've been going around and around this case all day, and yet have no evidence to convict the prisoner. Now, sir," he savagely continued, "do you hear me? I want you to come to the direct point. Did you see the blow struck?" "Yes, sir!" "Ah, ah!" chuckled the lawyer, rubbing his palms together, and grinning immoderately; "Now, we shall have something to work upon. Here, my good lad, take this cane (handing him his walking stick). If you saw the blow struck, you must know just how it was given." "Yes, sir, I—"

"Now, then, no words about it, I tell you!" thundered the interrogator. "I am the defendant and you are the prisoner. Now just raise the stick and show the court." The bewildered lad did raise the stick, and the next minute it came crashing down upon the head of the astonished lawyer, echoing from his bald pate to the end of the room, and sent him staggering to his seat. "That's the way it was done, sir," said the boy, amid the shrieks of laughter of the whole court-room. The discomfited counsel, with a ghastly attempt at a smile, said that he had done with the witness—the evidence was direct.

It has been discovered in the management of the Holly Tree Coffee Houses, that it is not possible to banish pie from any popular bill of fare in this country. The promoters of some of these useful establishments attempted, in the interest of health, to withhold this seductive compound from their customers, but it would not do, and they are now supplying it. The fact is that even a "movement" against pie would not succeed. If an anti-pie convention were held, it would be "captured" by the bitters and quack-medicine men. The Committee on Resolutions would be composed of Schenck, Drake, Radway, Hostetter, and Ayer. The resolutions would contain no mention of pie whatever, but would in bitter terms denounce dyspepsia and "general debility," and call for "the purification of the blood" and the supply of "tone" to "the system," and the punctual payment of the pensions of the soldiers and sailors. A picture of the goddess Hygeia would adorn the platform, and a nomination to some high office would probably be offered to some noted pie-baker, and the original anti-pie men would then be informed that they were a narrow but honest set of fellows, rather wanting in practicalness, but who had nevertheless "built better than they knew."—N. Y. Nation.

THE most accommodating man we ever saw was he who was captain of a steamship which plied between New York and Port Royal during the war. One day a soldier lost his cap overboard, and went to the captain about it. The old gentleman said it was impossible to stop the vessel to recover it, but he kindly offered to make a mark on the rail where it went overboard, and get it when he came back.

A LITTLE thoughtfulness saves a deal of trouble. A young man on Nelson Street will not step into the grass when it is wet and his boots are blacked. He says he doesn't mind the blacking, but his mother is getting old and lame, and can't work a brush as she used to.—Danbury News.

Advertisements.

GENERAL NOTICE.

On August 8, 1872, I contracted for the two best advertising pages of THE INDEX for the current year. "No advertisements objectionable to the editor to be taken." For terms apply to

ASA K. BUTTS, 36 Day St., New York.

No improper advertisements, no advertisements of patent medicines, and no advertisements known to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be hereafter admitted into THE INDEX. All advertisements accepted before this date will be allowed to run their time. No cuts admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.
TOLEDO O., June 21, 1873.

A Radical Preacher Wanted.

The Free Religious Society of New Milford, Pa., will require the services of a thoroughly Radical preacher about the middle of next October.

Apply to J. S. THOMSON,
New Milford, Pa.

A CHEAP OFFER!

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.

THE INDEX TRACT NO. 7, "Compulsory Education," is out of print, and therefore orders for it cannot be filled at present. But it is intended to reprint it before long, and all parties ordering a COMPLETE SET will be furnished with it without extra charge as soon as reprinted.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS OF LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

THE best use you can make of seventy-five cents, will be to buy a game of Avludé, the most instructive and delightful game ever published. If your dealers have not got it, send the money to West & Lee, Worcester, Mass., Publishers, who will forward it by mail, post-paid.

"The best of its class."—Boston Evening Transcript.

Half Hour Recreations in Popular Science.

EDITED BY DANA ESTES.

The growing demand in this country for Books on popular science encourages the editor and publishers to issue this series of papers, compiled from the works of the most popular scientific writers.

25c per Part; $2.50 for 12 consecutive Parts.

No. 1. Strange Discoveries Respecting the Aurora and Recent Solar Researches. By Richard A. Proctor, F. R. A. S.

No. 2. The Cranial Affinities of Man and the Ape. By Prof. Rudolph Virchow, of Berlin, author of "Cellular Pathology." Fully illustrated.

No. 3. Spectrum Analysis Explained, and its Uses to Science Illustrated. With a colored plate and several wood cuts.

No. 4. Spectrum Analysis Discoveries, showing its Application in Microscopical Research and to Discoveries of the Physical Constitution and Movements of the Heavenly Bodies. From the works of Schellen, Young, Roscoe, Lockyer, Huggins and others.

No. 5. Nebulae, Meteoric Showers, and Comets.

No. 6. Unconscious Action of the Brain and Epidemic Delirium. By Dr. Carpenter, author of "The Microscope and its Revelations," "Human Physiology," &c.

No. 7. The Geology of the Stars. By Prof. A. Winchell, of the University of Michigan, author of "Sketches of Creation."

The Unity of Natural Phenomena.

An Introduction to the Study of

THE FORCES OF NATURE.

Being a popular explanation of the latest discoveries in the domain of Natural Science, including the "Correlation of Forces," "Mode of Motion," "Force of Gravity," and "Mutual Controversibility of the Forces of Nature."

From the French of Emile Salgey.

WITH NOTES AND AN INTRODUCTION

BY PROF. T. F. MOSES,
OF URBANA UNIVERSITY.

1 vol., crown, 8vo. $1.50.

"In this charming treatise, M. Emile Salgey gives a very lucid account of the latest mode of speculating on the Physical Facts of the Universe. It is a mode which may be described as bringing all the resources of modern science to the proof of the fact that the human mind is incapable of any intelligible conception of physical facts which does not resolve itself into matter and motion. There is in fact but one science under many names, and that science is mechanics. Atoms, and the laws which regulate their movements—this is all our material universe."—Blackwood's Magazine.

The above sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

ASA K. BUTTS & CO., 36 Day Street,
New York.

Standard Liberal Works.

For sale by A. K. BUTTS, 36 DAY STREET,
NEW YORK.

THE RIGHT OF MARRIED WOMEN TO HOLD PROPERTY. Judge Hertell's argument in the House of Assembly of the State of New York in the session of 1857, in support of the bill to restore to married women "The Right of Property." Republished by order of the will of Mrs. Barbara Amelia Hertell, 1867. Price, 20 cents.

WAT TYLER; a Dramatic Poem in three acts. By Robert Southey, Esq. Price, 20 cents.

THE DIEGESIS; being a Discovery of the Origin, Evidences, and Early History of Christianity, never yet before or elsewhere so fully and faithfully set forth. By Rev. Robert Taylor. This work was written by Mr. Taylor while serving a term in Oakham (Eng.) Jail, where he was imprisoned for blasphemy. It contains 440 pages, octavo, and is considered unanswerable as to arguments or facts. Price, $2.00; postage, 24 cents.

THE DEVIL'S PULPIT.—By Rev. Robert Taylor—with a sketch of the Author's Life—containing Sermons on the following subjects:—The Star of Bethlehem, John the Baptist, Raising the Devil! The Unjust Judge, Virgo Patricia, St. Peter, Judas Iscariot Vindicated, St. Thomas, St. James, and St. John—the Sons of Thunder, The Crucifixion of Christ, the Cup of Salvation, Lectures on Free Masonry, The Holy Ghost, St. Philip, St. Matthew, The Redeemer. Price, $2.00; postage 20 cents.

ASTRO-THEOLOGICAL LECTURES.—By Rev. Robert Taylor, Containing the following Lectures:—Belief not the Safe Side, The Resurrection of Lazarus, the Unjust Steward, The Devil, The Rich Man and Lazarus, The Day of Temptation in the Wilderness, Abah, or the Lying Spirit, The Fall of Man, Noah, Abraham, Sarah, Melchisedec, The Lord, Moses, The Twelve Patriarchs, Who is the Lord? Exodus, Aaron, Miriam. Price, $2.00; postage, 20 cents.

THE SYNTAGMA.—By Rev. Robert Taylor, author of the "Diegesis," "Devil's Pulpit," "Astro-Theological Sermons," etc. Price, including postage, $1.00.

THE INFIDEL'S OR INQUIRER'S TEXT-BOOK. Being the substance of 13 Lectures on the Bible by Robert Cooper. Price $1.50; postage, 16 cents.

Standard Liberal Works.

For sale by A. K. BUTTS, 36 DAY STREET,
NEW YORK.

THE PHILOSOPHICAL DICTIONARY of Voltaire.—Tenth American Edition. Two volumes in one. Containing 576 large octavo pages, with two elegant steel engravings. Price, $5.00. This is the largest and most correct edition in the English language, having, besides the whole of the London editions, several articles from a manuscript translated several years since by a friend of Voltaire's, and others translated immediately from the French edition. The London edition sells at from $10 to $15, and does not contain nearly so much as this American edition.

HELVETIUS; or, The True Meaning of the System of Nature. Translated from the French. Price, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

THE DIVINE AND MORAL WORKS OF PLATO.—Translated from the Original Greek; with Introductory Dissertations and Notes. First American from the sixth London edition, carefully revised and corrected. Price, including postage, $2.50.

HISTORY OF MOSES, AARON, JOSEPH, and others, deduced from a Review of the Bible. Also, remarks on the Morals of the Old and New Testament, and some of the Ancient Philosophers. By J. M. Dancy. Price, 75 cents; postage, 12 cents.

HISTORY OF ALL CHRISTIAN SECTS and Denominations—their Origin, Tenets, and Conditions. By John Evans, LL.D. Price, $1.00; postage, 18 cents.

ASTRONOMY AND WORSHIP OF THE ANCIENTS. By G. Vale. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

STUDYING THE BIBLE; or, Brief Criticisms on some of the principal Scripture Texts. By Elmina Drake Slenker. Price, 75 cents; postage, 8 cents.

MORAL PHYSIOLOGY.—A Plain Treatise on Population. By Robert Dale Owen. This work is illustrated with a Frontispiece. Price, including postage, 68 cents.

TALLEYRAND'S LETTER TO POPE PIV VII.—Translated from the French into Portuguese by D. J. Monteiro, and from Portuguese into English by H. D. Robinson. With a Memoir of the Author. Price, 50 cents.

HALF-HOURS WITH SOME ANCIENT AND MODERN CELEBRATED FREE-THINKERS.—Thomas Hobbes, Lord Bolingbroke, Condorcet, Spinoza, Anthony Collins, Des Cartes, M. de Voltaire, John Toland, Compt de Volney, Charles Bonnet, Percy Bysshe Shelley, Claude Arian Helvetius, Frances Wright Darnmont, Epicurus, Zeno, Matthew Tindal, David Hume, Dr. Thomas Burnet, Thomas Paine, Baptiste de Mirabaud, Baron D'Holbach, Robert Taylor, Joseph Barker. By "Iconoclast," Collins and Watts. Price, 75 cents; postage, 18 cents.

COOPER'S LECTURES ON THE SOUL.—In which the doctrine of Immortality is religiously and philosophically considered. This is a work of vast importance to those who look on this life as only state of probation. Price, 75 cents; postage, 12 cents.

CLASSIFIED BIBLICAL EXTRACTS; or, The Holy Scriptures Analyzed—showing in contradictions, absurdities, and immaterialities. Price, 25 cents.

MAN'S NATURE AND DEVELOPMENT. By Henry George Atkinson, F.R.S., and Harriet Martineau. Price, full gilt, $1.50; postage, 16 cents. Cloth, $1.25; postage, 13 cents.

QUEEN MAB, with Notes. By Percy B. Shelley. Price, 75 cents.

A LEGACY TO THE FRIENDS OF FREE DISCUSSION; being a Review of the Principles, Historical Facts, and Personages of the Revolt known as the Old and New Testaments; with remarks on the Morality of Nature. By Benjamin Offen, formerly Lecturer of the Society of Moral Philanthropists, at Tammany Hall, New York. Price, 15 cents; postage, 4 cents.

LETTERS TO THE CATHOLIC BISHOP OF BOSTON. Proving that the Roman Catholic Church is opposed to a Republican form of Government. By an Independent Irishman. Price, 15 cents.

EQUALITY; or, a History of Libelous. Price, 15 cents.

ELEGANT EXTRACTS from the Holy Bible. Price, 10 cents.

INTEMPERATE DRINKING. An Exploit of the Causes of this vice, and the means by which it may be obviated. By Thomas Hertell, of New York City. Published by order of the New York Society for the Promotion of Internal Improvement, 1818. Republished by order of the will of Mrs. Barbara Amelia Hertell, 1867. Price 15 cents.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE; or, Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach, author of "Good Sense," etc. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Translated from the French by H. D. Robinson. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.00; postage, 24 cents.

THE LETTERS TO EUGENIA; or, a Preservative against Religious Prejudice. By Baptiste de Mirabaud, author of the "System of Nature." Translated from the French by Anthony C. Middleton, M.D. Price, $1.00; postage, 18 cents.

GOOD SENSE. By Baron D'Holbach. A new edition of this truly valuable book has just been issued, and is now ready for purchase. Friends who want "Good Sense" (and who does not?) can have a supply sent by mail by forwarding their order. Price, post-paid, $1.00.

COMPLETE WORKS OF THOMAS PAINE. Secretary to the Committee of Foreign Affairs in the American Revolution. Three Volumes in the American Revolution. Theological and Consisting of his Political, Theological, and Miscellaneous Writings. Price, $7.00; postage, 94 cents.

PAINE'S POLITICAL WRITINGS.—To which is prefixed a full sketch of the Author's Life. A new edition, with additions. Two volumes. Price, $5.00; postage, 82 cents.

THOMAS PAINE'S WRITINGS.—Theological and Miscellaneous. The most complete edition ever published. Containing his "Age of Reason," and all his writings on Theology, with many and all his political pieces. Price, $2.50; postage, 24 cents.

FIVE THOUSAND GOOD BOOKS at half price. Great clearance catalogue sent free. ESTES & LAURIAI, Boston.

DO TRY IT three months for 10 cents; or with $1 Chrome for 50 cents. The National Agriculturalist and the Journal is a sixteen-page paper of sixty-four columns, handsomely illustrated in all its departments. One of the best Agricultural and Family papers published. Only $1 per year, or $1.25 with best Rec-Book, or $1.50 with beautiful CHROMO. Send for sample copies, and liberal terms to agents, free. Write now to H. A. KING & CO., 14 Murray street, New York.

"The Greatest Luxury in the World."

TURKISH BATHS,

No. 31 and 33 Columbia Heights, Brooklyn, N. Y.

THREE MINUTES' WALK FROM FULTON FERRY.

Separate Department for Ladies.

OPEN FROM 9 A. M. TO 9 P. M.

While the Turkish Bath has established itself as an elegant and refined luxury, its great feature is its power as a remedial agent.

First class rooms and board for those desiring accommodations in the Institution. Address

CHARLES H. SHEPARD M. D.

THE

The Influence of Christianity on Civilization.

BY B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Popular fallacies concerning this question have had no more honest and fearless exposition than is given us in this handsome pamphlet. Mr. Underwood has treated this momentous theme with dignity, candor, and grace, yet with that vigor which has made him so popular on the platform among the Liberals of the West. Nor does he lack in erudition. He is profuse in quotations from standard histories, largely Christian, and shows conclusively but clearly from their own testimony what a drag upon civilization that stupendous fanaticism has been.

In paper covers; single copies, 25 cts. Address the publisher,

ASA K. BUTTS, 36 Dey Street, N. Y.

A Noble Life Portrayed.

New and Enlarged Edition of HORACE GREELEY'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY, with Appendix containing Memoir of his later years and Death, and the best of his famous Campaign Speeches.

The last and best Portrait of him ever published, representing him as he appeared in the Summer of 1872.

The great call for Mr. Greeley's Autobiography, and also for some more permanent record of the wonderful intellectual display which he made during his Eastern and Western tours in the Presidential Campaign of 1872, have led to the issue of a new edition of the Autobiography, with a very large Appendix containing the story of his life to the end, reproducing the more striking and suggestive of his many admirable and brilliant Campaign speeches, and concluding with an exhaustive and admirable analysis of the campaign, originally prepared by the Hon. James S. Pike, ex-United States Minister to the Hague. There is, besides, a pretty complete collection of Mr. Greeley's Miscellaneous Writings, including among others his famous controversy with Robert Dale Owen on Marriage and Divorce.

Price, handsomely bound in cloth, with two Portraits, $3. Sent by mail on receipt of price. Address

THE TRIBUNE, New York.

A Library for Fifty Cents.

With illustrations.—Literature, Art, Science, and History.—The Tribune Extra Sheets containing:

Lecture Extra, No. 1.—Illustrated.—Tyndall's six Lectures on Light.

Lecture Extra, No. 2.—Beecher's Compulsory Education; Field's Masters of the Situation; Phillips's Lost Arts; Bellows's Is There a God? Mark Twain's Sandwich Island Letters.

Lecture Extra, No. 3.—Illustrated.—Prof. Wilder's Brain and Mind; Prof. Barlow's Chemical Discoveries of the Spectroscope; Prof. Young's Astronomical Conquests; Prof. Young's Present Knowledge of the Sun.

Lecture Extra, No. 4.—Six Shakespearean Studies, by John Weiss; Seven Art Studies, National Academy Course; Parton's Pilgrim Fathers as Men of Business; Bret Harte's Argonauts of '49.

Lecture Extra, No. 5.—Illustrated.—Three Lectures by Prof. Louis Elshberg, on Sound and Hearing, Voice and Speech, and The Explanation of Musical Harmony; Prof. Benj. Silliman's Deep Placer Mining in California; Dr. R. W. Raymond on The Seven Senses; Prof. Godwin on True and False Science; Prof. E. L. Youmans on The Limits of Science.

Lecture Extra, No. 6.—Beecher's Seven Lectures for Ministers: Thoughts for Ministers—Thoughts upon Prayer—Prayer-Meetings—As It Is—The Ideal Prayer-Meeting—Music in Churches—Society in the Church—The Fingers of the Church.

Lecture Extra, No. 7.—Beecher's concluding Lectures: Revivals in the Church—Religious Awakenings—Thoughts on Revivals—A Religious Experience. Also, "The Moravian Church," by de Schweinitz; "Creed Statements," by Thomas Starr King; "The Death Menace," by Dove; and a "History of Sectarian Appropriations."

Lecture Extra, No. 8.—The Method of Creation. Twelve Lectures by Prof. Agassiz, concerning Animal Life. Also, a description of the wonderful Fossils discovered in the Rocky Mountains by the Yale College Expedition.

Eight Extra Sheets, containing over 50 Lectures and 130 Engravings, and Credit Mobilier Report for 50 cents.

Address THE TRIBUNE, New York.

Real Estate Securities, paying 8 to 10 per cent. interest, or INVESTMENTS IN REAL ESTATE, IN CHICAGO AND VICINITY, if judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The old

Real Estate and Loan Agency of

ERNST PRUSSING,

143 Randolph St., - - CHICAGO, (Established 1853)

Guarantees perfect title and ample security in all its Real Estate Loans.

First-class securities always on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge. Real Estate Investments made on commission and on shares; taxes paid, &c. Orders of capitalists and real estate owners respectfully solicited.

A Splendid Sabbath School Book!

RIVER OF LIFE.

Verily a River of Melody and Beauty, Abounding in bright, taking, singable music, with the Sabbath-School children and home boys and girls will not need much drilling to learn and appreciate. As in our unequalled Church Book, the "AMERICAN TUNE BOOK"—so in this we have drawn on many well-known writers of Sabbath School Music, the very best in the country, to whose united efforts we owe this new and popular Sabbath School Book, edited by Messrs. FRANK & BENTLEY.

Its Success Cannot be Doubled.

SEND ORDERS EARLY.

Price $30 per 100

Sample copies, 30 cts. each. Sent post-paid.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

Charles H. Ditson & Co.,

711 Broadway, New York.

THE

SPIRIT OF REFORM.

COLBY & RICH,

14 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON, MASS.,

Issue weekly the

BANNER OF LIGHT.

An exponent of the Spiritual philosophy of the nineteenth century.

The above is a first-class, eight-page, family Newspaper, containing FORTY COLUMNS of INTERESTING AND INSTRUCTIVE READING, classed as follows:—

LITERARY DEPARTMENT.—From French and German.

REPORTS OF SPIRITUAL LECTURES.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

MESSAGE DEPARTMENT.—Spirit-messages from the departed to their friends in earth-life, given through the mediumship of Mrs. J. H. Conant.

ORIGINAL CONTRIBUTIONS.—From the most talented writers in the world.

All which features render this journal a popular Family Paper, and at the same time the harbinger of a Glorious Scientific Religion.

Terms of Subscription in Advance:

Per year $3.00

Six months 1.50

Three months75

Specimen copies sent free.

We confidently call the attention of the friends of progress and reform, whether in material or spiritual matters, to the self-respecting and dignified tone, and the liberal position assumed and maintained by the Banner of Light in the past, the same being the guarantee of future usefulness.

Colby & Rich also publish and offer for sale, at the Banner of Light Bookstore, many books and pamphlets of a spiritual and reformatory nature.

The complete works of Andrew Jackson Davis; also books by Judge J. W. Edmonds, Mrs. Emma Hardinge, William Howitt, Hon. Robert Dale Owen, D. D. Home, Prof. William Denton, Miss Lizzie Doten, J. M. Peebles, Mrs. J. S. Adams, Prof. S. B. Brittan, Hudson and Emma Tuttle, Henry C. Wright, Warren Chase, Charles S. Woodruff, Dr. A. B. Child, Mrs. Lois Walbrooker, P. B. Randolph, Warren S. Barlow, George Stearns, and others will here be found.

Summer Reading for the Seaside. CHEAP AND GOOD.

AN ENGLISH SEASIDE STORY, published complete in an EXTRA TRIBUNE of 12 pages. Price Ten Cents by mail. Address THE TRIBUNE, New York.

ENGLISH CLASSICS.

The Cheapest Books Ever Published.

SHAKESPEARE. 60c. Cloth, $1.25
Containing all the great Poet's Plays, 37 in number, from the Original Text, the whole of his Poems, with Memoir and Portrait, and 37 Illustrations, by Gilbert, Wilson, &c.

BYRON. 50c. Cloth, $1.00
A New Edition of the Works of Lord Byron. 480 pp. 16 Illustrations by F. Gilbert.

SCOTT. 25c. Cloth, 50c.
A New Edition of the Poetical Works of Sir Walter Scott. Illustrated by F. Gilbert.

GOLDSMITH. 50c. Cloth, $1.00
The Works of Oliver Goldsmith, with Memoir and Portrait. New and complete Illustrated Edition.

BURNS. 25c. Cloth, 50c.
This new and complete edition of the Poetical Works of Robert Burns is elaborately illustrated, and contains the whole of the Poems, Life, and Correspondence of the great Scottish Bard.

ARABIAN NIGHTS. 25c. Cloth, 50c.
A New Translation, complete, with numerous illustrations.

MILTON. 25c. Cloth, 50c.
Milton's Works, New Edition, with Memoir, Portrait, and Frontispiece.

COWPER. 25c. Cloth, 50c.
Cowper's Works, New Edition, with Memoir, Portrait, and Frontispiece.

WORDSWORTH. 25c. Cloth, 50c.
Wordsworth's Works, New Edition, with numerous illustrations.

MOORE. 25c. Cloth, 50c.
Moore's Works, New Edition, with numerous illustrations.

SEND THE usual Discounts given to the Trade.

THE AMERICAN NEWS CO.,

New York.

Important Scientific Works.

By PROF. J. CLERK MAXWELL.

(Ready To-day.)

A Treatise on Electricity and Magnetism. By J. Clerk Maxwell, M. A., F. R. S., Professor of Experimental Physics in the University of Cambridge. 2 vols., 8vo., with illustrations. $12.

The Depths of the Sea. An Account of the General Results of the Dredging Cruises of H. M. S. Lightning and Porcupine during the Summers of 1868, '69 and '70. By Prof. Wyville Thompson, F. R. S. Medium 8vo., with nearly 100 exquisite wood-cuts and 8 colored maps. $9.

"It is impossible to read its fascinating pages without feeling awakened within us a desire to emulate the author in his efforts to obtain a knowledge of life beneath the waters, of which most of us know nothing."—Journal of Applied Chemistry.

"It is splendidly illustrated and popularly written, with much humor, and the treatment, like the subject, is anything but dry; it is a volume altogether worthy the interest and importance of its subject."—Popular Science Monthly.

"The volume, which forms one of the most important contributions of the season to the science of physical geography, is brought out in a style of rare typographical elegance, and is copiously illustrated with admirable drawings from Nature. It will fill a choice place in the library, both for the interest of its contents and the beauty of its execution."—N. Y. Tribune.

"Nothing can be more complete than the account of the scientific results of these voyages, which are fully illustrated by wood-cuts of the strange forms of life brought from the dark depths of the ocean, by charts of soundings and elaborate tables of the deep sea temperature. The book is another example of the scientific completeness and value, which is the only true form of what is called the popularization of science."—Daily News (London).

Zoological Mythology; Or, The Legends of Animals. By Angelo de Gubernatis, Professor of Sanscrit and Comparative Literature at Florence. 2 vols., 8vo., cloth, $3.

The Scientific Basis of Faith. By Joseph John Murphy, author of "Habit and Intelligence." 8vo., cloth, $5.

Old-Fashioned Ethics and Common-Sense Metaphysics, with Some of their Applications. By William Thomson, author of "A Treatise on Labor." 8vo., cloth, $3.50.

New Book by Amadeo Guillemin.

The Forces of Nature. A Popular Introduction to the Study of Physical Phenomena. By Amadeo Guillemin. Translated from the French by Mrs. Norman Lockyer, and edited, with Notes and Additions, by J. Norman Lockyer, F. R. S. Imperial 8vo., with 11 colored plates and 450 wood engravings, cloth, $12.50. [Now ready.]

"This book is a luxurious introduction to the study of the physical sciences. M. Guillemin has found an excellent translator in Mrs. Norman Lockyer, while the editorship of Mr. Norman Lockyer, with his notes and additions, are guarantees not only of scientific accuracy but of the completeness and interest of the information."—Daily News (London).

Address ASA K. BUTTS, 36 Dey Street, N. Y.

Cloth bound, $1.

Memorial of Horace Greeley.

with TWO PORTRAITS and ILLUSTRATIONS; one portrait representing Mr. Greeley as he appeared in the last Summer of his life, and being altogether the most life-like and natural portrait of him ever published. The volume contains a Memoir of Mr. GREELEY, his last hours, the moral of his death, the Funeral Arrangements, the Closing Ceremony, the Mourning of the People, Letters of Sympathy, Voices of the Pulpit and the Press, Tributes from the Poets, Resolutions and Proceedings of Various Public Bodies, &c., &c., &c. Pamphlet Edition, 50 cents; handsomely bound, $1; either free by mail on receipt of price.

THE TRIBUNE, New York.

HIGHER LAW.

A Romance.

By EDWARD MAITLAND, author of "The Pilgrim and Shrine." 12mo., cloth, $1.75.

"There is no novel, in short, which can be compared to it for its width of view, its cultivation, its poetry, and its deep human interest. . . . except 'Romola.'"—Westminster Review.

"Its careful study of character, and the ingenuity and independence of its speculations, will commend it to the admiration even of those who differ from its conclusions most gravely."—British Quarterly Review.

THE PILGRIM AND THE SHRINE.

By Edward Maitland. Third edition. 12mo., cloth, $1.50. Postpaid on receipt of price.

"One of the wisest and most charming of books."—Westminster Review.

Address ASA K. BUTTS,

36 DEY STREET, NEW YORK.

All Interested in the Progress of Science Should Read

NATURE.

A Weekly Illustrated Journal of Science.

The attention of all interested in the general progress of knowledge is earnestly invited to this Journal, which has now become the accredited organ of the leading scientific men, in communicating their views to each other and to the public.

One of the leading objects of this periodical is to awaken in the public mind a more lively interest in science. With this end in view, it provides original articles and reviews, written by scientific men of the highest distinction in their various departments, expounding the discussing the most recent scientific discoveries, and pointing out the bearing of science upon civilization and progress, and its claims to more general recognition, as well as to a higher place in the educational system of the country.

Grand Results of Scientific Research.

There will also be found in Nature complete abstracts of all important papers communicated to British, American, and Continental Scientific Societies and Periodicals, and Reports of the Meetings of Scientific Bodies.

Among the contributors to Nature will be found the names of almost every man of note in the various departments of scientific inquiry in England, America, and the Continent of Europe.

As questions of science compass all limits of nationality, and are of universal interest, a periodical devoted to them may fitly appeal to the intelligent classes in all countries where its language is read. The proprietors of Nature will aim so to conduct it that it shall bear a common claim upon all English-speaking peoples.

Nature is published in London; it asks, as it will be found to deserve, the liberal patronage of the thinking classes of the United States. Its articles are brief and condensed, and are thus suited to the circumstances of an active and busy people who have little time to read extended and elaborate treatises.

Every intelligent man is now expected to know something of what is going on in the scientific world; the columns of Nature will give a summary of it, varied, compressed, and authentic.

Yearly Subscription, $5. Single Numbers, price 12 cents. Sent for two months, as a trial subscription, on receipt of 75 cents.

THE PRACTITIONER.

A Monthly Journal of Therapeutics.

Edited by

FRANCIS N. ANSTIE, M.D., F.R.C.F.

"To hard-worked medical men, in general country practice, with little time for reading, and few opportunities for professional conversation, such a journal as this, bringing every month the latest ideas in medical practice and the latest records of important cases, ought to be invaluable."—London Guardian.

Yearly Subscription, $4. Single numbers 40 cents. Sent two months as a trial subscription, on receipt of 60 cents.

Address ASA K. BUTTS & CO.,

36 DEY STREET, NEW YORK.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 4.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1873.

WHOLE NO. 184.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for sectarian educational and charitable institutions shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperiled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

Therefore, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

So far as I am concerned, the above is the platform of THE INDEX. I believe in it without reserve; I believe that it will yet be accepted universally by the American people, as the only platform consistent with religious liberty. A Liberal League ought to be formed to carry out its principles wherever half a dozen earnest and resolute Liberals can be got together. Being convinced that the movement to secure compliance with these just "Demands" must surely, even if slowly, spread, I hope to make THE INDEX a means of furthering it; and I ask the assistance and active co-operation of every man and every woman who believes in it. Multiply Liberal Leagues everywhere, and report promptly the names of their Presidents and Secretaries. Intolerance and bigotry will tremble in proportion as that list grows. If freedom, justice, and reason are right, let their organized voice be heard like the sound of many waters.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor,

Boston, Sept. 1, 1873.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

St. Louis, Mo.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
BOSTON, MASS.—J. S. Rogers, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
VINELAND, N. J.—L. Bristol, President; E. G. Bialadall, Secretary.
JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

BY A. W. S.

THE Spiritualists of Boston are to resume their free meetings in Music Hall the first Sunday in October.

AN INDEX subscriber, recently writing to this office, says: "You publish one of the best papers in the world." One of our early admonitions was that we should never contradict. In this case we meekly obey that injunction.

THE Golden Age says that "ideas receive their best setting when incorporated in works of art." Would it not be better to say that ideas receive their best setting when incorporated in that highest work of Nature,—a noble life?

WE are very sorry to learn that Rev. W. H. Spencer is suffering under prostrating and prolonged illness which disables him temporarily in his ministry. He is an efficient evangelist of the radical gospel, and we trust he may speedily resume his labors therefor.

HENRY WARD BEECHER has been summering at the White Mountains. A daily newspaper reports him to have "preached on Sundays, and on week-days to have played with the chickens, the bear, and the donkey,"—all which appear to have constituted a sort of local menagerie at the place where he was staying.

MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD, the able apostle of Materialism, is making an extended tour through the West, lecturing on his chosen themes. His letters to the Investigator are quite interesting. We do not accept Mr. Underwood's materialistic doctrines, but aside from these he is doing good service in the cause of true liberalism, and we give him our right hand of cordial fellowship.

THE Boston Advertiser says: "There is wide-spread demoralization in party sentiment." We rejoice to hear it. Partisanship in politics is fatal to patriotism, as in religion to the simple love of truth. When a party in the State comes to prize spoils more than political purity and honesty, then every true patriot will desire the speedy opportunity to chant its death-song, and to follow its dead body to burial.

WHAT is Christianity? The answer to this question seems to us to be sufficiently simple. Historically and logically, Christianity is loyalty to Christ. All Christendom, with the exception of an insignificant minority, agree in this definition,—even the more logical and consistent of "Liberal Christians." The peculiarity of Christianity is—JESUS, THE CHRIST. Whatever universal elements it contains belong not to it but to Natural Religion.

REV. DR. OSGOOD has been writing vacation letters to the Christian Register, some of which for gentle egotism and sweet self-complacency are admirably unparalleled. Sometime ago the doctor left Unitarianism and proceeded to be an Episcopalian; but whatever changes occur in his theology, he never loses his elegant and dignified self-consciousness. However, he seems to be having quite a mild run of Episcopalianism, and is evidently disposed to be as broad a churchman as he can be.

THE New York Freeman's Journal says that the Jesuits whom Bismarck exiled from Germany are arriving by thousands in this country. At the request of the Bishop of Cleveland, some twenty German Jesuit Fathers have established themselves at Toledo, Ohio. Well, the Jesu-ists must live somewhere—why not here? We do not believe they can be put down by banishment or persecution of any kind; they must be argued down. Let everybody have a fair field, and we have faith that the truth will win.

WE were at Martha's Vineyard Camp-meeting this year, and the religious fervor in the tents appeared to us to be at low tide. The efficiency of Camp-meetings in the modus operandi of the Methodists would seem to be waning. What is the matter? Are sinners fewer than formerly, or is that devout denomination itself growing indifferent and worldly? We like to see every one earnest in his own faith, and we hope the Methodists will not part with their characteristic zeal until they make up their minds that their characteristic theology is false.

WE cannot see that "Liberal Christianity" has anything left to it to accomplish except its own demise, since liberal Orthodoxy has advanced entirely abroad of it, and is carrying a banner whose inscriptions are every whit as free and rational. Mr. Beecher and Mr. Murray not infrequently preach sermons as liberal as any that can be heard in strictly Unitarian churches, while there are some Unitarian divines who are even more conservative than these Orthodox gentlemen. And as for Universalists, they in general lag on the way to a true liberalism in a most hopelessly tardy manner.

THE Jewish Times, of August 29, in an interesting article on "Modern Secpticism," says that, "in Germany, to be a sceptic is a title of honor, a card of admission into the circle of men of thought, of the fashionable and ruling classes;" but that, in England, on the contrary, "society is opposed to bold thinkers, reformers, and educators; it is fashionable to be a zealous member of the Church, and the philosopher, engaged in explaining and popularizing a new law of Nature, has an onerous task before him to obtain a hearing, if that law happens to come in conflict with some accepted dogma of the Church."

THE New York Herald reporter encountered in Mr. Beecher's church, a few Sundays ago, a "corn-plaster man," who it would seem went there, not himself to be converted, but to convert others to his way of thinking as to the efficiency of his cure for pedal plagues. He watched his opportunity, the reporter informs us, to fill the hats of the congregation with his hand-bills. Did he offer one as his contribution to the hat that was passed round? The reporter does not say. He heads his account of that service thus: "A quack doctor profiting by his ploy in Plymouth Church!" "Corn-plasters in the light of Christianity!" We are afraid that reporter's bump of reverence is small.

REV. C. C. BURLING, pastor of the Free Congregational Society, of Bloomington, Ill., lately took his whole society to a picnic; and did it, too, on a Sunday. It is not specifically one of the "Demands of Liberalism" that religious societies shall have picnics on Sunday, but we cannot imagine any sensible liberal as objecting to it. We believe we have somewhere read of a great religious teacher who, one Sunday, had a sort of picnic with a few of his friends in a cornfield. Some of his contemporaries were rather scandalized by such a proceeding, and we think it barely possible that there may be a few of the same kind to-day, who will regard Mr. Burleigh and his Free Society as certainly no better than this famous innovator of old.

THE Golden Age severely condemns Mr. Gladstone for refusing to serve on a memorial committee to take a proper and permanent notice of John Stuart Mill's death. But Mr. Gladstone is a member of the Church of England, and, so long as he is that, he is bound to stand by her doctrines. No man in England has done more than Mr. Mill to undermine and destroy those doctrines. Therefore Mr. Gladstone could not join a committee to take "proper notice" of Mr. Mill's death, and of his "great services to his country and to civilization," without appearing at least to sanction Mr. Mill's religious philosophy. It may have been bigotry that led him to decline, as the Golden Age says; but it is only another case of the inevitable Christian narrowness. Let us be sorry that Mr. Gladstone occupies a position which compels him to be bigoted; not that, occupying such a position, he is consistent with it.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

"Evidences of Christianity:"

SUBSTANCE OF A LETTER WRITTEN TO A CHRISTIAN FRIEND.

Read before the New Haven Radical Club, Jan. 23, 1873.

BY ROGER M. SHERMAN.

It is sometime since I received a book on the Evidences of Christianity which I understood you desired me to read. I was pleased that you should manifest an interest in my opinions, and grateful, as I always am, for an opportunity to inform myself upon a subject we all feel so deep an interest in; and though you will not expect me to vex you with such a letter as I am about to write, yet I feel that I cannot in justice to myself return the work without giving you some idea of the effect it has had upon me, and the reasons why I cannot fairly accept Mr. McElvaine's Evidences as conclusive.

It is a book calculated to inspire assurance in believers rather than to convince a sincere unbeliever. The author seems to ignore utterly all virtue that does not result from the teachings of the Church, and regards sincerity as a virtue that an unbeliever never possessed. I presume that his arguments would have had equal force, had he been a little more charitable towards his opponents. I will briefly notice some of his "evidences."

He takes some pains to show that the Gospels were written by the persons whose names they bear, and that they were trustworthy eye-witnesses to the events related. Now is it not much more probable that mistakes should occur (by design or otherwise) at a time of the grossest ignorance among the masses,—especially in the absence of that most essential prerequisite to correct information, the art of printing? The New Testament is placed beside Milton's Paradise Lost, as a work of equal historical authenticity, which is unfair for the obvious reason that the latter is a work of genius, while the former is for the most part historical. The author of Paradise Lost could have no object in giving the credit of such a work to another; and, if he did, he could not unless the other possessed the necessary genius for such a composition. With history, however, it is different; any person with ordinary intelligence and a fair command of language could write an account of events he had seen or heard about; and there might be an object in writing under the name of an Apostle, which would give to a spurious history of Jesus an importance which it could not otherwise obtain. Besides, we have the direct testimony of Faustus, a Christian Bishop of the sect of Manichæans, who in his controversy with St. Augustine in the fourth century said: "For many things have been inserted in the speeches of our Lord which, though put forth under his name, agree not with his faith; especially since, as already has been proved by us, these things were not written by Christ or his Apostles, but a long time after them, having been manufactured by I know not what half-Jews, not even agreeing with themselves, who made up their tale out of reports and opinions merely and yet fathered the whole upon the Apostles of the Lord, or on those who were supposed to have followed the Apostles, mendaciously pretending they had written their lies and conceals according to them."

The eminent ecclesiastical historian Mosheim says: "Not long after Christ's ascension into heaven, several histories of his life and doctrines, full of pious frauds and fabulous wonders, were composed by persons whose intentions, perhaps, were not bad, but whose writings discover the grossest superstition and ignorance." It is difficult to conceive anything more "wonderful" and apparently "fabulous" than the Gospel histories of Jesus. I might quote many other passages of equal respectability to show the uncertain condition of these books so early as the fourth century. There seems to be abundant evidence even in the Gospels themselves that the writers were not eye-witnesses to the scenes there recorded, and it has taken a great deal of theological learning and ingenuity to account for the contradictions which exist in the Gospels, and the strange neglect of one to mention what another mentions, in narrating the same event. For instance, no two of the writers agree as to the inscription over the cross. Mark says the crucifixion was at the third hour, while John says the sixth. The wonderful phenomena attending the crucifixion,—darkness over the land, rending of the rocks and the veil of the Temple, the opening graves and rising of the dead,—are mentioned only by Matthew. He also says there was "a great earthquake," in which he is not supported by the other Gospels. Matthew and John say nothing of the ascension of Jesus into Heaven, while the others do. Numerous other instances of the same character are found in the Gospels, which leave ample justification for the remark of Faustus that "they made up their tale out of reports and opinions merely,"—not even agreeing with themselves." But as our author regards the authenticity of the New Testament of no importance in deciding its credibility, I will say no more on this point, merely wishing you to remember what Dr. Lardner says: "The history of the New Testament is attended with many difficulties,"—which Mr. McElvaine will not admit.

The next essential point in the Doctor's argument is the credibility of the Gospel narrative. In this position I think we shall find he has utterly failed to sustain himself. He first proposes to proceed with the New Testament just as he would with any other history, forgetting as he does that it is an absolute rule in historical criticism to reject all that pretends to be supernatural, and this for the very good reason that all supernatural events (so called) that have been thoroughly investigated have been attributable to natural causes, and very much has no foundation in fact.

The Doctor's argument is that, as the writers were honest and well-informed on the subject, we are under direct obligation to believe what they state. But this will lead us into a most absurd position. For instance, I have a history of some cases of Salem Witchcraft "detailed at the time of their occurrence by Rev. Cotton Mather and other clergymen and learned men of that day, many of which cases they pledge their reputation occurred within their own view and are accurately and truly represented." After a judicial investigation there was found sufficient evidence to convict and hang those through whose influence these strange things were supposed to occur. Thus many a poor woman lost her life for having (as was supposed) done that which not a sane man of the present day believes she ever did do. It is difficult to conceive a case better authenticated than the above. The New Testament has not half the claim on our credibility that this has; yet you do not believe it, and Mr. McElvaine does not. But the other is accepted, peering up through a thousand dark unlettered years of superstition. Why? Because you were thus educated.

One other thought. The New Testament contains a record of events which are not only natural impossibilities, but physical impossibilities. I know it is common to assert that—"All things are possible with God;" but it is self-evident that both parts of a contradiction cannot be true. A triangle and a square can never be of the same shape so long as words retain their meaning; nor can Omnipotence make them so. I will mention one instance of this character in the New Testament—the miracle of feeding the multitude, Matthew, chapter fourteen. It is represented that Jesus fed five thousand men, besides women and children, on five loaves and two fishes, and "they were filled." Now let us suppose it would naturally require five hundred loaves and two hundred fishes to fill such a multitude. If five loaves and two fishes are made to answer the same purpose, it is to suppose that the nutriment of five loaves was made equal to the nutriment of five hundred loaves, which is a contradiction and as such cannot be true. Who will seriously maintain that God can so act on the nature of things that the contents of a square inch will be equal to what is one hundred and forty-four times as much; namely, a square foot? I say there can be no evidence which will fairly command the mind's assent to such things, because they contain within themselves the demonstration of their falsity; and this is but a small part of what may be said against the credibility of the Gospels.

But our author, thinking his position thus far well established, makes another move. He says that "miracles perfectly proved are perfect evidence of divine attestation." I have no objection to offer to this statement except to show that it is out of all consistency with the Bible itself. In the seventh and two or three following chapters of Exodus, we find an account of the miracles performed before Pharaoh by Moses, and by the Sorcerers. The latter, like Moses, were able to turn their rods into serpents, the water into blood, and plague the land with frogs; and these are feats quite as miraculous as anything the doctor can produce. But if these miracles are perfectly proved, as they must be if asserted by the word of God, then they are "perfect evidence of divine attestation," according to the author's logic; and as these wicked (I know not that I should say wicked) Sorcerers were acting in direct opposition to the other emissaries of God, Moses and Aaron, it puzzles me not a little to understand what particular object the Almighty could have in those "divine attestations." However, I will humbly suggest that they attest the ignorance of a very superstitious people.

The doctor has not shown us miracles the evidence of which is not open to grave objections; and he must know that strange and unnatural events require much more perfect evidence than ordinary occurrences. Ancient History is nearly all a mixture of truth and fable or miracle; yet we only accept the probable part and reject the rest. So let us be equally cautious with the Bible, and not be confounded by high sounding pretensions; for there are other scriptures pretending to be the word of God.

And now we come to the "Evidence of Prophecy," and here encounter the strongest argument of the work, though I think we shall find it unable to bear criticism. First let us consider that other nations have had their oracles, soothsayers, magicians, and astrologers, as well as the Jews their prophets; and all have been believed to foretell the future. I have no faith in fortune-telling, but have known instances which I could no more satisfactorily account for than I can the prophecies of the Bible.

The particular object of prophecy, we will suppose, is to furnish credentials of a divine mission, a witness to some one's infallibility as a messenger from God. For this reason we are to believe all he says, however unreasonable. Now if it can be shown that these persons have erred in their predictions, it will destroy their authority by making it uncertain what part of their teachings is not error. Surely the word of God could never make mistakes. Let us notice one or two errors of this kind.

The twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew represents the disciples asking Jesus when and what should be the sign of his second coming and the end of the world. He tells them very explicitly in his prophecy concerning Jerusalem, which Mr. McElvaine tells us all about in his eighth lecture, and shows how wonderfully everything was fulfilled. I would here remark that this prophecy was not written thirty years before the destruction of Jerusalem, but only six according to Dr. Lardner (whose authority no Christian should gainsay); and later critics have shown that it was not written nearly so soon as that. In reading the author's comments on this prophecy, it is observable that he makes no excuses for the stars not falling, the non-appearance of Jesus in the clouds, and the end of the world, which Jesus said would happen at that time. I beg that you will turn to the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew and see that I do not misrepresent it. After speaking of the calamities that should befall the people, he says in verse twenty-nine: "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken. And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven, and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory," &c. Then, after speaking a parable of the fig-tree, he says in verse thirty-four: "Verily I say unto you, this generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled." Generation after generation has passed, and these things have not been seen; and the conclusion is inevitable that Jesus erred in the prophecy.

Another instance in the seventeenth chapter of Matthew where Jesus tells his disciples the signs that shall follow believers: they shall drink poisons, and handle deadly serpents without injury. Either this is a false prophecy, or there are no true believers at the present day. I am aware that it is supposed by some to refer to the times of the Apostles only; but there is nothing in the passage to warrant such a conclusion. In the fourteenth chapter of Ezekiel we find the passage: "If a prophet be deceived when he has spoken a thing, I the Lord have deceived that prophet, and will stretch out my hand and destroy him." Without dwelling upon the otherwise distressing features of the passage, it is obviously to be inferred that a prophet may be deceived; but to illustrate the point fully, let us turn to the remarkable prophecy of Micaiah, second Chronicles, eighteenth chapter. God is here represented as desiring to entice Ahab to his destruction. To do this, he accepts the proposition of a lying spirit to get into the mouths of all his prophets, and, by inspiring them to lie to King Ahab, the latter is induced to go to battle and is there killed. Thus poor Ahab's faith in the supposed word of God is made the means of his destruction! Without stopping to consider the reckless impiety of this passage (which is no worse than a hundred others) or those who will defend it, I trust you will see the weakness of the doctor's argument. According to Micaiah there must have been four hundred prophets lying by inspiration from God. I cannot see how men will, after candid consideration, accept as truth such absurd and wicked stuff.

"But Faith, Fanatic Faith, once wedded fast To some dear falsehood, hugs it to the last."

The other evidences of the divinity of Christianity which our author considers important are its "maraculous propagation" and its "fruits." These are small points.

In regard to its remarkable progress, I would simply mention that the Mormons use the same argument to show that God is with them, pointing in triumph to the trials and persecution they have encountered undismayed. The argument is of no value for either; vice often makes rapid progress as well as virtue, and falsehood as well as truth.

The argument from its fruits is equally poor. The art of printing has done more, perhaps, to elevate the position of mankind than all the others put together. Yet we do not suppose the inventor was inspired in any special, divine sense, though he must have been if the fruits of his invention be the test. This argument, poor as it is, comes with especial bad grace from Christianity; the heart faints as one reviews its blood-stained records, and recounts its dreadful and inhuman massacres, and calls to mind the sickening details of its inquisitions. These cruelties were not practised merely against the heathen but in deadly strife among themselves. "A corrupt tree cannot bring forth good fruit," says Jesus; and I would suggest that "Neither can a good tree bring forth corrupt fruit." Will Christianity abide the test? How does every virtuous sensibility smart under the necessity of using such an argument!

The author tries to make one other point from death-bed scenes of unbelievers; as though it were legitimate to try men's opinions; by the way they regard them after the ravages of disease, and perchance old age, have enfeebled a once vigorous and conscientious mind. The extreme childishness of this argument must appear to any one; yet in support of it he has not found it beneath him to give credit to the most absurd and oft refuted calumnies which Christian piety has seen fit to heap on those whose nobleness of soul would not submit to mental degradation. The mind revolts at the humiliation and conscious cowardice of supporting any cause by means so false and slanderous.

Thus much for McElvaine's Evidences of Christianity. I have endeavored to touch all the important arguments of the book, and have given a few reasons why I cannot accept them as conclusive.

And now, a word for the other side. It may be a matter of surprise to you that a person should deny the divine authority of the Bible out of respect for the Creator of the Universe; but there are many such, and I am one. I will try to give you some reasons why. My conception of God is infinite wisdom, goodness, and power; if these are the divine attributes, you will see that it is absolutely impossible for God to perform an unjust or imperfect action, and if all acts were perfect there could be nothing to repent of. Yet the Bible says: "And it repenteth the Lord of." Yet he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart." Again: "Thou hast forsaken me, saith the Lord; thou hast gone backward; therefore will I stretch out my hand against thee and destroy thee. I am weary with repenting." Genesis, chapter fifteen, verse six. In the eleventh chapter of Genesis we find the Lord represented as confounding the language of men lest they should build a tower that should reach heaven; and in numberless instances is God represented as being extremely "foolish," "wrathful," and "furious." The bloodthirsty and cruel commands such as—"Now go and smite Amalek and utterly destroy all that they have, and spare them not, but slay both man and woman, infant and suckling, ox and sheep, camel and ass,"—show how utterly unworthy of any just conception of God that book is.

The New Testament, though an improvement on the Old, is far from free of the same difficulty. Paul says, of those who "believe not the truth, and have pleasure in unrighteousness, God shall send them strong delusion that they should believe a lie, that they all might be damned." Second Thessalonians, second chapter. It is hard to think God would impose on the credulity of his creatures; one might hope that great enlightenment would be sent instead of "delusion," that they all might believe the truth and be saved. Such ranting shows the vulgar weakness of a fanatic, and not the real intent of our heavenly Father.

Passing this, let us glance at the foundation of this religion. It is represented that God created man, who, having transgressed a law through the influence of another creature of God (Satan), the race of man for all future generations is cursed. To avoid the natural consequences of the curse, the Son of God, a being without sin and one with God, is sacrificed at the hands of his infuriated creatures. Through the efficacy of this horrible deed, man is redeemed from the curse, providing he believes the story. This is a fair statement of the case without the usual gloss of sophistry. It seems utterly indefensible. If man deserved the curse, why should he not endure it? And if he did not, why was it hurled upon him? If man is at present under the just curse of God, brought upon himself by guilt, how is it possible for the suffering of an innocent Jesus to remove that guilt? Are personal merit and demerit transferable like goods and chattels? I rest with entire confidence my eternal salvation on the probability of such notions not being true, and am only amazed and shocked to see men in the nineteenth century defending such absurd dogmas. I have no doubt but that thoughts like these have often crossed your own mind, and been shunned as the promptings of an evil spirit. It is often said that these things are mysteries that we cannot understand, which is perhaps the easiest way of getting over the difficulty. It is like telling a person that three added to four make five, and, because it is not understood to be true, saying it is a mystery. I confess I cannot understand how the suffering innocent can make the guilty guiltless; but I can easily see that it will do nothing of the kind,—that it saps the very foundations of justice and only adds sin to sin.

Every proposition which is neither reasonable nor demonstrable should be disbelieved; therefore I disbelieve that God could intend as a special revelation to man any truth which an earnest and candid investigator would find to be out of all consistency with the divine attributes and with truth itself. The many and cumbrous volumes of commentaries and explanations of Scripture speak the lack of revelation; for how idle for man to attempt an explanation of what God has set himself to reveal, and made so plain that "the wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein"?

These thoughts I might enlarge upon, but I have already written more than you will thank me for. I cannot expect you will think of these things as I do, and perhaps I would not if I could; for if your life is made happier by the consolations of your faith, and your thoughts and deeds mellowed by the golden example of Jesus, it is well. But I would press upon you the fact that unbelievers are not necessarily so from a love of lust, or always actuated by a hatred of God and his laws, as Mr. McElvaine would represent. I hope the day is not far distant when "justification by faith" will be a thing of the past, and man will regard man as I feel God does, giving all just credit for the love of humanity and kind efforts in its behalf. May the clouds of "faith" break, letting in the glorious sunshine of noble deeds; for with it comes the glory of our race!

[FOR THE INDEX.]

THE NECESSITY OF A PRIESTHOOD.

The feeling of hostility excited among liberal thinkers generally by the proceedings and the aspirations of the Ritualists is due, perhaps, less to any dislike of ceremonialism for its own sake than to an abhorrence for what we may call Ecclesiasticism in general. It is especially the power and influence of an organized priesthood that are so much dreaded and detested. It is our habit in fact, at this day, to assume that a priesthood can be nothing less than the deadly foe of popular enlightenment and human progress. The word "priestcraft" has become thus one of the reddest of our red rags, needing only to be shaken in the face of a "progressive" to drive him wild.

It needs, perhaps, some temerity, even before an audience so exceptionally intelligent as that of the readers of THE INDEX, to undertake to question the soundness of this so nearly universal assumption. No doubt the assumption would be far less universal than it is, if it had not quite a broad substratum of fact to rest upon. The writer of this paper, nevertheless, ventures to assert that it is not upon the totality of the facts that it rests; that it is indeed only a partial and one-sided view; and that, upon a fair consideration of human nature itself and of its cosmic environment, it becomes plain that an organized priesthood is really necessary at once to a highly developed popular intelligence, and to a large and noble human progress.

It would be very interesting, if space permitted, to follow up systematically the historical side of the argument. But this can hardly be accomplished here. It is very certain, however, that the priesthoods of our race have not been all mere obscurantists. Laying aside the theological theory of the origin and progress (or other career) of mankind, and recognizing only a spontaneous and natural development, it becomes manifestly an absurdity to regard the Thinker-Class as the authors of human ignorance. The ignorance was spontaneous. And how immense an achievement it was to take the first steps towards breaking in upon that ignorance, we can rightly appreciate only by considering the social conditions that must needs have prevailed before the first dawn of our civilization. For human society existed before civilization; and a glimpse of that infant stage of man's career we can still catch in observing the Indians in our Western wilds, or the tribes of Central Africa.

It was the exigencies of monotheistic dogma that necessitated the fable of deliberate deception and imposture on the part of all the priesthoods save the one true priesthood of the one true God. A mind really emancipated from theological superstition will easily recognize the necessary good faith of all the priesthoods alive at their outset. The fundamental idea of a sound historic Philosophy is the spontaneity of theological conception, at the dawn of civilization. Positivists, indeed, claim this idea as a veritable scientific discovery, combined, at all events, with the correlative fact of the subsequent transformation of those ideas, by means of a metaphysical transition, into their definitive or scientific state, that transformation, moreover, having been accomplished in the order of their progressively increasing complication. Priesthoods and people were alike incapable at the outset of any conception that was not theological. And so far from the early priesthoods having imposed upon the people fraudulent inventions and gross superstitions, they did but refine and idealize, as far as was then possible, the superstitions spontaneously prevalent, and turn them as far as they could into instruments of moral and social improvement.

That they also used the superstitions of the people as a means of gaining influence over them is very true. And if they had not done so, whence could they have obtained the power to do anything towards social improvement? Government in every form is, we know, often assumed to be a necessary evil. But even if that were so now, is it really true that it was so then? Do the Digger Indians manifest any spontaneous disposition towards their own elevation and civilization? But with all the faults and vices of our actual society, our Tammany rings and our Custom House rings, are we not really better, on the whole, than Digger Indians?

The slurs cast upon the priesthoods of the past come with a peculiarly bad grace from men who make a boast of spreading civilization at the sword's edge and the cannon's mouth. If government be an evil at all, certainly government by brute force and military murder is the very worst form of it. The peaceful government of men through their ideas, if by government is meant simply influencing them for their own good and the general good of all, is surely a noble art, not a base one. Liable to abuse, as is every good thing; but in itself assuredly admirable. Yet the same men who denounce the tyranny and oppression of "priestcraft," and deplore the degradation of the peoples that submit to it, will gloat over the dissemination of our glorious civilization (to say nothing of "the Gospel") by British buccaneering in the interest of opium-smuggling!

The cradle of our civilization was assuredly needed by the theocracies of Egypt and Western Asia. And what is theocracy irrespectively of theological fable, and regarded simply as a phenomenon of human history and development? It is in one word government by the Thinker-Class, aided by the social institution of caste. Caste ultimately becomes oppressive, no doubt. But, to appreciate it fairly as a phenomenon of human development, we must consider it in relation to the social environment amidst which it arose. Caste consists essentially in the direct inheritability of all social functions. And when the conditions of human co-operation had as yet all to be instituted,—when the industrial arts had as yet all to be learned,—when habits of steady toil had as yet all to be formed,—when there were no books, not even manuscripts,—when there was no written language,—when all instruction had perforce to be purely traditional and pass from generation to generation by word of mouth only,—when, moreover, the means of locomotion were, as compared with our modern situation in this regard, almost non-existent, could a more admirable method of inaugurating at once Industry and Instruction have well been hit upon than just this of passing on both the one and the other from father to son, generation after generation?

The efficacy of this system, moreover, as to the general progress of the race can only be fairly appreciated by a comparison of the attainments actually made under it with those really due to our subsequent more progressive and free civilization. This comparison, fairly made, would be very apt to lead the truly intelligent among us accidentally to a less blustering and bullying style of thought and of speech than commonly prevails towards the Asiatics, who are after all our fellow-men. The manufacturers of Manchester are obliged to admit that with all the wonderful perfection of our machinery they cannot compete with the hand-looms of Hindustan. With all our chemistry we cannot, even in France, rival the porcelains of Japan. Nowhere, even in Holland, can we sustain a population as numerous in proportion to area as exists in China. It is true that China is essentially fetichistic, not strictly, therefore, an example of a theocracy. Fetichism is prior even to theologism proper. But the condition now especially under consideration, government by the Thinker-Class, is common to the astrology of China and the genuine theocracies. We shall never rightly comprehend our own civilization, especially our own past, and certainly never appreciate the real future of humanity, till we learn to form a more just, sympathetic, and respectful appreciation than commonly prevails of those most interesting civilizations which, founded at a period since which our own ancestors were for ages savages roaming the forests, still subsist on the eastern shores of the Asiatic continent.

That it has been a real benefit to outgrow the too great immobility of this earliest form of civilization may be very true. But then our forefathers derived the very ability to outgrow that earliest form from the culture received under it. It was very necessary that the system of caste should be broken in upon, even at the cost of substituting an essentially military society for the orderly, peaceful, steady industry instituted by the pristine theocracies. Yet nevertheless the orderly, peaceful, steady industry is really the normal life of man; and the military civilization, however indispensable, is but a transition.

That which had to be accomplished, and still has to be, for we have certainly not yet attained such a state, is the radical conciliation of this orderly, peaceful, steady industry with a profound freedom and personal independence. But the difficulty we have even now in instituting such a condition throws into strong light the total impossibility of its being even conceived of at the outset. Coöperation on a scale at all large necessarily means subordination for the mass of the coöperators, albeit ever so voluntary a subordination ultimately. Voluntary it certainly could not be at the outset. If man then had to be flogged into subordination, it is plainly, at least, as certain that the priesthoods were not the authors of that necessity. This is what we liberals so constantly overlook: that the early slaveries were imposed upon man by the very conditions of his environment in combination with the characteristics of his own organization. In other words the several conditions of the social state are a spontaneous growth; not foreordained by legislative authority. All that legislative authority does is to temper the harshness of the spontaneous development; or to modify the secondary features; only occasionally, by very natural mistakes, increasing instead of diminishing inevitable miseries. The Priesthoods no more created the pristine slaveries than the gardener creates the tree that he plants and cultivates. And if the systems of thought which the priesthoods instituted rendered the victims of those slaveries the more contented and resigned under them, ought they to be reproached with that as with some wrong and injury inflicted upon man? First let it be shown that man is worse off resigned than he is discontented, and that the freedom to which we are gradually growing could ever have been instituted without some sort of transition between the social state which is to exist in our own future and the social state, say, for example, of our American aborigines.

Our false judgment of the priesthoods of the past springs from our constantly charging upon them the responsibility for social conditions which existed so spontaneously that neither they nor any of their contemporaries could even conceive of their non-existence. Plato, the prince of freethinkers, even in Greece, the land of freethinking, could not conceive of a body of free working men. Industry had to be imposed, in his Utopia itself, upon a slave class. In fact, what the Priesthoods really did was to modify the hardships of the spontaneous institutions, and found a culture out of which gradually grew the capacity for better institutions and a higher social state.

It is natural enough that any body of men actually existing should strive to prolong its own existence. And the fact that human opinion has repeatedly shifted its ground, naturally opened the way to great abuse in this regard. The change from polytheism to monotheism could not take place from within the priestly class. It resulted, in fact, from the free speculations of Greek philosophers and savans, especially from the first dawning of positive science, on the one side, and from a socio-moral source on the other side. An urgent need for social re-organization was combined with the merely intellectual need, which would not alone have sufficed to displace the ancient opinion. For indeed the force of the purely intellectual movement had much abated before the social advent of Christianity.

There was necessarily involved in this change a break in the line of spiritual authority. Religious authority had to pass from the polytheistic priest-hoods to the Christian priesthood. The requisite social regeneration could not possibly be effected without this transference of authority. It is a mere self-contradiction to imagine men the organs of a transformation of which they could not even conceive. The very existence of the older priesthoods was therefore threatened. And if, finding themselves thus attacked, they made some struggles for dear life, it is not to be wondered at. Nor can the fact be set down as evidence of any inherent pre-disposition on the part of an organized priesthood to shut out the light of truth. It is simply one of the immense difficulties in the path of the progress of humanity that the human mind is spontaneously led into a method of speculating on the phenomena around it, which subsequent experience forces it to abandon. Had it been possible for the human mind to have adopted from the outset the scientific method of explanation in regard to all phenomena, there would have been no such fatal break in the line of intellectual development. And if the line of development had been continuous, and the priesthood would have been continuous, and would have remained throughout, what it certainly was at the outset, the organ of the elaboration of human intelligence, and the most efficient organ of its popular dissemination.

The same remark holds true in a still more striking manner, perhaps, in regard to the final transformation of opinion from theologico-metaphysical to positive.

The Christian priesthood, that is to say, is in no wise responsible for the necessity by which it has finally to give way to the priesthood of the Universal Church and Religion of Humanity. Nor for the so pregnant fact that the transition in this case has inevitably to be very much more prolonged than in any previous transformation. A whole body of scientific doctrine has to be elaborated, and that, moreover, upon an utterly dispersive method, giving no hint whatever, save to a chosen few of the rarest intellects, and to them only the most vague, of the ultimate synthesis to be evolved out of the seemingly heterogeneous mass. Meantime each new scientific discovery deals a tremendous blow upon the theological structure reared with infinite toil and skill; and it is most unjust to regard the defenders of the ancient faith as actuated by merely personal and unworthy motives in seeking to ward off from that faith attacks which could not possibly have been then supposed destined to lead ultimately only to a deeper and a stronger faith, and one with moral reactions and tendencies yet nobler and diviner. We should remember that the persecutors of Galileo could not have the slightest conception of the degree of certitude which it has needed a long experience to make us recognize as naturally inherent in the positive demonstrations of science. And some of us even do not yet recognize it. Common-sense was directly against the conclusions they were asked to accept. The social and moral dangers involved in the profound disruption of the ancient faith while as yet no new faith had arisen, or given the slightest sign of being about to arise to take its place, they instinctively felt and foresaw; and our experience of to-day justifies their deep presentiment. Their anxieties are justified preëminently, moreover, by a class of thinkers who, claiming to be par excellence defenders of free thought, still continue to insist that science furnishes religion with no new doctrine, nor even with any new logical foundation, but that religion must make shift the best way it can for ever henceforth, with the unknowable for its sole domain!

No doubt the necessity imposed upon mankind of completely displacing more than once its basis of certitude does expose our race to immense dangers and sufferings. It makes progress apparently consist for a long time in mere destruction. It makes the instinct of conservation seem to be directly hostile to that development which is its very end, but which without the conservation is self-evidently impossible. But it is singularly illogical to imagine that because a priesthood is naturally the organ of conservation, it is therefore also naturally hostile to progress. If mere destruction be ever real progress, it can assuredly be so only very temporarily, and during a period of transition.

Any human institution during the period of its decay naturally presents many abuses, and even brings its abusive side into unsightly prominence. But is there one single abuse of our organized priesthoods of to-day that does not derive directly from the theologism of their doctrine? Suppose the Roman Catholic Church, with all its wonderful organization, were at this moment employing in the popular dissemination of positive science the same energies that it actually devotes to the dissemination of demoralizing theological fables, would our modern society be any the worse off for its existence? Could it then be imagined, even by our most intense liberals, the foe either of enlightenment or of freedom? Its priests would in that case, of course, be a totally different class from what they are to-day. The principles of its policy would be radically changed, necessarily. But, as a priestly organization, will any rational mind pretend that it would have in it one faintest shadow of danger either to popular liberties, to popular enlightenment, or to the most radical free thought?

One condition being of course assumed, one unquestionably indispensable; namely, the entire separation between Church and State. Let the Church have a doctrine claiming to be ever so entirely scientific, ever so profoundly purged of all supernaturalism, and of the kind of ghostly authority inextricably inherent in supernaturalism, ever so much attenuated, she must still possess no vestige of coercive power to sustain her teachings, not even in the shape of wealth. She must possess no weapon whatever but those of reason and persuasion: reason to convince men of truth, persuasion to lead men to the right. And she must be sustained solely by love and conscience; by the gratitude of those who recognize the benefit of her instructions and the sense of the duty of disseminating those same instructions freely among all men. It is an eternally sound principle that the "word of life"—the real knowledge of human nature and of the means available for its improvement—ought to be given to all "without money and without price." But not by "State aid," by taxes wrung from men by force; solely by the reaction of that very sentiment of duty and devotedness, to the development and stimulation of which all the efforts of a true Church are directed.

But this condition once solidly assured, there is surely nothing whatever in the past experience of mankind to justify the feeling which so universally obtains among us, intensely hostile to all ecclesiastical organization. Not that the indictment of history against the priesthoods of the past, or rather of recent centuries, is not truly tremendous, with whole mountains of fact to sustain it. But that the whole of those abuses and cruelties and crimes sprung, not from any tendencies inseparable from a priesthood as such, but solely from these two conditions: 1st, the theologism of the doctrines of the Church; and 2nd, the confusion between spiritual and temporal authority.

BRENTWOOD, L. I.

HENRY EDGER.

[The above vindication of the motives of ancient and modern priesthoods is just. That the need of a priesthood still exists is not made so clear. It would be a dreary destiny, if mankind were to be permanently ruled, however indirectly, even by a "Thinker-Class." The problem of the future is, how to convert all mankind into a "Thinker-Class," and thus teach them to govern themselves by purely republican methods. The answer to this problem is strictly universal education. The great and incurable defect of "Positivism," so-called, is that it despairs of the common people, and would entrust the shaping of the common destiny to a portion only of those whose supreme interests are involved. Comte, to the day of his death, never got rid of this European distrust of the multitude; and his disciples are striving to re-plant it here on American soil. But the American idea, which is the great central idea of Free Religion, is Faith in Man; and to it the future belongs.—ED.]

[Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1873, by F. E. ANNOT, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.]

PAUL GOWER.

A RATIONALISTIC STORY

OF

ENGLISH AND AMERICAN LIFE.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

IS CONVERSATIONAL AND VALEDICTORY.

"Paul," said his father, next morning, as together they walked Broadway, their faces being turned southwards, with the intention of securing a passage to Liverpool for the speaker and Mr. Wheeler, in one of Mr. Cunard's steamers. "I don't believe much in giving advice to young men, knowing that it's about as profitable as teaching a nigger to read—but I hope you won't get married for a year or two, at least to a Yankee."

Paul, blushing conscious of his last night's amusement, disclaimed such an intention. "You don't think very highly of the American ladies, then, sir?" he added.

"Well, it's not that. I think as well of them, perhaps, as of Englishwomen, or any others. But, so far as I've been able to observe, they don't suit Britishers. They're too independent—have too much self-assertion for us; you see the habit of life is altogether different. The American girl is the frankest in the world, rather wilful, jealous of check or control, and immensely self-possessed: she calculates to hold her own with anybody, and is mighty apt to rile up at the idea of being lord-and-mastered even by a husband. She'll go for him to the hilt against all creation, if she loves him, but 'obey' is a word you can't coax out of her mouth nohow you can fix it. She hasn't been used to it, and never intends to learn: it's contrary to all her notions. She has been a walking American Constitution and Declaration of Independence on her own account ever since she could toddle. Now we Englishmen are brought up to expect deference from our wives, if not obedience—which doesn't prevent the women making a fight for it, and often getting the upper hand afterwards. Most brains, or obstinacy, settles that matter, all the world over. But selfishness pays in this life, and I think there are more hen-pecked husbands here than at home. And when an Englishman marries an American, unless he's quite morally acclimatized, the match generally turns out badly. There are a thousand little, inevitable things in which they are sure to differ; and, I tell you, it needs a deal of affection, and—what's even rarer, both in men and women—common-sense—to tide them over."

"You have known such cases?" Paul asked, seeing that his father paused to emit two spiral wreaths of tobacco-smoke from his nostrils, à la Spanish-American.

"Yes, and none of 'em were happy. On the other hand, where Americans had married English-women they generally got along first-rate. Whether that involves a compliment to our country-women or their husbands I don't pretend to determine: but you'll soon discover that the sex here enjoys a greater amount of consideration—and not unfrequently abuses it—than anywhere else in the world."

"Is it any better down South, sir?"

"Well, no," returned the doctor, rather reluctantly: "in fact it's worse. A Northern woman looks you out of your seat in the cars or theatre and takes it as a matter of course, without thanking you; but in the South you have to clear out for her companion, a man like yourself, or risk a fight. Indeed, everywhere the ladies carry matters with such an uncommonly high hand that they'd not be unlikely to provoke a reaction by overdoing their pretensions. If it weren't for the incurable sensitiveness of the men to female opinion. And then it must be admitted that they're very pretty and can be uncommonly agreeable—when they please."

Paul was too new to the United States to discover whatsoever of good or evil lay beneath these truths; so he walked beside his father in silence until the Americanized Englishman resumed:

"That's not what I was going to say, however. I wanted to caution you against the awful facility with which you'll find you can get married in this country. In England it is, or used to be, a serious business; not to be undertaken without the approval of papa and mamma, and something like the prospect of a decent living for both. Here the girls take that for granted—it's a poor sort of man, they think, who can't get along somehow. You may spark one of 'em without with your leave or by your leave from her parents—without knowing she has any—and get married as soon as you can raise five dollars to pay the clergyman. And as there's plenty of young ladies quite willing to take husbands on rather less consideration than they bestow on the choice of a new bonnet, the natural result is an inordinate crop of early marriages—and divorces."

He pulled at his grizzled beard after his habit, puffing at his cigar and continued:

"There are very few young men who, when they fall in love, think of anything but the girl's face and the manifold perfections with which their imagination endows her. Temper, taste, compatibility of disposition and all the rest, are taken for granted. They don't know how severely matrimony and the inevitable ups and downs of even the most fortunate existence will test all these, and that hardly any couple are good enough to live together on their merits, without sterling affection, forbearance, and real honesty of character. That's the cause of so much disappointment afterwards—the reason why so many love-matches turn out so indifferently. Dr. Johnson said there would be as much happiness as there is if the Lord Chancellor had the arranging of marriages, after scrutinizing the relative circumstances of the parties. If anybody doubts it, let him live a year in the United States—where, if anywhere, people consult their own inclinations—and then reckon up the number of divorced folks he has been acquainted with. And the chances are that he won't know half of them, either, for naturally the men are shy of talking about it, while a vast proportion of the women sink antecedents and start afresh as Misses. What I want to caution you against, then, is one of those early, impulsive matches which kill a young fellow's prospects for life, and wed him to even worse than poverty—though that's bad enough, God knows."

"I don't think I shall be likely to fall into danger," said Paul, rather fancying his father loved talking for its own sake, or attached superfluous importance to Miss Livingston; whom he was not much disposed to sentimentalize about, next morning.

"Well, Miss Lizzie, there, up to Beach Street, is a pretty girl in her way and a tremendous flirt, as I understand from Wheeler. And, though she's engaged, you might easily get entangled with her—especially if you go to board there, as I hear you were talking of."

Paul colored again at the implication, and was stammering out an expression of his readiness to seek lodgings elsewhere, when Dr. Gower interrupted him, laughing and saying good-naturedly:

"Oh! go by all means, if you think you can keep out of mischief—you'll want a boarding-house, and Wheeler gives a pretty fair account of the people. Only 'ware petticoats. And, after all, I reckon living in the same house with Miss Lizzie would rather than confirm anybody of a liking for her. It might prove a pretty severe test in most cases."

A silence ensued of some minutes, which was broken by Paul's inquiring what his father knew of the Livingston family.

"Well, very little. The mother is one of those divorced wives we were talking of: got married at fifteen to a man who, of course, behaved badly to her—turned out a bad egg generally. He had some money, I believe, which she helped to knock down, and then quit and got her living by millinery and keeping a boarding-house. The daughter went to school, lived some time with an uncle, and then came back to her mother, with whom she appears to exist in a state of chronic shindy. Mrs. L. says she has been set against her by her father's relatives—that she wants more money and dresses than she can afford to give her—is, in her mamma's phrase, 'ambitious.' The girl talks about going on the stage; and has, in the meantime, engaged herself to a clerk in a downtown store—rather a gentlemanly young fellow, Wheeler says—and will probably jilt him, as she has others. That's all I know about either mother or daughter. And here we are at the Bowling Green—there was a fountain here, once, I believe, though I never saw it—will you stroll on to the Battery till I join you, or come in?"

Paul preferred strolling on the Battery and amusing himself with the prospect, until his father had "got through," as he termed it; when they crossed the river to Jersey City, to look at the steamer in which he had engaged passage. And as nothing of interest to this narrative transpired during the remainder of the conversation, we will pursue it no further.

As the day of departure drew near—there were only four between it and the date of securing passage—Paul felt an increasing liking and regard for the father whom he was so soon to lose, after such a brief acquaintance. His shrewdness and knowledge of the world, his good-nature and general free-handedness, and his perfect abstinence from all pretence of authority, even when most interested in his son, could not but charm a young fellow quite unaccustomed to being treated with much consideration, and generously responsive to all forms of kindness. His parent's misfortunes, too; the persistent ill-luck which really seemed to have followed him through life, claimed sympathy. They had not harmed him socially, rendering him splenetic, or miserable, or ill-conditioned, or it would certainly have appeared; but their influence upon his character was none the less distinct, and is worthy of special explanation.

The latent bitterness with which he always spoke of riches or poverty, and assumed those to be the sole tests of merit acknowledged by mankind, at once betrayed his dissatisfaction with, but recognition of, that standard. He thought himself hardly-used and under-estimated, from his want of success in life, and secretly attached a fictitious value to it, proportionate to his many disappointments. He desired to be wealthy, and in a hurry—to obtain not merely a moderate but a great fortune. Like most Americans, to whom he had become morally assimilated, he believed in short cuts to riches—in making money by enterprise, by speculation, chance, or luck—by any means, in short, rather than hard work or economy; and to such a man the opportunity of sharing his friend's prospects in Russia offered an irresistible temptation. As for the sum bequeathed him by his father, being prospective, it seemed hardly real to him; accustomed to vicissitudes, he scarcely recognized to-morrow, except as influenced by his own immediate actions: after his first temporary disappointment he would probably have mortgaged his inheritance, but for the sake of his children and regard to his mother's feelings. For John Gower loved both, and perhaps cheated himself with the belief that his son and daughter were the principal incentives to his lust for riches.

It need scarcely be remarked that in spite of his talk of chronic mischance, he was very sanguine about his new venture, as an unlucky gambler is always confident that the next throw of the dice, or turn of the cards, will make amends for past disasters and send him away triumphant. Why, then, it may be asked, should he have advised Paul to remain in America and urged good reasons in support of that opinion? He has himself involuntarily admitted the cause in his Æsopian apologue, recommending his son to avoid the cardinal error on which his own fortunes had been so often wrecked. It was this feeling, and possibly an instinctive, latent distrust of another miscarriage on his own account, that dictated the apparent inconsistency. He is not the first person in the world who has been capable of giving excellent advice, but not of acting upon it.

His cautioning Paul against an early marriage was suggested by similar considerations: returning to the United States a rich man, he would have been very sorry to find his son's future compromised by a misalliance, which his evident irresponsibility rendered not unlikely. Besides, Mr. Wheeler had not only told his friend what he knew of the Livingston family, but also what he had observed of the Sabins in England, involving a shrewd guess at the nature of Paul's connection with them, of which, as far as he could judge, the doctor disapproved. This, too, may have occurred to him as a minor reason for keeping the young fellow in America; and even for recommending him—with a proviso—to take up his residence in the Beach Street boarding-house. Miss Livingston, he perhaps thought, might serve as a counter-attraction to Kate Sabin, without herself becoming very dangerous, in consequence of her defects of disposition. Distrust of himself and others had taught Paul's father a spice of cunning—the reader may remember Mr. Wheeler's attempt to see the young man, and the money transmitted to him, independent of his grandparents, in London. Finally John Gower's own experience spoke through his counsel; though his affection for his dead wife and her goodness forbade the personal illustration. His admonitions were Janus-faced, looking backwards and forwards.

But if he thought much of money in one sense, he made light enough of it in another; he was generous and even prodigal and careless; always reckoning on the great, lucky bit of the future, which rendered present economy contemptible. Paul was astonished at the lavish way in which he scattered his dollars in New York: besides his natural tendency in this direction, it seemed as if he supposed free-handedness essential to his recent antecedents. He was, indeed, thoroughly Southernized, especially as concerned the "peculiar institution," seldom missing an opportunity of championing it and denouncing abolitionism. Paul heard him with regret but not much surprise: it was clear that he had lived long enough in the Slave States to have adopted their current ethics. These, by the way, were also shared by Mr. Wheeler, a New Yorker, whose business avocations had often lain in the same region. Of him John Gower evidently stood in great respect, regarding him as a shrewd, sharp, energetic man, who possessed the very qualities in which he felt himself to be deficient. Paul and Dick sometimes wondered how two such very different persons should be friends; but the acquisitive faculty is a common bond of union between the most unlike characters.

Some advice given to the young man by his father about getting on in the world was quite in keeping with the traits already imparted to the reader. "As to your general conduct," he said, "I don't think I can do better than refer you to Shakespeare—Polonius' counsel to Laertes is just as good as it was three hundred years ago. I would like, however, to expand his first precept into an especial caution against disparaging anybody—I mean among your personal acquaintances—as nearly everything of the kind is pretty sure to be repeated, and there's nobody so insignificant that he mayn't have an opportunity of doing you an injury. Many a man has knocked himself over with his own tongue, and been marred irretrievably by some chance grudge incurred in a quarrel he never suspected. Again, never let on, if you can help it, that you are hard up, or in want of assistance. It's a trite but true saying that there's nothing so successful as success; and the world involuntarily confounds poverty with want of ability. It doesn't care or hasn't time to discriminate. Pity may be akin to love, but it is, I think, more nearly related to contempt—at all events I know which is most liberally bestowed on failure in life. Even with friends, after the first spirit of sympathy (which doesn't cost much, you know), you'll find out you have lost ground—the confession of your necessity has put you in a false position. They instinctively begin to regard you as a poor devil who may want something of them when it may be inconvenient to grant it: whereas they'll never be so alive to your merits, so eager to help you, as when they suppose you can do without 'em. It's human nature, sir, all the world over. I don't mean to say that Americans are peculiarly liable to this reproach (I have found them, individually, kinder than Englishmen); but they believe in success above all things, think that every tub ought to stand on its own bottom, and despise a man who can't keep a stiff upper lip in the face of fortune. Very likely they're right, too. So whatever happens to you, grin and bear it. Live it down! To bear is to conquer our fate!"

He inquired minutely about Ruth, and evidently looked forward to seeing her—I might say making her acquaintance—in passing through England, with equal interest and curiosity, and also an odd apprehension that she might be a little ashamed of him. Of Mr. Blencowe he did not speak very respectfully, notwithstanding his epistolary courtesy: that ancient grievance, the alienation of the fortune of his dead-and-gone wife's mother, could not fail to have biased a needy man against the old vicar. Nor was he pleased when Paul told him of Mr. George Bligh, and the circumstances which seemed to have conspired to render it more than probable that the young clergyman would, in course of time, become his son-in-law. Besides his deductions as to his conduct and character, it appeared that John Gower entertained some prejudices against the cloth, which were peculiar enough to deserve insertion.

"I don't like parsons," he said, "or, at least, such as I have met with in America; for I knew very little of them in England, excepting the irregulars—fellows of the Huntingdon stripe, who had taken up the business with as few qualifications as quacks in other trades, and more self-seeking and impudence. That ruffian had overmuch to do with our family; which, perhaps, might have developed a little more natural affection and common-sense, if he had never quit the congenial employment of coal-heaving for piling up heavier and more inflammable matter on the heads of those who had the presumption to differ from him in opinion. But, so far as I see, that's a reproach to which all persons are liable—they don't understand that anybody has a right to go beyond their tether. They can't sink their confounded pretensions. Having committed themselves to a profession which involves the modest assumption that they are cock-sure about everything—or at least matters of the very highest importance—and, so to speak, pledged themselves to search no further—dumped their souls in absolute finality—they are the natural enemies of all progress, and inevitably operate as a drag-chain or wet blanket on all live people. Every man Jack of 'em is a little pope, sitting in judgment on his fellow-creatures and taking it for granted that he is qualified to do so—a Gesler who hoists his white choker or some other spiritual insignia and expects you to bow to it. Now, that I don't see, and object either to be constrained into the tacit hypocrisy of acquiescence or the ill-manners of dispute. And this feeling is, I believe, so general, that whenever a clergyman enters a room all sincerity goes out of it, and real conversation becomes impossible. You know you can't expect either fair play or fair construction from them, unless you are on the same theological platform; and that the big world men live in ignores half their teaching and has a far larger and more liberal way of thinking. We take off our hats to them but button up our coats—talk about the weather and the president. They get on better with the women, of course; who identify them with religion and evidently regard them as a kind of third sex, between themselves and men. By and by they'll find 'em out, too, when they'll occupy a very different position—if they're extant at all, which I sometimes doubt. I suppose it's unavoidable, but I wish Ruth wasn't going to marry a parson."

From the above remarks, and others of a similar tendency, Paul discovered that his father had by no means relinquished his early heterodox opinions, a circumstance which commanded the young man's eager sympathy. It will, then, be seen that there was much to promote the growth of a real affection between them, in the short interval allowed by the exigencies of the Russian enterprise. They were almost exclusively together during those four days, Dick Sabin and Mr. Wheeler judiciously leaving them to each other's company. Hundreds of times afterwards Paul delighted to recall the particulars of that too-brief intimacy—the talks they had, the places they visited, his father's tall figure, worn face, and quick, familiar speech—so like, yet so different, to that of his late grandfather. The day came, indeed, when it was more than sadness to do so; and to look at the photograph which he obtained in exchange for his own. It was surprising how soon John Gower seemed to take his natural place in his son's regards; how his peculiarities vanished, or appeared to assume a merely superficial character. After two days' acquaintance, Paul felt as if he had known him all his life.

Richard Sabin, too, (whom the doctor pronounced a fine fellow) formed an equally favorable opinion of his friend's father. "Seems a model buffer," said he, which was his disrespectful term for fathers in general. "He can smoke, laugh, crack a joke, tell a story, take a drink, and behave as naturally and rationally in the society of his own son as if the relationship involved no sort of discomfort or absurdity on either side. And I find it's not uncommon here. I begin to believe in America."

When the appointed Saturday arrived, quite a group of friends assembled to witness the departure of the steamer, comprising two or three former New York acquaintances of the doctor, who had turned up during his brief sojourn, thrice as many of Mr. Wheeler's, and of course Paul Gower and Dick Sabin, all of whom went on board the vessel, inspected the cabin which was to be the home of the two passengers for the next nine or ten days, smoked cigars, chatted, and took a parting glass at the bar of the Atlantic Hotel, Jersey City. There were the usual jokes and laughter, the predictions of a fine voyage, the desire to be very hearty and cordial and to pretend that the occasion was one of every-day occurrence, involving no deeper feeling than the expression of general good wishes. There was the inevitable stir and bustle on the crowded wharf and deck, the throng of people at the near side of the ship gazing at the throng below, the shouting of officers and tramp of men, the puffing and panting of the apparently impatient engine, the measured chant and chorus of the sailors tugging at the capstan, the ringing of bells, and, over all the animated scene, the bright sunshine and blue sky, looking as glad as if they had never witnessed separation or sorrow. A final summons of "All ashore!" a hurried hand-shaking and brief words of farewell, a hasty scramble down the bridge of communication between the wharf and steamer, almost at the moment of removal, and punctual to the stroke of noon, the great wheels revolve and the vessel plashes out into the broad, bright river, moving majestically towards the Narrows.

A sudden explosion—the firing of a cannon from the wharf, in honor of the occasion—aroused Paul from his natural emotion. "I wonder when I shall see him again!" he said. And another cannon echoing from down the bay returned ominous and prophetic answer—or at least Paul thought so, long afterwards.

"THE great division among Christians is about opinions. Every sect has its set of them, and that is called Orthodoxy; and he that professes his assent to them, though with an implicit faith, is Orthodox and in the way to salvation. But if he examines, and thereupon questions any one of them, he is presently suspected of heresy; and if he oppose them or hold the contrary, he is presently condemned as in damnable error, and in the sure way to perdition. Of this one may say, there is nor can be nothing more wrong. For he that examines, and upon fair examination embraces an error for a truth, has done his duty more than he who embraces the profession of the truth without having examined whether it is truth or not. And he that has done his duty according to the best of his ability, is certainly more in the way to heaven than he who has done nothing of it. For if it be our duty to search after truth, he certainly that has searched for it, though he has not found it, in some points has paid a more acceptable obedience to the will of his Maker than he that has not searched at all, but professes to have found truth when he has neither searched for it nor found it. For he that takes up the opinions of any church in lump without examining them, has truly neither searched after nor found truth, but has only found those that he thinks have found truth, and so receives what they say with an implicit faith, and so pays them the homage which is due only to God, who can not be deceived nor deceive. In this way the several Churches (in which, as one may observe, opinions are preferred to life, and Orthodoxy is that which they are concerned for and not morals) put the terms of salvation on that which the author of our salvation does not put them on. The believing of a collection of certain propositions which are called and esteemed fundamental articles, because it has pleased the compilers to put them in their confession of faith, is made the condition of salvation."—John Locke.

THE Erie Observer is responsible for this:—
In the early days of Pithole, the pious oil men thought it necessary to have a Sabbath School. One of the leading young men was chosen for Superintendent. The position was new to him, but he determined not to shrink from the responsibility. Thinking that it would be proper for him to make a little opening speech, he cleared his throat and started in as follows:—

"Children, you are very fortunate in being born in a Christian land. There are thousands in the world not so fortunate. It is peculiarly gratifying to know that you live in that portion of the earth where the rock pours forth rivers of oil. Now, my dear children, there's the Morinons, they worship old Morn; there's the Mahomedans, they worship Mahom; the Heaths, they worship old Heath; there's the Hindoos, they worship old Hind; and there's the Pagans, they worship old Pag; while here we are worshipping whom we please. Teachers will now hear their classes recite."

Two Sophs on Sunday evening, at Centre Church, heard a young light of the Divinity School in the space of seven minutes, as a means of practical illustration, allude to the bee, the beaver, the cat from the garret, the oriole, the mechanic, the doctor, the seaman, the wounded stag, and the sewing machine. Such a practical sermon had a practical effect. They left.—Yale Record.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING SEPTEMBER 6.

George Rumsden, $2; A. H. Jewett, $1; Mrs. John H. Sweet, 50 cts.; Mrs. Mary Fenner, $2; L. C. Jarvis, 40 cts.; George Lewis, 20 cts.; Harriet A. Richardson, 25 cts.; Scott Silvers, $1; Anna Forster, $2; James Mason, $1.50; J. M. Hall, $5; O. H. Roberts, 75 cts.; Fanny Brewer, $5; Sara L. Dorry, 50 cts.; E. P. Brainard, $2.50; C. Powers, 50 cts.; George Thorn, $0; R. Wilkin, $3; George Waldo, $1; Larkin Taft, $2; William Shank, $1; H. O. Bigelow, $2; D. W. Bliven, $3; T. H. Callahan, $2; F. J. Constantine, $1; S. K. Hazeltine, $1.50; William H. Allen, $3; Samuel H. Wisner, $1; George Knox, $2.25; P. Brandewide, $1; H. E. Green, 25 cts.; B. C. Dennis, 25 cts.; S. L. Holly, 50 cts.; Thomas Green, 25 cts.; D. H. Critchfield, $10; C. Folsom, $10; Mavor & Bissell, $27; F. Sullivan, $5.50; O. L. Roberts, $1.25; A. W. Leggett, $20; John Pennington, $1; Dr. D. Wilson, $1; William Dudgeon, $3.50; Gerrit Smith, $50; W. Hooper, $50; Benj. Rollman, $100; Morris Einslein, $5; M. Krauskopf, $5; Cash, $100; N. P. Hollowell, $100; Chas. Richardson, $25.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

The Index.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY

BY

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,
AT

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Toledo Office: No. 35 MONROE STREET. Julius T. Frey,
Agent and Clerk.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, THOMAS WESTWORTH
HIGGINSON, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD F. HALLOWELL,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES
VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England),
REV. MONCURE D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.

BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 11, 1873.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS TO INDEX STOCK.

Mrs. F. W. Christern,	New York City,	One share, $100
Richard B. Westbrook,	Somman, Pa.	" " 100
R. C. Spencer,	Milwaukee, Wis.	Two " 200
R. W. Howe,	Boston, Mass.	One " 100
Chas. W. Story,	Boston, Mass.	" " 100
E. W. Meddaugh,	Detroit, Mich.	Five " 500
Jacob Hoffman,	Cumminsville, O.	One " 100
John Weiss,	Boston, Mass.	" " 100
W. C. Russell,	Ithaca, N. Y.	" " 100
A. W. Leggett,	Detroit, Mich.	" " 100

NOTICE.

On and after September 1, the publication office of THE INDEX will be at No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. All letters, papers, and other communications should be henceforth addressed to "THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass."

Correspondents and Exchanges will please take notice.

F. R. A. CONVENTION.

The Free Religious Association is making arrangements to hold a convention in New York city during a portion of the time that the Evangelical Alliance is to be in session there. There is promise of an interesting gathering with vital topics for discussion and a great variety of speaking talent. The convention will probably be held on the 8th, 9th and 10th of October. Fuller particulars will be published hereafter, but this preliminary notice is given in order that distant friends may be able to make their plans to be present.

W. J. POTTER, Sec'y F. R. A.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Report, in pamphlet form, of the Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association for 1873 will be published Sept. 1st.

It contains full proceedings of the meeting, including Essays by Samuel Johnson on "FREEDOM IN RELIGION" and by John Weiss on "RELIGION IN FREEDOM," Speeches by O. B. Frothingham, W. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, S. Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. ABBOT, Lucretia Mott, and the annual Report of the Executive Committee.

Price, 35 cts. a copy; in packages of four, or more, 25 cts. each. It can be obtained by addressing the undersigned at New Bedford, Mass., or, in Boston, of A. Williams & Co., and at Loring's.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec'y F. R. A.

PERSONS SENDING orders for tracts, back numbers, &c., will please excuse delays for the present in filling them. As soon as the new INDEX rooms are fully in order and the freight is received from Toledo, their requests shall be attended to. A careful record of all orders will be kept meanwhile.

GLIMPSES.

THERE IS NO public evil at present more threatening than the interference of United States officials in State politics. It is time to teach a lesson on this point that shall be long remembered.

THE MANNER in which prophets are esteemed in their own country is ludicrously illustrated by the reply which the Orthodox cockney (according to a private informant) gave to an American gentleman who inquired his opinion of Professor Huxley. "Huxley?" echoed the great-souled Briton, "Huxley! 'e's 'orrid!"

NOTHING IS MORE important to national welfare than the selection of both upright and able men to represent upright measures. The gubernatorial contest in Massachusetts presents an unfortunate alternative; one candidate is eminently unfit, while the other is only excellent by comparison. Why cannot nominating conventions put up men for whom it is not an absurdity to be enthusiastic?

ONE OF THE MOST brilliant political articles we ever read is "Cheap-Jack Methods in Politics," contained in the Boston Advertiser of Sept. 6. The "Claimant," as Gen. Butler was so felicitously nicknamed by Judge Hoar in allusion to the notorious Tichborne pretender, would feel like a man vigorously rubbed with nettles from head to foot, if Nature had not kindly made him a pachyderm. It is seldom that satire so cutting is put to uses so legitimate.

LORD DENBIGH declared that he was "a Catholic first and an Englishman afterwards." Archbishop Manning defended this declaration by urging that "all good Protestants would say that they were Christians first and Englishmen afterwards." How is it here? Do American Protestants put their Christianity or their Americanism first? If obliged to choose between them, which would they abandon? Put the question to your Orthodox neighbors, and from their answers calculate the chances of a religious war when the choice is forced upon the nation by the logic of events.

EARL RUSSELL has just published Essays on the History of the Christian Religion, in which he thus sums up the essentials of Christianity: "The religion of Christ has three main foundations. 1. God is a spirit, the maker of heaven and earth. 2. Christ was sent from God, and revealed to men the message from God. 3. Christ died for mankind. The miracles of Christ were performed by him and ended with his life. The gift of miracles was continued to his apostles, as we are informed in the Acts of the Apostles." The noble Earl shows his penetration in discerning that, for every single doctrine about God, Christianity has two doctrines about Jesus.

PROFESSOR L. J. HALSEY wrote as follows not long since in the Chicago Interior, after uttering a dismal jeremiad over the threatening spread of the "heathenism" taught by such men as "Huxley, Darwin, Herbert Spencer, Mill, Renan, Strauss, Comte": "When we thus, as ministers of God, point out the danger and try to save men from ruin, let not the public press seek to break down our influence by reading us beautiful homilies on toleration. Why should truth be tolerant of error, when error is so intolerant of truth?" The press is frightfully unreasonable, if not positively wicked, in discouraging the Reverend Professor from burning up the rascals who are poisoning the world with their unbelief. By all means make a bonfire of Huxley, grill Darwin, and roast Spencer. What matters the brief shrieking of Renan and Strauss in the midst of green fagots, compared with the eternal howls of their victims in the fire that is not quenched? As for Mill and Comte, it is a pity they are out of the Professor's reach; but he can scorch their memories, if he cannot singe their souls. Stand aside, ye unregenerate editors, and let the Professor play awhile with lucifer matches.

MR. BYRD, OF ALABAMA, at the May session of the United States Centennial Commission, offered a resolution for the opening of an "International Congress" on the first Monday in June, 1876, in the city of Philadelphia, in connection with the International Exhibition then to be held. It is to be composed of two members of each nation represented at the time, previously appointed by the respective governments; it is to be organized by itself, under rules adopted by itself; and it is to have authority to consider all questions of international and maritime law, and to award all premiums for treatises on such subjects. The resolution was referred to a special committee of the Commission. This is the first definite movement that has come under our notice, looking to the realization of the great idea of a world-republic. Whether anything will come of it remains to be seen. But who can help rejoicing over every straw which seems to indicate a current setting in that direction? We of this generation may never see the consummation of so vast and glorious a hope as that of the political unity of all mankind; yet of nothing may it be more surely said that the future has it in store. The law of evolution is guarantee for that prediction.

THE USE AND ABUSE OF FAITH.

Some articles which will be found this week in the department of "communications" have suggested thoughts on the subject of "faith" which we wish to submit to our readers.

What is "faith"? Perhaps no word has been more used and abused than this. It may not be time wasted to analyze the conception for which it stands.

In its essence, faith is a certain state of the feelings and the will; it is neither feeling alone nor will alone, but a mixture of the two in varying proportions. In all its uses, the word seems to involve both these elements; and it would be perhaps impossible to separate them very clearly even in thought. But thought itself is distinct from faith, preceding it and directing it. All ideas (generalizations) have their origin in the perceptive and reflective faculties, that is, in the intellect; and it is sheer mental confusion that traces any distinct idea to mere faith as its origin. Feeling and will do not spring out of the intellect as such, but they invariably adapt themselves to it and take direction from it. The intellect may be feeble or strong in any given individual; but in every case it is certain that intellect governs faith, and not faith intellect. This relation between them it is very important not to lose sight of in this discussion; and the occurrence of an exception to it would simply be a case of idiocy.

Now there are two kinds of faith, the one secular, the other ecclesiastical or theological. Faith, being a particular state of the feelings and the will which is variously described as confidence, reliance, trust, and so forth, there is a natural and also a purely technical use of the word. In its natural or secular sense, faith is one of the commonest facts of life. We could not get along without it for a day. We have faith in ourselves, in each other, in the continuance of the general laws of Nature under which we live. A man, for instance, satisfies his own mind that by buying certain merchandise he can sell at a profit, and he accordingly invests his money in it; that is faith, or, in other words, he feels willing to take the risk and acts accordingly. He trusts his own calculations, the laws of trade, the general stability of things; and without this faith or trust he would forbear to purchase. Another man has satisfied his own intellect that Goldsmith Maid is the best horse at a certain race; he shows his faith (we admit he is in this case a great fool) by betting his money on her success. Still another man has convinced his own mind that a certain village is destined to grow into a large city, and perhaps the whole community believe it too; the result is that real estate rises, people buy and hold for a further rise, the village grows, and the prosperity of the place rests wholly on the general faith in its manifest destiny. Shake that faith, and the town is deserted. In a thousand other ways faith in the natural sense is so common and indispensable, that society would go all to pieces if there were not plenty of it. This is secular faith, and no man ever lived or could live without it. Thought precedes, and faith follows.

But theological or ecclesiastical faith is a very different sort of thing. The word no longer means confidence, reliance, or trust in general, but confidence, reliance, trust, in a particular object called the Church, the Bible, Christ, or God. The people are told to believe in these without evidence, without the exercise of thought, without the least rational or intellectual basis of their belief; they are told that to believe simply for the sake of believing is Christian faith, and that to disbelieve is sin. To the Catholic, the Church is the Church of God, whose authority is not questioned except by the wicked alone. To the Protestant Evangelical, the Bible is the Word of God, not doubted by any except those who have "an evil heart of unbelief." Even to the average Protestant of the so-called "Liberal" school, the Christ is the authoritative messenger from God, not to be subjected to the tests of scepticism but rather to be accepted as the Savior without suspicion or interrogation by the pure in heart. In all these cases, faith is a state of the feelings and the will, as before; but it is directed to particular objects which are assumed to be worthy of it without any prior satisfaction of the intellect. Faith in these is a virtue per se; it is to be its own sufficient reason; it is to burst forth from the soul as the water is fabled to have bubbled out of the rock when smitten by Moses' rod; it is to shape, mould, direct, govern all the thoughts of the intellect, instead of adapting itself to the latter; it is, in short, the very reversal and contradiction of faith in the natural or secular sense of the word. Secular faith proportions itself to the strength of the evidence addressed to the intellect; ecclesiastical faith counts the demand for evidence as a proof of the most deadly unfaith, a mortal sin. The one bids feeling and will in all cases follow the guidance of reason; the other banishes reason as a traitor, unless it submits to follow the blind guidance of its own servants.

Such, at least, is the attempt made by Christianity (in all but its sporadic and bizarre forms) to make faith itself "the evidence of things not seen," as Paul very aptly defines it. Ecclesiastical faith is its own evidence, in all its various phases; and it invariably resents the demand for other evidence with more or less of asperity. Yet it stultifies itself in every instance. Take, for example, the "faith in Christ" which is the believer's only ground of hope for salvation. No man can cherish this faith without first believing that "Jesus is the Christ, the Savior, the Redeemer of souls." Now this is a definite proposition, with subject and predicate; it is therefore an affirmation by the thinking faculty, as distinguished from feeling or will. If the believer really thinks he shows ecclesiastical faith, he must disclaim all reason for believing this proposition to be true except the bare—"I believe it because I believe it." But this is no reason at all; it is the evasion of all reason; it is an utterly impossible reason, the veriest self-delusion. Who cannot see that belief of such an intellectual proposition is traceable directly to education, or tradition, or habit, or impulse; and that these really take the place in the believer's mind of what intellect would require as a sufficient reason for belief? The man of faith ecclesiastical rests really on thought just as much as the man of faith secular; the difference is that the one knows what he is about, while the other does not.

Now the case is not changed substantially when we pass beyond the limits of Christianity, and approach the question of the being of God, in the light of naturalism. Mr. Towne, if we understand him correctly (and experience warns us to be diffident on that point, despite our best endeavors), thinks that belief in God rests on the faith principle in man; that is, that faith in God is its own evidence, and permits no scientific thought to call it into doubt. If by faith he means intuition, in the sense of Theodore Parker, he regards it as a faculty which, as it were, apprises us of God's existence by direct vision or perception of the Infinite Wisdom, Goodness, and Power. We see no evidence of any such faculty. But in any case he seems to rest his acceptance of an intellectual proposition—"God exists"—on mere feeling and will; which is the suicide of rationalism, at least. Faith, belief, assent,—these all depend on thought, and thought demands a reason; to offer no reason, but to put up with a simple sentiment or volition where a reason alone is in order, is certainly what no thinker can possibly do, at least on mature reflection. Therefore we say with all earnestness that faith in God is doomed to extinction, if it cannot find its own ground and support in the intellect, in reason; and that to present to a questioning world no better evidence than the blind faith which the world has already lost, is to ensure a future of the most rigid atheism to the human race.

No, brothers, no! There is nothing but wisdom in meeting modern thought frankly and fully with the concession that "faith" is no longer "the evidence of things not seen." If you yearn to keep men's faith in God fresh and green, feed it with better nutriment than the half-dried sap of a decaying Christianity. Appeal to thought, and then carry your appeal boldly through. Thought has but one law—the law of scientific method; and if by this law we cannot win, depend upon it, we shall lose. Faith will follow thought, and clothe the new assurance with all the strength and beauty of the old, if we are indeed on the right side in this great debate; but the faith that insists on going before thought, and intrudes its cowed visage where the healthy face of reason alone belongs, will be hustled out of doors by the indignant future, and its fate will be just.

THE ENEMY AGAIN.

The Prospectus is out for a new Review—the International. It is ambitious. It means "to secure the very best writers in the world," who shall "treat of all the great questions of our age and country, literary, scientific, social, and religious;" but who shall "never assail the divine authority of the Scriptures, or the supremacy of our Constitution over a united Republic." The clause italicized contains the animus of the project. No writer can be permitted to deal with religion according to the scientific method. Of course, none will be asked to contribute who would wish to deal with religion in that spirit. None but "Orthodox" men will be asked to write. No scientific man, in the comprehensive sense, will be asked to write; only quasi-scientific men, who start with a belief in the divine authority of the Scriptures. The publisher is therefore, as we should expect, an "Evangelical" man, head of an "Evangelical" house. The names that recommend the project, or did at its first proposal, are "Orthodox." The late Chief-Justice Chase, an ardent Episcopalian, the late Bishop McIlvaine, Dr. McCosh, of Princeton, Dr. Tyng, Dr. E. Irenæus Prime, Dr. Phillip Schaff, Dr. Ray Palmer, and others,—the names becoming more and more closely associated with belief in the divine authority of the Scriptures, as the list extends. Not a liberal, or half liberal, among them!

Now look at the list of contributors. President Woolsey, McCosh, Dr. Bushnell, T. W. Dwight, President Porter, Dr. Peabody (Andrew P., probably, who under the Unitarian designation outdoes moderate and most immoderate Orthodox men in his faith in the divine authority of the Scriptures), Gen: O. O. Howard (!), Professor Edwards, A. Park, of Andover, Mark Hopkins, Dr. Howard Crosby (the man who wrote the superlatively ignorant and foolish preface to Lefschild's Higher Ministry of Nature). Mr. C. F. Adams' name is in the list, the only name of an eminent civilian, a Unitarian, engaged to write articles, of course, on secular subjects alone, and so wholly unassociated with Theology that his name could not awaken alarm, while his sectarian connection will give an air of liberality to the project.

The list of foreign writers is no less suggestive. Père Hyacinthe, Pressensé, Laboulaye, preach liberalism, but all strictly within "Evangelical lines." Froude is reputed a Calvinist because he delivered a lecture vindicating Calvinism as he understood it, and because he detests the Roman Church very much as Calvinists do. Tom Hughes is a Broad Churchman; so is Stanley: Broad Churchmen, but churchmen still, who have a way peculiar to themselves of vindicating the divine authority of the Scriptures. Spencer's name we do not find, nor Huxley's, nor Darwin's, nor Tyndall's, nor a single disciple of the school of Mill. This list contains more laymen than the home list, which is composed almost wholly of ministers, and old ones at that; but the laymen have not distinguished themselves beyond many others, either as men of science or men of letters; and some of them, at least, have a reputation that is considerably less than international. Clearly the projectors of the new Review mean to keep the direction of it in clerical hands. The science, literature, sociology of the Quarterly are, equally with the religion, to be under the supervision and revision of clerical men.

On the whole it is as narrow and partisan a scheme as was ever presented to the public. It is another indication of the aggressiveness of Protestantism, of which so many signs appear. It is to be a Catholic World with Protestant ideas; and the Protestant ideas will be presented with even less guardedness than the Catholic ideas are by its unscrupulous contemporary.

What are the Radicals doing to meet such assaults as these? They, at all events, are not committing themselves to a great literary enterprise that will cost a hundred thousand dollars, and fall through lack of popular support. The day of heavy "Quarterlies" is gone by. The North American, which comes and always came nearer to the professed ideal of the new Journal than it will ever come, barely receives a support, and that it owes quite as much to its ancient reputation as to its actual merits, great as they are. Monthlies that are devoted to serious discussion of great questions do not succeed. Old and New, with the Unitarian denomination to back it, throws overboard such grave discussion as it had, in order to float to fortune. The Christian Examiner, an admirable Review, all things considered, could not live because it could not be fresh enough for the people, and because the articles were cast in too massive a mould. The new International will live, if it live at all, by denominational patronage, as the Catholic World does. It will do little execution among the people at large, who read as they run, and need short, swift, pithy papers. The Radicals will do more damage on the enemy with a sharp weekly than they will suffer from a cumbriad however superbly mounted. What we want is the lecture, the tract, the snapping fusillade of active, loose-footed thought. A propaganda for the distribution of radical essays, sermons, &c., would be of immense service now. There are numbers of Parker's unpublished sermons that would have great effect in the West and South. No better use could be made of many things that he left, and that will never perhaps see the light except in some such way, as the one here suggested. Such a plan was once proposed to Mr. Parker by our friend Mr. Higginson, and welcomed heartily.

Can the Radicals do a better thing now, in addition to giving a stronger support to THE INDEX, than form a Publication Society for the rapid discharge of small arms?

O. B. F.

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but hereafter no space will be spared to Errata.

N. B.—Articles for this department should be SHORT, and written only on one side of the sheet.

N. B.—Flegibly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.

N. B.—No responsibility will be assumed for unused manuscripts.

FAITH THE GROUND OF THEISM.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—I have been deeply interested in the discussion between yourself and Mr. Towne relative to faith and ideas. The question mooted is the most important and profound of all. Is faith fundamentally wrong?

I confess that, so far, I sympathize with Mr. Towne's position. I am not ready to give up faith,—to hedge in human thought and destiny by science. Much as I like Spencer, Mill, Huxley, and Tyndall, they do not feed my whole nature. I must have the Shakespeares and Dantes, the Luthers and Channings, whose thoughts go beyond the "flaming bounds of space and time."

I do not think you make a right statement of these different mental attitudes. The opposition is not between faith and ideas, for faith is as much concerned with ideas as science. The opposition is between ideas capable of proof and ideas incapable of proof. Science confines itself to the thinkable, the finite; faith involves the unthinkable, the infinite. Hamilton's logic, to my mind, is unanswerable; to human thought the infinite is a negation. Only to faith is it a positive existence. I read most carefully your philosophical essays, and it does strike me that you were compelled to resort to faith in order to leap from the finite to the infinite. By no other means could you clear the awful chasm. If, then, our belief in the mere existence of God results from faith, much more does our belief in his character. In the eye of science his fatherhood is merely a possibility; only in the eye of faith is it a certainty.

Human life and destiny would seem very narrow, cribbed, confined, if I could not go beyond the dictates of the pure intellect,—if I could not feel after the truth as well as think after it,—if I could not go beyond all phenomena, both material and spiritual,

"The sweet, strange mystery
Of what behind these things might lie,
And yet remain unseen."

But let us seek to understand fully one another's mental positions, and fairly interpret them. This, I take it, is the aim of THE INDEX,—to bring all human thought and endeavor into harmony, that we may compare and contrast different views of the universe in the light of profoundest sympathy.

Truly yours, S. P. PUTNAM.

[Such communications as the above are peculiarly welcome to these pages, and we most cordially appreciate the transparently truth-loving spirit in which Mr. Putnam writes. Nothing but good can result from discussion so conducted.

We do not in the least desire to defend what we wrote a dozen years ago about Hamilton's philosophy, or even to look up what it was. Likely enough Mr. Putnam's criticism is correct. But we would gladly see a keen and critical, yet just and appreciative, canvassing of the grounds on which we rest our present belief in God, as set forth (inadequately, we confess) in the Index Tract entitled The God of Science. The line of thought there indicated has not yet had justice done it; and we hope it is not immodest to refer Mr. Putnam to that lecture, which, even if unsuccessful, was a very earnest attempt to show the influence of modern science on the idea of God, in a manner that should justify the attention of close and exact thinkers. There are two classes of minds that do not easily sympathize with the position of "scientific theism"—those who believe that science is atheistic because atheism is true, and those who believe science is non-theistic because faith alone can show theism to be true. To us it seems daily more and more clear that theism must henceforth vindicate itself on the most rigorously scientific grounds, if at all; and for this reason we have for several years sought to apply the method of science to this supreme question. If Mr. Putnam's and Mr. Towne's "faith" is based on essential truth, must not all truth be one, and must not science (which is simply discovered truth) crown its own work by tracing out this unity? Thought has to-day no task so momentous and profound as to convince theologians and scientific men that they are defrauding both science and religion by keeping up a false antithesis between the two. All knowledge of truth must come through the knowing faculties. What is any kind of dogma. It is a very grave charge to say of any man at all scholarly and thoughtful that he is going back into common Orthodoxy, a form of faith which nearly all the people that know anything are rapidly and thoroughly getting out of. I have heard doctrine, in some one point exactly identical with mine, from the pulpit of the old Centre Church in New Haven (it was atonement by self-sacrifice), and from the pulpit once occupied in this town by Jonathan Edwards (it was that the great work or mission of Jesus was to teach God's fatherhood and we all brothers under it); and the next step will be to let me preach such things in such pulpits myself. It is in that way, and in no other, that I purpose to have Orthodox fellowship.

Your remarks on faith and ideas I must leave to another letter. Let me heartily congratulate you on getting to Boston, and wish you all success in your new departure. I am cordially yours,

EDWARD C. TOWNE.

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Sept. 1, 1873.

WHICH SHALL WE BELIEVE?

All men are children of God; but Jesus of Nazareth is claimed to be his only "begotten" son. This claim is confidently and constantly made by the clergy, who cite, in maintenance of it, well-known statements of the evangelists Matthew and Luke, whose testimony they represent to be decisive of the point in question. Since, however, both these authors make other statements bearing strongly in the opposite direction, it seems worth while to take a connected view of these, especially as our clerical teachers have for some reason let them pass without comment.

There seems to be no doubt that Joseph, the husband of Mary, was descended from the Hebrew King David. Luke expressly says (ii. 4.) that "he was of the house and lineage of David;" and both Matthew and Luke give genealogical tables showing Joseph to have been a lineal descendant of David.

The pedigree given by Matthew begins with Abraham, proceeds to David and his son Solomon, and ends with Joseph, adding a statement that the wife of Joseph was the mother of Jesus. Singularly, however, this same document is entitled by the author "The book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the son of David." Now, since the genealogical table closes with Joseph, it shows no descent of Jesus from David unless Joseph was the father of Jesus. If Jesus was begotten by the Holy Ghost and not by Joseph, as Matthew's next paragraph declares, the genealogy shows nothing about a descent of Jesus from David; and on this last supposition, the title of the genealogical table is erroneous. It is really the book of the generation of Joseph, the son of David, but it shows no descent of Jesus from David.

The pedigree given by Luke proceeds in the opposite direction, beginning with Joseph instead of ending with him, and mentioning a popular supposition that Jesus was his son. Joseph is traced to David (through Nathan instead of Solomon) and thus Joseph's Davidic origin is again established, and his children may properly claim such high descent. But if Jesus was not the son of Joseph, this pedigree has nothing to do with him, and gives no support to the claim that he was a son of David. On the contrary, the very paragraph preceding Luke's genealogical table declares that the Holy Ghost visibly descended upon Jesus from heaven, with the audible testimony—"Thou art my beloved son." Unless, then, the Holy Ghost was a son of David, this account gives no evidence of a descent of Jesus from David.

Passing now from the Davidic theory, let us see if Luke's narrative throughout is in accordance with the idea of a supernatural conception of Jesus. Does Luke himself never represent him as the son of Joseph?

Luke, describing the interview of Joseph and Mary with Simeon in the Temple, says (ii. 27, 28.) that it took place "when the parents brought in the child Jesus, to do for him after the custom of the law."

Again, Luke, describing the famous interview of the child Jesus with the doctors in the Temple, tells us (ii. 41.) that "his parents went to Jerusalem every year at the feast of the passover."

Whom does the evangelist mean, what two persons, when he thus twice speaks of the "parents" of Jesus?

But we have yet stronger testimony. Mary, the mother of Jesus, was the one person in the world best qualified to know who his father was; and she has told us that it was Joseph, if the testimony of Luke is to be relied on.

Joseph and Mary missed their son after one of their visits to Jerusalem, and returning to that city found him, after a three days' search, talking with the doctors in the Temple. Mary then said to him (ii. 48.) "Son, why hast thou thus dealt with us? behold, thy father and I have sought thee sorrowing."

According to Luke, Mary, speaking to Jesus in the presence of Joseph, calls the latter the father of the former. Could she possibly have done so if "the angel Gabriel" had really announced to her a supernatural conception presently to take place, which she soon found verified by the fact;—and if "the angel of the Lord" had really announced the same fact to Joseph, when he was about to repudiate Mary on account of her ante-nuptial pregnancy? It is simply impossible that such things could be forgotten or ignored. If Mary, speaking to Jesus in the presence of Joseph, called the latter his father, of course he was his father.

Moreover, no supposition but this can reasonably explain some other statements made in the same chapter by Luke. He tells us (v. 33.) that Joseph and Mary "marvelled" when Simeon spoke of the child Jesus as the long expected consolation of Israel. Why did Mary marvel, if such a supernatural message, followed by such a supernatural fact, had really come to her? If she had really found herself with child in advance of any natural possibility of such event, and after the assurance, by an angel, that it was supernatural, could she have been surprised at finding that child acknowledged as the Messiah? And Joseph, if he had relinquished his suspicion of his wife not long before only on angelic assurance that her child was divinely begotten, would he have marvelled when a venerable prophet welcomed that child as the salvation of Israel, thus vindicating both the mother and the angelic messengers?

Again: when, twelve years later, the child Jesus was found with the doctors in the Temple, and, being asked by his parents why he had caused them so much sorrow and solicitude, replied, "Wist ye not that I must be about my father's business?"—Luke tells us, "They understood not the saying which he spake unto them." Amazing! If Joseph had known himself not to be the father of his wife's child, and had been angelically assured that this child was of peculiar and unprecedented origin, having been begotten by God himself, he would have understood this mention, by the child, of a different father. Still more emphatically would Mary have understood it. No wonder would be incredible to them in the case of a child so announced and so born.

The statements of Luke then, with regard to Jesus, are incompatible with each other, and some of them are incompatible with the narrative of Matthew. Which of the opposing theories are we to believe?

It seems to me that Mary's direct testimony that Joseph was the father, combined with the strong collateral evidence of her surprise, and Joseph's surprise, at facts and allusions which would have been perfectly intelligible on the supernatural theory, must settle the question. Moreover, if this view be accepted, Jesus was really born "in the line of David," a matter which his biographers seem to have thought very important, but which finds no evidence on the supernatural theory.

C. K. W.

THE INNER LIGHT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—A constant reader of your valuable little paper, subscribing through one of our local news-dealers, I have been greatly edified in reading the many learned and ably-written communications; and have admired the absolute freedom with which Jew and Gentile, bond and free, have mingled in the search after Truth. Circumscribed in thought and action by circumstances greatly beyond my control, Nicodemus-like I have stood afar off and watched with breathless interest your little vessel as it sailed out upon the stormy, dangerous sea of public opinion, and, running up the flag of Liberty, engaged the well-equipped Orthodox men-of-war as they cruised around endeavoring to sink every craft not flying the flag of their idol. Allow me to express my extreme admiration at the skill and success with which you have met the enemy, and compelled respect where they confidently expected to crush and annihilate.

I have been surprised, pained, and pleased, in turn, at the wide and wonderful range of thought, the diverse and directly opposite views, yet all seeking, striving, aiming, to reach the one final end, Heaven or Nirvana, and solve the problem of life and our relation to the Universe. What individual, endowed with reason and thoughts beyond this grovelling world,—

"But must inquire—What hand behind the scene,
What arm almighty, put these wheeling globes
In motion, and wound up the vast machine?
Who rounded in his palm these spacious orbs?
Who bow'd them flaming thro' the dark profound,
Num'rous as glittering gems of morning dew,
Or sparks from populous cities in a blaze,
And set the bosom of old night on fire?
Who marshals this bright host? enroll their names?
Appoints their post, their marches, and returns,
Punctual at stated periods?"

What soul, thus viewing, but must be bowed down in mute adoration in the presence of the Infinite One, and longingly exclaim, "Teach me my days to number, and apply my trembling heart to wisdom." Oft have I felt the impulse to join the increasing throng of your communicants; but a sense of my unfitness to appear among such able writers has restrained me, until "R. P. H." touched the chord responsive in his truthful, able article on the "Quakers and Inner Light."

The Quakers, or, more properly, the "Society of Friends," have fairly earned the admiration and gratitude of the whole world for their noble protest against ecclesiastical intolerance and bigotry, and their meekly, heroically borne sufferings in the cause of religious liberty. In fact, we owe almost solely to Fox, Penn, and their compatriots, the enforced acknowledgment of "Liberty of Conscience,"—enforced, not by the sword or at the cannon's mouth, but through shame at the sufferings of these peaceful, holy people,—martyrs for righteousness' sake,—reaching its glorious logical conclusion in our country, of the "equal rights of all men to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

Yet Fox, while proclaiming his famous "Mind the Light," and subordinating all authority to the "voice of God" in his own soul, gradually, like all preceding Reformers, began to abridge the very liberty he proclaimed, and framed a "Discipline" which, while far in advance of his age, and exacting a far higher practical life than any laws or exhortations since the days of Jesus of Nazareth, still practically denied the freedom affirmed, and demanded submission and obedience to the Society and this Discipline.

This anomalous position, as time rolled on, brought about many conflicts of opinion. The breach gradually but constantly widened until in the year 1828 a final separation took place with much bitterness of feeling; the society dividing into two sects or parties, the "Orthodox" and "Hicksite." The Orthodox, rigid disciplinarians, acknowledged the supreme authority of the Bible, accepted Jesus as their Lord and Savior through the vicarious atonement, and disowned the followers of Elias Hicks, who, like Fox, again proclaimed the supreme authority of the "Inner Light," that is, strict obedience to the voice of Truth in their own soul. Of course, this leaves a wide margin for diversity of opinion, reaching from mild evangelicalism to ultra-radical. The Orthodox, with the old heaven working in them, have divided and subdivided, and are about at one with the Methodists. The "Hicksites" have retained their unity and organization intact; yet, as a member, I have been made to mourn over their degeneracy, and gradual descent into a formalism and sectarianism almost as rigid as that they so much abhor in other societies.

The time has arrived which, as friend Hallowell truly says, must decide whether they will advance with the world's advance, accept the logic of events, and go on in their glorious and divine mission—or dig their own grave. But Truth never dies; and profiting by the experience of the past, the Society has awakened to the perils of its present position, and is busily engaged, through its ardent workers, in removing the encrustations of time and tradition; and will ere long rise purified and regenerated, and shine as a sun in the increasing darkness now enshrouding the world. While the Free Religious Society acknowledge and endeavor to develop the nobility of all mankind,—the Society of Friends, as I conceive, rise higher, and proclaim the Divinity in all mankind. As Weiss says: "There is the God within us, and the God without; they twain must become one flesh. Father and Mother of the old life must be continually deserted for the marriages of the soul." Your society still clings to one of the most objectionable and dangerous elements of sectarianism, sooner or later producing spiritual death,—a paid ministry. With us, every individual, man or woman, is prophet, priest, and layman, as they may feel called to the various duties. You seem to be searching only in the works of creation to find and know God. We believe that, while we should know the laws of Nature and of creation, yet it is alone in the individual soul that we can find and know truly the Infinite One. You still have titles, leading, generally, to class distinctions, complimentary to wealth, intellect, or position in society, such as Reverend, Esq., &c. We abjure all titles, and hold that all men are equal, to be recognized only by their intrinsic merits, and not by titles merely complimentary. You seem to cultivate almost exclusively the intellectual to the entire exclusion of the emotional. We believe that God is love, the emotional preceding the intellectual, the twain love and wisdom, becoming one flesh that the human may become divine. Finally, we believe God to be that Omnipresent Spirit, in all, through all, above all; whose attributes are expressed in love, wisdom, purity, perfection; and that man in his spiritual nature should faithfully reflect the image of his creator,—this image, the fruit of the Indwelling Spirit, being expressed in practical life by "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, charity." The sun is obscured by the clouds in the sky while the storm rages, the thunder rolls and the lightning spreads terror, destruction and death in its path, until the equilibrium of Nature is restored, when it again shines forth with renewed brilliancy; so the pride and vanity and lusts and passions of our lower nature have been and are the clouds which obscure the sun of righteousness.

I have not made these distinctions in a carping or unfriendly spirit, but to give you a reason for the hope that is in us,—that animates our Society generally. I fully recognize the grandeur of your aim and the sincerity of your purpose; and humbly hope that each and all may be faithful to the "Inner Light" and live nobly, grandly, the life that God has given them.

In the love of Truth, your sincere friend,
BENJ. E. HOPKINS.

CINCINNATI.

PROF. BLANCHARD has a rabid article in a late number of the Cynosure on the heresy of Deism, that is only too visible to his eyes among the great lights of Congregationalism, the Church at large, and the religious weeklies. The Masonic lodges, he considers, are mostly responsible for this terrible state of affairs. Basing the Masonic organization on the religion held by all men in common, and branding as bigots all who adhere to "one Mediator between God and man," and who reject all others as spurious, diffused as they are through every community, they are slowly making the theology of the lodge the doctrine of the Church. And this is his indictment of some of the most prominent of the religious press: The Advance rejects the Bible from schools; assents to the omission of God's name from the constitution. It insists on the same amusement for worshipping and Christian. It sneers at the Puritans as "Jewish." It denies the law of the Sabbath. It advocates priest-days from the popish calendar,—which our father's abhorred. And, though its editor (Dr. Patton) complains in private that he is misunderstood and misstated in his notorious article concerning licensing common brothels and their whoredoms in St. Louis, he has not explained wherein he was misstated or misunderstood! And this, be it remembered, is the paper which was to give us relief from the looseness of the Independent! The Christian Union has for its managing-editor a man who denies that Christ was conceived by miracle; thus making him the illegitimate son of a seduced peasant-girl, and who rejects, as spurious, all the other miracles of the New Testament. And the Boston Congregationalist, besides fraternizing with and fellowshiping the above named papers, condemns, as does the Independent, Christian Union, and Interior, the Aurora Association for refusing to license M. R. Peck, who declared to us in plain, direct terms that he would not quit his Masonic lodge in St. Johnsbury, Vt., even though the refusal compelled him "to change all his plans of life," which, he told us, were the Gospel ministry and foreign missions.

MARVELS OF THE INSECT WORLD.—The Spectator, in its notice of M. Pouchet's work, The Universe, says: "Man generally flatters himself that his anatomy is about the highest effort of Divine skill; yet that of the insect is far more complicated. No portion of our organism can compare with the proboscis of the common fly. Man can boast 370 muscles. Lyonet, who spent his whole life in watching a single species of caterpillar, discovered in it 4,000. The common fly has 8,000 eyes and certain butterflies 22,000. M. Pouchet treats it as an established fact that so fine are the sensory organs of ants, that they converse by means of their antennae. Consequently the strength and activity of insects far surpass ours in proportion. In the whole field of natural science there is nothing more astounding than the number of times a fly can flap his wings in a second. As the fly passes through space at the rate of six feet in a second, it must in that point of time vibrate its wings five or six hundred times. But in rapid flight we are required to believe that 3,600 is a moderate estimate. The mind is stupefied if it attempts to realize these results."

A QUIET old gentleman, of an active, stirring disposition, had a man who was at work in his garden who was quite the reverse. "Jones," said he, "did you ever see a snail?" "Certainly," said Jones. "Then," said the old man, "you must have met him, for you could never have overtaken him."

Advertisements.

GENERAL NOTICE.

On August 8, 1872, I contracted for the two best advertising pages of THE INDEX for the current year. No advertisements objectionable to the editor to be taken. For terms apply to

ASA K. BUTTS, 36 Dey St., New York.

No improper advertisements, no advertisements of patent medicines, and no advertisements known to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be hereafter admitted into THE INDEX. All advertisements accepted before this date will be allowed to run their time. No cuts admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.
TOLEDO O., June 21, 1873.

A Radical Preacher Wanted.

The Free Religious Society of New Milford, Pa., will require the services of a thoroughly Radical preacher about the middle of next October.

Apply to J. S. THOMSON,
New Milford, Pa.

A CHEAP OFFER!

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.

THE INDEX TRACT NO. 7, "Compulsory Education," is out of print, and therefore orders for it cannot be filled at present. But it is intended to reprint it before long, and all parties ordering a COMPLETE SET will be furnished with it without extra charge as soon as reprinted.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

THE beautiful engravings of Birds in Aviculture cost hundreds of dollars, and the fine and instructive descriptions many weeks of labor. Every family ought to have it. For sale by all booksellers and toy-dealers, or sent, post-paid, on receipt of seventy-five cents, by West & Lee, Worcester, Mass.

"An excellent addition to our home amusements."—Christian Union.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—God in the Constitution, by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—The Sabbath, by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—Compulsory Education, by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

Half Hour Recreations in Popular Science.

EDITED BY DANA ESTES.

The growing demand in this country for Books on popular science encourages the editor and publishers to issue this series of papers, compiled from the works of the most popular scientific writers.

25c per Part; $2.50 for 12 consecutive Parts.

No. 1.—Strange Discoveries Respecting the Aurora and Recent Solar Researches. By Richard A. Proctor, F. R. A. S.

No. 2.—The Cranial Affinities of Man and the Ape. By Prof. Rudolph Virchow, of Berlin, author of "Cellular Pathology." Fully illustrated.

No. 3.—Spectrum Analysis Explained, and its Uses to Science Illustrated. With a colored plate and several wood cuts.

No. 4.—Spectrum Analysis Discoveries, showing its Application in Microscopic Research and to Discoveries of the Physical Constitution and Movements of the Heavenly Bodies. From the works of Schellen, Young, Roscoe, Lockyer, Huggins and others.

No. 5.—Nebulae, Meteoric Showers, and Comets.

No. 6.—Unconscious Action of the Brain and Epidemic Delusions. By Dr. Carpenter, author of "The Microscope and its Revelations," "Human Physiology," &c.

No. 7.—The Geology of the Stars. By Prof. A. Winchell, of the University of Michigan, author of "Sketches of Creation."

The Unity of Natural Phenomena.

An Introduction to the Study of

THE FORCES OF NATURE.

Being a popular explanation of the latest discoveries in the domain of Natural Science, including the "Correlation of Forces," "Mode of Motion," "Force of Gravity," and "Mutual Controversibility of the Forces of Nature."

From the French of Emile Salgey.

WITH NOTES AND AN INTRODUCTION

BY PROF. T. F. MOSES,
OF URBANA UNIVERSITY.

1 vol., crown, 8vo. $1.50.

"In this charming treatise, M. Emile Salgey gives a very lucid account of the latest mode of speculating on the Physical Facts of the Universe. It is a mode which may be described as bringing all the resources of modern science to the proof of the fact that the human mind is incapable of any intelligible conception of physical facts which does not resolve itself into matter and motion. There is in fact but one science under many names, and that science is mechanics. Atoms, and the laws which regulate their movements—this is all our material universe."—Blackwood's Magazine.

The above sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

ASA K. BUTTS & CO., 36 Dey Street,

New York.

Standard Liberal Works.

For sale by A. K. BUTTS, 36 DEY STREET, NEW YORK.

THE RIGHT OF MARRIED WOMEN TO HOLD PROPERTY. Judge Hertel's argument in the House of Assembly of the State of New York, in the session of 1837, in support of the bill to restore to married women "The Right of Property." Republished by order of the will of Mrs. Barbara Amelia Hertel, 1867. Price, 20 cents.

WAT TYLER; a Dramatic Poem in three acts. By Robert Southey, Esq. Price, 20 cents.

THE DIEGESIS; being a Discovery of the Origin, Evidences, and Early History of Christianity, never yet before or elsewhere so fully and faithfully set forth. By Rev. Robert Taylor. This work was written by Mr. Taylor while serving a term in Oakham (Eng.) Jail, where he was imprisoned for blasphemy. It contains 440 pages, octavo, and is considered unanswerable as to arguments or facts. Price, $2.00; postage, 24 cents.

THE DEVIL'S PULPIT—By Rev. Robert Taylor—with a sketch of the Author's Life—containing Sermons on the following subjects:—The Star of Bethlehem. John the Baptist. Raising the Dead. The Unjust Judge. Virgo Paritura. St. Peter, Judas Iscariot. Indicated. St. Thomas, St. James, and St. John—the Sons of Thunder. The Crucifixion of Christ, the Cup of Salvation, Lectures on Free Masonry. The Holy Ghost. St. Philip. St. Matthew. The Redeemer. Price, $2.00; postage 20 cents.

ASTRO-THEOLOGICAL LECTURES—By Rev. Robert Taylor, Containing the following Lectures:—Belief not the Safe Side. The Resurrection of Lazarus, the Dead, Steward, The Devil, The Rich Man and Lazarus, The Day of Temptation in the Wilderness, Ahab, or the Lying Spirit, The Fall of Man, Noah, Abraham, Sarah, Melchisedec, The Lord, Moses, The Twelve Patriarchs, Who is the Lord? Exodus, Aaron, Miriam. Price, $2.00; postage, 20 cents.

THE SYNTAGMA—By Rev. Robert Taylor, author of the "Diegesis," "Devil's Pulpit," "Astro-Theological Sermons," etc. Price, including postage, $1.00.

THE INFIDEL'S OR INQUIRER'S TEXT-BOOK. Being the substance of 13 Lectures on the Bible, by Robert Cooper. Price $1.50; postage, 16 cents.

Standard Liberal Works.

For sale by A. K. BUTTS, 36 DEY STREET, NEW YORK.

THE PHILOSOPHICAL DICTIONARY of Voltaire.—Tenth American Edition. Two Volumes in one. Containing 576 large octavo pages, with two elegant steel engravings. Price, $5.00; postage, 60 cents. This is the largest and most correct edition in the English language, having, beside the whole of the London editions, several articles from a manuscript translated several years since by a friend of Voltaire's, and others translated immediately from the French edition. The London edition sells at from $10 to $15, and does not contain nearly so much as this American edition.

HELVETIUS; or, The True Meaning of the System of Nature. Translated from the French. Price, 20 cents; postage, 4 cents.

THE DIVINE AND MORAL WORKS OF PLATO.—Translated from the Original Greek; with Introductory Dissertations and Notes. First American from the sixth London edition, carefully revised and corrected. Price, including postage, $2.50.

HISTORY OF MOSES, AARON, JOSHUA, and others, deduced from a Review of the Bible. Also, remarks on the Morals of the Old and New Testament, and some of the Ancient Philosophers. By J. M. Derssey. Price, 75 cents; postage, 12 cents.

HISTORY OF ALL CHRISTIAN SECTS and Denominations—their Origin, Tenets, and Conditions. By John Evans, LL.D. Price, $1.00; postage, 16 cents.

ASTRONOMY AND WORSHIP OF THE ANCIENTS. By G. Vale. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

STUDYING THE BIBLE; or, Brief Criticisms on some of the principal Scripture Texts. By Eliza Dore Slenker. Price, 75 cents; postage, 6 cents.

MORAL PHYSIOLOGY—A Plain Treatise on Population. By Robert Dale Owen. This work is illustrated with a Frontispiece. Price, including postage, 68 cents.

TALLEYRAND'S LETTER TO POPE PIUS VII.—Translated from the French into Portuguese by D. J. Monteiro, and from Portuguese into English by H. D. Robinson. With a Memoir of the Author. Price, 50 cents.

HALF-HOURS WITH SOME ANCIENT AND MODERN CELEBRATED FREE-THINKERS:—Thomas Hobbes, Lord Bolingbroke, Condorcet, Spinoza, Anthony Collins, Des Cartes, M. de Voltaire, John Toland, Compt de Volney, Charles Bonnet, Percy Bysshe Shelley, Claude Arian Helvetius, Francois Wright Darnmouth, Epicurus, Zeno, Matthew Tindal, David Hume, Dr. Thomas Burnet, Thomas Paine, Baptiste de Mirabaud, Baron D'Holbach, Robert Taylor, Joseph Barker. By "Iconoclast," Colburn and Watts. Price, 75 cents; postage, 16 cents.

COOPER'S LECTURES ON THE SOUL—In which the doctrine of immortality is religiously and philosophically considered. This is a work of vast importance to those who look on this life as only a state of probation. Price, 75 cents; postage, 12 cents.

CLASSIFIED BIBLICAL EXTRACTS; or, The Holy Scriptures analyzed—showing its contradictions, absurdities, and immoralities. Price, 25 cents.

MAN'S NATURE AND DEVELOPMENT. By Henry George Alderson, F.G.S., and Harriet Martineau. Price, full gilt, $1.50; postage, 16 cents. Cloth, $1.25; postage, 12 cents.

QUEEN MAB, with Notes. By Percy B. Shelley. Price, 75 cents.

A LEGACY TO THE FRIENDS OF FREEDOM:—being a Review of the Principles, Historical Facts, and Personalities of the Book known as the Old and New Testaments; with remarks on the Morality of Nature. By James O'Brien, formerly Lecturer at Tammany Hall, New York City. Price, 75 cents; postage, 16 cents.

LETTERS TO THE CATHOLIC BISHOP OF BOSTON. Proving that the Roman Catholic Religion is opposed to a Republican form of Government. By an Independent Irishman. Price, 15 cents.

EQUALITY; or, a History of Litholia. Price, 15 cents.

ELEGANT EXTRACTS from the Holy Bible. Price, 10 cents.

INTEMPERATE DRINKING. An Exposure of the Causes of this vice, and the means by which it may be obliterated. By Thomas Hertel, of New York City. Published by order of the New York Society for the Promotion of Internal Improvement, 1819. Republished by order of the will of Mrs. Barbara Amelia Hertel, 1867. Price 15 cents.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE; or, Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach, author of "Good Sense," etc. A new and improved edition, with notes by H.D. Robinson. Translated from the French by H.D. Robinson. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.00; postage, 25 cents.

THE LETTERS TO EUGENIA; or, A Treatise on the Allegorical Religious Prejudice. By Baron D'Holbach, author of the "System of Nature," etc. Translated from the French by Anthony et al. Middleton, M.D. Price, $1.00; postage, 16 cents.

GOOD SENSE. By Baron D'Holbach. A new edition of this truly valuable book has just been issued, and is now ready for purchasers. Friends who want "Good Sense" (and who do not) can have a supply sent by mail by order, or by express, on receipt of the price, post-paid, 15c.

COMPLETE WORKS OF THOMAS PAINE.—Secretary to the Committee of Foreign Affairs in the American Revolution. Three Volumes. In the American Revolution, Theological, and Consoling. By the "System of Nature," and Miscellaneous Writings. To which is added a brief Sketch of his Life. Price, $2.00; postage, 24 cents.

PAINE'S POLITICAL WRITINGS.—To which is prefixed a brief Sketch of the Author's Life. A new edition, with additions. Two volumes. Price, $3.00; postage, 62 cents.

THOMAS PAINE'S WRITINGS.—Theological and Miscellaneous. The most complete edition ever published. Containing his Age of Reason, and all his writings on Theology, with many Miscellaneous and Political pieces. Price, $2.50; postage, 26 cents.

FIVE THOUSAND GOOD BOOKS at half price. Great clearance catalogue sent free. ESTES & LAURIA, Boston.

DO TRY IT three months for 10 cents; or with $1 Chromo for 50 cents. The National Geographic and Bee-Book in a sixteen-page paper of sixty-four columns, handsomely illustrated in all its departments. One of the best Agricultural and Family papers published. Only $1 per year, or $1.25 with best Bee-Book, or $1.50 with a beautiful Chromo. Send for sample copies, and liberal terms to agents, free. Write now to H. A. KING & CO., 14 Murray Street, New York.

"The Greatest Luxury in the World!"

TURKISH BATHS,

No. 31 and 33 Columbia Heights, Brooklyn, N. Y.

THREE MINUTES' WALK FROM FULTON FERRY.

Separate Department for Ladies.

OPEN FROM 9 A. M. TO 9 P. M.

While the Turkish Bath has established itself as an elegant and refined luxury, its great feature is its power as a remedial agent.

First class rooms and board for those desiring accommodations in the Institution. Address CHARLES H. SHEPARD M. D.

THE

The Influence of Christianity on Civilization.

BY B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Popular fallacies concerning this question have had no more honest and fearless exposition than is given us in this handsome pamphlet. Mr. Underwood has treated this momentous theme with dignity, candor, and grace, yet with that vigor which has made him so popular on the platform among the Liberals of the West. Nor does he lack in erudition. He is profuse in quotations from standard histories, largely Christian, and shows conclusively but clearly from their own testimony what a drag upon civilization that stupendous fanaticism has been.

In paper covers, single copies, 25 cts. Address the publisher,

ASA K. BUTTS, 36 Day Street, N. Y.

A Noble Life Portrayed.

New and Enlarged Edition of HORACE GREELLEY'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY with Appendix containing Memoir of his later years and Death, and the best of his famous Campaign Speeches.

The last and best Portrait of him ever published, representing him as he appeared in the Summer of 1872.

The great call for Mr. Greeley's Autobiography, and also for some more permanent record of the wonderful intellectual display which he made during his Eastern and Western tours in the Presidential Campaign of 1872, have led to the issue of a new edition of the Autobiography, with a very large Appendix continuing the story of his life to the end, reproducing the more striking and suggestive of his many admirable and brilliant Campaign speeches, and concluding with an exhaustive and admirable analysis of the campaign, originally prepared by the Hon. James S. Pike, ex-United States Minister to the Hague. There is, besides, a pretty complete collection of Mr. Greeley's Miscellaneous Writings, including among others his famous controversy with Robert Dale Owen on Marriage and Divorce.

Price, handsomely bound in cloth, with two Portraits, $3. Sent by mail on receipt of price. Address

THE TRIBUNE, New York.

A Library for Fifty Cents.

With Illustrations.—Literature, Art, Science, and History.—The Tribune Extra Sheets containing:—

Lecture Extra, No. 1.—Illustrated.—Tyn-dal's six Lectures on Light.

Lecture Extra, No. 2.—Beecher's Compulsory Education; Field's Masters of the Situation; Phillips's Lost Arts; Bellows's Is There a God? Mark Twain's Sandwich Island Letters.

Lecture Extra, No. 3.—Illustrated.—Prof. Wilder's Brain and Mind; Prof. Barker's Chemical Discoveries of the Spectroscope; Prof. Young's Astronomical Conquests; Prof. Young's Present Knowledge of the Sun.

Lecture Extra, No. 4.—Six Shakespearean Studies, by John Weiss; Seven Art Studies, National Academy Course; Parton's Pilgrim Fathers as Men of Business; Bret Harte's Argonauts of '49.

Lecture Extra, No. 5.—Illustrated.—Three Lectures by Prof. Louis Elsborg, on Sound and Hearing, Voice and Speech, and The Explanation of Musical Harmony; Prof. Benj. Stillman's Deep Placer Mining in California; Dr. R. W. Raymond on The Seven Senses; Fiske Godwin on True and False Science; Prof. E. L. Youmans on The Limits of Science.

Lecture Extra, No. 6.—Beecher's Seven Lectures for Ministers: Thoughts for Ministers—Thoughts upon Prayer—Prayer-Meeting—As It Is—The Ideal Prayer-Meeting—Music in Churches—Society in the Church—The Fingers of the Church.

Lecture Extra, No. 7.—Beecher's concluding Lectures: Revivals in the Church—A Religious Awakening—Thoughts on Revivals—A Religious Experience. Also, "The Moravian Church," by de Schweinitz; "Creed Statements," by Thomas Stark King; "The Death Menace," by Hovee, and a "History of Sectarian Appropriations."

Lecture Extra, No. 8.—The Method of Creation. Twelve Lectures by Prof. A. Agassiz, concerning Animal Life. Also, a description of the wonderful Fossils discovered in the Rocky Mountains, by the Yale College expedition.

Eight Extra Sheets, containing over 50 Lectures and 150 Engravings, and Credit Mobilier report for 50 cents.

Address THE TRIBUNE, New York.

Real Estate Securities, INVESTMENTS IN REAL ESTATE, IN CHICAGO AND VICINITY,

If judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The old

Real Estate and Loan Agency

OF

ERNST PRUSSING,

143 Randolph St., - - CHICAGO, (Established 1853)

Guarantees perfect title and ample security in all its Real Estate Loans.

First-class securities always on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge.

Real Estate Investments made on commission and on shares; taxes paid, &c.

Orders of capitalists and real estate owners respectfully solicited.

A Splendid Sabbath School Book!

RIVER OF LIFE.

River Verily a River of Melody and Beauty. Abounding in bright, taking, singable music which the Sabbath-School children and home boys and girls will not need much drilling to learn and appreciate. As in our unequalled Church Book, the "AMERICAN TUNE BOOK"—so in this we have drawn on many well-known writers of Sabbath School Music, the very best in the country, to whose united efforts we owe this new and popular Sabbath School Book, edited by Messrs. PERKINS & BENTLEY.

Life

Its Success Cannot be Doubted.

SEND ORDERS EARLY.

Price $30 per 100

Sample copies, 30 cts. each. Sent post-paid.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

Charles H. Ditson & Co.,

711 Broadway, New York.

THE SPIRIT OF REFORM.

COLBY & RICH,

14 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON, MASS.,

Issue weekly the

BANNER OF LIGHT.

An exponent of the Spiritual philosophy of the nineteenth century.

The above is a first-class, eight-page, family Newspaper, containing FORTY COLUMNS OF INTERESTING AND INSTRUCTIVE READING, classed as follows:—

LITERARY DEPARTMENT.—From French and German.

REPORTS OF SPIRITUAL LECTURES.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

MESSAGE DEPARTMENT.—Spirit-messages from the departed to their friends in earth-life, given through the mediumship of Mrs. J. H. Conant.

ORIGINAL CONTRIBUTIONS.—From the most talented writers in the world.

All which features render this journal a popular Family Paper, and at the same time the harbinger of a Glorious Scientific Religion.

Terms of Subscription in Advance:

Per year $3.00

Six months 1.50

Three months75

Specimen copies sent free.

We confidently call the attention of the friends of progress and reform, whether in material or spiritual matters, to the self-respecting and dignified tone, and the liberal position assumed and maintained by the Banner of Light in the past, the same being the guarantee of future usefulness.

Colby & Rich also publish and offer for sale, at the Banner of Light Bookstore, many books and pamphlets of a spiritual and reformatory nature.

The complete works of Andrew Jackson Davis; also books by Judge J. W. Edmonds, Mrs. Emma Hardinge, William Hewitt, Hon. Robert Dale Owen, D. D. Home, Prof. William Denton, Miss Lizette Doten, J. M. Peebles, Mrs. J. S. Adams, Prof. S. B. Brittan, Hudson and Emma Tuttle, Henry C. Wright, Warren Chase, Charles S. Woodruff, Dr. A. B. Child, Mrs. Lois Walsprocker, F. B. Randolph, Warren S. Barlow, George Stearns, and others will here be found.

Summer Reading for the Seaside. CHEAP AND GOOD.

AN ENGLISH SEASIDE STORY, published complete in an EXTRA TRIBUNE of 12 pages. Price Ten Cents by mail. Address THE TRIBUNE, New York.

ENGLISH CLASSICS.

The Cheapest Books Ever Published.

SHAKESPEARE. 50c. Cloth, $1.25

Containing all the great Poet's Plays, 37 in number, from the Original Text, the whole of his Poems, with Memoir and Portrait, and 37 Illustrations, by Gilbert, Wilson, &c.

BYRON. 50c. Cloth, $1.00

A New Edition of the Works of Lord Byron. 480 pp. 16 Illustrations by F. Gilbert.

SCOTT. 25c. Cloth, 50c.

A New Edition of the Poetical Works of Sir Walter Scott. Illustrated by F. Gilbert.

GOLDSMITH. 50c. Cloth, $1.00

The Works of Oliver Goldsmith, with Memoir and Portrait. New and complete Illustrated Edition.

BURNS. 25c. Cloth, 50c.

This new and complete edition of the Poetical Works of Robert Burns is elaborately illustrated, and contains the whole of the Poem, Life, and Correspondence of the great Scottish Bard.

ARABIAN NIGHTS. 25c. Cloth, 50c.

A New Translation, complete, with numerous Illustrations.

MILTON. 25c. Cloth, 50c.

Milton's Works, New Edition, with Memoir, Portrait, and Frontispiece.

COWPER. 25c. Cloth, 50c.

Cowper's Works, New Edition, with Memoir, Portrait, and Frontispiece.

WORDSWORTH. 25c. Cloth, 50c.

Wordsworth's Works, New Edition, with numerous Illustrations.

MOORE. 25c. Cloth, 50c.

Moore's Works, New Edition, with numerous Illustrations.

The usual Discounts given to the Trade.

THE AMERICAN NEWS CO.,

New York.

Important Scientific Works.

BY PROF. J. CLERK MAXWELL.

(Ready To-day.)

A Treatise on Electricity and Magnetism. By J. Clerk Maxwell, M. A., F. R. S., Professor of Experimental Physics in the University of Cambridge. 2 vols., 8vo. With Illustrations. $12.

The Depths of the Sea. An Account of the General Results of the Dredging Cruises of H. M. S. Lightning and Porcupine during the Summers of 1868, '69 and '70. By Prof. Wyville Thompson, F. R. S. Medium 8vo., with nearly 100 exquisite wood-cuts and 8 colored maps. $9.

"It is impossible to read its fascinating pages without feeling awakened within us a desire to emulate the author in his efforts to obtain a knowledge of life beneath the waters, of which most of us know nothing."—Journal of Applied Chemistry.

"It is splendidly illustrated and popularly written, with much humor, and the treatment, like the subject, is anything but dry; it is a volume altogether worthy the interest and importance of its subject."—Popular Science Monthly.

"The volume, which forms one of the most important contributions of the season to the science of physical geography, is brought out in a style of rare typographical elegance, and is copiously illustrated with admirable drawings from Nature. It will fill a choice place in the library, both for the interest of its contents and the beauty of its execution."—N. Y. Tribune.

"Nothing can be more complete than the account of the scientific results of these voyages, which are fully illustrated by wood-cuts of the strange forms of life brought from the dark depths of the ocean, by charts of soundings and elaborate tables of the deep sea temperature. The book is another example of that mingling of literary interest with scientific completeness and value, which is the only true form of what is called the popularization of science."—Daily News (London).

Zoological Mythology; Or, The Legends of Animals. By Angelo de Gubernatis, Professor of Sanscrit and Comparative Literature at Florence. 2 vols., 8vo., cloth, $3.

The Scientific Bases of Faith. By Joseph John Murphy, author of "Habit and Intelligence." 8vo., cloth, $5.

Old-Fashioned Ethics and Common-Sense Metaphysics, with Some of their Applications. By William Thomas Thornton, author of "A Treatise on Labor." 8vo., cloth, $3.50.

New Book by Amadeo Guillemin.

The Forces of Nature. A Popular Introduction to the Study of Physical Phenomena. By Amadeo Guillemin. Translated from the French by Mrs. Norman Lockyer, and edited with Notes and Additions, by J. Norman Lockyer, F. R. S. Imperial 8vo., with 11 colored plates and 450 wood engravings, cloth, $12.50. [Now ready.]

"This book is a luxurious introduction to the study of the physical sciences. M. Guillemin has found an excellent translator in Mrs. Norman Lockyer, while the editorship of Mr. Norman Lockyer, with his notes and additions, are guarantees not only of scientific accuracy but of the completeness and lateness of the information."—Daily News (London).

Address ASA K. BUTTS, 36 Day Street, N. Y.

Cloth bound, $1.

Memorial of Horace Greeley, with TWO PORTRAITS and ILLUSTRATIONS; one portrait representing Mr. Greeley as he appeared in the last Summer of his life, and being altogether the most life-like and natural portrait of him ever published. The volume contains a Memoir of Mr. GREELLEY, his last hours, the moral of his death, the Funeral Arrangements, the Closing Ceremonies, the Mourning of the People, Letters of Sympathy, Voices of the Pulpit and the Press, Tributes from the Poets, Resolutions and Proceedings of Various Public Bodies, &c., &c., &c. Pamphlet Edition, 50 cents; handsomely bound, $1; either free by mail on receipt of price.

THE TRIBUNE, New York.

HIGHER LAW.

A Romance.

By EDWARD MAITLAND, author of "The Pilgrim and Shiraz." 12mo., cloth, $1.75.

"There is no novel, in short, which can be compared to it for its width of view, its cultivation, its poetry, and its deep human interest. . . . except 'Romola.'"—Westminster Review.

"Its careful study of character, and the ingenuity and independence of its speculations, will commend it to the admiration even of those who differ from its conclusions most gravely."—British Quarterly Review.

THE PILGRIM AND THE SHIUNE.

By Edward Maitland. Third edition. 12mo., cloth, $1.50. Postpaid on receipt of price.

"One of the wisest and most charming of books."—Westminster Review.

Address ASA K. BUTTS,

36 DAY STREET, NEW YORK.

All Interested in the Progress of Science Should Read

NATURE.

A Weekly Illustrated Journal of Science.

The attention of all interested in the general progress of knowledge is earnestly invited to this Journal, which has now become the accredited organ of the leading scientific men, in communicating their views to each other and to the public.

One of the leading objects of this periodical is to awaken in the public mind a more lively interest in science. With this end in view, it provides original articles and reviews, written by scientific men of the highest distinction in their various departments, expounding the Grand Results of Scientific Research, discussing the most recent scientific discoveries, and pointing out the bearing of science upon civilization and progress, and its claims to more general recognition, as well as to a higher place in the educational system of the country.

There will also be found in Nature complete abstracts of all important papers communicated to British, American, and Continental Scientific Societies and Periodicals, and Reports of the Meetings of Scientific Bodies.

Among the contributors to Nature will be found the names of almost every man of note in the various departments of scientific inquiry in England, America, and the Continent of Europe.

As questions of science compass all limits of nationality, and are of universal interest, a periodical devoted to them may fitly appeal to the intelligent classes in all countries where its language is read. The proprietors of Nature will aim so to conduct it that it shall bear a common claim upon all English-speaking peoples.

Nature is published in London; it asks, as it will be found to deserve, the liberal patronage of the thinking classes of the United States. Its articles are brief and condensed, and are thus suited to the circumstances of an active and busy people who have little time to read extended and elaborate treatises.

Every intelligent man is now expected to know something of what is going on in the scientific world; the columns of Nature will give a summary of it, varied, compressed, and authentic.

Yearly Subscription, $5. Single Numbers, price 12 cents. Sent for two months, as a trial subscription, on receipt of 75 cents.

THE PRACTITIONER.

A Monthly Journal of Therapeutics.

Edited by

FRANCIS N. ANSTIE, M.D., F.R.C.P.

"To hard-worked medical men, in general country practice, with little time for reading and few opportunities for professional conversation, such a journal as this, bringing every month the latest ideas in medical practice and the latest records of important cases, ought to be invaluable."—London Guardian.

Yearly Subscription, $4. Single numbers 40 cents. Sent two months as a trial subscription, on receipt of 60 cents.

Address A. K. BUTTS & CO.,

36 DAY STREET, NEW YORK.

PROGRESSIVE

PUBLICATION HOUSE.

A. J. DAVIS & CO., Standard Books on Harmonical Philosophy, Spiritualism, Free Religion, and General Reform. Constantly on hand all the STANDARD INDEX PUBLICATIONS, in paper and cloth bindings, at wholesale and retail, and sent by mail to any part of the world on receipt of the price and postage. Address No. 24 East Fourth Street, New York. (P. O. Box, No. 82, Station D.)

THE WAYS OF WOMEN

In Their Physical, Moral, and Intellectual Relations.

By A MEDICAL MAN. This is unquestionably one of the most remarkable books issued from the American press in many years. A most beautiful specimen of scientific and practical word-painting on themes of vital importance to every woman. A splendid chance for agents. It makes an elegant 8vo. vol. of 400 pp., on tinted paper, superbly bound. Price $3. Sent by mail on receipt of price. For territory and agents' terms, apply to the publisher, JOHN P. JEWETT & Co., 6 Dey St., New York.

MANUALS

OF

Mathematical Instruments,

Microscopes,

Magic Lanterns,

Meteorological Instruments.

Physical Apparatus,

Profusely Illustrated and priced, mailed to any address on receipt of 10 cents each.

JAMES W. QUEEN & CO., Opticians, 934 Chestnut St. *61 Broadway, PHILADELPHIA.

NEW YORK.

Mention that you saw this in THE INDEX.

NEW BOOKS

FOR

*SUMMER READING.

MUST IT BE?

A Romance From the German of CARL DELF. By MS., translator of "By His Own Might," "A Twofold Life," etc. Illustrated. 8vo. Paper cover, 75 cents. Fine cloth, $1.25.

Eminently natural, full of charming realism, and abounding in vigorous and exciting action.

WHAT WILL THE WORLD SAY?

A Novel of Every-day Life; and "Only a Woman." By OJOS MORENO. 12mo. Extra cloth. $1.50.

POLITICAL PORTRAITS.

By an Eminent Journalist. 12mo. Extra cloth. $1.50. Short, pithy, and timely addresses, presenting in a condensed and striking manner the political character of England's most representative statesmen.

GONE BEFORE.

Being a Manual for the Bereaved. By HENRY SOUTHGATE. Extra cloth. Red edges. $2.00.

"The book is one of those specialties in which the writer has already established a reputation on both sides of the Atlantic, and should be in every private and public library in the land."—Boston Globe.

EVOLUTION OF LIFE.

By HENRY C. CHAPMAN, M.D., Member of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia. Illustrated with numerous Lithographic Plates. New and Cheaper Edition. Extra cloth. $2.75.

"The best general text that we have seen for readers who desire to know the foundation, steps, results, and reasons employed in the latest scientific theories."—Philadelphia North American.

MINERAL SPRINGS OF NORTH AMERICA. How to Reach, and How to Use them. By J. J. MOORMAN, M.D. Illustrated. 12mo. Extra cloth. $2.00.

REASON AND REDEMPTION.

Or, The Gospel as it Attests Itself. By ROBERT BAKER WHITE, D.D. 8vo. Extra cloth. $2.00.

"Dr. White displays great logical power and acumen, and fearlessly grapples with the objections to the truth of revelation which are drawn from the teachings of geology, astronomy, and ethnology."—Boston Globe.

WORK, PLAY, AND PROFIT;

Or, Gardening for Young Folks, explained in a Story for Boys and Girls. By ANNA M. HYDE, author of "Six Hundred Dollars a Year," "American Boys' Life of Washington," etc. Illustrated. 12mo. Extra cloth.

THE "SPIRITUAL" DELUSION;

Its Methods, Teachings, and Effects. The Philosophy and Phenomena Critically Examined. By DYER D. LUM, author of "The Early Social Life of Man." 12mo. Fine cloth. $1.50.

WAU BUN.

The "Early Day" in the Northwest. A Novel. By the author of "Walter Ogilby." New Edition. 12mo.

A Romantic and highly attractive narrative of life in the Northwest during the period of the early settlement.

For sale by all Booksellers, or will be sent by mail post-paid, upon receipt of the price by LEPPINCOTT & CO., Publishers, 715 and 717 Market Street, Phila.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY!

Agents wanted! All classes of working people, of either sex, young or old, make more money at work for us in their spare moments or all the time than in anything else. Particulars Free. Address G. Stinson & Co., Portland, Me.

J. F. RUGGLES,

Free Thought Bibliophile,

BRONSON, MICH.,

Continues to furnish those who desire them Liberal and Philosophical books, tracts, etc., that embody the matured thoughts and opinions of the True Salt of the Earth! Being in constant receipt of importations from Europe, I am prepared to supply all works in any department of Literature that are obtainable in the markets of the world. Catalogues free.

407 Broadway, N. Y.,

NEAR CANAL STREET,

BABCOCK

Fire Apparatus

EXTINGUISHERS.

HOOK AND LADDER TRUCKS, ENGINES AND TANKS.

F. W. FARWELL, Secretary.

Independent Tract Society,

CLINTON, MASS.

The object of this organization is the publication and dissemination of radical sentiments from all sources.

Yearly Subscription, $5 25
Life Membership, 5 00

Address

A. BRIGGS DAVIS, CLINTON, MASS.

THE

COMMONWEALTH LIFE INSURANCE CO.

GENTLEMEN of standing and ability (either in professional or mercantile pursuits) are desired in all parts of the country to represent this reliable company. Our plans of Insurance are simple, popular, and honest.

Address 173 Broadway,
NEW YORK.

LETTER FROM

O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

"I have used THE HEALTH LIFT nearly every day for the past year, and with manifest advantage. A tendency to sleeplessness at night has been corrected, my animal spirits have been raised in tone, and my elasticity of frame increased. The sense of repose imparted is quite as great as the stimulus."—O. B. Frothingham.

For circulars descriptive of THE BUTLER HEALTH LIFT and its apparatus, address

LEWIS G. JAMES, Manager.

Principal Office, Park Bank Building, 214 Broadway, N. Y.

Brooklyn—158 Remsen St., connecting with Dr. Holbrook's Rooms, 180 Fifth Avenue.

Visitors always welcome.

THE

BOSTON INVESTIGATOR.

THE OLDEST REFORM JOURNAL IN THE

UNITED STATES,

Is published

EVERY WEDNESDAY,

At

84 WASHINGTON STREET,

BOSTON, MASS.,

BY JOSIAH P. MENDUM.

EDITED BY HORACE SEAVER.

Price, $3.50 per annum. Single copies, Seven Cents. Specimen Copies sent, on receipt of a Two-Cent Stamp to pay the postage.

The "INVESTIGATOR" is devoted to the liberal cause in Religion; or, in other words, to Universal Mental Liberty. Independent in all discussions, discarding superstitious theories of what never can be known, it devotes its columns to things of this world alone, and leaves the next, if there be one, to those who have entered its unknown shores. Believing that it is the duty of mortals to work for the interests of this life entirely, it confines itself to things of this world, it confines itself to things of this life entirely. It has just entered its 43d year, and asks for a support from those who are fond of sound reasoning, good reading, reliable news, anecdotes, science, art, and a useful Family Journal. Reader! please send your subscription for six months or one year; and if you are not satisfied with the way the "INVESTIGATOR" is conducted, we won't ask you to continue with us any longer.

LOUIS BLACK,

104 Jefferson Ave., Detroit, Michigan.

MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN,

INVENTOR AND PROPRIETOR OF

Black's Patent Interchangeable Spectacles, and Self-Attaching Spring Eye-Glasses. Importer of all kinds of Optical Goods. The best Spectacles fitted to the Eyesight so as to improve it.

ARITHMETICAL

CARDS AND GAMES.

Agents Can Make Money.

SEND FOR A PACK.

With these Cards the drill of Mental Arithmetic is made more pastime—besides many (including common card) games can be played. Teachers and pupils, and everybody should use them for instruction and amusement. AGENTS WANTED. One pack, with book of instructions, sent post-paid for fifty cents. Address F. H. BATESON, Drawer 90, Toledo, O.

IRON IN THE BLOOD.

PERUVIAN SYRUP,

AN

IRON TONIC.

THE PERUVIAN SYRUP Vitalizes and Enriches the Blood, Tones up the System, Builds up the Broken-down, Cures Female Complaints, Dropsy, Debility, Humors, Dyspepsia, &c.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy from weak, sickly, suffering creatures, to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

Caution.—Be sure you get the right article. See that "Peruvian Syrup" is blown in the glass. Pamphlets free. Send for one. SETH W. FOWLE & SONS, Proprietors, Boston, Mass. For sale by druggists generally.

SOMETHING NEW.

LIFE INSURANCE ON THE

SAME BASIS AS FIRE INSURANCE.

PAY FOR IT AS YOU GET IT.

NO "NOTES," "DIVIDENDS," "RESERVES," OR OTHER DEVICES

to collect more money than is actually required to secure all the benefits of Life Insurance.

On this plan the National Life Insurance Co. of Chicago has actually paid the heirs of deceased members $199,664, at a cost to them of only $3,999.10. Had these persons been insured on the old high-rate plan, their heirs would have received only $96,746.12.

INVESTIGATE, AND SAVE MONEY BY INSURING ON THIS PLAN, AND

MAKE MONEY

by securing an agency for it. Address, NATIONAL LIFE INSURANCE CO., 78 and 80 Van Buren St., Chicago.

THE LIBERAL CHRISTIAN

FOR 1873,

HENRY W. BELLOWES, EDITOR,

Will endeavor, not only to maintain its present reputation as

ONE OF THE BEST WEEKLY JOURNALS OF

Religion, Literature, Science, and Art

Now published in this country, but to fulfil, more completely than ever before, its part of the work of supplying the American people with the

Best Thought on the Highest and Most Vital Themes

Of both general and particular interest, in all departments of human life. To this end, special arrangements have been entered into with able writers and correspondents to keep the columns of The Liberal Christian supplied, during the year 1873, with a pleasant variety of good articles and letters on the most stirring topics of the day.

The several departments of the paper—Fellowship of the Spirit; Our Contributors; Signs of the Times; Original and Selected Articles; Our Literary Record; Editorial; The Week's News—Ecclesiastical, Political, and General; Correspondence; Our Boys and Girls; Our Scientific Record; The Fine Arts—will each receive the special care of the gentlemen and ladies under whose charge they have been placed; and no effort will be spared to provide a WEEKLY FAMILY JOURNAL Worthy of the Patronage of American Homes, and of the Enlightened Nineteenth Century.

Price of Subscription, $3 per Annum, Payable in Advance.

Upon application by letter, specimen copies will always be sent free.

Jos. N. Hallock, Publisher,

P. O. Box 109.

214 Broadway, New York City.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO., Bankers,
LEROY, MINNESOTA.

Money loaned on short time, or for a term of years, on unincumbered improved farms, at 12 per cent per annum, interest net. Interest payable annually. All expenses for abstract of title and recording mortgage paid by borrower. We collect and remit to any part of the United States free of charge.

REFERENCES.—First National Bank, McGregor, Iowa; Gilchrist & Co., McGregor, Iowa; First National Bank, Austin, Minnesota; City National Bank, Chicago, Illinois; Allen, Stevens & Co., New York City.

LADIES!

Eureka Machine Twist,
50 and 100 Yard Spools,

Eureka Button-Hole Twist,
10 Yard Spools,
ARE THE BEST IN USE.

For Sale at All Trimming Stores.

A GREAT OFFER.

Horace Waters & Son, 481 Broadway, New York, will dispose of 100 Pianos and Organs of first-class makers, including WATERS, at extremely low prices for cash, or part cash, and balance in small monthly payments. New 7-Octave first-class Pianos, all modern improvements, for $275 cash. Organs, $50 to $75. Double-Reed Organs, $100; 4-stop, $110; 8-stop, $125 and upwards. WATERS' CONCERTO PARLOR ORGANS are the most beautiful in style and perfect in tone ever made. The Concerto Organ is the best ever placed in any Organ. It is produced by a third set of reeds peculiarly voiced, the effect of which is most charming and soul-stirring, while its imitation of the Human Voice is superb. Terms liberal. Illustrated Catalogues mailed for one stamp. A liberal discount to Ministers, Churches, Sunday-Schools, Lodges, etc.

AGENTS WANTED.

Are You Going to Paint!

THEN USE

The Averill Chemical Paint.

THE HANDSOMEST AND MOST DURABLE EXTERIOR PAINT.

Costs Less, and will Outlast any other.

Gen. G. R. Smith, Sedalia, Mo., writes: "Two coats of 'Averill' covered better, and looked finer, than three coats of Lead and Oil, with a coat of varnish thereon. I would not again use Lead and Oil were it given to me."

Levi Shaw, Trustee of the Society of Quakers, Mt. Lebanon, writes:—"The buildings painted with the Averill White Paint some three and a half years since I have examined, and found it retains the gloss nearly if not quite as well as when first put on. It is the best paint we have ever used."

Sample card of beautiful colors, and recommendations from owners of the finest residences in the country, furnished free, by the

AVERILL CHEMICAL PAINT CO.

32 Burling Slip, New York,
and 118 Superior St., Cleveland, O.

THE GOLDEN AGE.

Every Man and Woman who reads THE INDEX ought to read also The Golden Age, edited by Theodore Tilton. After fifteen years of experience on The Independent, Mr. Tilton two years ago established, in the interest of more liberal thought, The Golden Age—a journal of his own, to which he gives his constant and tollsome attention, and which has already won a national reputation for honesty, courage, and brilliancy. Probably no other journal in America is so widely quoted from, both by those who agree, and those who disagree with it. Unlike any other weekly paper, either in America or England, it is unique and original in appearance, in thought, and in style. It abounds in brief and spicy paragraphs—shot like swift arrows hitting the mark. Its editorial discussions cover the whole field of current topics—whether religious, political, literary, social, or industrial. It does not pretend, or seek, or want to agree with its readers, or with the general popular opinion. It indulges in the luxury of free speech. It has a mind of its own, and is sometimes wrong—which makes it all the more novel, for it is almost the only journal of the American press that is always good-natured, and ever believes in fair play. It would be happy to make the acquaintance of the readers of THE INDEX; and though The Golden Age is in no sense a rival to THE INDEX, and does not undertake to do such a work as Mr. Abbot has embarked upon, yet it is fighting a battle for free thought in religion, and free speech in politics, and is conscientiously dedicated to the promotion of whatever helps forward the Emancipation of the Human Mind. Anybody who subscribes for Mr. Tilton's paper will get something to think about, and more than the money's worth. Enclose three dollars in an envelope (before you forget it), and address

THE GOLDEN AGE,

Box 2848,

New York City.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 4.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1873.

WHOLE No. 195.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for sectarian educational and charitable institutions shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday or the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

Therefore, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

- ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.
- ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —.
Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.
- ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.
- ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.
- ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.
- ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.
- ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

So far as I am concerned, the above is the platform of THE INDEX. I believe in it without reserve; I believe that it will yet be accepted universally by the American people, as the only platform consistent with religious liberty. A Liberal League ought to be formed to carry out its principles wherever half a dozen earnest and resolute Liberals can be got together. Being convinced that the movement to secure compliance with these just "Demands" must surely, even if slowly, spread, I hope to make THE INDEX a means of furthering it; and I ask the assistance and active co-operation of every man and every woman who believes in it. Multiply Liberal Leagues everywhere, and report promptly the names of their Presidents and Secretaries. Intolerance and bigotry will tremble in proportion as that list grows. If freedom, justice, and reason are right, let their organized voice be heard like the sound of many waters.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor,

Boston, Sept. 1, 1873.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
BOSTON, MASS.—J. S. Rogers, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
VINCENNES, N. J.—L. Bristol, President; E. G. Blaisdell, Secretary.
JUNCTIONVILLE, NEE.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. E. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
BREMEN, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

BY A. W. S.

WE KNOW of no good reason, and as yet have never seen any advanced, why a woman should not vote on an equal suffrage basis with any male elector.

TO GOVERN one's spirit and temper in the presence of every-day petty annoyances and irritations, is really one of the greatest achievements of a dignified and noble character.

TO HOLD one's judgment in suspense as to certain great mooted doctrines without losing faith in the truth and becoming indifferent to it, is perhaps what few men are equal to.

IS WOMAN equal to man? In some respects she is his equal, in some she is his superior, and in others she is his inferior. We know of nothing further that can be said on this point.

THE recent great pilgrimages of Catholic Christians, in France and England, to shrines made famous by legends of miracles, show that the growth of superstition is still rank in the Church.

DER PRIONIER, a German paper published in Boston, contains in its issue of September 6, an article entitled "Material for the Platform of a Reform-party," which seems to us highly worthy of attention.

WINWOOD READE, in his African Sketch-Book, says that the natives of Africa "often discuss the mystery of evil." "Why," they ask, "does God allow these evils to torment us?" When our colored brethren get this question settled, we wish they would let us know.

THE BROOKLYN Eagle says truly that "the man who is always prepared to preach is rarely, if ever, worth hearing." Is there not too much preaching, too much lecturing, too much talking done altogether? Silent prayer is found to be excellent. Suppose we try silent preaching.

"PROF. MAX MUELLER declines the offer of a professorship in the new German University of Strasburg, and will remain in England," says the Chicago Post. Such a wise scholar and promoter of rare knowledge as Prof. Müller cannot be monopolized by any one nation. He is a citizen, as he is a benefactor, of the whole world.

THE whole number of poor children who were given free excursions from New York city, during the late season, was nearly twenty-one thousand. A benevolent enterprise is this, most worthy of admiration and approval; and it is noticeable that the idea of it wholly originated with a secular, not a "religious," newspaper.

"IT IS DIFFICULT to think of a universe that has existed from eternity," says B. F. Underwood. It is, indeed. And that reminds us of what John Randolph said, in Congress, to an ex-clerical member who had been talking much about eternity. "The gentleman," says Mr. Randolph, "cannot think about eternity a minute, if he were to be damned."

"THE SCIENTIFIC faith is a faith in law," says the Christian Union. Yes; and when that faith adopts the conclusion that law is not only forceful and invariable, but intelligent and benevolent, then it will be a scientific-religious faith. But, in the meantime, let us not make our wish father to that thought, nor affirm anything on insufficient evidence.

"ANOTHER confirmed smoker, who had been such for fifty years, has forever abandoned the habit. It was at Yates county, New York. He knocked the ashes off his pipe into a keg of blasting powder." So says the Chicago Post. Such a sudden cessation from an old and confirmed habit we think must have been hurtful to that man's health. We can scarcely advise others to do the same.

THE ISRAELITE, of which Rabbi Isaac M. Wise is editor, is earnestly advocating the "Union of American Hebrew Congregations," and the establishment by this Union of a Hebrew Theological Institute. We heartily wish our Israelite friends success in their undertaking; but we hope they will not forget the broader interests of truth in their aim to establish and advance the welfare of Hebrew congregations.

THE Jews seem very highly delighted when any one of their household of faith is appointed to high office, or secures any distinguished social or political situation,—as has been the case recently, both in this country and in Europe. Their self-congratulation is very natural, since their present somewhat cordial recognition by Christians is strikingly comparable to their former cruel persecution by the same.

AMONG THE HEBREWS in this country there is a flourishing order called "The Free Sons of Israel." Their chief executive officer is entitled the Grand Master, and he has lately made a tour of inspection through the West, being received by the different lodges with great hospitable demonstration. The Order would appear to be right on the woman question, since it admits ladies as well as gentlemen to its privileges and duties.

RUBENSTEIN is said to be cherishing a plan of writing seven great sacred operas: "Eve," "Moses," "Job," "Canticles," "Maccabees," "David," and "Jesus Christ." So, as in the old miracle-plays, we shall see Jesus Christ appear on the stage,—vicariously of course. But where is the "sacred" singer who will be deemed sacred enough to take this part? The religious journals will not dare to be critical, when this opera is put on the boards.

THE Episcopal Church proposes to build a great cathedral in New York, to cost two millions of dollars. It will of course expect to have this magnificent piece of property exempted from taxation. But why should it be, any more than the splendid new edifice which the Tribune Association are erecting for their purposes? In its present devotion to independent journalism and the diffusion of scientific information, it can scarcely be doubted by unprejudiced minds that the Tribune is more useful to society than this new Episcopal cathedral can possibly be.

IN somewhat closely examining the arguments of some who deny the existence of God, we seem to see an unconscious antagonism principally to the theological idea of God. Their arguments do not appear to us conclusive at all against that idea of God which we think science is slowly but surely advancing. In this matter, as well as in that of immortality, it is well not to be too hasty in denying. Thinkers can afford to wait; and, while we are waiting, we believe that we have good ground for expecting that the best we now conceive of will turn out to be true.

DR. CHEEVER, of the Forty-Second Street Presbyterian Church, New York, preached a sermon on prayer last month, which, within the pale of Christianity, was eminent for good sense and liberality. He says: "If you imagine that you have nothing to do after this prayer, you are greatly mistaken. You must have an incessant watchfulness. When you make this prayer—'Breathe in me a pure heart'—you have entered upon a life-long struggle. It is an unceasing, never-ending fight between the higher and the baser nature, which are both working to obtain the mastery. Therefore your work must last with your life." And much more of the same sort. What "Liberal Christianity" can improve upon this as the philosophy of Christian praying? The true idea seems to us to be that work itself is prayer. Anything over and above this is aspiration, not petition or importunity. We do not need to ask that the divine laws shall be fulfilled. They will be, whether we ask or not. But we may aspire to the best, and we may endeavor to conform to and coöperate with the laws which secure it.

Gerrit Smith on "The Index."

PETERBORO, N. Y., May 1, 1873.

DOCTOR FITZHUGH, Livingston Co., N. Y.:

My Dear Kinsman,—You like THE INDEX of Toledo, Ohio. So do I. Its vigorous reasonings and its beautiful candor and fairness make it a very attractive and useful paper. Its leading position, however,—that Christianity is not the true and ultimate religion, and that our duty is to stand outside of it—I cannot, as yet, fall in with.

Where shall we look to learn what is man's true religion? To man himself. If we could conceive of such an absurdity as a horse-religion, it would be of a religion suited to the horse. So, too, the religion for human nature must clearly be the one which that nature calls for. In other words, to know what moral character and what moral life his nature calls for is to know man's true religion. Hence, he who is the most natural of men is the most religious of men; and it is a mistake to say—

"Nature must count her gold but dross,
If she would gain the heavenly land."

We cannot attain to that land by ignoring or disparaging Nature—but by obeying and honoring her. He, who abides most steadfastly in his nature, and is most careful to meet all her demands upon him, is the best of all men, and therefore the happiest of all men. The unjust man, the merciless man, the proud man, the dissolute man, is, by force of his violated nature, an unhappy man. The debauchee and drunkard have so far perverted and debased their nature, as to be amongst the most miserable of men. And who that sees how unhappy a creature the liar makes of himself can doubt that his nature required him to be truthful in order to be happy? We learn both from experience and observation that men are made to be benevolent and to find their own happiness in studying and promoting the happiness of others. Hence, the deeper they sink themselves in selfishness, the deeper they sink themselves in misery. Our nature, if preserved in its original benevolence, forbids our betaking ourselves to occupations in which we cannot benefit and bless, but in which we rather curse, mankind. He has departed from his true nature who sells tobacco, or who, like the sham Christians of the Connecticut Valley, takes God's good earth to produce the vile weed: and he has very widely departed from it who sells the drunkard's drink, or who grows the materials for it.

As religion is our most important concern, there is, therefore, nothing of which we need to have, and are entitled to have, such certain proof. It cannot be that our Heavenly Father has left us in necessary uncertainty as to what is the true religion. But it is Nature only that supplies us with certain knowledge on any subject. How unreasonable, then, how unphilosophical and absurd, for him who would study to know what is the true religion, to go away from the certainties of Nature to traditions and histories! Even the best of histories are so marked with man's imperfections, that the uncertainty of history has become proverbial. "History is a lie," is a universally accepted saying.

The religion of Nature is the one true religion. If Christianity does not recognize this fact, then THE INDEX is right in repudiating Christianity.

Christianity must not be identified with the superstitions and speculations, legends and myths, connected with it either in or out of the Bible. It must be judged in the light of what its great Teacher taught to be its substance and essence. In this light it is the religion of love to God and love to man: and this is the very religion revealed in Nature. My nature teaches me to regard my fellow-man as I regard myself, for the reason that he ranks in the scale of being with myself; and it also teaches me that we are both to love God supremely, for the reason that he is the Father of us both.

Every man who has not so far dulled and destroyed his nature as to render it unfit to guide him, knows the difference between moral right and moral wrong:—in other words, he is capable of distinguishing the essentially true from the essentially false religion. Christianity affirms this in Jesus' saying to the promiscuous assembly and even to those who had darkened and debased themselves by hypocrisy: "Yes, and why even of yourselves judge ye not what is right?" And so deeply engraved upon the heart of human nature is equity, that every man, even though he have but shreds of human nature left in him, knows that he should do as he would be done by. But emphatically is this the teaching of Christianity also. How obvious is the harmony—is the oneness, indeed—between Christianity and Nature in respect to impartial goodness! The former commands to us the latter by the example of the sun's rising upon the evil and the good, and the rain's falling upon the just and the unjust. Then, again, that the sole duty of man is "to do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with God" is a lesson which Christianity got from Judaism, and Judaism got from Nature.

In this age, when science is testing all things, a prominent objection to Christianity is that it enjoins prayer, and that prayer is an unnatural absurdity. I admit that it enjoins prayer: and I hold that nothing is more natural than prayer. Indeed, so entirely natural is it that Christianity, if it forbade or ignored prayer, could not be the religion of Nature; and therefore could not be the true religion. Nothing is more natural than for distressed want to make supplications, and nothing is more natural than for alarmed sin, yes, and for broken-hearted sin also, to pray for forgiveness. I add that nothing is more natural than for conscious weakness to praise and adore power, especially boundless power.

The absurdity of prayer is insisted on in the light of God's unchangeableness. Nevertheless, there is a sense in which it is not unreasonable to suppose that he does change, and that, in his self-adaptiveness, he is different to different persons—different on different occasions. There is a legend that the famous statue of Memnon in Egypt was so constructed as to break forth in sublime music at every rising of the sun upon it. May we not suppose that there is a fact in the case of the true God which matches this fancy in the case of the false one? May we not reasonably suppose that God has so constructed his temple—his universe—that "prayer ardent opens heaven"?—and that blessings, withheld from the prayerless, do, in some form or other, descend to the prayerful? Methinks that the attitude of this world toward its great and loving Father will not be entirely what it should be until all lips shall break forth in prayer and express the thankfulness, praise, and supplication of all hearts.

I do not need to bolster my argument for prayer by reliance on either supernatural or special answers to prayer. I believe the answer to prayer to be as natural as the prayer, and, moreover, that the answer is as truly ordained from the beginning as is any other of the arrangements of Nature. It is surely not unreasonable to suppose that, from the beginning, prayer has been made "a condition precedent" to the bestowment of many of the blessings which come to the prayerful and, indeed, to the prayerless also. It is said that God knows our wants without our expressing them. He does—but has he not the right to require us to express them? May he not say in the words of Ezekiel (36: 37) "I will yet for this be inquired of—to do it?" God, because he is God, is necessarily different to the pure and merciful from what he is to the froward (18th Psalm)—necessarily different to the proud from what he is to the humble. He would not be God, did he not resist the proud whilst giving his grace to the humble.

We must stand up for the religion of the Bible—not because it is in the Bible, but because it is in Nature. The Bible, though grandest and best of all books, yet, being the work of men, may and does contain errors. But Nature is as free from errors as is he from whom it came. We should not, in our ignorance and superstition, idolize the Bible and claim perfection for it. But we should prize it because it essentially agrees with Nature, explains Nature and enforces it. Christianity, though so much of error is mixed with it, must, in its essentials, be one with Nature. Were it not so, it could not have been so largely influential in holding millions to their uncorrupted nature and in moulding them into that precious character and beautiful life which they and they only can attain to who are kept faithful to the claims of their God-given nature.

As I have already virtually said, their nature shows that men are made to love one another, and thus be happy in one another. But Christianity, so emphatically one with Nature at this point, goes so far as to declare that "love is the fulfilling of the law." Let us then cling to Christianity and seek to purify it of its dross and of whatever that is contrary to nature has crept into it. For none of all these evil and spurious mixtures is Christ's religion responsible. They are to be thrown out because of their violent disagreement with its great principles and precepts.

May this sure and simple religion—this religion of Nature and reason, of justice and goodness—be, my beloved friend, yours and mine and our children's. I trust that it is yours. I would there were more evidence that it is mine also—more evidence in the experiences of my heart and manifestations of my life.

Of all the men who have walked this earth and wet it with their tears and sweat and blood, none have lived so obediently to the laws of their being, in a word so naturally, as Jesus. Why then should we doubt that the religion he taught is the religion of Nature?—in other words, the true religion? It is an entire mistake that the mission of Jesus was to teach a new religion. It was to revive in the minds and hearts of men and call forth in their lives that which, from the beginning of the world, had been the only true religion, and that which, to the end of the world, will be the only true religion—the religion of Nature.

I repeat, why should we doubt that it was the religion of Nature which Jesus taught? He was its supreme expositor. He was himself preëminently the child of Nature. He loved her with his whole heart—even with a woman's love. Her whole wealth of illustration was ever at his service; and she ever stood ready to enliven and adorn his truths and enforce his arguments. When we reflect that Jesus taught and insisted that men can receive his religion only in a child-like spirit—only, indeed, by becoming as little children, dropping their artificial and cunning life, and returning, as if by a new birth, to the naturalness, simplicity, and sincerity of childhood—when I say that all this is before our mind, how can we doubt that it was the religion of Nature which he urged on the acceptance of his hearers? Especially, how can we doubt that he who was so given to deep and fervent prayer taught the naturalness and therefore the need of prayer?

It may be objected to my train of thought that human nature is too diverse in its different races, and, indeed, in the different individuals of the same race, to afford a uniform guide and standard in the matter of religion. But man is essentially the same every where. "As in water face answereth to face, so the heart of man to man." The only danger at this point is the mistaking of the perversions and abuses of Nature for Nature herself. The debauchee and drunkard must not let their evil habits decide for them what is the true religion. No sinner must let his sins do this. Every person is, in spite of the perversions and pollutions of his nature, held responsible to his nature as it was before he had perverted and polluted it. He is to be judged by and bound to conform to his original nature, however many and wide may have been his departures from it. Let him fix his eye on a nature still as pure as when it came from the hand of its Maker. Let him fix it on Jesus. Say not that Jesus was a Hebrew; had the training, the prejudices, and partialities of a Hebrew; and therefore could not be a universal model. He was far more than a Hebrew. He represented all races. He was a man, and believed, as it lies back of all races, sects, and educations, all literatures and traditions.

Perhaps I have done wrong to THE INDEX. For, perhaps, I have unduly magnified the difference between it and myself. This difference may be wholly in our definitions of Christianity. My definition does not include its unchristian mixtures. But THE INDEX includes them all in its definition, and holds Christ's religion responsible for them all. Were its definition just, there would be no ground to complain of its war upon Christianity. But in my view it is exceedingly, though unintentionally, unjust. Christianity is what its constructive principles are. It is what these always and every where call for—nothing more, nothing less. If they call for any moral wrong, then Christianity is wrong; otherwise not. These principles determine its theoretical scope and practical character: and it is unreasonable to hold it responsible for anything which violates them. It is true that Jesus said somewhat more than sufficed to enunciate these principles—but it was only to illustrate and explain them. It was certainly not to overthrow nor invalidate them. In other words, it is not supposable that Jesus should speak against the tenor of the religion he taught—against the principles of his own religion. Affectionately yours,

GERRIT SMITH.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

RATIONAL RELIGION.

AN ADDRESS READ TO THE LIBERAL SOCIETY OF GLAZIER, KANSAS, MARCH 16, 1873.

BY J. E. SUTTON.

Religion has been defined as "any system of faith or worship;" as the religion of the Christians, the Mohammedans, the Hindus, &c. Sometimes the worship is a spontaneous adoration of a supreme power, not for a purpose, but from an intuitive impulse. Continued worship, after it becomes established as a regular duty, has for its object either temporal blessings or future rewards in a life to come. The worshiper in all religions endeavors to bring himself into conformity with certain so-called divine laws or commands, and he tries to perfect himself and become fit for everlasting life by obedience to them. Believing that there is an unknown power or being who is the cause of the trials and evils of life, he tries to please his offended deity by obeying what is called his revealed will.

In rational religion we have also an abiding faith, built upon the demonstrations of science. But instead of obedience to an ideal God, we have obedience to uniform, unchangeable laws (call them the laws of God if you please); and it is to the value of such a faith in the uniform laws of Nature, or in other words it is to the importance of this rational religion, that I would invite your attention.

I have selected this subject for discussion to-day for the purpose of defining our position, if possible, on religion; for although we have, in common with all liberal thinkers, outgrown the superstitions of Orthodoxy, we are yet in a state of scepticism rather than of positive belief. We can define our objections to the current Christianity, but are still unable to give clear, distinct ideas of what form of religion we do believe in, remaining in a state of sceptical indecision, or denying that there is any truth in religion at all.

In making the opening address on this subject, let me first call your attention to the fact that all religions depend upon the conception of the Divine nature and of human nature, and upon the relation supposed to exist between the two.

According to the current Orthodox conception, man is a being possessing a certain mysterious "free will," capable of thwarting the purposes of Deity—of creating in his own motives to action—of always doing right if he likes.

The Creator is represented as making an experiment with man to find out what he will do, punishing him for disobedience, and then providing an atonement.

In contrast to this, the rationalist believes that mental science has demonstrated that man does not possess a free will, cannot create his own motives, cannot thwart the operations of law, and is not always capable of doing right. In short, he believes that man is progressively developed; first his animal nature, with all its impulses, then the intellect and his higher sentiments. The different unfoldings of his capacities are the result of his surroundings—of his education and social influences. Being only gradually developed, he necessarily "sins," or acts in accordance with the feelings first developed, and he just as necessarily suffers the consequences. But as soon as his higher sentiments and intellect are unfolded, they control his conduct, because they become more active, more powerful, as the lessons of experience convince him that the stern inflexibility of law is followed by a beneficent result; and he sees the necessity of controlling certain impulses, if he would gain greater good. Gradually recognizing the great fact that man is a creature of laws in this world, he directs his attention to discovering such laws and to living in obedience to them.

It is true an individual is limited in this investigation of the laws of his being by his particular sphere in life. He may only have leisure and opportunity to grasp the most general principles of the leading sciences bearing upon his welfare; yet it is all important for him to know what those laws are which he should more especially devote his attention to, no matter what his avocation in life may be. Experience constantly teaches him that no law of Nature can be violated with impunity. He that sins against or breaks any such law has to pay the penalty, no matter how good his intentions may have been. Strychnine will poison the good man just as effectually as the vilest sinner, even though it may have been taken by mistake.

The rationalist feels the necessity of knowing the laws which govern his welfare here, and obedience to them is his religion, giving a harmonious many-sided development that fits him for the active duties of life. One of the laws of his mental nature he finds to be that there is only a limited amount of nervous energy and thought-power possessed by him. If he gives too much of his mental force in one direction, he inevitably becomes deficient in other directions; it is therefore quite important to concentrate his thought on those sciences or laws which are of first importance. Let me name some of those which seem most essential:—

1st. Commercial and industrial laws, or those which govern the acquisition of property,—material prosperity, as a basis, being indispensable to all of us.

2nd. Physiology, or those laws which govern our bodily health. We must have physical health, or mental development cannot be long maintained.

3d. Psychology, or those laws which govern the evolution of thought and feeling. This is more especially necessary to show how easily the senses can be deceived, and how apt we are to mistake subjective conditions for objective realities.

4th. Sociology, or those laws which govern man in his social relations.

5th. Geology and Astronomy, or those general laws which have governed the evolution of the earth and the heavenly bodies. We need this, if for nothing else, to show the absurdity of the prevailing superstition in regard to the Mosaic history of the creation, etc.

Perhaps it will be said that these sciences have nothing to do with religion; but let us bear in mind what this sentiment of religion is. In its last analysis, it is not that sentiment which urges us to do our duty; that is, to act in such way as to accomplish the greatest good to others as well as to ourselves? And how can we gain that greatest good excepting by obeying the laws controlling the general welfare, in which our own is included?

The language of religion has always been and is now, "What shall I do to be saved?" Let me illustrate this a little. "What shall I do to be saved?" is the first feeble cry of religion in her infancy. "Bring me burnt offerings, sin offerings, and peace offerings, and my anger shall be stayed." Again it is asked, "What shall I do to be saved?" "Have faith in my prophets, my beloved sons,—Confucius, Buddha, Mohammed, Jesus; believe in them; trust not thy own reason, but rely on them and thou shalt be saved." It is the reply. But now comes the demand of rational religion. It is no longer the feeble cry of infancy, nor the self-distrustful supplication of youth, but the earnest inquiry of manhood with conscious self-respect. Religion now "stands on her feet," and with earnest gaze would "eye all Nature through, and learn the ways of God to man." She now sees all creatures here below governed by uniform, unchangeable laws. Her question is answered now, not by the priest, not by any supernatural revelation, but by the voice of science. "Obey the laws governing your welfare; rely no longer on the authority of priests or the Church; prove all things and hold fast that which is good, and thou shalt be saved."

In conclusion, rational religion is based upon the necessity of obedience to established law; while Orthodox or so-called Evangelical religion is based upon the assumed importance of obedience to an ideal, imaginary God, and a self-appointed priesthood.

The one is spiritual freedom, the other spiritual slavery. The one develops the whole man, his moral and intellectual nature, by bringing it in harmony with the laws governing it. The other expresses every upward aspiration by creating self-distrust and abject dependence upon the priesthood and the Church.

The only revelations that the rationalist accepts are the established laws of Nature made known to him by science; and the most acceptable worship he can pay to the Infinite power is to obey such laws.

It may be said that very few have opportunities for acquiring a knowledge of the sciences mentioned, or even of a general idea of their leading principles, the masses of the people not having time or inclination to study such subjects.

It is a melancholy fact that the majority are so situated, and a religion of authority, based upon an infallible pope or an infallible book, may be better adapted to them as long as they are in that undeveloped condition. But let us not forget that mental evolution is constantly going on; and when rationalists adopt a religion, an opportunity is afforded to all who are "getting out of the woods"—getting free from superstition—to unite on a higher platform and to bring themselves in harmony with such laws; which is really the only "divinely appointed way of salvation."

But let us not for a moment suppose that the rationalist's religion means only a personal salvation—is concerned only with his own welfare in this world, or the next.

If he has secured bodily health by attention to the laws of physiology; if astronomy and geology have shown him the absurdity of the Mosaic history of creation, and freed him from superstition and spiritual slavery; if psychology has cautioned him not to rely alone upon the evidence of his senses; if moral and social science has taught him to respect the rights of others,—he is in a fair way for further progression.

He has acquired some of the means to a great end,—evolution, or the progressive development of his whole nature and that of his race.

This in short, I believe, is or should be the essence, the object, of rational religion; and it is only to be acquired by a knowledge of the laws governing such development.

Each step gained in such evolution gives us more leverage—more power to make further advancement. The farther we advance, the more we feel in harmony with the forces of Nature (or with the Divine Purpose, if you please), manifested all around us in unfolding the inanimate, as well as the animate. The earth, the solar system, the Universe, so far as our limited vision can penetrate, all proclaim the same grand principle of evolution; and rational religion urges it, as the highest duty, to aim at the development of ourselves and of our race.

[Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1873, by F. E. Asstot, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.]

PAUL GOWER.

A RATIONALISTIC STORY

OF

ENGLISH AND AMERICAN LIFE.

CHAPTER XXIX.

THE CHRISTENING OF A COMIC PAPER.

When Paul Gower and Richard Sabin returned to the Astor House, they found a couple of notes from Mr. Cyrus Woodruff, politely reminding them that the proposed supper at Windust's to which they had been invited, would take place that evening, at 11 o'clock precisely, and expressing a hope that nothing would occur to deprive the company of the pleasure of their attendance. Accordingly, a little before that hour, the young men presented themselves at the locality in question. It was, at the date of which I write, one of the older sort of New York restaurants and liquor-saloons, having one entrance in Park Row and another in Ann Street.

Being shown up stairs, into a room commanding a side view of Barnum's Museum, and containing a long table set ready for the festive occasion, they were very cordially received by Mr. Woodruff, and immediately introduced to about half a dozen young men already assembled, who stood conversing in a group near the fireplace, where, the evening being mild and pleasant, very little fire was burning. It appeared that twice that number of guests were expected. Mr. Braugh had not yet arrived, having to play in both the comedy and after-piece at his theatre; Mr. Ritchings was down stairs, issuing orders; and the sonorous voice of Mr. O'Byrne had already duplicated Mr. Woodruff's welcome—breaking off in a boast to his friends of having deserved all their thanks by suggesting the party, to do so.

Almost all present were, or would have called themselves, literary gentlemen; of no special fame or pre-eminence, but cleverish fellows of second or third-rate talent, who lived by their wits, in print. None of them (except, perhaps, Mr. O'Byrne) had much connection with the daily press—which, in the United States, generally absorbs the best marketable ability, by virtue of paying for it—but they wrote for the cheap weeklies, the story papers, some of the magazines, and the low-class comic journals. Among such, the intellectual standard is not likely to be very high; only they have adopted that particular occupation, with more or less fitness for it. There is as much conventionalism in the craft as in other trades, and no more originality or genius in the bulk of its followers: given a commission, serious or comic, to any of the party, he would have produced something smart and readable, and according to the current models, but nothing beyond. They were of the rank and file of literature, or rather its light skirmishers; mostly young men, good humored, self-satisfied, and tolerably honest—unless the wrong side afforded an opportunity for saying smarter things than the right one. As their appearance presented as little individuality as their styles of composition, I pretermitted description.

A superior person, however, intellectually, whatever he might be morally, soon arrived in the shape of a tall, handsome, young fellow, with a bright, intelligent countenance, ornamented by a slight moustache, but destitute of beard and whiskers. He was very stylishly-dressed, though rather in advance of the season—which Mr. O'Byrne immediately accused him of "rushing"—in a light summer suit of English cut (New York then inclined to the Parisian standard of fashion), a gay neckerchief beneath his turned-down shirt-collar, and straw-colored kid gloves; also he carried a little cane. But for his flushed face and the peculiar, unnatural brilliancy of his eyes, denoting a certain stage of intoxication, his appearance would have been extremely prepossessing. He had begun life as an artist, drifted into journalism, and now contributed to much the same class of publications I have already described, stories, editorials, criticism, gossip and nonsense by the yard measure, and sometimes verses of an order sufficiently high to entitle him to the appellation of a poet, and to a better position than he seemed to care for winning; for he was, both in principle and practice, one of the most thorough and reckless of Bohemians, and appeared to delight in wasting his endowments in excess and folly, which conduct he defended by a kind of cynical philosophy, as perverse as it was deplorable. His arrival made something of a sensation in the group by the fireplace.

"How are you, George?" and, "Golding, how goes it?" were the general salutations.

"Fine!" he answered. "Everything is lovely and the goose hangs particularly high. I've been on the spree for three days—not in bed since Wednesday, by —! Here, boy!"—to a negro, who was busied about the supper-table—"fetch me some brandy. I must keep it up till to-morrow, for I've got to fight a duel in the morning."

"A duel? oh, gas! you don't get us on a string with that!" ejaculated the incredulous and metaphorical audience.

"Fact, gentlemen, however you like to take it," insisted Golding, whose thickened utterance and heightened color, as aforesaid, were the only indications of his condition—there are men whose constitution seems to defy excess for a season and only yield to the most deplorable persistence. "Though I don't mean to say it's serious. There's an awful little fool of an Englishman—the biggest ass for his size I've ever met—at our boarding-house, who has bragged so enormously about a duel on board ship, which he confesses never came to anything, that the fellows determined to take the conceit out of him. So they got up a sell, of which I don't see the fun myself; but as they wanted a principal, of course I was on hand. And it's to come off to-morrow morning at Clifton Park, Staten Island—pistols and coffee for two, at eight precisely. I invite all of you who intend to keep sober to accompany me and witness the catastrophe."

"That sounds like our little bantam about the Cayuga," observed Sabin to Paul, and was about to make inquiry of Golding as to the name of the intended victim, when the arrival of Mr. Braugh and two or three others, and the bustle and change of conversation incidental thereto, obliged him to defer the satisfaction of his curiosity to a more convenient occasion.

"Have up supper immediately, Woodruff," said the genial Irishman. "It's after eleven, and by the powers, I'm hungry. If ye'd ever played O'Callaghan on top of Gerald Pepper, bedad, ye'd be the same; especially if it was to a house as thin as Mulrooney's cat, that could crawl through a keyhole and was invisible sideways. Gentlemen, make room for the waiters!" And the supper being served, the guests took such places round the long table as inclination or accident suggested, with Mr. Braugh at the head as chairman, supported on the right and left, respectively, by Messrs. Woodruff and Ritchings; while Mr. O'Byrne was, of his own option, kind enough to assume the post of vice, at the further end; about whom rallied the youngest young men of the company—thinking him a person of consequence and rather esteeming it an honor to be in his vicinity.

It was an excellent supper, as even Mr. O'Byrne—who plumed himself on his gastronomic knowledge, and talked familiarly about the Trois Frères and Véry's—admitted. There were so many kinds of oysters, cooked in such a variety of ways, and all so tempting, as to bewilder the appetite with the difficulty of choosing where to begin. There was an immense chowder, or fish-stew, compounded after the true Daniel Webster recipe. There were reed-birds, or American ortolans—plump, dainty little fowl, served, like British woodcock, on toast—and fillets of marrow, streaky beef with mushrooms. Add frogs à la Française—for New York has, long ago, got over its Anglo-American prejudices—and ale, claret, and champagne, and you have the staple of a meal which, as the chairman remarked, "did equal credit to the spirited liberality of their hospitable friend Woodruff and the culinary resources of the establishment." Mr. Braugh also repeated Macbeth's grace, praising it as the best in the world, because one of the shortest.

I cannot honestly report that the conversation which accompanied the supper and set in afterwards was either particularly intellectual or amusing; or, in fact, anything but cliquish and professional. The guests talked, as most people do, of their ordinary pursuits and interests; of Jack's play, Tom's book, Ned's poem; of what Bilkins of the Emerald had said in that paper about Gutler's latest native-American sequel to the newest of Tom Taylor's dramas, and how Gutler had threatened to lick Bilkins, not alone on account of his malicious criticism, but because he had the impudence to make love to Gretty Gray of the Sunday Scorpion, whom Gutler was sweet upon. Or what an artful dodge that was of Bumpus of the Dredger advertising a "hundred-dollars-a-column" story, when he had it set up solid in ayate secrecy, and remunerated the authoress according to that standard, and then expanded her production into bourgeois for the beguilement of an unsuspecting public. These and similar topics, discussed in a chaffy, cynical tone, and largely flavored with puns and personalities—in the former of which the actors, who had come in with Mr. Braugh, greatly excelled—constituted the material of the talk, which presently became so noisy that, on the removal of the cloth, the chairman rapped upon the table with the handle of his knife to command attention.

"Gentlemen," he said, rising—a resonant "Hear! hear!" from O'Byrne seconding him—"let us proceed to business. You are all aware that the present symposium was intended to be not merely festive and bacchanalian, but also sponsorship. We assemble tonight to deliberate on that first of indispensabilities, a title for the Avatar of wit and wisdom which is about to descend upon this great and happy country, consummating its glory and redounding to the benefit of everybody, pecuniary and otherwise—which, bedad, some of us stand in great need of! The immortal Shakespeare has inquired with his usual perspicacity, 'What's in a name?' to which I might reply, 'A mighty dale of botheration intirely!' for so we find it. 'Give a dog a bad name and hang him,' says the proverb, whence I assume that untimely suspension not unfrequently results from an unfortunate choice of nomenclature among the canine creation; which calamity may extend itself to the higher walks of literature. In avoiding such a contingency we are all interested. Me public-spirited friend, Woodruff, has offered a reward of thirty dollars for the desideratum in question, which I trust will eventually find their way into the editorial eschequer, in equivalent for my, at present, favorite proposition, 'The Lantern of Diogenes.' Let him who can suggest a better name, spake now, or forever after hold his peace."

"Yours is too long, Braugh, and too classic," said Mr. O'Byrne, when the rapping of knuckles and tumbler elicited by this speech—and especially by the latter portion of it—had died away. "What will the newsboys make of it? and how much does the American public know about Diogenes?"

"Sure they've heard of him, and we can sink the cunctious in general and only call it 'The Lantern.' But it'll be mighty handy to have him editorially—think of the personality of 'Punch.'"

"Punch be d—d!" broke in George Golding. "That's always the rock ahead of American comic papers—they all feel bound to imitate him in everything. Why can't we be original?"

"Because, me boy, the public is an ass and wouldn't recognize anything as comic that wasn't after the accustomed models. There'd be a great deal of reason in what ye say if the world was made up of clever fellows like ourselves; but it isn't. Don't shoot over people's heads or ye'll never hit 'em." Which sentiment gave rise to some discussion, the majority of the company, including the publishers, leaning to Mr. Braugh's opinion.

"What do you say to 'The Growler' for a name?" demanded a spectacled, bearded, black-haired man, with prominent cheek-bones and lively eyes, who sat next Paul, and had loquaciously introduced himself to our friends as an Englishman, artist, ex-panoramatist, lecturer, clerk to an insurance office and literary man in general.

"Oh, shut up, Bangs!" politely responded one of the party. "You brought out a paper with that title years ago, and it burst up after two numbers—I remember."

"Well, it wasn't the fault of the name, if it did—or of the contents," answered the other, good humoredly. "I think 'The Growler' or 'Lobscouse' would do first-rate. Do you know what lobscouse is, gentlemen? because—"

"—You haven't heard our new rule up at Pfaff's, have you, Bangs?—that nobody's allowed to make a fool of himself!"

"That's too rigorous altogether—it'll make a howling desert of Pfaff's, if carried out." And Golding refilled his tumbler and lit a cigar.

"What we want," said O'Byrne, sonorously returning to the original subject, "is something at once short, striking, novel, and national, as well as expressive of the character and objects of the paper. It ought to hit the public in the eye, so to speak, and yet button-hole the thinking and educated portion of the community—fellows who are not to be caught with chaff or catchpenny nonsense, but who'll see directly that we intend to give them the right kind of article. It should be unapproachable and irresistible."

"Enough! thou hast persuaded me that no mortal can ever be a poet!" ejaculated Golding, who had read Rasselas. "Anything else for thirty dollars?"

"I think it's quite sufficient, gentlemen," said Mr. Woodruff, at which there was a general laugh.

"Wouldn't 'The Ornithorhynchus Paradoxus' fulfill your conditions, O'Byrne?" asked one of the actors.

"What in thunder is that?" was the rejoinder.

"Why, a duck-billed platypus!" And the "sell" taking, nearly all present began shouting out titles, the only recommendation of which was their absurdity. Perceiving that the object of the meeting stood in considerable danger of being smothered beneath multitudinous nonsense, Mr. Braugh rose to remonstrate:—

"Gentlemen," he said, shrewdly and effectively, "I shall demand the premium if ye don't produce something better. To recall ye to business, I'll read the names already sent in, good, bad, and indifferent:—'The Peep-Show,' 'Mrs. Grundy,' 'Yankee Doodle' (there have been two Yankee Doodles started in New York in my recollection, and both failed), 'Judy,' 'Toby,' 'The Bubble' (which would invite invidious allusions), 'Uncle Sam's Looking-Glass,' 'Mephistopheles' (a divil of a name!), 'Jonathan's Joke-Bag,' 'The Rocket' (go up like a rocket and come down like a stick, they'd be sure to say), 'The Tickler,' 'The Doughnut,' 'Popcorn,' 'The Firefly,' 'The Mosquito' (why didn't the gentleman suggest 'The Bedbug,' while he was about it?), 'The Kaleidoscope of Fun,' 'Nobody' (which is putting too modest an estimate upon ourselves intirely), 'Puck,' 'Flibbertigibbet,' 'The Cocktail' (that wouldn't please a horse-dealer, but may be the gentleman who proposed it likes 'em so well himself that he credits the public with the same predilections), 'The Slogdollar' (as if we intended to become the oracle of the prize-ring), 'The Penguin,' 'The Dodo'—and that's all. Now, gentlemen, it has been conceded that none of these appellations, however ingenious, are so suitable as 'The Lantern,' wherefore it still has the preference."

"Would 'The Porcupine' do?" asked Richard Sabin, who had thought over the matter and made a sketch of the title he proposed, which he now produced and handed to the chairman. Mr. Braugh received it courteously, looked at it, at first with curiosity, then with approbation, and then submitted it to Messrs. Woodruff and Ritchings.

"Bedad, sir, I think ye've hit the nail on the head," said the good-natured Irishman, after a brief, animated conference. "The idea's none the worse for its involving a suggestion of old Cobbett—'Peter Porcupine,' ye know—but if we wait for entire originality, we'll never get launched, at all at all. I believe ye, me boy"—as Dick protested, with entire truth, that he had never heard of the writer in question. "And the drawing is first-rate. A quare divil of a human porcupine, in a paletot and trousers, standing erect centrally, on the hind legs of him, with a pen in one hand and a pencil in the other, emitting quills in every direction, which impale all sorts of public characters, as well as representations of Folly, Humbug, and Hypocrisy: underneath an arch affording a view of New York. Gentlemen, pass it round and let us have your opinions. Here's your health, Mr. Sabin, and ye're an acquisition to us!"

Hereupon ensued considerable discussion, some being for, some against the adoption of Richard's idea. But the publishers liking it, as well as Mr. Braugh, and the sketch displaying it in the most favorable aspect, Sabin was, at length, declared the winner of the thirty dollars. Incontinently he requested permission to invest a portion of the same in a couple of bowls of punch, and, the materials appearing, compounded them in such a skilful manner as to command the admiration of all present. And the evening began to wax more bacchanalian and hilarious than ever.

"What are ye scribbling, George?" asked one of the party of Golding, who was busied with the stump of a pencil on the back of a playbill.

"Hold on a minute and I'll sing it," he answered. And as Golding was known to possess a faculty for rhyming amounting almost to improvisation, they waited until his rapid fingers had completed their task; when he sang as follows:—

"Here's success to the Porcupine!
We'll drink him in punch, in ale and wine;
From the tip of his snout to his nethermost quill
We'll 'go the whole hog' in a bumper—fill!"

"There's an old story—I s'pose it's a flum—
That he shoots off his quills at his foes, ker slam!
But indulging too freely in this little freak,
Gets ragged and poor and deplorably weak."

"We'll blaze away at all who provoke
Us, with satire and sarcasm, fun and joke;
But for every quill we expend in the muse,
Grow sleeker and stronger and more prosperous!"

"The Porcupine's flesh is esteemed good food—
Our Porcupine's substance is bound to be good:
He's a tail that from under his quills depends—
We'll have plenty of tales—and my parallel ends."

"Here's success to the Porcupine!
We'll drink him in punch, in ale and wine;
From the tip of his snout to his nethermost quill
We'll 'go the whole hog' in a bumper—fill!"

The company were sufficiently exhilarated to applaud this production to the echo, and even to insist upon an encore: when, adopting the first (and last) verse as chorus, they sang it enthusiastically, increasing the effect by thumping upon the table and floor with their fists and feet—a performance which must have disturbed the slumber of such animals as Mr. Barnum happened to have, at that time, in his Museum. And forthwith singing and speech-making set in until the breaking up of the party—of which the reader may well dispense with other particulars—at half-past four in the morning.

"And so New York will soon have three comic papers," said Dick Sabin, as he and his friend crossed over to the Astor House, in the solemn, beautiful, reproachful light of the newly-risen sun; "the Porcupine, Pepperpot, and Pickaxe—it sounds like Peter Piper picking his peck of pepper! But it makes good for trade, you know. That's a good thing ol' fella!"

THE LEGEND OF THE FROZEN LAKE.

(Translated from a Collection of Norwegian Folk-Lore and Village Legends, &c., published at Christiania, and re-published in Trübner's "American and Oriental Record.")

Once upon a time, in the early part of the winter, a traveller had to cross over a frozen lake where the ice was of varied and unknown thickness. Before venturing out on the ice he lighted his pipe, and, sitting down on a stone by the side of a road (which ran close to the lake shore, nearly at right angles with his own course), he thus communed with himself:—

"I am bound to cross this lake; but in so doing I run a considerable risk of losing my health, or even life, by falling through the ice. If I can manage to keep on the thick ice, and avoid the thin, of course I shall be all right as far as safety is concerned; but the road over the ice is not staked out yet, and there is not so much as a footprint on it. Perhaps some of these good people passing to and fro on the road may be able to give me some useful directions. At any rate, I will just ask them."

And so he did, there being no lack of people to ask; they all spoke kindly to him at first, and though they did not answer his questions satisfactorily as to the thickness of the ice, they seemed as willing and as anxious to direct his course as if their own safety had depended on it. What surprised the traveller immensely, however, and perplexed him not a little, was that, whereas all advised him earnestly, and some vehemently, no two of them gave him the same counsel, and no one seemed to speak from experience or trustworthy information. In a very few minutes the conversation became somewhat general, the counsellors became more and more excited; some warned him in rather discourteous terms against following the advice of others; and at last they began to quarrel amongst themselves. The poor man returned slightly disgusted to his stone, his pipe, and his meditations.

"Now," thought he, "if I had only met one of these good people, I should as likely as not have followed his advice; but in the multitude of such counsellors there seems to be anything but wisdom."

Just then two persons, evidently of superior rank, appeared upon the scene; and these were a Bishop and an Archbishop. The Bishop, taking on himself the office of chief speaker, did not wait to be asked, but at once thus addressed the traveller:—

"My son, I see thou art about to cross the frozen lake; and I come to tell thee that the ice is such and such a thickness, here and there respectively, and it is thy duty to believe me."

"Well!" said the traveller, "it is scarcely fair or reasonable to talk about duty in such a matter; but if you really do know more about the ice than those good people yonder, and if you will give me any accurate information about it, I shall be most truly grateful to you."

"My son," said the Bishop, "I perceive thou art in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity. Here is no question of accurate information, but of saving faith. As for knowing more about the ice than those good people, the fact is that I know considerably less. All my knowledge of ice is derived from ancient history. I have not made myself in any way acquainted with this year's ice; nor do I consider that I am at liberty to do so with any view of forming, or helping others to form, an independent opinion. From my early youth I have been trained, and from early manhood hired and pledged, to declare to such as you that the ice is just so thick and just so thin, respectively here and there (no more and no less), as it was voted to me, or as it was supposed to have been voted to me, many hundred years ago by an assembly of good men, not one of whom ever saw ice in his life. The actual thickness or thinness is of no real importance. To adopt what we call the orthodox dimensions, is the one thing needful, and there is a special over-natural efficacy in adopting these, by which you will be enabled to skim over the thinnest ice in perfect safety, while the thickest ice will melt away under the feet of him who doubts, or is so unfortunate as to be influenced by measurement, testimony, calculation, or otherwise to consider it as thicker or thinner than he has been taught to believe it. Of course, when I say you must believe, I mean you must profess to believe, and act as if you did. Go now, my son, and be of good cheer."

The traveller, if the truth must be told, did not think much of the Bishop's reasoning; but he was much taken with the good prelate's reverend appearance, peculiar dress, and phraseology; and still more by his authoritative and yet benign and fatherly manner. So, after remaining a few seconds, "perplexed with doubt and afraid of condemnation," he declared that he believed every word that the good Bishop had said to him, went boldly forth on the ice, was soon out of sight, and has never been heard of since. The Bishop tells every one that the traveller got safely over the lake, and the Archbishop adds that it is "a most wholesome doctrine and very full of comfort."

AN ARGUMENT FOR FREE EDUCATION.

(From the Bee-Hive, Sheffield, Eng.)

Captain Maxse, R.N., in speaking at Sheffield last week, said:—

I feel that in the Education Question we cannot too frequently revert to the simple proposition which lies at the root of the educational controversy. This proposition is, and it is the one we contend for, that the children of the poor are entitled to education, and that the State is bound in the interest of the community to see that such education is provided. Some people I am aware will endeavor to raise a cloud of words over the very term education, and attempt to puzzle us by demanding a definition. I mean by education, instruction in the elements of human knowledge. All education is, of course, comparative, and the very highest education is partial and incomplete; the wisest men know that they are but as children in the presence of the unrevealed and the infinite; but because the appetite for knowledge is insatiable, and because the unknown and untold are limitless, this is no reason for withholding from children a little of what is known. First, we have discovered now for some centuries a method of communicating with each other by means of certain signs.

Supposing that by some natural law children were born dumb and blind, and required an artificial operation to release their faculties of speech and sight, would it not be a disgrace to any community were children to grow up, for want of this operation, without sight and without the power of speech? Yet we have been guilty of an equal disgrace for centuries after centuries; and now there are in England and Wales, speaking roughly, one million children who await their civilizing faculties—of reading and writing. These children implore you, you who elect legislators and who assist to form public opinion, you who have consciences and a sense of responsibility towards helpless fellow-creatures—they implore you to save them from the bondage of ignorance. They ask to be included in your civilization, they pray to be instructed in its common language. It must be remembered that all the disadvantages of civilization fall to the poor, while the profit of civilization goes entirely to the rich. The poor savage who lives in a natural state has at least the advantages of a natural state—he has a free soil and an open hunting-ground. Surely it cannot be intended that the total result of civilization should be unfavorable to the poor laborer as compared with the poor savage! The theory of course is that if the laborer is deprived of the conditions of a wild state he partakes of instead what are called the "blessings" of civilization. These blessings appear to me to be of doubtful value, as far as he is concerned. I only know that if the choice were given me, as to whether I would be a savage belonging to some wild tribe, or an average English agricultural laborer such as he is in the southern counties, I should unhesitatingly declare for the savage. Nay, I would rather be a savage than find myself located as the head of one of the many thousand families, consisting of from three to eight persons, who occupy one small room at the east end of London, or similar accommodation in many of our large towns. While civilization appears to me worthless which, while withdrawing natural conditions, does not fit man for artificial ones. The ignorant, illiterate animal man is in harmony with savage Nature, but he is at flagrant discord with civilized society. And not only this, but by a beautiful self-adjusting law his presence forbids your progress. My complaint against the Conservatives is, and not only against the Conservatives, but against all those who are so selfishly immersed in their private affairs that they pay no attention to public affairs; my complaint against them is that they keep us in a backward state of civilization. Some people have merely a commercial idea of civilization: they reckon it by exports and imports, and ignore the condition of human beings; and, judging from this low standard, declare that we possess a high state of civilization. I regard this as the grossest delusion: I maintain that civilization is in its infancy. Perhaps some of you read about a month ago of an unfortunate ship that was wrecked on the Dorsetshire coast. Her name was the Royal Adelaide. She was broken up one terribly stormy night upon Chesil beach, under circumstances which should have elicited the noblest emotions of the human heart—generosity, compassion, and a tender desire to help. Now, what was the behavior of the inhabitants of the coast? The Times reported that large quantities of spirits were washed on shore, and as the barrels floated in they were broached by the crowds who assembled on the beach. In a short time scores of people were lying about in all directions dead drunk. They drank so much that medical assistance had to be obtained to save them from the consequences of their filthy intemperance. Is this high civilization? Could savages degrade themselves more? The district in which this occurred may be described as a thoroughly "Constitutional" one. There is not a school board in Dorsetshire. I have little doubt but what the people who broke the casks open would have mobbed Sir Charles Dilke if he had attempted to give a lecture in the neighborhood; but such people as these may sing or hiccough "Rule Britannia" as much as they please. I can only regard them as lawless barbarians, and I denounce those who uphold a system under which they are inevitably produced as the authors of anarchy and evil. Do you think that if these people had been steadily at school during childhood, with elevating influences about them, with motives supplied for self-respect, placed within reach of the means to decent livelihood, and with some order of mental life imparted, that they could have behaved like mere swine? How can we be civilized when there are thousands of such creatures in our midst, and in the course of constant manufacture under our shameful system of neglect? Are we not entitled to protect ourselves from such outrages?

First, then, the child has its rights. If it is surrounded, in the interest of society, with the artificial circumstances of civilization, we are bound to counteract those which are oppressive by creating some which are helpful; and thus, it appears to me, that, under a high sense of the duties as well as the rights of civilization, the child becomes entitled to education, that is to say, free education. And, secondly, society claims the right to insist upon this being given in order to protect itself from the disastrous consequences of ignorance.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

[From the Boston Advertiser.]

The long-deferred meeting of the World's Evangelical Alliance will take place in New York during the first twelve days in October. In spite of repeated disappointments hitherto, there is every prospect that the large plans which have been for a long time in preparation will be fully carried out. The very successful labors of the Rev. Dr. Schaff in Europe, last year, have already drawn to this country many distinguished representatives of foreign religious bodies, who are now the guests of leading members of the Alliance in New York, or are scattered on tours of observation throughout the country. The Franco-German war broke up, for the time, all hopes of an early meeting of the Alliance; but the war was no sooner over than the representative Evangelical bodies of France and Germany cordially and unanimously accepted the invitation of the American branch of the Alliance. Those interested in the movement confidently hope that "the approaching conference will be one of the grandest religious gatherings ever held in the world, and it is fully expected that the mutual discussions upon important topics to be presented will result in breaking down, in a great measure, many of the barriers of prejudice, on religious subjects, which have blocked the way to a proper spread of Evangelical principles throughout the world."

The grand objects of the Alliance are thus given: First—To promote Evangelical union, with a view to greater success in Christian activity. Second—To maintain and exhibit the essential unity of the Church of Christ. Third—To counteract the influence of infidelity and superstition, especially in their organized forms, and to assist the cause of religious freedom everywhere. The conference will convene at Association Hall, on Thursday evening, October 2d, and continue in session ten days, closing with a farewell service at the Academy of Music, on Sunday evening, October 12th. During each day of the session, the conference will be divided into sections according to language. The New York Evening Post, from which these facts are mainly taken, gives the following as the leading topics to be presented for discussion:—

- Oct. 3—The Present State of Christianity.
- Oct. 4—The Christian Union in its Various Phases.
- Oct. 6—Christianity and its Antagonisms—Infidelity, Rationalism, etc.
- Oct. 7—Christian Life—Family Religion, Rewards, etc.
- Oct. 8—Protestantism and Romanism.
- Oct. 9—Christianity and Civil Government.
- Oct. 10—Christian Missions—Foreign and Domestic.
- Oct. 11—Christianity and Social Evils.

The following members of the American branch of the Alliance will take part in the exercises:—

Wm. H. Allen, LL.D., Girard College, Philadelphia; M. B. Anderson, LL.D., President of the University of Rochester; Rev. Rufus Anderson, D.D., LL.D., Boston; Bishop Gregory T. Bedell, D.D., Gambier, Ohio; Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, Brooklyn; Nathan Bishop, LL.D., and Cephas Brainerd, New York; Felix R. Brunot, Pittsburgh; Rev. F. W. Conrad, D.D., Philadelphia; Bishop George D. Cummins, D.D., Pewee Valley, Ky.; J. L. M. Curry, LL.D., Richmond, Va.; Professor Theodore Dwight, LL.D., and Rev. Thomas M. Eddy, D.D., New York; Professor George F. Fisher, D.D., Yale College; Rev. Richard Fuller, D.D., Baltimore; Professor D. R. Goodwin, D.D., Philadelphia; Professor A. H. Guyot, D.D., Princeton; Rev. John Hall, D.D., New York; Professor Joseph Henry, LL.D., Washington; Rev. Charles Hodge, D.D., LL.D., Princeton; Rev. Moses D. Hoge, D.D., Richmond; Rev. Mark Hopkins, D.D., LL.D., Williamstown; Professor Alvah Hovey, D.D., Newton Centre, Mass.; Professor D. P. Kidder, D.D., Madison, N. J.; Rev. James McCoah, D.D., LL.D., Princeton, N. J.; Rev. W. A. Muhlenberg, New York; Rev. Wm. Nast, D.D., Cincinnati; President J. Williamson, D.D., Lancaster, Pa.; Rev. Richard Newton, D.D., Philadelphia; Professor E. A. Park, D.D., LL.D., Andover, Mass.; Peter Parker, LL.D., Washington, D.C.; Rev. W. A. Passavant, D.D., Pittsburgh; Rev. W. S. Plumer, D.D., Columbia, S.C.; President Noah Porter, D.D., LL.D., Yale College; President Eliphalet Nott Potter, D.D., Union College; Bishop E. de Schweinitz, S.T.D., Bethlehem, Pa.; Bishop Matthew Simpson, D.D., Philadelphia; Professor Henry B. Smith, D.D., New York; Rev. Richard S. Storrs, D.D., Brooklyn; Mr. George H. Stuart, Philadelphia; Professor W. F. Warren, D.D., Boston; Rev. E. A. Washburn, D.D., Mr. Norman White and Rev. E. C. Wines, D.D., New York; Rev. Theodore D. Woolsey, D.D., LL.D., New Haven.

Mr. William E. Dodge is the president of the Evangelical Alliance of the United States, and Rev. Philip Schaff, D.D., is honorary recording secretary. Delegates to the conference have been elected from the branches of the Alliance in Great Britain, France, Belgium, Switzerland, Holland, Prussia, Sweden, Turkey, Greece, and the New Dominion, who represent nearly every religious denomination outside of the Roman Catholic church. Great Britain sends the greatest number of delegates. The following foreign members of the Evangelical Alliance have announced their intention to speak at the conference:—

British Branch—Rev. William Arnot, D.D., Edinburgh (Presbyterian); Rev. Joseph Angus, D.D., London (Baptist); Rev. Thomas W. Aveling, London (Congregational); Rev. L. E. Berkeley, Lurgan, Ireland (Presbyterian); Rev. James Davis, London (Congregational); Rev. W. H. Freemantle, London (Protestant Episcopal); Rev. J. C. Harrison, D.D., London (Congregational); Rev. Professor J. Harris Jones, Ph. D., Trevecca College, Wales; Rev. Robert Knox, D.D., Belfast, Ireland (Presbyterian); Rev. Professor Stanley Leathes, King's College, London (Protestant Episcopal); Rev. C. Dallas Marston, London (Protestant Episcopal); Rev. Joseph Parker, D.D., London (Congregational); Charles Reed, M.P., London (Congregational); Rev. James H. Rigg, D.D., Westminster (Wesleyan); Rev. J. S. Russell, London; Rev. H. Schmetsau, Ph. D., London; Rev. R. Palme Smith, D.D., Dean of Canterbury; Rev. W. F. Stevenson, Dublin (Presbyterian); Rev. John Stoughton, D.D., London (Congregational).

French branch—Rev. G. Fisch, D.D., Paris (Reformed).
Swiss branch—Professor J. P. Astle, Lausanne; Rev. Frank Conlin, D.D., Geneva; Professor C. Prolier, Geneva.

German branch—Count A. Von Bernstorff, Berlin; Professor Theodore Christlieb, D.D., Bonn University; Professor J. Dornier, D.D., Berlin; Professor W. Kraft, D.D., Bonn University; Rev. H. Krummacher, Brandenburg; Rev. Paul Zimmermann, Leipzig.

Swedish branch—Rev. Erik Nyström, Ph. D., Stockholm.

Montreal branch—Rev. Dr. Dawson, Principal McGill College.

DREW'S ORTHOGRAPHY.

A good story is told by a friend of Daniel Drew, which the news of his illness calls up. Remaining one evening late in his office, and having occasion to use the safe, he permitted the cashier to go home, remarking that he would close the safe and fix the combination on the word "door." But when the cashier undertook to open the safe in the morning, he found that the lock refused to yield to the magic "door." He tried, and tried again, but without success. Finally, happening to remember that "Dan's" early education had been neglected, he attributed his ill-luck to poor orthography. He therefore tried the lock upon "dore." Still no success; and then upon "doar," with no better fortune. Finally, becoming disgusted, he proceeded to the St. Nicholas, routed "Dan!" out of his choicest morning nap, and, as he stuck his night-cap out of the door, this colloquy ensued:—

"Mr. Drew, I can't open the safe on 'door.' You must have concluded to change the word."

"Change the word! Nothin' o' the kind. I shut it on 'door.'"

"Are you sure, sir?"

"Sure, sir, you tarnal ape, of course I'm sure! Go back to your work, and don't come foolin' roun' here this time o' the mornin'."

"Well, perhaps, Mr. Drew, I don't spell the word right. How did you spell it?"

"Spell it! Any fool can spell door. D-o-a-r-e, doare, of coarse. If you can't spell door, sir, you're no cashier for me. Pack up your duds and go out of the 'door.'"

And shutting the "door" in the cashier's face, Daniel returned to his bed in a passion, and the clerk to his safe. Armed with the open sesame of "doare," however, the safe flew open without further trouble, and when Daniel arrived, mollified by a good breakfast and his morning prayer, he advised his cashier that he might keep his place, provided he would improve his time and "go tu spellin'-skool in the evenin'." —Chicago Post.

As a specimen of bigotry, commend us to the following, relative to John Stuart Mill, from a paper published professedly in the interests of the Church—the London Church Herald: "His philosophy, so called, was thoroughly anti-Christian; his sentiments daringly mischievous and outrageously wild. As a member of Parliament he was a signal failure, and his insolence to and contempt for the great Conservative party was well known. His death is no loss to anybody, for he was a rank but amiable infidel, and a most dangerous person. The sooner those 'lights of thought' who agree with him go to the same place the better will it be for both Church and State. We can well spare the whole crew of them, and shall hear of their departure, whether one by one or in a body, with calm satisfaction." —Boston Journal.

THE FIRST PROBLEM:

THE SOLILOQUY OF A RATIONALISTIC CHICKEN.

BY A. J. STONE, M. A.

Most strange!
Most queer,—although most excellent a change!
Shades of the prison-house, ye disappear!
My fettered thoughts have won a wider range,
And, like my legs, are free;
No longer huddled up so pitifully,
Free now to pry and probe, and peep and peer,
And make these mysteries out.
Shall a free-thinking chicken live in doubt?
For now to doubt undoubtedly I am:
This Problem's very heavy on my mind,
And I'm not one to either shrink or shun;
I won't be blundered, and I won't be blind.

Now, let me see:
First, I would know how did I get in there?
Then where was I of yore?
Besides, why didn't I get out before?

Dear me!
Here are three puzzles (out of plenty more)
Enough to give me pips upon the brain!
But let me think again.
How do I know I ever was inside?
Now I reflect, it is, I do maintain,
Less than my reason, and beneath my pride,
To think that I could dwell
In such a petty miserable cell
As that old shell.
Of course I couldn't! How could I have in, a Body and beak and feathers, legs and wings,
And my deep heart's sublime imaginings,
In there?

I must the notion with profound disdain;
It's quite incredible; since I declare
(And I'm a chicken that you can't deceive)
What I can't understand I won't believe.

Where did I come from, then? Ah, where indeed?
This is a riddle monstrous hard to read.
I have it! Why, of course.
All things are moulded by some plastic force
Out of some atoms somewhere up in space,
Fortuitously concurrent anyhow—
There, now!
That's plain as is the beak upon my face.

What's that I hear?
My mother cackling at me! Just her way,
So prejudiced and ignorant I say,
So far behind the wisdom of the day.

What's old I can't reverse.
Hark at her. "You're a silly chick, my dear,
That's quite as plain, sleek!
As is the piece of shell upon your back!"
How bigoted I upon my back, indeed!
I don't believe it's there,
For I can't see it; and I do declare,
For all her fond deceiving,
What I can't see I never will believe in!

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS TO INDEX STOCK.

Mrs. F. W. Christern,	New York City,	One share, $100
Richard B. Westbrook,	Somerset, Pa.	" " 100
R. C. Spencer,	Milwaukee, Wis.	Two " 200
R. W. Howes,	Boston, Mass.	One " 100
Chas. W. Story,	Boston, Mass.	" " 100
E. W. Medlaugh,	Detroit, Mich.	Five " 500
Jacob Hoffman,	Cumminsville, O.	One " 100
John Weiss,	Boston, Mass.	" " 100
W. C. Russell,	Ithaca, N. Y.	" " 100
A. W. Leggett,	Detroit, Mich.	" " 100
B. F. Dyer,	Boston, Mass.	" " 100
James Furinton,	Lynn, Mass.	" " 100
F. A. Nichols,	Lowell, Mass.	" " 100

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING SEPTEMBER 15.

John Lutz, 50 cents; J. W. Grafan, $2.00; Merritt Peckham, $1.00; Julia E. Miller, 75 cents; H. B. Leonard, $1.00; R. M. Mansur, 25 cents; Gilbert Knapp, $1.00; Charles Robinson, $1.00; Jos. Haynes, $1.00; C. D. Allen, $1.00; Josiah Town, $1.00; Warren Harrington, $1.00; A. W. Thompson, 25 cents; E. Stone, $1.00; Robt. Parkin, 75 cents; F. E. Perkins, $1.50; Milan Bentley, 25 cents; Walter Austin, $2.50; G. F. Clough, $1.50; J. H. Bufum, $1.00; J. B. Toney, $1.50; Jerome Ross, $2.00; F. Rice, 50 cents; Roger Sherman, 75 cents; Max Lomair, $1.50; Mrs. George G. Davis, $1.00; William Ellis, $1.00; John K. Wilson, $1.00; A. W. Stevens, $1.00; Eliza Wright, $1.00; Charles Storrs, $1.00; M. J. Knich, $1.00; Mrs. L. A. Plummer, $2.00; S. Grimes Morgan, $2.00; William L. Garrison, Jr., $12; Benj. Hallows, $3.00; J. T. Dickins, $3.00.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

DOLLAR DONATION FUND.

Acknowledged, with thanks, for the week ending Sept. 13:—$1.00 each—Miss H. P. Robinson, J. Maddock, John E. Clark, J. H. Walters, Joseph Copeland; $1.00—John Verity, Wm. Jones; $1.50—Walter F. Austin; $3.00—Mrs. E. F. Robeson.

The Index.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY

BY

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Toledo Office: No. 35 MONROE STREET. Julius T. Frey,
Agent and Clerk.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENSON, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOSEBY (England), PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), REV. MONCURE D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.

BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 18, 1873.

NOTICE.

On and after September 1, the publication office of THE INDEX will be at No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. All letters, papers, and other communications should be henceforth addressed to "THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass."

Correspondents and Exchanges will please take notice.

F. R. A. CONVENTION.

The Convention of the Free Religious Association to be held in New York, of which preliminary notice was given last week, will have to be deferred a week from the time then stated,—namely, to the middle of October. Fuller particulars as to the date, hall, and speakers will be published hereafter.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec'y F. R. A.

GLIMPSES.

THE BARKIS, Orthodoxy is "going out with the tide."

PROFESSOR WISE will probably be promoted to President Foolish before he gets to Europe in his big trans-Atlantic balloon.

THE CATHOLICS denounce all secret societies as irreligious. So do the Christian Amendment people. Why do they not join hands?

A MEMBER of King Philip's family, buried only about two hundred years ago, is practising medicine in Michigan. But the medium gets all the fees.

OUT OF THE THOUSANDS of people who visited Martha's Vineyard Camp-Meeting this summer, only about sixty are reported to have been "converted." The watering-place was a success, but the revival was a failure.

COMMENTING ON the recent Lemont disaster, the Chicago Tribune advocates the imposition of a large statutory fine upon railroad companies for every railroad catastrophe. Nothing else will ever make railroad travelling in this country safe.

IT HAS BEEN decided by the Court of Appeals in New York State that to call a homeopathic physician a "quack" is libel, punishable by fine. Dr. Carroll was obliged to pay $100 damages under this decision for applying the offensive epithet to Dr. White.

THE CATHOLIC PAPERS are sedulously trying to dissuade Catholic parents from sending their children to the public schools, and laboring to build up parochial schools in their stead. All who advocate Bible-reading in the public schools are unwittingly helping them in this ruinous enterprise.

AN ATTEMPT to rob a railway train on the Missouri Pacific railroad, near Holden, was about as successful as General Butler's attempt to rob the State of Massachusetts of its governorship. In point of morality the two attempts were on a par. Bullets did the work of salvation in one case, and ballots in the other. Prospects are improving.

THE HIGHEST PEAKS in the United States are now declared by Professor Hayden, of the Geological Survey, to be in Colorado, and to measure over 18,500 feet above the level of the sea. We are glad at last to know where they are. In Biblical phrase, these so-called "highest peaks" appear to "skip like rams." Who knows but they may yet turn up on the prairies of Illinois, and furnish a new and triumphant proof of the infallibility of the Holy Scriptures?

THE CITY OF BROOKLYN is about to abolish the distinction between "white" and "colored" schools. There are four "colored" schools at present, with an aggregate average attendance of about four hundred pupils. Practically the distinction has been abolished already, as white children are admitted to the "colored" schools and colored children to the "white" schools. But all such distinctions are out of harmony with the spirit of American institutions, and it is well not to perpetuate them.

"SPIRITUALISM is a sublime mockery," said the Boston Globe. "We appeal to the thousands of Spiritualists of Boston and elsewhere, whose beautiful faith is so ruthlessly assailed, to drop that venal sheet as they would a rattlesnake!" retorts the Banner of Light. Are vituperation and revenge the Banner's best answer to scepticism? If Spiritualism is true, that advice must have been a communication direct from Torquemada. The next will be: "Catch the editor of the Globe, and burn him at the stake!"

THE MEETING of the Evangelical Alliance next October, in New York city, promises to be of no little interest. The topics for discussion indirectly illustrate the truth of Mr. Frothingham's views of Church Union, as set forth in his striking "Dream of Unity," published in a late INDEX. Nothing is plainer than that the Alliance is a simple "league for self-defence." An article copied elsewhere in this issue will give valuable information on the approaching meeting; and the convention of the Free Religious Association, immediately succeeding, ought to be well attended.

THE CORPORATION COUNSEL of Chicago has notified the Department of Education that denominational schools are entitled to no part of the money raised by taxation for school purposes. Does this notice cover the public schools in which Bible-reading is permitted as a religious exercise? If not, it is time to understand that all such schools are "denominational" in the proper sense of the word, since the "reading of the Bible without note or comment" is a distinctive mark of Protestantism, and Protestants are a "denomination," or sect, as compared with Catholics, Jews, and "infidels."

THE LIBERAL ASSOCIATION of Paris, Illinois, have just issued the first number of the Truth Seeker, a neat little sheet of eight pages to be published monthly at fifty cents a year. It contains several well-written articles of a thoroughly liberal and temperate character, and promises to help forward the cause of "independent thought, free inquiry, and free speech," to the best of its ability. It is a task of no small difficulty to establish a new radical paper; but we heartily wish well to every such attempt, knowing that each new voice for freedom of thought will be heard by some who have not heard the earlier voices. Success to the new venture!

THE EXECUTION of the Modoc leaders early next month will be wretched and mournful business. They did but commit treachery on a small scale which had been already committed against themselves on a large scale. The assassination of General Canby was the natural sequence of the Wright massacre. Alas for the gospel of "iron and blood"! What good will it do to make Captain Jack a hero for all time? It was inevitable to fight him while in open war against the nation, bitter as had been his wrongs at its hands; but now to butcher him when he is a defenceless prisoner is part of that barbarism which will cling to us just as long as we retain the death penalty.

DANIEL DREW, it seems, spells door thus—"doare." He thinks that "any fool can spell doare," and was for turning off his cashier for doubt on the point. Mr. Drew being a good Methodist, this proves that Orthodoxy and Orthography do not always go together. But then Orthodoxy can go alone. Who cares for spelling, when one is engaged in getting rich and at the same time in saving his own soul from something infinitely worse than being sent to the foot of his class? When Clive Newcome resented Ethel's praise of his jewelry, while he secretly hankered for some expression of affection, she sarcastically exclaimed: "So you have a soul above buttons!" If anybody laughs at Mr. Drew's heterography, it should be remembered that he is innocent of heterodoxy, and has a soul above spelling-books. He would have been just as good a Christian, if he had used up the whole alphabet in spelling door. Exemplary and shrewd D. D., to have "an eye to the main chance" in two worlds at once!

MASSACHUSETTS has just saved her own honor by rebuking the impudent claims of Benjamin F. Butler to be her chief executive officer, and by resenting the outrageous interference of United States officials in his behalf. If the Liberal Republicans avoid hereafter the miserable mistakes of last year, they will find it easy to carry everything before them by the time another Presidential election comes round. Such palpable abuses of Administration influence will not long be endured. But Massachusetts has one act of self-humiliation to perform, and that before long, or it will be impossible even by this means to save herself from indelible disgrace. Let her repeal her idiotic censure of Charles Sumner, and apologize as best she may for the stinging ingratitude with which she thus repaid the best, purest, and bravest of her public servants. If Sumner dies before this act of barest justice is done, the stain upon her fame will grow blacker with every year; and history will record that the Old Bay State let her greatest living son go to his grave, having received from her own hands a blow more foul and wicked than that of the Southerner's bloody bludgeon.

THE NEW YORK NATION, looking at the subject certainly from no fanatical stand-point, says that "at this moment religious differences are convulsing the continent of Europe, and underlie half, at least, of the most important questions which agitate English politics. It would be a less arduous undertaking to change the English monarchy into a republic than seriously to modify the creed of the Church of England. Theological dogmas may be untrue, but no practical politician can treat them as unimportant." In the last analysis, all these "religious differences" turn on the radical conflict between Christianity and freedom; and it is only defect of vision which prevents people from seeing that in this country, as well as in Europe, the same conflict is rapidly coming to a crisis. Twist and squirm as they may, so-called "Liberal Christians" will be caught up by the logic of events like fractious children, and set down plumply, if not gently, before a fact they are trying very hard not to see,—the fact that they cannot fight Romanism and Evangelicalism without fighting Christianity. This truth we specially commend to the Christian Register, a late issue of which contained a most admirable editorial on "Our Common School System Threatened" by Catholic machinations. THE INDEX stands on the solid earth, and lays its axe to the root of the tree of Christianity; while the Register, perched on one of the branches, is assiduously sawing it off between itself and the trunk. Will no considerate friend put a feather-bed under it?

THE "INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION OF 1876," to be held in Philadelphia in honor of the one hundredth anniversary of American Independence, promises to be a great affair. Over two and a half millions of dollars were raised for the purpose as early as last May. The Journal of Proceedings of the United States Centennial Commission has a little more than a becoming proportion of "spread-eagle oratory," also some obscure intimations leak out that a want of harmony exists in the conduct of affairs. There seems to have been a quite unnecessary shyness, on the part of the Centennial Commission, about recognizing the Women's Centennial Association as a "branch" of itself; and the vague complimentary resolutions passed do not take the place of a frank, generous welcome to the women as equally entitled to the honor of participating in what ought to be a national enterprise. The men are only half the nation. The "Revolutionary Fathers" were no more important than the Revolutionary Mothers; and since the Commission has no female members, the least it can do is to let the women form a distinct "branch." The shilly-shallying over this whole subject is rather disgusting to one who believes less in "man"-ity than in humanity. One other point ought not to be overlooked. Among those who aided powerfully in the establishment of our national independence, the services of Thomas Paine ought to be specially remembered. If there are any free thinkers in the Commission, it is their especial duty to see that, whatever expressions of gratitude may be made to others, Thomas Paine shall neither be forgotten nor ignored. Let his portrait, which so mysteriously disappeared years ago from Independence Hall, be hunted up and restored to its honorable place. It was free thought which laid the foundations of the nation; and the nation will be shamefully ungrateful if it now, in its hour of jubilation, turns the cold shoulder to the great free thinkers without whom it would never have been.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

When the reduction of the size of THE INDEX was made last April, we promised that justice should be done by an extension of the period of subscription to those subscribers who had paid or should pay $3.00 for a year. The same promise was made in substance by the five Directors of the Index Association who signed the "Card" in THE INDEX of June 21.

The paper having now been re-enlarged to dimensions as great as $5.00 a year will really pay for at our present circulation, the time has come to redeem the promises made; and this will be done in strict fidelity to their letter and spirit. All who remitted $3.00 for a year's subscription at any time between September 28, 1872, and April 1, 1873, are in equity entitled to an extension of five months beyond the date now standing on the printed mail-tags affixed to their papers. All who remitted $3.00 at any time between April 1 and September 1, 1873, are entitled to an extension less in amount, which must be calculated separately in each case. We are now printing as large a paper as we can afford for the price asked; and it is a fair equivalent for the money, $3.00 for twelve pages being at the same ratio as $2.00 for eight pages, our first price and size.

This extension of the subscription period as explained is simply a matter of justice to our subscribers, and will be most cheerfully made. But in order to save an immense amount of labor in comparing the mail-list with the subscription books, for which time cannot be taken without seriously interfering with proper attention to current business, it is necessary that all who wish their subscription periods extended should notify us as nearly as possible of the precise date when they paid the $3.00. For every subscriber entitled to extension who does this, the proper extension will be made at once by changing the date on his printed label. In all other cases we shall be obliged to assume that our subscribers prefer to leave the dates as they are.

And we hope that the majority of our subscribers will be disposed to waive voluntarily their unquestioned right to an extension of time, in order to help the paper and save it from serious, if not dangerous, embarrassment. Should they all insist on it, the protracted postponement of their renewals would involve the paper in unavoidable financial difficulties. THE INDEX, like all other papers, must depend mainly on its subscription list; and if the receipts from this source are cut off several months, the result cannot but be disastrous. Hence we trust that our subscribers will generously contribute the surplus amount already paid in, and renew promptly on the expiration of their present terms. It will be very gratifying to us, and to all who wish well to the paper, if we are early assured of this kind willingness to divide the burden of still recent misfortunes, and to second our own efforts to place THE INDEX at last beyond all need of extraneous aid.

THE "RELIGION OF NATURE."

The leading paper of THE INDEX this week is a letter by Hon. Gerrit Smith, first published by himself in the form of a circular for free distribution. It is a criticism upon THE INDEX, marked by the peculiar geniality and spirit of benevolence which characterize all his writings. Had it not been for various reasons unnecessary to explain, we should have given it an earlier insertion in our columns. The opinion of such a man as Mr. Smith, whose name has been identified for many decades with every movement that promised to elevate and benefit mankind, is entitled to the greatest respect; and we think the best way to show it is to lay his letter before our readers, in order that they may freely judge how far his criticisms are applicable. Possessed of a large measure of wealth, it has been his life-long habit to "place it where it will do the most good," in a sense widely unlike that in which Oakes Ames has immortalized the phrase; and if he intellectually differed from THE INDEX ten times as much as he does, we should still have to look far and long before finding a nobler illustration of the life which THE INDEX would fain see lived by all.

While even a casual reader will perceive at once many points of difference between Mr. Smith's views and those usually advocated by us, we nevertheless venture to think that on the main question we are not very far apart. The following sentence in his letter seems to contain the essence of his, as well as our own, position:—

"The religion of Nature is the one true religion. If Christianity does not recognize this fact, then THE INDEX is right in repudiating Christianity."

To the religion of Nature we certainly would be loyal, and on this fundamental point there is no difference at all. Mr. Smith himself says, towards the close of his letter:—

"Perhaps I have unduly magnified the difference between it [THE INDEX] and myself. This difference may be wholly in our definitions of Christianity."

All thinkers who clearly and explicitly recognize the adequacy of natural religion, and are consciously willing to abide by it, even if it can be shown that natural religion and Christianity are at variance, are really on the same side in the great issue between naturalism and supernaturalism. They all plant themselves on the same essential truths of the adequacy of Nature as the source of all knowledge and the adequacy of Reason as the interpreter of Nature. However widely they may diverge in the views they hold of Christianity and its relation to natural religion, they all agree in adhering to the latter under all circumstances, teach what it may. Without at all underestimating the importance of sound historical and philosophical views of Christianity, we would emphatically affirm the far superior importance of a genuine reliance upon Nature and Reason; and those critics do great injustice to our thought who conclude, as Mrs. Julia Ward Howe once wittily expressed it, that our sole watchword is—"Delenda est Christianitas." Our whole object is affirmative, not negative; and the negative work of THE INDEX, its strenuous opposition to the ancient theology and ecclesiasticism and cultus of Christianity, results wholly from our conviction that Christianity is in fact irreconcilable with natural religion.

In planting himself, therefore, first of all upon Nature as his foundation, confessedly whether Christianity is or is not upon the same foundation, Mr. Smith shows that his sympathies and convictions are radically in the same direction with our own; and this vital agreement is of more consequence than any minor disagreements. Of course we cannot help believing that we are correct in supposing Christianity to rest on a foundation of supernaturalism; its supernaturalistic basis does not by any means appear to us an "unchristian mixture," but rather as the very cornerstone of all really Christian faith. The manner, however, in which Mr. Smith defends Christianity will give but cold comfort to those Christians who are penetrating enough to perceive that he defends it purely on naturalistic premises. He expressly disowns the "superstitions and speculations, legends and myths," upon which all Christians are bound to rest the whole structure of their faith; and it is only on the assumption that all these are corruptions and "unchristian mixtures" that he dissents from our own view of Christianity. This being the state of the case, we are entirely willing to waive discussion for the present as to the doctrine of prayer, the superiority of the Bible over all other books, the influence of Christianity in "holding millions to their uncorrupted nature," the superiority of Jesus to all other men, and other points on which we respectfully dissent from our honored critic; and we are quite content simply to call attention to the fact that he expresses a far profounder agreement than disagreement with the general aim and purpose of THE INDEX.

ONLY ONE MEETING-HOUSE.

The town of Gouldsboro, Me., is a rare instance of a New England village which, until within a year or two, had no "meeting-house." The community, although perhaps mainly Evangelical in its religious faith, has also a large sprinkling of Universalists and other liberal thinkers; and yet so little jealous controversy has been excited that even now the new building is called a "Union Church," in which all the Evangelical sects are welcomed, and from which even Unitarians are not wholly excluded. The services are not held regularly, nor is there any settled minister; and the expression of one of the citizens was that "they built the meeting-house more to look at than for anything else."

In the West part of the town, a few years ago, an energetic woman of liberal views persuaded the people to form a joint-stock company and put up a building, of which the lower part is a good school-room and the upper part a small hall with an ante-room, capable of seating about a hundred and fifty people. This hall is let for such travelling entertainments as come to the town, and also for meetings of the citizens, and for services on Sunday when they have any one to address them. For several summers a young clergyman, sometimes an undergraduate of the Divinity School, has preached for his board, being boarded round among different families in the old fashion of "the country schoolmaster." The services during the summer were simple and pleasant, and in the afternoon a Sunday-school was held for the children. Except during this brief period there are no regular religious services in this part of the town.

I was interested, of course, in the inquiry whether any marked differences in morals or character could be seen between this and other New England towns of similar size, where three or four spires indicate as many different sects diligently pursuing their work, and where Sunday is kept only as a day of church-going. I must confess that I could not see any very strong contrast, and certainly not any unfavorable one. The village is very neat, orderly, and quiet. All the people seem thrifty and comfortable. I did not see a sign of intemperance during my two months' stay there. The people seemed quite up to the average of our country people in intelligence and manners, and the general good feeling prevalent among them was more than once observed.

Yet it was plain to see that much more might be done for intellectual improvement, and especially for æsthetic culture. The school-house was bare and unattractive, and a good committee might make great improvements in the course of instruction given. There is a town library, but it is not as useful as it ought to be, and the Sunday-school does not attract half the children to whom it might be made a benefit. It seemed evident that a liberal free organization for moral and religious improvement, with an intelligent leader at its head, either man or woman, might do a great good here, finding no hindrances of old prejudice or sectarian feeling in the way. Now is not this a picture of the condition of many of our country towns, and do we not see that the way is opening for new and freer institutions of social worship which are to give us the benefits of religious instruction and communion without the narrowness and bigotry of the old method? E. D. C.

BLISSFUL IGNORANCE AND FOOLISH WISDOM.

It is not an uncommon remark with some, when witnessing the calm or enthusiastic happiness (as the case may be) of Evangelical Christians, in the possession and manifestation of their peculiar views of religion: "Why, when these people appear to be so contented and satisfied with their intellectual and religious state, and even joyful in it, why try to convert them to more rational views? Why not let them alone, and keep your larger and truer thoughts to yourself? The chances are that you will only disturb and unsettle them altogether, without making them really any better or wiser. They are happy as they are, and, on the whole, are doing very well. Better pass them by entirely with your thought; or, at any rate, leave them to learn slowly by their own observation and unaided thinking."

Such reasoning has a very plausible sound, and, at particular times, one is rather impressed by it; especially if one has not overmuch of the aggressive and proselytizing spirit. But is this reasoning sound? Is this advice, which is almost always given rather interrogatively than emphatically, good and safe?

It seems to me that all which is suggested here is the old saying that, "where ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise." But, in the first place, we cannot be perfectly sure that, in any given case, we have found just exactly where ignorance is bliss. The old views may appear to afford happiness when really they do not. Evangelical people are by no means always made happy by the religious opinions they entertain. This is especially the case with Calvinists. There is something intrinsically gloomy and depressing in Calvinism, and Calvinists feel it, and in privacy and silence shudder under its cold shadow. It is only when they can forget hell and its horrors, and their dread and fear of it, and are able to fix their minds on heaven and its imagined glories, and surrender themselves to warm-blooded hope, that they experience any real happiness in the possession of their narrow views. The Methodists are better off in this respect, but only just in so far as the views they entertain are themselves less austere. Yet even they are not so blissful as they seem. It has been my fortune to be well acquainted with many Methodists, both clerical and lay members. I have lived in their very midst, and associated with them familiarly for weeks, months, and years. I have been behind the scenes of their denominational manifestations, and observed them when they were not under the excitement and frenzy of their prayer and revival meetings, but were living their common, daily lives; and I am not prepared to acknowledge that Methodists even are, on the whole, made especially happy by the views they hold. Their feelings effervesce a great deal; they frequently go off into ecstasies and raptures. But this is a denominational and traditional peculiarity, and evidences a superficial and transient rather than a deep and permanent state of feeling. The Methodist religion is highly dramatic; it is full of scenic and startling effects; and many of those who, in meeting, seem to be so happy, are, when off the stage and not wound up to revival pitch, not to be distinguished from unevangelical people on account of their measure of happiness. Indeed, they are often quite unhappy, and suffer from a reaction which their former unnatural and unwholesome ecstasy induces. I am not, therefore, at all inclined to allow that, on the score of bliss, ignorance has any advantage over wisdom. In most cases which come under observation appearances prove deceitful. The blissful ignorance is a cheat, and therefore the foolishness of wisdom is not demonstrated.

But even granting that ignorance and superstition are consistent with happiness, nevertheless it will be hard to find the man who will not claim that knowledge is more to be desired than ignorance, and that a state in which reason is fairly and freely exercised is better than a state of superstition. Not to claim this would be virtually to deny that mankind are at all benefited by being civilized, or that childhood gains anything by advancing to maturity. If the new views are truer than the old, then unquestionably the old ought to be superseded by the new. If Free Religion is any more enlightened, any more rational, any more scientific than Evangelicalism, then the principles of Free Religion ought to be as widely taught as possible. The pivot on which this whole matter turns is really the question of the degree of truth involved in the old and the new ideas. That which is truer is better, no matter whether it produces the most happiness or not. If the radical's thought is larger and truer than the conservative's, then the question of the happiness of either must not be primarily considered; whoever or whatever is disturbed and unsettled, the greater truth should be proclaimed. Nobody who has any real faith in the truth can doubt or hesitate a moment as to the expediency of presenting it to all,—always of course observing proper methods, times, and places. The only foolishness of wisdom which I can conceive of is the foolishness of not being faithful to the truth, of not believing in the virtue of rational ideas, the safety as well as beauty of free and fearless thought. The risks of knowledge are small in comparison with those of ignorance. It is better even to know that you do not know, than ignorantly to suppose that you do. A large part of wisdom, indeed, consists in being conscious of our own ignorance; the rest in getting the right attitude and method of inquiry, and in holding a great expectancy of the future. In becoming intelligent and free our happiness will take care of itself. I would rather risk mine with this simple sum of knowledge—that natural laws are universal and invariable—than with all the best popular beliefs about God, a Savior, and a heaven.

A. W. S.

THE sextonship of a New York church pays three thousand dollars per year, and perquisites make it two thousand dollars more. Then the sexton hires a man to do all the work for one thousand dollars.

At an elegant dinner party given in Washington the enfant terrible of the family was permitted to occupy a seat near one of the most distinguished guests. Moreover the young man has a sister who is a shining belle in society. Eliza is the name of the young lady, but the scapegrace will call her Lize. The company were startled by the youngster asking, "Why is father like the devil?" An awkward pause ensued. Then he shouted out, "Because he is the father of Lize." That boy did not get his deserts, for he was sent to bed.

A MINISTER had a negro in his family. One Sunday, when he was preaching, he happened to look in the pew where the negro was, and could hardly contain himself as he saw the negro, who could not read or write a word, scribbling away most industriously. After meeting, he said to the negro: "Tom, what were you doing in the church?" "Taking notes, massa; all le gemmen takes notes." "Bring your notes here and let me see them." Tom brought his notes, which looked more like Chinese than English. "Why, Tom, this is all nonsense." "I thought so, massa, all the time you was preaching it."—Salt Lake Tribune.

THE Christian Register (Boston) it seems to us, in its frequent allusions to Free Religion, insinuates rather than attacks, strikes in the rear rather than assails from the front. In a recent issue it seems to speak spitefully of Free Religion, but never for a moment grapples it in a brave and manly wrestle. It reminds us of a boy who shoots out his lip at a passer-by from his father's yard-gate. Why does not the Register step out into the "big road" and invite encounter? That would look better and be better. That, or else it should be still. We wonder if it has ever occurred to the Register that Free Religion is largely the logic of its own ism.—Living Christian.

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but hereafter no space will be spared to Errata.
N. B.—Articles for this department should be SHORT, and written only on one side of the sheet.
N. B.—(Slightly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.
N. B.—No responsibility will be assumed for unused manuscripts.

DEFENCE OF ORTHODOXY.

QUINCY, MASS., Sept. 1, 1873.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDEX":

Dear Sir,—I do not know as it will be of any use for me to pen a few thoughts for your paper, in relation to Christ and his work; but feeling desirous that the truth should prevail, I am induced to make the attempt to reach your readers.

In a late number of THE INDEX, I noticed the following charges made against Christians: "A good life is not so important to the Christian as faith in Christ." "To walk in the way of daily righteousness is a smaller matter to the Christian than to stand up for Jesus." "With all Christians loyalty to Christ is before all things else."

Now I do not suppose that Mr. Stevens intended to misrepresent those whom he terms Christians; but still it is evident that he does not fully comprehend the mysteries of our glorious system of religion. "Christ is the end of the law for righteousness" to the believer, for the simple reason that he helps us to become righteous.

Imagine a wanderer on the great Saharan desert, with clouds of sand impeding his progress,—when will he reach his desired haven? His wish is simply to cross the desert; but he cannot do this on account of an obstacle; namely, the flying sand obscuring his vision and thwarting all his well-meant efforts. Supposing an apparatus should be contrived, by using which daily he could brush from him the flying sand, and thus pursue his journey unmolested. On meeting this man, you perceive him beating the air, and you say to him: "Sir, why do you waste your strength on that piece of machinery instead of marching boldly on, across this arid desert?" But he replies: "I cannot stir, sir, with this sand before me."

I can no more cross the waste places of sin with which I come in contact, without help, than could this traveller the desert before him. It is a good thing to be determined to do right; but it is a better thing to be able always to do right. I cannot do right at all times without Christ, and that is the reason I use him so much. He is a piece of spiritual mechanism, with which I can brush away the clouds of sin from my path, and without which I cannot "view the Canaan we love with unobscured eyes." It is grand to be able to overcome sin of ourselves; but if we find we cannot do this, is it not glorious to find some one who can help us?

Now the grand and almost exclusive work of Christ in coming to this earth was to help those who "have no might." A few may not need his assistance; but the many do, most emphatically. We believe in Jesus, not as an end, but simply as a means to an end; as we would grasp a rope extended to us when in danger of drowning. Christ is nothing except as he enables us to "walk in the way of daily righteousness." To "stand up for Jesus" is simply to show his power to aid us in leading a good life. The historical Christ is not of so much value to us as the ever-present one of to-day. Hovering over us are his angels, led by him to the aid of every needy sinner. The air is full of these soldiers of our "great Captain," seeking to lift us from degradation and arm us with power to resist evil. Breathe ever so faintly your wishes to this Savior, and he despatches an angel to your aid, and you are delivered from the impending danger.

Now these are my views of Christ, and I would rejoice to see our "free religious" friends embracing them. I am not a sectarian. I belong to no sect, but I rely on the Christ-spirit to enable me to do what my conscience directs. It seems to me that those who reject the proffered aid of Jesus are like a mariner who essays to find his path across the ocean in the midst of fogs without taking soundings, or making observations; and that the same fate may clutch him in its terrible destiny which awaited the noble steamers that have lately experienced the melancholy consequences of disregarding nautical laws.

Yours for Jesus as a helper,

C. STEARNS.

[It would be hard to find a more truly "liberal" Christian than the writer of the above sweet-tempered vindication of faith in Christ, which we are very glad to print. But we say frankly that the aid got from the "piece of spiritual mechanism" described is, in our opinion, the aid of our own muscles after all. If Mr. Stearns finds help towards righteousness in the fancy that he is lifted into it by a Divine system of pulleys and ropes, we certainly rejoice, as a good neighbor should; but we cannot forbear to inquire whether, after all, it is he or the pulley that is righteous? If it is we who are to be righteous, it is we who have got to think, say, and do the righteous things; whereas, if Christ and his angels put us through the mere motion of righteousness, while we are still unrighteous at heart, what is the genuine moral worth of the operation at last? The fact is, all the righteousness we ever acquire we must earn, like our bread, by the sweat of our brows; we must stop cheating, lying, injuring each other and ruining ourselves, and practise the virtues we covet by honest exertions of our own in the face of all temptations. Depend upon it, it is all a delusion to imagine that somebody else is going to make us good. If you don't make yourself good, bad you will remain to the end of your days.—Ed.]

ARE ALL CHRISTIANS BIGOTS?

MR. EDITOR:—After reading THE INDEX for nearly four years, it may seem strange that I should still question your fundamental proposition that Christians are necessarily illiberal. That they have no sympathy with mere doubters, and manifest little tolerance for sceptics, I freely admit; but these feelings are shared by many who make no claim to Christian fellowship. While heartily agreeing with you that Ideas, not Persons, claim our undivided reverence, and that, consequently, the name Christ is an obstacle rather than a means to religious culture, I have but little sympathy with the doubter, and regard the state of scepticism as the most miserable condition in which the mind of man can be placed.

In estimating Christian liberality, must we not take the matured convictions of the thoughtful and cultured believer for our starting point? You certainly would not look for Christian thought in the notions held by the unthinking believers, however great may be their numerical majority. The Christian and the Liberal alike agree in recognizing Ideas as essential to spiritual growth; both cherish bright visions of high Ideals yet to be worked out in humanity. One relies more upon the operation of the Universal Spirit (Holy Ghost) upon man's spiritual nature, the communion of spirit with the spiritual; the other, apparently, upon what Mr. Towne somewhat contemptuously termed "mere ideas of the understanding."

Thoughtful Christians, even earnest Calvinists of the most rigid Evangelical school, recognize such men as you and your co-laborers to be in spirit their brothers, in so far as you seek after truth, or "godliness" as they term it. Their very Christ is an Idea—an Ideal Man; and when they see a fellow-man obey the Ideal of "godliness," though he rejects the name, or symbol by which it is known to them in speech, they believe he is Christian; that is, striving to realize this Ideal, or be "Christ-like."

We believe that this Ideal has never yet been clothed in mortal flesh. The Christian identifies the name Christ with his ideal, and believes in consequence that where this Ideal is sought, Christ is, whether recognized or not. The main thing is the attainment of the "Spirit of Christ," and faith in its possibility. This they assert to be the "faith" essential to "salvation."

Can we not discriminate between Christian thought and the unthinking credence of noisy Evangelicalism? David Hume commences an essay, entitled "Of Some Verbal Disputes" [App. IV., Inquiry Concerning the Principles of Morals] with these words: "Nothing is more usual than for philosophers to encroach upon the province of grammarians, and to engage in disputes of words, while they imagine that they are handling controversies of the deepest importance and concern." In our efforts to be true, confessed by Christian and Liberal alike to be the highest effort, let us not forget to be just, nor imitate in argument the example of the sects.

D. D. L.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.

[We cannot repress our astonishment that a reader of THE INDEX "for nearly four years" should imagine it to be our "fundamental proposition that Christians are necessarily illiberal." Surely, that is a very different proposition from the statement that Christianity and liberty are irreconcilable. Believing the latter, it is still possible to believe also that Christians are inconsistent,—especially Protestant Christians. Our correspondent discriminates above very beautifully and justly; but he must have read THE INDEX very hastily. If our friends so fundamentally mistake our meaning, what can be expected of our opponents? Many Christians, and very many Protestant Christians, are exceedingly liberal; but they are so in contradiction of the whole logic and drift of the religious system they imagine they accept. Their growing liberality is the self-evident decay of their Christianity,—that is all. Whoever inquires into the temper of Christians when Christianity was supreme, and studies history rather than milk-and-water discourses of mislabelled rationalism, will see at once what we mean.—Ed.]

"THERE'S NO SUCH PERSON!"

Is it not strange, MR. INDEX, that no question is made of the actual existence of Jesus, even by those who deny his miraculous birth, his miracles, and the morality of many of his parables?

I may say that I have never met man or woman who did not incline to believe that Jesus had some sort of peripatetic existence on the earth. Even in your advanced journal, I doubt if I have ever seen a single distinct statement that the story of Jesus is a monkish legend, having no substance in fact; and that Christianity is one of the phases of religious evolution, a natural outgrowth of cultured paganism, suited to the intelligence of eighteen hundred years ago by reason of lack of development, and seemingly sulted still to the average intelligence of our own day for the same reason.

Why should liberal men waste any more time over the details of Christ's possible existence, when they have only to take a stand on the absolute non-existence of any such person to be able to fight their battle wisely? The denial of Jesus' existence at any time, in any manner, withdraws the case from court.

Discussion, historic or theological, is and will soon be found to be pure inanity, unworthy of men. But the time is coming when there will be only two camps,—one of superstition or of intentional deception, the other of science, of knowledge, of conviction.

All the intermediate skirmishing helps the cause of error. All the importance attached to Jesus as a person, and to Christianity as anything more than a phase of mental religious evolution, has no special value, and is fatal to the liberal cause.

Choose, if you please, one of your good writers, and ask him if he believes in the miraculous conception? No. In the miracles? No. In any of the circumstances as detailed in the so-called Gospels? No. And thus denying absolutely all that goes to make up the story of Jesus, he will probably still cling to the belief that there must have been some such person.

It may be a trifling matter whether there was a person called Jesus or not; but the admission of it in argument is unnecessary, weak, illogical, impolitic, and fatal to your cause. J. A.

[If the admission of such a confessedly "trifling matter" as the historic existence of Jesus is nevertheless "fatal to our cause," what sort of a cause is it? Frankly, we should be ashamed of any cause which could be so easily demolished. The cause we believe in would be just as true and strong if there had been fifty Christs, as it is now with the probability that there has been one, so-called. The principles and ideas of religious radicalism do not depend on any man's existence; and the possible existence of Jesus no more affects them than it affects the truths of geometry.]

But if it were otherwise,—if the admission that Jesus once lived on this earth were indeed "fatal" to the liberal cause,—we should be thoroughly ashamed to make or refuse to make that admission merely with a view to hold the vantage-ground in argument. The question to be answered is simply—did Jesus really live or not? It should be answered honestly, no matter what becomes of the "liberal cause." Our correspondent seems quite unaware what degrading advice he gives to the liberals, when he urges them to deny the existence of Jesus solely as a stroke of polemical policy. His existence is a purely historical question, to be determined by purely historical evidence; and whoever undertakes to answer such questions from any bias of prejudice or any purpose of policy sets the worst possible example to mankind,—the very example, in fact, which has been too long set by theologians. There have been many liberals who have absolutely denied that any such person as Jesus ever lived, some by the honest study of the historical evidences, others from the motives illustrated by our correspondent; but our own ground is different. Without caring particularly whether Jesus ever lived or not, we incline to the opinion that he is an historical character, whose career has been largely embellished by credulity and the myth-making tendency of human nature. But the liberal cause is safe so long as liberty is better than servitude, truth than falsehood, virtue than vice; and it is puerile to fear that any harm can come to it by admitting that Jesus once lived an actual life among men. The Christian cause indeed demands faith in his existence and divine mission; the liberal cause leaves history to solve all its own problems without any apprehension of its results.—Ed.]

A TRUE-BLUE SERMON.

TRENTON, N. J., July 8, 1873.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDEX":

Dear Sir,—Last Sunday night I heard a sermon by Rev. Mr. Hanly, a noted preacher in the Methodist Church. It struck me as being a sermon in which Orthodoxy was wrapped up entire. It had two salient points. 1st. "The whole aim of life should be to live so as to be accepted of God."

This point was illustrated by the case of a student, just graduated, who was thinking of his future life, and what his aim therein should be. He thought how, when he was a school-boy, his aim had been to go to college; when a freshman, to be a sophomore; when a sophomore, to be a junior; when a junior, to be a senior; but what now should he work for? It crossed his mind that success was the goal of the future; but what beyond success? Then comes the Judgment: and now it flashed across his mind that the Judgment might not wait till he had achieved success. He might be called before a day was out, and he saw in that moment that to prepare for the Judgment should be the aim of the entire life of every one, for no one can tell at what moment death may come and find him unprepared. Wealth is worth nothing, for it can avail nothing hereafter; learning wisdom amounts to nothing, for it is a thing of this earth.

The grand point was that "every earthly pursuit should be given up for the one great object of life, to live so as to please God, and by this means save our own souls from hell fire."

Now is not this the same spirit that during the Middle Ages drew all the best minds from useful labor, and shut them up in a hell on earth in order that they might gain heaven in the life to come?

This selfish precept is the necessary outcome of a belief in heaven and hell; and could anything be more contrary to modern progress? As I thought of this while hearing the sermon, I thought I never had realized more forcibly that Orthodoxy is doomed. That any great number of persons should live a life such as is indicated by this rule, a life devoted entirely to self-purification, or rather to self-annihilation, apart entirely from all the interests of earthly life, is, in the intensely industrial civilization of the present day, an impossibility. Consequently the Church, which by the nature of its dogmas is compelled to inculcate a life so utterly in opposition to the existing state of things, is surely doomed to die.

The myth of future rewards and punishments has always been and always will be the most formidable weapon of the theologian. If this loses its power, his genius will soon become extinct, and natural selection will have worked its greatest miracle. Truly, then, is industrial civilization a great enemy of dogmas, not only directly destroying them by conflict and comparison, but also destroying some beliefs by opposing or preventing the action which they necessarily tend to produce, thus undermining them, and leaving them to fall away and decay.

The second point of this really logical sermon, logical because it set forth so forcibly, though unintentionally, the tendencies of Orthodoxy, and showed so clearly the key-stones of the structure, may be best expressed in the words of the speaker:—

"I believe that the source of infidelity in every case is in the heart, not in the intellect."

Now this somewhat astonished me at first, for I thought I knew both Christians and infidels with noble hearts, and besides I had believed that infidelity usually resulted from the possession of more brains than the average in the age in which the infidel lived or lives. But as I sat there listening to that sermon, and thinking of the fearful doctrines he taught of hell and the cruelty of God,—thinking of the intense religious selfishness that made the one aim of this human life the saving of self from fire,—it stole across my mind that perhaps he was right. Perhaps it is so; perhaps deficiency of sympathy, distrust of humanity, selfishness, in short a defective heart, does have a great deal to do with the wide-spread belief in Christian dogmas: perhaps one great "source of infidelity in every case" is a nobler, more sympathetic, more human heart than it is the lot of common humanity to possess.

FRANK PARSON.

ATONEMENT BY INJUSTICE.

REV. I. R. GATES, Philadelphia:

Dear Sir,—This communication is a reply to a discourse delivered by yourself at the Presbyterian Church in New Milford on the "Atonement of Christ." Discussion on religion ought to be free; and, leaving prejudice out of the question, I wish to examine a few of the remarks you then made. I had no means there at hand to report your discourse verbatim, and now criticize the substance of your remarks from memory only.

In your discourse you stated that "God was perfect in all his attributes—perfect in his attribute of love, perfect in his attribute of mercy, perfect in his attribute of justice;" all this I have long since been a firm believer in.

But as you advanced with your discourse, it appeared to me that you destroyed his attribute of justice by substituting his attribute of mercy; and the conclusion that I drew from your illustrations was that the whole theory or doctrine of redemption has for its basis an idea of pecuniary justice, and not that of moral justice.

If I remember correctly, the first illustration was that of a drafted man who was under an obligation to the Government. During our late war he was called upon to discharge it, and did discharge it by engaging a substitute, who lost his life by taking this man's place. The drafted man had committed no crime against the laws of his country, but simply discharged an obligation which was satisfied by his sending a substitute. It was not necessary that the substitute should lose his life to discharge that obligation to the Government. His losing his life was purely accidental, and would have been as fully satisfied had the substitute lived.

The next illustration was that of a man owing another person money. When the debt became due, the creditor came for his money; but the debtor acknowledged his inability to pay it. Then a friend steps up and pays the debt. Here again no crime had been committed; and in both instances justice was satisfied.

The next illustration was of a certain school-boy who had repeatedly broken the rules of the school, and received punishment by having the lash applied to his person. One day, when brought forward to receive punishment for a violation of the rules of the school (which dollars and cents would not satisfy), a small school-boy, a cripple, and highly esteemed and loved by all the school, arose and said, "Master, let me take this whipping for him." The teacher assented, and punished the substitute; but, doubting in his own mind whether justice was satisfied, he called for the real offender to come forward and receive the same punishment that the substitute had received. But "no!" cries the whole school; "this little innocent boy has paid the debt for him." The teacher admitted the fact, and discharged the offender. This appears to me to have been very unjust, and contrary to the very idea of justice.

Now allow me to give an example that bears on the same point as the last illustration quoted. Suppose that I murder a man; I have committed the greatest crime against man upon our statute books. I am taken into court, tried, and convicted of murder in the first degree, and justly sentenced to be hung. Then a friend of mine appears and says to the court that has passed sentence against me, "Let me take this man's place, and pay the debt for him." The court complies, and, substituting the innocent for the guilty, shows me mercy. This you call justice. To me it has the appearance of satisfying a morbid desire for indiscriminate revenge. A little reflection will show that the doctrine of redemption is founded on a mere idea corresponding to that of a debt which another person might pay; that in truth there is no such thing as redemption; that it is fabulous, and that man holds the same relation towards his Maker that he always held, and that it is the greatest consolation to think so.

Education takes the lead in the onward march of progress, sweeping away ignorance and popular prejudice, and laying the foundation for a more liberal, and less expensive system of religion. Notwithstanding the vagaries of fanaticism, still popular with many, we see nothing in the works of the Almighty to justify religious excitement. On the other hand, his changes are gradual and progressive, all tending, by successive steps, to one great end—humanitarian religion. Union and harmony we behold in all his works, and mankind will best promote their own true interest when, in humble imitation of these divine principles, they apply them to the whole of the inhabited world. Repulsion, discord, antagonism, separation of men and nations, mark the past history of the races, and constitute a record of wars and crimes and misery. A religion homogeneous in character, having the belief of one God and the practice of moral virtues, will eventually tranquilize the whole race. This alone is in harmony with the laws that govern the universe.

To make the "Atonement" valid, it is necessary to couple with it the great doctrine of "Human Depravity," which is a blank denial of the very possibility of personal virtue. It teaches that the natural penalties of wrong-doing can be escaped by faith in Christ; that the laws of cause and effect do not hold in the moral world; that the consequences of moral evil are neither necessary nor universal. Such theology enjoins self-aborrence as the first condition of the salvation it offers, and places man at a great distance from his Creator—casts him into the lowest conceivable pit of degradation, and prevents him from approaching his Maker except through mediators.

Respectfully yours, O. W. TENNANT.
NEW MILFORD, Pa.

A DISTINGUISHED clergyman being invited in one of our churches, a few weeks since, to open the services by prayer, but not being invited to preach, declined, saying that "if his friend was going to do the mowing he might whet his own scythe."—Philadelphia Sunday Republican.

ENGLAND has a good Mr. Bergh, and his name is James Odams. Mr. Odams shows that loads of Irish cattle from Ballinasloe and other fairs for eastern counties' markets, are exposed to great severities and much cruelty and neglect. Mr. Odams proposes legal measures for protecting dumb animals.

A YOUNG poet once asked Douglas Jerrold to pass a candid criticism on two of his productions. Jerrold waited rather impatiently until his tormentor had concluded reading the first poem, and then quickly exclaimed: "I like your other poem the best." "But you have not heard it read." "That is why I prefer it."

A UNIVERSALIST of this city was lately asked by an Orthodox if he really believed that all the members of the late Congress would be saved? "Certainly they will," replied the Universalist, "for does not the Apostle expressly say, that this corruption shall put on incorruption at the last day?"—Bloomington, (Ill.) Republican.

BARNUM has several Feejee cannibals in his show. One of them has quit and gone to carrying a hod. His remark when he threw off his fish-bone necklace, was: "Be jabbers, I'd rather carry my native hod than be a haythen at $20 a month." But the number of Feejees remain the same. An ambitious teamster was immediately promoted to the vacant position.

AN Irishman had a dream which taught him the danger of delay. "I dreamed," said he, "I was wid the Pope, who was as great a jintleman as any one in the district, an' he axed me wad I drink. Thinks I, wad a duck swim; and seein' the Innishowen and lemon and sugar on the sideboard, I told him I didn't care if I tuk a wee dhrap of punch. 'Cowid or hot?' axed the Pope. 'Hot, your Holiness,' I replied; and be that he stepped down to the kitchen for the blinn' water, but before he got back I woke straight up. And now it's distressing me I didn't take it cowid."

At last there has been a revival of edifying hanging, wherein the chief actor assures the delighted spectators that he is going direct to Paradise, where he will be happy to receive them. It occurred at Springfield, Mass., recently, Albert H. Smith being executed for the murder of his rival in the affections of a girl he (Smith) had seduced. His last words were: "Now these are the words written at my request to be placed over my head in my dying hour: 'May I meet you all in heaven. Albert H. Smith.' Farewell to you all. I trust you will all meet me in heaven, where I am prepared to go."

THE NEW YORK Daily Graphic, in commenting upon the recent resignation of Rev. J. D. Fulton, as pastor of Tremont Temple, Boston, says: "He resigned in disgust, and accepted a call to a church in Brooklyn, the city of ecclesiastical shows and clerical sensations. He is evidently going to his own place. But whether his new congregation will succeed in getting his sermons printed in the secular papers, and, failing in this, will publish a paper for him to conduct, remains to be seen. It is not every man who can ride two such horses as the pulpit and the press at the same time; but Mr. Fulton is evidently an exceptional man, and we shall not be surprised at the announcement of the Clerical Scapling-Knife or the Believer's Bushwhacker any day. It will be worth more than 'Four York Shillings' to see Parson Fulton in print."

A YANKEE GROCER, being solicited to contribute to the building of a new church, promptly subscribed his name to a paper in the following manner: "John Jones (the only place in town where you can get eleven pounds of good sugar for a dollar), twenty-five cents."

THAT was a happy thought of the Department which guards against improper uses of the postal cards. The carriers are not to read what is written on the cards, unless it is scurrilous! It will be seen that this is a perfect security against the abuse of the new system. It was invented in Ireland.

Advertisements.

GENERAL NOTICE.

On August 8, 1872, I contracted for the two best advertising pages of THE INDEX for the current year. "No advertisements objectionable to the editor to be taken." For terms apply to

ASA K. BUTTS, 36 Dey St., New York.

No improper advertisements, no advertisements of patent medicines, and no advertisements known to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be hereafter admitted into THE INDEX. All advertisements accepted before this date will be allowed to run their time. No cuts admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.
Toledo O., June 21, 1873.

A CHEAP OFFER!

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.

The INDEX TRACT NO. 7, "Compulsory Education," is out of print, and therefore orders for it cannot be filled at present. But it is intended to reprint it before long, and all parties ordering a COMPLETE SET will be furnished with it without extra charge as soon as reprinted.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Report, in pamphlet form, of the Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association for 1873 will be published Sept. 1st.

It contains full proceedings of the meeting, including Essays by Samuel Johnson on "FREEDOM IN RELIGION," and by John Weiss on "RELIGION IN FREEDOM." Speeches by O. B. Frothingham, W. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, S. Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. ABBOT, Lucetta Mott, and the Annual Report of the Executive Committee.

Price, 25 cents a copy; in packages of four or more, 25 cents each. It can be obtained by addressing the undersigned at New Bedford, Mass., or in Boston, of A. Williams & Co., and at Long's.
WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. ABBOT, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. ABBOT. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. ABBOT. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

Don't let your children spend money for trash, but let them get a game of Avluda. If the pictures and descriptions comprising this game were in book form, they would cost many times the price of the game. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of seventy-five cents, by West & Lee, Worcester, Mass.
"Must have a large sale, and deserves it too."—Harper's Weekly.

The Sunday Morning Voice.

Issued every Sunday morning, and delivered by carriers to all parts of the city. Also sold at the news stands, and by newboys.

THE VOICE has a large circulation, and is regarded as the best advertising medium in Cleveland. Published by the

Voice Publishing Company,

66 and 67 FRANKFORT STREET,
Cleveland, Ohio.

WORKERS WANTED!

For Wood's Household Magazine,

Which, with its premiums, is one of the most attractive in the country. Price of Magazine,

ONE DOLLAR A YEAR.

COMMISSIONS LIBERAL, offering a lucrative and agreeable business to those willing to give it proper attention.

VOL XIII. begins with July, 1873.

Examine our Clipping and Premium Lists.

Two first-class periodicals for the price of one. For Specimen Magazine, and further information, address

WOOD'S HOUSEHOLD MAGAZINE,

Newburgh, New York.

S. E. SHUTES, Publisher.

Standard Liberal Works.

For sale by A. K. BUTTS, 36 DEY STREET, New York.

JEHOVAH UNVEILED; or, The Character of the Jewish Deity delineated. A new and valuable book. Price 35 cents.

EXETER HALL. A Theological Romance. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper, 60 cents; postage 4 cents. Cloth, 80 cents; postage 15 cents.

PAINE'S THEOLOGICAL AND MISCELLANEOUS WRITINGS. 12mo. Edition. Price $1.50; postage 15 cents. This edition contains the last Will and Testament of THOMAS PAINE, wherein he disposes of his real and personal property, amounting to some thousands of dollars, which completely disproves those pious stories respecting Paine's poverty and destitution in his last hours.

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON; Examination of the Prophecies, Essay on Dreams, etc. A very handsome edition in green cloth. Price 75 cents; postage 14 cents.

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON; Being an Investigation of True and Fabulous Theology. Price, cloth, 50 cents; postage 12 cents. Paper, 25 cents, or five for $1.00.

PAINE'S COMMON-SENSE; A Revolutionary Pamphlet, addressed to the Inhabitants of America in 1776. To which is added a brief Sketch of the Author's Life. Price 30 cents; postage 2 cents.

THE LIFE OF THOMAS PAINE, Author of "Common-Sense," "Rights of Man," "Age of Reason," &c., with Critical and Explanatory Observations of his Writings. By G. Yale. Price $1.00; postage 15 cents.

TESTIMONIALS TO THOMAS PAINE, Author of "Common-Sense," "The Crisis," "Rights of Man," "English System of Finance," "Age of Reason," &c. Compiled by Joseph M. Moreau. Price 15 cents.

THOMAS PAINE; The Author-Hero of the American Revolution. Price 10 cents.

THE YAHOO; A Satirical Rhapsody. By the author of "The Great Dragon Cast Out." Price 70 cents.

THE LIGHT OF THE AGE; or, Miracles Explained. By Franklin D. Orcutt. Price 40 cents.

THE LOGIC OF DEATH; or, Why should the Believer or Atheist Fear to Die? By G. Jacob Holyoake. Price 10 cents.

MY RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE, and What I Found in the Bible. Remarks of J. W. Pike at the "Revival" in the "West School-house," Windham, Ohio, on the evenings of Oct. 15 and 22, 1865. Price 10 cents.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS. By Frances Wright. Embellished with the portrait of Epicurus, the Greek philosopher, and the author. Price 75 cents; postage 12 cents.

HUME'S ESSAYS. Essays and Treatises on Various Subjects, by David Hume, Esq., with a brief Sketch of the Author's Life and Writings, to which are added Dialogues concerning Natural Religion. Price $1.50; postage 20 cents.

THE KORAN. A new English edition of the Koran of Mohammed, to which is added the Life of Mohammed; or the history of that doctrine which was begun and carried out by him in Arabia. Price $2.00; postage 20 cents.

THE FESTIVAL OF ASHTAROTH. A Tale of Palestine, founded on the destruction of the Moabites by the Jews. By A. C. Middleton. Price 15 cents.

THE NEW TESTAMENT shown in its true light at a glance. What it proves and what it does not prove. Compiled by J. P. Whipple. Price, including postage, 54 cents.

THE BIBLE IN INDIA; Hindu Origin of Hebrew and Christian Revelation. Translated from "Le Bible dans l'Inde." By Louis Jaccolit. Price $2.00; postage 25 cents.

Standard Liberal Works.

For sale by A. K. BUTTS, 36 DEY STREET, NEW YORK.

THE PHILOSOPHICAL DICTIONARY of Voltaire.—Tenth American Edition. Two Volumes in one. Containing 87 large octavo pages, with two elegant steel engravings. Price, $5.00; postage, 55 cents. This is the largest and most correct edition in the English language, having, besides the whole of the London edition translated several years since by a friend of Voltaire's, and others translated immediately from the French edition. The London edition sells at from $10 to $15, and does not contain nearly so much as this American edition.

HELVETIUS; or, The True Meaning of the System of Nature. Translated from the French. Price, 20 cents; postage, 4 cents.

THE DIVINE AND MORAL WORKS OF PLATO.—Translated from the Original Greek; with Introductory Dissertations and Notes. First American from the sixth London edition, carefully revised and corrected. Price, including postage, $2.50.

HISTORY OF MOSES, AARON, JOSHUA, and others, deduced from a Review of the Bible. Also, remarks on the Morals of the Old and New Testament, and some of the Ancient Philosophers. By J. M. Dornsey. Price, 75 cents; postage, 12 cents.

HISTORY OF ALL CHRISTIAN SECTS and Denominations—their Origin, Tenets, and Conditions. By John Evans, LL.D. Price, $1.00; postage, 16 cents.

ASTRONOMY AND WORSHIP OF THE ANCIENTS. By G. Vale. Price, 30 cents; postage, 2 cents.

STUDYING THE BIBLE; or, Brief Criticisms on some of the principal Scripture Texts. By Elmina Drake Sienker. Price, 75 cents; postage, 8 cents.

MORAL PHYSIOLOGY.—A Plain Treatise on Population. By Robert Dale Owen. This work is illustrated with a Frontispiece. Price, including postage, 68 cents.

TALLEYRAND'S LETTERS TO POPE PIUS VII.—Translated from the French into Portuguese by D. J. Monteiro, and from Portuguese into English by H. D. Robinson. With a Memoir of the Author. Price, 60 cents.

HALF-HOURS WITH SOME ANCIENT AND MODERN CELEBRATED FREE-THINKERS.—Thomas Hobbes, Lord Bolingbroke, Condorcet, Spinoza, Anthony Collins, Des Cartes, M. de Voltaire, John Toland, Compt de Volney, Charles Hume, Percy Bysshe Shelley, Claude Adrien Helvétius, Francis Wright, Darnmont, Epicurus, Zeno, Matthew Tindal, David Hume, Dr. Thomas Burnet, Thomas Paine, Baptiste de Mirabaud, Baron D'Holbach, Robert Taylor, Joseph Barker. By "Iconoclast," Collins and Watts. Price, 75 cents; postage, 16 cents.

COOPER'S LECTURES ON THE SOUL—in which the doctrine of Immortality is religiously and philosophically considered. This is a work of vast importance to those who look on this life as only a state of probation. Price, 75 cents; postage, 13 cents.

CLASSIFIED BIBLICAL EXTRACTS; or, The Holy Scriptures Analyzed—showing its contradictions, absurdities, and immorality. Price, 25 cents.

MAN'S NATURE AND DEVELOPMENT. By Henry George Atkinson, F.R.S., and Harriet Martineau. Price, full gilt, $1.50; postage, 16 cents. Cloth, $1.25; postage, 12 cents.

QUEEN MAB, with Notes. By Percy B. Shelley. Price, 75 cents.

A LEGACY TO THE FRIENDS OF FREEDOM: being a Review of the Principles, Historical Facts, and Personages of the Revolutions of the Old and New Testaments; with known as the "Old and New Testaments; with Remarks on the Morality of Nature. By Benjamin Offen, formerly Lecturer of the Society of Moral Philanthropists, at Tammany Hall, New York. Price, 15 cents; postage, 10 cents.

LETTERS TO THE CATHOLIC BISHOP OF BOSTON. Proving that the Roman Catholic Religion is opposed to a Republican form of Government. By an Independent Irishman. Price, 15 cents.

EQUALITY; or, a History of Lithuania. Price, 15 cents.

ELEGANT EXTRACTS from the Holy Bible. Price, 10 cents.

INTERFERE! DRINKING. An Exposure of the Causes of this vice, and the means by which it may be obviated. By Thomas Hetchell, of the New York City. Published by order of the New York Society for the Promotion of Internal Improvement, 1819. Republished by order of the will of Mrs. Barbara Amelia Hetchell, 1867. Price 15 cents.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE; or, Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach, author of "Good Sense," etc. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Translated from the French by H. D. Robinson. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.00; postage, 25 cents.

THE LETTERS TO EUGENIA; or, A Preservation of Religious Prejudice. By Baron D'Holbach, author of the "System of Nature," etc. Translated from the French by Anthony C. Middleton, M.D. Price, $1.50; postage, 15 cents.

GOOD SENSE. By Baron D'Holbach. A new edition of this truly valuable book has just been issued, and is now ready for purchase. Friends who want "Good Sense" (and who do not) can have a supply sent by mail by forwarding their orders. Price, post-paid, $1.00.

COMPLETE WORKS OF THOMAS PAINE.—Secretary to the Committee of Foreign Affairs in the American Revolution. Three Volumes. In the American Revolution. Theological, and Consisting of his Political, Theological, and Miscellaneous Writings. To which is added a brief Sketch of his Life. Price, $7.00; postage, 84 cents.

PAINE'S POLITICAL WRITINGS.—To which is prefixed a brief sketch of the Author's Life. A new edition, with annotations. Two volumes. Price, $5.00; postage, 52 cents.

THOMAS PAINE'S WRITINGS.—Theological and Miscellaneous. The most complete edition ever published. Containing his Age of Reason, and all his writings on Theology, with many Miscellaneous and Political pieces. Price, $2.50; postage, 35 cents.

The Commercial Review

—AND—

MANUFACTURERS' JOURNAL.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY BY

G. H. ADAMS & BRO., Publishers,
Cleveland, Ohio.This is the only exclusively COMMERCIAL and TRADE JOURNAL in Northern Ohio, and it also devotes a great deal of space to

Manufacturing News,

Railroad Intelligence, Financial Facts, and everything of Interest to Business Men.

It is invaluable to

Merchants and ManufacturersWho buy or sell in the Cleveland market;
and it is the BEST

Advertising Medium

For business men of all classes in this section of the State.

SUBSCRIPTION, $3.00 PER YEAR.

A. K. Butts & Co.'s New Publications.

The Essence of Religion.

GOD THE IMAGE OF MAN.

Man's Dependence upon Nature the Last and
Only Source of Religion.Translated from the German of LUDWIG FEUR-
BACH, by Professor A. Loos.
12mo. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cents.To see man trembling and exulting at the sight of his own shadow touched Feuerbach to the soul.
Feuerbach's Atheism was intended to restore man to himself. His Materialism was designed to prevent man's exalting in dreams. He denied the personal immortality of the soul—yes, he did,
and for the same reason that he denied the personal existence of God. He wished to preserve the integrity of existence, to make mortality immortal, to breathe the spirit of eternity with time, to compress all humanity within human limits, and get the full benefit of this life while it lasted. He was jealous of the future life; he begrudged every drop of feeling that was spilled over the edge of the grave, and lost on the other side. This world was rich enough for him, and ought to be rich enough for anybody; and so he neglected, misused, soured, made him heart-sick.—Freihnigham's Horticultural Hall Lecture, Jan. 1872.

Materialism:

ITS ANCIENT HISTORY, ITS RECENT DE-VELOPMENT, ITS PRACTICAL BENEFIT-
CENCE.By Dr. L. BURKHARDT, author of "Force and Matter," "Man in Nature," &c., &c.
Translated from the author's manuscript by Professor A. Loos. 25 cts.The Childhood of the World;
A SIMPLE ACCOUNT OF MAN IN EARLY TIMES.

By EDWARD CLODD, F.R.S.

12mo. Paper, 50 cents. Cloth, 75 cents.

Extract from a letter from Professor Max Müller to the author:—"I read your book with great pleasure. I have no doubt it will do good, and hope you will continue your work. Nothing spoke our temper so much as having to unlearn in youth, mankind, and even old age, so many things which we were taught as children.
Book like yours will prepare a far better soil in the child's mind, and I was delighted to have it read to my children."E. B. Tylor, F.R.S., in "Nature" says:—"This gentle little volume is a child's book as to shortness, cheapness, and simplicity of style, though the author reasonably hopes that older people will use it as a source of information not popularly accessible elsewhere, as to the life of Primeval Man and its relation to our own. . . . This book, if the time has come for the public to take to it, will have a certain effect in the world. It is not a mere compilation from the authors mentioned in the preface, but takes its own grounds, and stands by and for itself. Mr. Clodd has thought out his philosophy of life, and used his best skill to bring it into the range of a child's view."

The Religion of Humanity.

By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

Second Edition, with Fine Steel Portrait. 12mo.
Cloth. Price, post-paid, $1.50.Christianity and Materialism
Contrasted.

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.

A handsome forty-five page pamphlet. 15 cents.

Mr. Underwood's best Lecture.

The Influence of Christianity on Civilization.Eighty-eight page pamphlet. Price 25 cents.
Address the publishers,

Asa K. Butts & Co.,

36 DEY STREET, N. Y.

LOUIS BLACK,
104 J. Gorton Ave., Detroit, Michigan.
MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN
INVENTOR AND PROPRIETOR OF
Black's Patent Interchangeable Spectacles,
and Self-Attaching Spring Eye-Glasses. Importer of all kinds of Optical Goods. The best Spectacles fitted to the Eyesight so as to improve it.ARITHMETICAL
CARDS AND GAMES.
Agents Can Make Money.
SEND FOR A PACK.With these Cards the drill of Mental Arithmetic is made more pastime—besides many (including common card) games can be played. Teachers and pupils, and everybody should use them for instruction and amusement. AGENTS WANTED. One pack, with book of instructions, sent post-paid for fifty cents. Address F. H. BATESON, Drawer
99, Toledo, O.ECONOMY
PRINTING-HOUSE,
Blank-Book Manufactory,
Stationery Depot, and Book
Bindery.

W. S. Robinson & Co.,

66 and 67 FRANKFORT ST., Cleveland, Ohio.

The Influence of Christianity
on Civilization.

BY B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Popular fallacies concerning this question have had no more honest and fearless exposition than is given us in this handsome pamphlet. Mr. Underwood has treated this momentous theme with dignity, candor, and grace, yet with that vigor which has made him so popular on the platform among the Liberals of the West. Nor does he lack in erudition. He is profuse in quotations from standard histories, largely Christian, and shows concisely but clearly from their own testimony what a drag upon civilization that stupendous fanaticism has been.In paper covers; single copies, 25 cts. Address the publisher,

ASA K. BUTTS, 36 Day Street, N. Y.

Real Estate Securities,
paying 8 to 10 per cent. interest, or
INVESTMENTS IN REAL ESTATE.
IN CHICAGO AND VICINITY.If judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The oldReal Estate and Loan Agency
OF

ERNST PRUSSING,

148 Randolph St., - - CHICAGO,
(Established 1853)Guarantees perfect title and ample security in all its Real Estate Loans.First-class securities always on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge.
Real Estate Investments made on commission and on shares; taxes paid, &c.
Orders of capitalists and real estate owners
respectfully solicited.

HIGHER LAW.

A Romance.

By EDWARD MAITLAND, author of "The Pilgrim and Shrine." 12mo., cloth, $1.75."There is no novel, in short, which can be compared to it for its width of view, its cultivation, its poetry, and its deep human interest. . . . except 'Romola.'—Westminster Review.""Its careful study of character, and the inguity and independence of its speculations, will commend it to the admiration even of those who differ from its conclusions
most gravely."—British Quarterly Review.

THE PILGRIM AND THE SHRINE.

By EDWARD MAITLAND. Third edition. 12mo.
cloth, $1.25. Postpaid on receipt of price."One of the wisest and most charming of books."—*Westminster Review.*Address ASA K. BUTTS,
36 DEY STREET, NEW YORK.

For Plain and Fancy

JOB PRINTING,

IN ENGLISH OR GERMAN,

Such as

Business Cards.

Pamphlets.

Constitutions.

Invitations.

Ball-Cards.

Hand-Bills,

&c., &c., send your orders to the undersigned, where they will be filled promptly and at very low rates.

Waechter and Erie Printing Co.,

77 MICHIGAN STREET,

Cleveland, Ohio.

Summer Reading for the Seaside.

CHEAP AND GOOD.

AN ENGLISH SEASIDE STORY, published complete in an EXTRA TRIBUNE of 12 pages. Price Ten Cents by mail. Address
THE TRIBUNE, New York.

ENGLISH CLASSICS.

The Cheapest Books Ever Published.

SHAKESPEARE. 60c. Cloth, $1.25

Containing all the great Poet's Plays, 37 in number, from the Original Text, the whole of his Poems, with Memoir and Portrait, and 37 Illustrations, by Gilbert, Wilson, &c.

BYRON. 50c. Cloth, $1.00

A New Edition of the Works of Lord Byron. 480 pp. 18 Illustrations by F. Gilbert.

SCOTT. 25c. Cloth, 50c.

A New Edition of the Poetical Works of Sir Walter Scott. Illustrated by F. Gilbert.

GOLDSMITH. 50c. Cloth, $1.00

The Works of Oliver Goldsmith, with Memoir and Portrait, and New and complete Illustrated Edition.

BURNS. 25c. Cloth, 50c.

This new and complete edition of the Poetical Works of Robert Burns is elaborately illustrated, and contains the whole of the Poems, Life, and Correspondence of the great Scottish Bard.

ARABIAN NIGHTS. 25c. Cloth, 50c.

A New Translation, complete, with numerous illustrations.

MILTON. 25c. Cloth, 50c.

Milton's Works, New Edition, with Memoir, Portrait, and Frontispiece.

COWPER. 25c. Cloth, 50c.

Cowper's Works, New Edition, with Memoir, Portrait, and Frontispiece.

WORDSWORTH. 25c. Cloth, 50c.

Wordsworth's Works, New Edition, with numerous illustrations.

MOORE. 25c. Cloth, 50c.

Moore's Works, New Edition, with numerous illustrations.

The usual Discounts given to the Trade.

THE AMERICAN NEWS CO.,

New York.

Important Scientific Works.

By PROF. J. CLERK MAXWELL.

(Ready To-day.)

A Treatise on Electricity and Magnetism. By J. Clerk Maxwell, M. A., F. R. S.,
Professor of Experimental Physics in the University of Cambridge. 2 vols.,
8vo. With illustrations. $12.The Depths of the Sea. An Account of the General Results of the Dredging Cruises
of H. M. S. Lightning and Porcupine during the Summers of 1868, '69 and '70. By
Prof. Wyvill Thompson, F. R. S. Medium
8vo., with nearly 100 exquisite wood-cuts and 8 colored maps. $9."It is impossible to read this fascinating piece without feeling awakened within us a desire to emulate the author in his efforts to obtain a knowledge of life beneath the waters, of which most of us know nothing."— Journal of Applied Chemistry."It is splendidly illustrated and popularly written, with much humor, and the treatment, while the subject, is anything but dry;
it is a volume altogether worthy the interest and importance of its subject."—Popular Science Monthly."The volume, which forms one of the most important contributions of the season to the science of physical geography, is brought out in a style of rare typographical elegance, and is copiously illustrated with admirable drawings from Nature. It will fill a choice place in the library, both for the interest of its contents and the beauty of its execution."—*N. Y.
Tribune.*"Nothing can be more complete than the account of the scientific results of these voyages, which are fully illustrated by wood-cuts of the strange forms of life brought from the dark depths of the ocean, by charts of soundings and elaborate tables of the deep sea temperature. The book is another example of that mingling of literary interest with scientific completeness and value, which is the only true form of what is called the popularization of science."—*Daily News (London).*Zoological Mythology; Or, The Legends of Animals. By Angelo de Gubernatis,
Professor of Sanscrit and Comparative Literature at Florence. 2 vols., 8vo., cloth, $3.The Scientific Basis of Faith. By Joseph John Murphy, author of "Habit and Intelligence." 8vo., cloth, $5.Old-Fashioned Ethics and Commonsense Metaphysics, with Some of their Applications. By William Thomas Thornton, author of "A Treatise on Labor." 8vo., cloth, $5.50.

New Book by Amadee Guillemin.

The Forces of Nature. A Popular Inroduction to the Study of Physical Phenomena. By Amadee Guillemin. Translated from the French by Mrs. Norman Lockyer, and edited, with Notes and Additions,
by J. Norman Lockyer, F. R. S. Imperial
8vo., with 11 colored plates and 450 wood engravings, cloth, $12.50. [Now ready.]"This book is a luxurious introduction to the study of the physical sciences. M. Guillemin has found an excellent translator in
Mrs. Norman Lockyer, while the editorship of Mr. Norman Lockyer, with his notes and additions, are guarantees not only of scientific accuracy but of the completeness and lateness of the information."—*Daily News
(London).*Address
ASA K. BUTTS, 36 Day Street, N. Y.

Standard Liberal Works.

For sale by A. K. BUTTS, 36 DEY STREET,
NEW YORK.THE RIGHT OF MARRIED WOMEN TO
HOLD PROPERTY. Judge Hertell's argument in the House of Assembly of the State of New York, in the Session of 1857,
in support of the bill to restore to married women "The Right of Property." Republished by order of the will of Mrs. Barbara Amelia Hertell, 1867. Price, 30 cents.WAT TYLER; a Dramatic Poem in three acts. By Robert Southey, Esq. Price, 20 cents.THE DIEGESIS; being a Discovery of the Origin, Evidences, and Early History of Christianity, never yet before or elsewhere
so fully and faithfully set forth. By Rev.
Robert Taylor. This work was written by
Mr. Taylor while serving a term in Oakham (Eng.) Jail, where he was imprisoned for blasphemy. It contains 440 pages, octavo, and is considered unanswerable as to arguments or facts. Price, $2.00; postage, 24
cents.THE DEVIL'S PULPIT—By Rev. Robert
Taylor—with a sketch of the Author's Life
—containing Sermons on the following subjects:—The Star of Bethlehem, John
the Baptist, Raising the Devil, The Unjust
Judge, Virgo Paritura, St. Peter, Judas
Iscariot Vindicated, St. Thomas, St. James,
and St. John—the Sons of Thunder, The Crucifixion of Christ, the Cup of Salvation,
Lectures on Free Masonry, The Holy Ghost, St. Philip, St. Matthew, The Redeemer. Price, $2.00; postage 20 cents.ASTRO-THEOLOGICAL LECTURES—By Rev. Robert Taylor, Containing the following Lectures:—Belief not the Safe Side,
The Resurrection of Lazarus, the Unjust
Steward, The Devil, The Rich Man, and
Lazarus, The Day of Temptation in the Wilderness, Ahab, or the Lying Spirit, The Fall of Man, Noah, Abraham, Sarah, Mel-
chisedec, The Lord, Moses, The Twelve
Patriarchs, Who is the Lord? Exodus,
Aaron, Miriam. Price, $2.00; postage, 20
cents.THE SYNTAGMA—By Rev. Robert Taylor, author of the "Diegesis," "Devil's Pulpit,"
"Astro-Theological Sermons," etc. Price,
including postage, $1.00.THE INFIDEL'S OR INQUIRER'S TEXT-BOOK. Being the substance of 13 Lectures on the Bible, by Robert Cooper. Price
$1.50; postage, 16 cents.Half Hour Recreations in Popular Science.

EDITED BY DANA ESTES.

The growing demand in this country for Books on popular science encourages the editor and publishers to issue this series of papers, compiled from the works of the most popular scientific writers.

25c per Part; $2.50 for 12 consecutive Parts.

No. 1. Strange Discoveries Respecting the Aurora and Recent Solar Researches. By Richard A. Proctor, F. R.
A. S.No. 2. The Cranial Affinities of Man and the Ape. By Prof. Rudolph Vir-chow, of Berlin, author of "Cellular Pathology." Fully illustrated.No. 3. Spectrum Analysis Explained, and its Use to Science Illustrated. With a colored plate and several wood cuts.No. 4. Spectrum Analysis Discoveries, showing its Application in Microscopical
Research and to Discoveries of the Physical Constitution and Movements of the Heavenly Bodies. From the works of Schellen,
Young, Roscoe, Lockyer, Huggins and others.No. 5. Nebulae, Meteoric Showers, and Comets.No. 6. Unconscious Action of the Brain and Epidemic Delusions. By
Dr. Carpenter, author of "The Microscope and its Revelations," "Human Physiology,"
&c.No. 7. The Geology of the Stars. By
Prof. A. Winchell, of the University of Michigan, author of "Sketches of Creation."The Unity of Natural Phenomena.

An Introduction to the Study of

THE FORCES OF NATURE.

Being a popular explanation of the latest discoveries in the domain of Natural Science, including the "Correlation of Forces,"
"Mode of Motion," "Force of Gravity," and "Mutual Controversability of the Forces of Nature."

From the French of Emile Saigey.

WITH NOTES AND AN INTRODUCTION

BY PROF. T. F. MOSES,

OF URBANA UNIVERSITY.

1 vol., crown, 8vo. $1.50.

"In this charming treatise, M. Emile Saigey gives a very lucid account of the latest mode of speculating on the Physical Facts of the Universe. It is a mode which may be described as bringing off the resources of modern science to the proof of the fact that the human mind is incapable of any intelligible conception of physical facts which do not resolve itself into matter and motion. There is in fact but one science under many names, and that science is mechanics. Atoms, and the laws which regulate their movements,
this is all our material universe."—Blackwood's Magazine.

The above sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

ASA K. BUTTS & CO., 36 Day Street,

New York.

SELF-HELP.

PREVENTION AND REMEDY.

The Butler Health-Lift

HAS BEEN IN SUCCESSFUL OPERATION FOR TEN YEARS!

Principal Office:
PARK BANK BUILDING, 214 Broadway,
New York.
BROOKLYN, 158 Remsen street, connecting with rooms No. 229 Fifth avenue.

A SCIENTIFIC EXERCISE, concentrated and cumulative, a tonic to the nervous system, a rest to tired brains, a cure for chronic difficulties.

Never exhausting; pleasant, agreeable, combined with rest.

The cheapest and best apparatus for private use to competent parties. Call, or send 50 cents for descriptive pamphlet.

"I know the BUTLER HEALTH-LIFT to be an efficient tonic, especially to the nervous and digestive systems."—C. L. Mitchell, M.D.
Address at Principal Office,

LEWIN G. JANEN, Proprietor.

THE BEST MUSIC BOOKS

For High and for Grammar Schools!

THE HOUR OF SINGING!

By L. O. EMERSON and W. S. TILDEN.

Price $1.00.

This HIGH SCHOOL SINGING BOOK is admirably fitted for its work, containing a good elementary course, and a large quantity of the best vocal music, well arranged in two, three, and four parts. Has been received with the greatest favor by practical teachers.

Just Ready. THE TRIO, a collection of three-part songs, arranged especially for High Schools and Seminaries. An excellent companion or successor to the HOUR OF SINGING.

Cheerful Voices.

Price 50 Cents.

By L. O. EMERSON.

The new, sprightly, and very musical COMMON SCHOOL SONG BOOK is by a gentleman who "hits the mark every time," and never fails in satisfying the musical taste of the people. Of his previous School Song Books, about 300,000 have been sold.

All school teachers are invited to give this new and popular book a trial.

Any book published by Ditson & Co. will be sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,
BOSTON.

Charles H. Ditson & Co.,
711 Broadway, New York.

Popular Household Edition

(limo.)

OF THE

ENGLISH POETS.

Each 1 illustrated with Fine Steel Engraving, and Biography of the Author.

Handsomely Bound in Cloth, in Gold and Colors, Gilt Edges, $1.50;
Morocco Antique, $3.00;
Morocco Extra, $3.50.

COWPER'S POETICAL WORKS,

SCOTT'S POETICAL WORKS,

MILTON'S POETICAL WORKS,

CRABBE'S POETICAL WORKS,

CAMPBELL'S AND COLERIDGE'S POETICAL WORKS, KIRK WHITE'S POETICAL AND PROSE WORKS, GOLDSMITH'S POETICAL

AND PROSE WORKS,

MONTGOMERY'S POETICAL WORKS,

HERBERT'S AND HERBES'

POETICAL WORKS,

BURNS'S POETICAL WORKS AND LETTERS,

GLEANINGS FROM THE ENGLISH POETS,

WORDSWORTH'S POETICAL WORKS,

BYRON'S POETICAL WORKS,

MOORE'S POETICAL WORKS,

POPE'S POETICAL WORKS.

The Usual Discounts Given to the Trade.

THE AMERICAN NEWS CO.,
NEW YORK.

MANUALS

of Mathematical Instruments,
Microscopes,
Magic Lanterns,
Meteorological Instruments.

Physical Apparatus,

Profusely Illustrated and priced, mailed to any address on receipt of 10 cents each.

JAMES W. QUEEN & CO., Opticians,
924 Chestnut St. 601 Broadway,
PHILADELPHIA. NEW YORK.

Mention that you saw this in THE INDEX.

J. F. RUGGLES,

Free Thought Bibliopole,

BRONSON, MICH.,

Continues to furnish those who desire them Liberal and Philosophical books, tracts, etc., that embody the matured thoughts and opinions of the Free Press of the Earth! Being in constant receipt of importations from Europe, I am prepared to supply all works in any department of Literature that are obtainable in the markets of the world. Catalogues free.

407 Broadway, N. Y.,

NEAR CANAL STREET,

BABCOCK

Fire Apparatus

EXTINGUISHERS.

HOOK AND LADDER TRUCKS, ENGINES AND TANKS.

F. W. FARWELL, Secretary.

THE

COMMONWEALTH

LIFE INSURANCE CO.

GENTLEMEN of standing and ability (either in professional or mercantile pursuits) are desired in all parts of the country to represent this reliable company. Our plans of Insurance are simple, popular, and honest.

Address 178 Broadway,
NEW YORK.

THE

SPIRIT OF REFORM.

COLBY & RICH,

14 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON, MASS.,

Issue weekly the

BANNER OF LIGHT,

An exponent of the Spiritual philosophy of the nineteenth century.

The above is a first-class, eight-page, family Newspaper, containing FORTY COLUMNS OF INTERESTING AND INSTRUCTIVE READING, classed as follows:—

LITERARY DEPARTMENT.—From French and German.

REPORTS OF SPIRITUAL LECTURES.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

MESSAGE DEPARTMENT.—Spirit-messages from the departed to their friends in earth-life, given through the mediumship of Mrs. J. R. Conant.

ORIGINAL CONTRIBUTIONS.—From the most talented writers in the world.

All which features render this journal a popular Family Paper, and at the same time the harbinger of a Glorious Spiritual Religion.

Terms of Subscription in Advance:

Per year $3.00
Six months 1.50
Three months75
Specimen copies sent free.

We confidently call the attention of the friends of progress and reform, whether in material or spiritual matters, to the self-respecting and dignified tone, and the liberal position assumed and maintained by the Banner of Light in the past, the same being the guarantee of future usefulness.

Colby & Rich also publish and offer for sale, at the Banner of Light Bookstore, many books and pamphlets of a spiritual and reformatory nature.

The complete works of Andrew Jackson Davis; also books by Judge J. W. Edmonds, Mrs. Emma Hardinge, William Howitt, Hon. Robert Dale Owen, D. D. Home, Prof. William Denton, Miss Lizzie Doten, J. M. Peebles, Mrs. J. S. Adams, Prof. S. B. Britan, Hudson and Emma Tuttle, Henry C. Wright, Warren Chase, Charles S. Woodruff, Dr. A. Randolph, Warren S. Barlow, George Stearns, and others will here be found.

FIVE THOUSAND GOOD BOOKS at half prices. Great clearance catalogue sent free. ESTES & LAURIE, Boston.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO., Bankers,
LEROY, MINNESOTA.

Money loaned on short time, or for a term of years, on unincumbered improved farms, at 12 per cent. per annum, interest net. Interest payable annually. All expenses for abstract of title and recording mortgage paid by borrower. We collect and remit to any part of the United States free of charge.

REFERENCES.—First National Bank, McGregor, Iowa; Gilchrist & Co., McGregor, Iowa; First National Bank, Austin, Minnesota; Citizens National Bank, Chicago, Illinois; Allen, Stevens & Co., New York City.

"The Greatest Luxury in the World!"

TURKISH BATHS,

No. 81 and 83 Columbia Heights, Brooklyn, N. Y.

THREE MINUTES' WALK FROM FULTON FERRY.

Separate Department for Ladies.

OPEN FROM 9 A. M. TO 9 P. M.

While the Turkish Bath has established itself as an elegant and refined luxury, its great feature is its power as a remedial agent.

First class rooms and board for those desiring accommodations in the institution. Address CHARLES H. SHEPARD M. D.

All interested in the Progress of Science Should Read

NATURE,

A Weekly Illustrated Journal of Science.

The attention of all interested in the general progress of knowledge is earnestly invited to this Journal, which has now become the accredited organ of the leading scientific men, in communicating their views to each other and to the public.

One of the leading objects of this periodical is to awaken in the public mind a more lively interest in science. With this end in view, it provides original articles and reviews, written by scientific men of the highest distinction in their various departments, expounding the Grand Results of Scientific Research, discussing the most recent scientific discoveries, and pointing out the bearing of science upon civilization and progress, and its claims to more general recognition, as well as to a higher place in the educational system of the country.

There will also be found in Nature complete abstracts of all important papers communicated to British, American, and Continental Scientific Societies and Periodicals, and Reports of the Meetings of Scientific Bodies.

Among the contributors to Nature will be found the names of almost every man of note in the various departments of scientific inquiry in England, America, and the Continent of Europe.

As questions of science compass all limits of nationality, and are of universal interest, a periodical devoted to them may fitly appeal to the intelligent classes in all countries where its language is read. The proprietors of Nature will aim so to conduct it that it shall bear a common claim upon all English-speaking peoples.

Nature is published in London; it asks, as it will be found to deserve, the liberal patronage of the thinking classes of the United States. Its articles are brief and condensed, and are thus suited to the circumstances of an active and busy people who have little time to read extended and elaborate treatises.

Every intelligent man is now expected to know something of what is going on in the scientific world; the columns of Nature will give a summary of it, varied, compressed, and authentic.

Yearly Subscription, $5. Single Numbers, price 12 cents. Sent for two months, as a trial subscription, on receipt of 75 cents.

THE PRACTITIONER.

A Monthly Journal of Therapeutics.

Edited by

FRANCIS N. ANSTIE, M.D., F.R.C.P.

"To hard-worked medical men, in general country practice, with little time for reading, and few opportunities for professional conversation, such a journal as this, bringing every month the latest ideas in medical practice and the latest records of important cases, ought to be invaluable."—London Guardian.

Yearly Subscription, $4. Single numbers 40 cents. Sent two months as a trial subscription, on receipt of 80 cents.

Address A. K. BUTTS & CO.,
36 DEY STREET, NEW YORK.

A GREAT OFFER.

Horace Waters & Son, 451 Broadway, New York, will dispose of 100 Pianos and Organs at extremely low prices for cash, or part cash, and balance in small monthly payments. New 7-Octave first-class Pianos, all modern improvements, for $275 cash. Organs, $35 to $75. Double-Reed Organs, $100; 4-stop, $115; 8-stop, $125 and upwards.

AGENTS WANTED.

LADIES!

THE Eureka Machine Twist,

50 and 100 Yard Spools,

AND THE

Eureka Button-Hole Twist,

10 Yard Spools,

ARE THE BEST IN USE.

For Sale at all Trimming Stores.

IRON IN THE BLOOD.

PERUVIAN SYRUP,

AN

IRON TONIC.

THE PERUVIAN SYRUP Vitalizes and Enriches the Blood, Tones up the System, Builds up the Broken-down, Cures Female Complaints, Dropsy, Debility, Humors, Dyspepsia, &c.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy from weak, sickly, suffering creatures, to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

Caution.—Be sure you get the right article. See that "Peruvian Syrup" is blown in the glass. Pamphlets free. Send for one. BETH W. FOWLE & SONS, Proprietors, Boston, Mass. For sale by druggists generally.

SOMETHING NEW.

LIFE INSURANCE

ON THE

SAME BASIS AS FIRE INSURANCE.

PAY FOR IT AS YOU GET IT.

NO "NOTES," "DIVIDENDS," "RESERVES," OR OTHER DEVICES

to collect more money than is actually required to secure all the benefits of Life Insurance.

On this plan the National Life Insurance Co. of Chicago has actually paid the heirs of deceased members $199,564, at a cost to them of only $3,399.10. Had these persons been insured on the old high-rate plan, their heirs would have received only $35,746.12.

INVESTIGATE, AND SAVE MONEY BY INSURING ON THIS PLAN, AND MAKE MONEY

by securing an agency for it. Address, NATIONAL LIFE INSURANCE CO., 78 and 80 Van Buren St.,
Chicago.

THE LIBERAL CHRISTIAN

FOR 1873,

HENRY W. BELLOWES, EDITOR.

Will endeavor, not only to maintain its present reputation as

ONE OF THE BEST WEEKLY JOURNALS OF

Religion, Literature, Science, and Art

Now published in this country, but to fulfil, more completely than ever before, its part of the work of supplying the American people with the

Best Thought on the Highest and Most Vital Themes

Of both general and particular interest, in all departments of human life. To this end, special arrangements have been entered into with able writers and correspondents to keep the columns of The Liberal Christian supplied, during the year 1873, with a pleasant variety of good articles and letters on the most stirring topics of the day.

The several departments of the paper—Fellowship of the Spirit; Our Contributors; Signs of the Times; Original and Selected Articles; Our Literary Record; Editorial; The Week's News—Eccelesiastical, Political, and General; Correspondence; Our Boys and Girls; Our Scientific Record; The Misses' Circle—will each receive the special care of the gentlemen and ladies under whose charge they have been placed; and no effort will be spared to provide a WEEKLY FAMILY JOURNAL worthy of the Patronage of American Homes, and of the Enlightened Nineteenth Century.

Price of Subscription, $3 per ANNUM. Payable in Advance.

Upon application by letter, specimen copies will always be sent free.

JOHN N. HALLOCK, Publisher,

P. O. Box 106,
214 Broadway, New York City.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 4.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1873.

WHOLE No. 196.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for sectarian educational and charitable institutions shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

Therefore, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

- ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.
- ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ———. Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.
- ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.
- ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.
- ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.
- ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.
- ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

So far as I am concerned, the above is the platform of THE INDEX. I believe in it without reserve; I believe that it will yet be accepted universally by the American people, as the only platform consistent with religious liberty. A Liberal League ought to be formed to carry out its principles wherever half a dozen earnest and resolute Liberals can be got together. Being convinced that the movement to secure compliance with these just "Demands" must surely, even if slowly, spread, I hope to make THE INDEX a means of furthering it; and I ask the assistance and active co-operation of every man and every woman who believes in it. Multiply Liberal Leagues everywhere, and report promptly the names of their Presidents and Secretaries. Intolerance and bigotry will tremble in proportion as that list grows. If freedom, justice, and reason are right, let their organized voice be heard like the sound of many waters.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor,

Boston, Sept. 1, 1873.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; F. A. Lofgreen, L. LaGrille, Secretaries.
BOSTON, MASS.—J. S. Rogers, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
VINELAND, N. J.—L. Bristol, President; E. G. Blaisdell, Secretary.
JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
OLATH, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

BY A. W. S.

"THE MOST trivial reasons will keep Protestants away from the sanctuary," says the Christian Union. Sometimes very weighty reasons will produce the same result.

HOW TO BE HAPPY without being frivolous, how to be good without being stupid, how to be wise without being conceited, is something that every man and woman ought to learn.

IF ANY ONE desires to become quite convinced whether the proverb be true or not, that "corporations have no souls," let him have dealings with a railroad company, and observe how shamelessly they arrogate to themselves every possible advantage.

"CHRIST IS THE great central luminary of history," says Dr. Edward Beecher. None but Christians think so, or say so. All Buddhists think Buddha "the great central luminary of history,"—and they outnumber the Christians by considerable.

THE CATHOLICS regard the recent removal of Mr. Monsell (a Romanist) from the office of Postmaster General, in England, as an open declaration of war, on the part of the Gladstone government, against the Catholic party. Mr. Bonverie, a Protestant, was appointed to succeed Mr. Monsell.

THE LIBERAL CHRISTIAN, of September 18, contains an excellent and admirable article on "Massachusetts Politics." One of its sentences is the following: "Here, as in so many other instances during the past year, the attitude of the Liberal Republicans in the presidential campaign stands fully vindicated."

THE Christian Statesman, published in Philadelphia, is the organ of the Constitutional Christian Amendment party. It is a very able and candid paper, and has just entered upon its seventh volume. We cannot wish for it success, but we respect it for its fearless and sincere advocacy of the views it holds to be true.

AT THE REVERENT request of Bishop Hendricken, of Providence, who has just arrived home from a visit to Rome, the Pope formally "blessed the people of the diocese of Providence." We sincerely trust that the bishop's people are happy, and we do not really suppose that the papal blessing will do them any harm.

ONE OF THE resolutions of the late Massachusetts Democratic State Convention says: "The fall of the great [American] republic is looked for throughout the civilized world." Indeed, that is news to most people we imagine! We wish the Convention had gone a little farther, and told us exactly when this fall is expected. We should like to get ready for it.

EDWARD BEECHER says that "the Pharisees, as is proved by the testimony of Josephus, held to the doctrine of the eternal punishment of the wicked." Just as good testimony abounds in the New Testament to prove that Jesus held to the same cruel doctrine; and we are puzzled to see how our Liberal Christian friends can interpret that book in any other way.

THE Christian Union, in an article on the "Needs of Protestantism," which exhibits some striking defects and failures of the Church, says: "The Bible is the Christian's chief weapon in his warfare against sin and error." Perhaps that is the reason why he has not succeeded any better. Let him try common-sense, or natural religion, for a time, and see how he comes on.

A JEWISH rabbi, called as a witness in a case in Brooklyn, N. Y., the other day, was offered the Christian Bible on which to take his oath. He indignantly refused it, and produced from his pocket a Hebrew Bible, upon which he was sworn. Why is one Bible better than another for this purpose? Our Jewish friend is bigoted. The only true basis of veracious testimony is a veracious man.

A WRITER in the New York Observer says that "the religious aim of the public schools is in favor of complete indifference," and that "every scholar, so trained, becomes in some measure a missionary of indifference." Indifference to what? If to the growth and prosperity of religious sects, then we rejoice. And that is what this writer probably fears, and what every liberal heartily desires.

"BY REFUSING the Bible a place in her schools, the State authoritatively disparages religious knowledge," says an advocate of the Constitutional Christian Amendment. By no means. By refusing the Bible a place in her schools, the State only disparages religious sectarianism and religious superstition. Real religious knowledge will be promoted by this exclusion, not hindered or disparaged.

THE "DECLINE OF PROTESTANTISM" is a subject which some of the secular as well as religious papers have been a good deal discussing of late. Alarming signs of this decline seem to be discerned both in this country and in Europe. The German Universities, it is said, generally show a great falling off in their number of theological students. At all this apparent decay the Protestant papers, of course, grieve; but the Roman Catholic organs illy conceal their exultation.

THE NEW YORK Journal of Commerce, in describing the monster "Graphic" balloon, as it lay in the Capitoline Base Ball Grounds, in Brooklyn, N. Y., said: "It lay on its side, with the head close to the ground, pointing westward, with the tail extending to the eastward." We are very glad that the Journal of Commerce, after telling us which way the head pointed, was careful not to leave us in any doubt as to the direction of the tail. Such accuracy in reporting will do much to maintain the proverbial truthfulness of newspapers.

NEBRASKA has lately adopted a criminal code. It went into effect Sept. 1. One of its provisions is against "profane swearing," as follows: "If any person of the age of fourteen years and upward shall profanely curse or damn, or profanely swear by the name of God, Jesus Christ, or the Holy Ghost, every such person shall, for each offence, be fined not less than 25 cents, nor more than $1." This we suppose is a Christian ordinance; but, if so, why was it not made to include "judicial" as well as "profane" swearing: for Christ said, "Swear not at all."

MR. CHARLES BRADLAUGH, the distinguished English Republican, has arrived in this country. Mr. Bradlaugh is said to be an atheist, and, as a writer in the Catholic Review puts it, "a man whose mind is unhappily closed to the reception of divine truth." The same writer admits, however, that Mr. Bradlaugh "is a gentleman," and "a man to be esteemed and admired." One might think that, if an atheist can be an estimable and admirable gentleman, his atheism, however intellectually wrong, cannot be morally reprehensible.

A SUBSCRIBER to the Boston Investigator accuses its mainly editor of being "clogged with the impediments of conservatism!" Friend Seaver must be rather astonished to find himself, after forty years' battling for utter intellectual freedom, set down at last as an old fogy. The terms radical and conservative, as they are popularly used, are only relative; but in their strict and true sense they mark two widely different classes of thinkers, who employ two widely different methods of arriving at conclusions. We do not hesitate to vote that, in the true sense of the word, the editor of the Investigator is a radical.

The Victory of Thought.

AN ADDRESS

AT THE SIXTH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE
FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION,
BOSTON, MAY 30, 1873.

BY FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

Modern thought seems to be unsettling everything. The very foundations, not only of systems of thought, theologies, and philosophies, but also of institutions, of government, even of marriage, seem to be profoundly shaken. All sorts of institutions, political, social, religious, seem to be weakened to-day, and the active, prying, investigating mind of man insists on finding out the real roots of all these things, insists upon discovering upon what they are based, what is their reason of being, how they shall justify themselves to the enlightened intelligence of man. A universal unrest, a mental, moral, and spiritual unrest, makes itself felt in everything that we read, or hear, or see. The very newspapers are full of it; books are full of it; conversations are full of it; and men and women, whom you and I meet day after day, are full of it. And this spirit of unrest, this thoughtful prying into the causes and explanations of things, seems to admit no exception; nothing whatever is sacred from its deep, curious, penetrating activity.

Well, how is this new activity of the century met? How is it confronted by the old order of things, and those who represent it? It is met now, as ever, by dogma,—dogma substantially unchanged. The same affirmation of things of which men really know nothing; the proclamation of an old revelation, finished and complete, never to be enlarged, never to be let go. That is the answer of dogma to this modern thought, as to all thought. It is the same unvarying monotone of "Revelation!"—"Revelation!" The will of God, explaining and answering all these questions suggested by human thought, that is the one answer; is there any other? I believe there is another answer beginning to make itself heard by every listening ear, beginning to make itself respected by every intelligent being; and that is the voice of science. Science is coming forward with her solutions of all these questions. She has long been busied with merely physical inquiries, the relations among the atoms and forces of nature; but she is now beginning to apply her thoughtful method to the higher problems of existence, sociology and morals and religion,—the very highest questions that can suggest themselves to the mind of man. Science comes forward, not with any claim to revelation; she brings forward no finished and rounded system, all mapped out, sharply defined, fully completed. No: science has discovered that the education of the world is not yet finished; that the education of no man is finished, but that all men, and the world itself, are to-day merely educating. Science is simply proposing to carry on this education; to enlarge the bounds of knowledge, expand the limits of freedom, and finally to make man the master of all that he can possibly know, and as free as in the nature of things he can be. That is the object of science. She sets before us, not this finished system of revelation, but the grand totality of truth. "Search for that!" she cries. "Educate yourselves to that! Make it the law of your life, the law of your thought, the law of your feeling, the law of your heart, the light and truth of things! To that consecrate all your being!" This is the mandate of science, and she bids us apply these searching methods and principles to all things without exception. She will not allow, in any nook or corner of the human mind, any refuge for superstition, any refuge for assumption, or any refuge of any sort. No, the whole soul must be thrown open, all its windows thrown up, and all its doors thrown back, that heaven's light may search into the innermost recesses of mind and heart, and down to the depths where lurk the profound sentiments which make our purest and deepest nature. Science insists on probing all these things; she will let nothing lie concealed from investigation by her universal method,—the method of proceeding carefully and cautiously from the known to the unknown, from the beginning to the conclusion. By this sole method is she going to present to the human mind every answer to every question.

The scientific attitude, then, is that of the truth-lover; and every truth-lover must perforce be a truth-seeker,—one who loves the truth first and foremost, and searches for it at all costs of comfort, of position, of ease, and social prestige,—at any and all costs. Science bids us seek truth for its own sake: to search for it diligently, to climb up its mountains faithfully, though it be on our hands and knees, and bleeding all the way. The truth-lover, I say, is always the truth-seeker, and because he is the truth-seeker he is also the truth-finder. You cannot enter upon the search for truth until you have become in love with truth, and are convinced that the object you love is really not a phantom. You must have become assured that there is truth to be found, or you cannot go in search of it with any earnestness. There is, then, something upon which the truth-seeker proceeds,—the reality of truth, the possibility of its being found by search. And this is a great thing to find. Those who say that the radicals have found nothing forget this; this deep, strong, inward, overmastering conviction that there is truth to be found, truth to be gained, and truth which, when found and gained, shall be a blessing to all human life. There is something we have found even before we start out upon the search.

Nor is that all. You cannot set yourself to search for truth with earnestness unless you carry in your soul a contempt and hatred of all barriers to your search. You must refuse to respect the limits which the theologian respects. You cannot be stopped in your course by a "Thus saith the Lord," or a "Thus saith the Bible." No: you will go wherever the voice of truth seems to lead, whithersoever her finger seems to point; and every barrier or limit that can be set by human ignorance or human despotism you will trample under your feet. You have found, then, at least, two things; you have found that there is truth to be discovered, and you have found that there are no barriers to be respected.

And that is not all. You would not start out upon this search for truth were it not for some deep, inward, impelling motive. You would not search, and spend your life in searching, were it not that you heard some inward call, and felt some inward stimulus, to urge you on in the face of institutions, in the face of family affections, in the face of temptations to indolence, and luxury, and ease. There is, in the heart of every man who comes to think for himself, a sense of duty, a sense that he owes it to himself to think and discover the truth. The sentiment that we can have no grander object in life than to find out the truth and give ourselves to it without reserve,—that deep, ethical sentiment, that consciousness of a divine duty to search for the truth,—is something that we must have found before we can take the first step in the search for it.

That is a third thing. I affirm that the truth-seeker assumes to have found not only the reality of truth, and the demand of freedom to seek for it without limit, but also this deep instinct that he must seek for it,—the consciousness of a divine duty urging him on to seek it, as the grandest law of his life.

And, lastly, there is one thing more that every truth-seeker has found, even before he begins to seek. He has felt the deep need of human sympathy. He has found himself alone in the universe, studying his destiny with the best light he can get; and he feels a sense of isolation and loneliness which he would soothe, if he could, by the voice of sympathy. He has a craving for human fellowship, a craving to discover a similar feeling in the hearts of others, a yearning to approach his fellow-men, drawn by the deep attraction of his own heart, which impels him to seek for truth, and makes him believe that others are equally eager in that search. So he proceeds upon the assumption that other men are craving what he craves, and looks into their eyes and takes their hands with a consciousness that, after all, not he alone is a seeker, but all mankind are seeking together, and that, if they would be true to the highest law of the search, they must join hands, join hearts, and be fellow-seekers.

Here, then, are four results which have been gained by the truth-seeker before he can devote himself even to the search for it. He has found that there is truth to be discovered, he has found that there must be freedom in the search for it, he has found that there is a deep sense of duty impelling him to search for it, and he has felt this deep need of human sympathy, which will cheer, solace, and comfort him in the weary march he has undertaken. Do you tell me that the truth-seeker has not found anything? Why, friends, he has found the IDEAL,—he has found the ideal of manhood already, and his search for truth is nothing but an earnest, eager pursuit of his ideal. What more can any man have at the end of life, nay, at the end of time,—if there be an end of time,—what more can any man master in his search than he carries with him into it? He may discover this or that fact, this or that law, this or that relation of things; but what greater can he discover than these four fundamental things that I have been describing; faith in truth, the demand for freedom, the sense of duty, the craving for love? Is there anything to be mastered at the end of our career which shall surpass in grandeur or sublimity these simple, elementary possessions with which we start? No, friends, this is enough. Give us these, and the cause of humanity is assured. It will be growth, enlargement, development: it cannot be other than that, if you plant these seeds at the beginning.

If, then, I find that religion reduced to its lowest terms, to its simplest expression, is simply the effort of man to perfect himself, does that seem to you to be an inadequate, poor, and empty conception? Does it seem, as was said this morning, to exclude the Infinite? No, far from that. You cannot travel the road towards perfection without very soon discovering that you cannot attain it step by step. The path to infinity is not a ladder. You cannot complete your search, and gain its object. You feel that you have entered upon a quest which is infinite, endless,—not possible to be ended, even in an eternity of time. The very thought of progress presupposes a goal: the very thought of progress, again, implies the impossibility of a goal. You go from less to more and from more to more, but you still have an infinite stretch of space beyond; and the very fact that you are thus travelling onward into space gives you an idea of the infinite space in which you live, and move, and have your being. Many a man starts out on this road towards perfection, fired by a deep hunger and thirst for the ideal, but not knowing whither it shall lead him, or what thoughts it shall give birth to in his own soul. But I believe that, if he travel that road persistently, he will find himself accompanied by a growing consciousness of the infinity of the universe in which he dwells, the infinity of the Power which has made him and makes all the infinity of this Nature which he inhabits. Nature herself is the effort of the Infinite to express its own perfection. The very thought of infinite perfection is implied in the effort to perfect one's self. The thought of our own perfection implies the thought of that infinite perfection of which ours is but the feeblest imitation and copy. So, although I admit that many a man may be a religious man in having this deep thirst for the ideal, and in putting forth the effort to create and perfect it in his own life, and yet be technically and in his own thought an atheist, I do believe that this effort to reproduce voluntarily within himself the unity of the universe and to help carry forward its laws and powers to their highest evolution in his own soul, has a direct tendency towards what I should name Theism, were I called upon to describe it by the fittest term. The Atheism which starts out with devotion to any idea must logically end, I think, in the simplest, the fairest, the noblest, the highest form of Theism. That is the reason why I feel so much sympathy for men like George Jacob Holyoake, of London, a man who is conscientiously atheistic, who has written the most touching, tender, and heart-probing book, perhaps, that was ever penned, "The Trial of Theism." I never in my life felt a more earnest religious spirit in any book than in that. And yet he denies a personal God, denies God in every sense in which he can be defined in words, and declares himself to be a simple atheist,—a "Secularist." There is nothing in all literature more deep, tender, and earnest, than the spirit that pervades that book. I feel myself infinitely more in sympathy with that atheist than I do with thousands and thousands of men who call themselves religious, and lift their hands in horror up to God, as if I turned my back upon Him.

This is the religion that I believe in,—a religion which is consistent with perfect freedom, and presupposes it; nay, a religion that aims directly at freedom as part of the ideal itself. This religion, once planted in the human heart, must grow. It is a vital seed, which cannot be suppressed or killed out. No drought will kill it; no flood will kill it. Nothing will kill it but the extinction of the soul itself. So long as that hunger after the ideal survives, you have the very spirit, the very essence and epitome, of all religions. That is enough. Leave it to grow as Nature wills; leave it to develop as human nature shall direct; and when it comes to its natural growth, depend upon it, it will be something most fair, beautiful, and lovely to behold. We need not fear that any monster or any baneful Upanis tree will come from it. No, it is the divine seed; the seed of truth, the seed of beauty, the seed of happiness, the seed of love, the seed of everything that can sweeten, and enlarge, and beautify life.

But all this, you will tell me, is very vague. I have nothing to answer to the questions, "What are you coming to?" "What do you propose?" except a few vague words,— "Truth," "Freedom," "Duty," "Love." You say, "We had all these before. Is that all the new contribution you bring to religion? Is that all this platform brings,—nothing but these elementary ideas of truth, of freedom, of duty, of love?" Friends, we have had too much religion in this world. It is a great gain to cast away the rubbish that has hidden this seed and kept it from developing. This seed of religion has been left, like the seed-corn in an Egyptian mummy-case,—left three thousand years inactive, undeveloped, and at last coming to its growth only when taken out from the old mummy-case and planted in the fertile soil. That is what I would do with this seed of religion. I would take it out of the mummy-cases of superstition, of theologies, of Bibles, of churches, of priesthoods, and plant it in the sunlight of heaven, in the grand old earth that we tread so lightly and so unreverently. I know, friends, that when so planted, it must come up the fruit-giving and life-giving wheat.

I am not bound to tell you what you shall discover in the search for truth. I am not one of those who pretend to forecast the future, and find out by anticipation all that science is yet to learn. I simply say that you must let science be your guide. You must take what Nature has to give. When you enter upon the search after truth, without limitation by any church or sect, and in the spirit of duty and of human love, I say you must be content to take then what Nature has to give. The truth that exists—that is the truth to be discovered. Whatever is true will come to be discovered at last, if the human mind continues to expand as it has done heretofore. Truth is for us if we have the faculty to discover it, and there is no occasion for worrying ourselves now about what is to be found. Enough that there is TRUTH to be found; that it must be found by cultivated, educated, enlightened, disciplined thought, by scientific methods. That is enough. Apply simply the methods of Nature as she teaches them. I shall not, then, claim here less freedom, but all the more freedom, to go as far as human capacity shall permit. All that I insist upon now is, that the dogma of Revelation, of which I have spoken, is just like the cloud of smoke that hangs over Cincinnati and Pittsburgh. It is a dense cloud, keeping out the sunlight. Do you ask me what good will come from driving away the cloud? I simply answer, "Let in the sunlight! Let it show what it has to show! Let it speak for itself! Let it warn and cheer! Let it do the duty of sunlight! Let it fulfil its function as you fulfil yours; and instead of fearing what shall happen when the cloud is driven away, do but cherish this anticipation,—that shadow will be unknown, the sun is in the heavens, and the moon and stars, with all the light they give! There is Nature ready to shed her radiance on the pathway we are to tread, and to give us all the illumination that we need, whether here or hereafter."

But you say, "All this is beautiful, but it is perilous,—this calling in question the deep beliefs of mankind. Your religion is very cold; it is very inintelligent; it has nothing to give us; it cannot feed us in our hunger; we cannot live upon these vague abstractions you talk about. Why throw any doubt upon the old, dear beliefs that have sustained our fathers and mothers, and would be enough to sustain us too?" Well, friends, it is not my fault if those old beliefs are called in question. I was not the first doubter. I was not the first one to suggest that there are errors and mistakes in those old beliefs. You cannot keep back this flood of doubt. It is born of thought, and you must kill thought before you can keep back the doubt. It is this eager thought of the modern world, this restless intellectual life of the nineteenth century, which is responsible for your unrest. It is not the little band of free-thinkers on this platform, or any other platform, that must bear the responsibility of all this unsettling. It is the increase of human knowledge. That must go on; and all this unsettling of your dear delights and convictions was fated,—fated the moment that man began to be an intellectual being and to have the capability of intellectual development. You must, then, make the most of it. In place of trying to keep back these doubts, and crowd them out of sight, and shut yourself up in some little haven of refuge, I say, adopt a bolder course; welcome the doubts, face the doubts, meet them like men and women. Be sure that that is the only way in which you can gain anything that is intrinsically precious.

I remember in my boyhood being very much charmed by the story of James, the Black Douglas, told by Sir Walter Scott in his "History of Scotland." James, the Black Douglas, you know, was the very right hand of Robert Bruce in his struggle for Scottish independence. I used to pore over his exploits with great delight. There was something inexpressibly touching in the story of the manner in which James Douglas, after his master was dead, took out his heart, put it in a silver case, hung it around his neck, took his sword and his helmet, and went down with a broken spirit to battle in Spain against the Moors. When his master died, life had lost all that was precious to him, and his life was henceforth given to the sacred warfare of the cross. In one of the battles on the Peninsula, when the Saracens seemed to be gaining the victory, and the Christians were hard pressed, and it seemed as if defeat and total rout were to be the result, James, the Black Douglas, took the Bruce's heart from around his neck, and with a brave inspiration hurled it into the midst of the Paynim host. Then, turning to his followers, he shouted, "Rescue it, or die!" They plunged again into the battle, and, fired by the example of their leader, they did win the day: they rescued the Bruce's heart, and victory perched upon the Christian's banner. So it is to-day, friends, when we are called upon to meet the hosts of doubt. We must pluck out of our own hearts our dearest faith, hurl it into the ranks of the enemy, and then, without fear, without hesitation, without a thought of our own safety, plunge into their midst, and bring it back by the sword of thought. There is no possibility of our saving the sacred thing but by winning the victory of thought over all these doubts. What thought cannot win is lost forever. It is time for us now to become knights in the new chivalry, and to search for truth with the same deep devotion which fired the heart of James, the Black Douglas.

THE FOUNDATION OF CIVIL GOVERNMENTS.

The following from the pen of Horace Greeley is not new, but it is such a terse and full reply to the questions asked, that we reprint it for the benefit of those who have not read it, or who having read it have forgotten it. It covers the whole ground in the fewest words possible.

To the Editor of the Tribune:

Sir,—In your last issue of the Weekly Tribune you take decided ground in opposition to the proposed religious amendment to the United States Constitution. Would you please answer the following question? Is Civil Government an ordinance of God, originating in, and upheld by, his Providence, or is it merely a social compact, entered into by individuals for their mutual benefit, over which, and in the origin of which, God takes no control? By answering this question, however briefly, though it should be but yes or no, you will clear away a good deal of the fog that hangs round your position, and gratify a subscriber of twenty years' standing.

ROBERT MCISAAC.

MARSHALL P. O., Indiana Co., Pa., Feb. 6, 1871.

[Civil Government is an ordinance of God only in the sense that He has so made men that they require and naturally establish it for themselves. A Government established by men, in the exercise of their best judgment, has no organic relations with God, any more than a banking or mercantile copartnership. God has made men so that they naturally provide themselves with clothes and food: but it does not follow that every butcher's and tailor's shop may, on that account, set up a claim of Divine authority as an ordinance of God. In other words, neither the American nor any other existing Government is a Theocracy, wielding power conferred by Divine decree. The Declaration of Independence states the truth when it declares that "all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed," and no religious party or sect can rightfully demand of the Government of the United States an indorsement of its peculiar dogmas or speculations.—ED. TRIBUNE.]

"In Pesh, the other day, a youthful prodigy repeated the Lord's Prayer in twenty-two languages." We know a newspaper man who can "criticise" in fourteen languages, and speak them all at once. But an editor does well who can repeat the Lord's Prayer in one language.

A SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHER, explaining the first chapter of Genesis, asked: "Why did God command them to leave the fruit of one tree untouched?" A dead silence. At last a little girl spoke up and said: "Please, marm, I think he wanted them to leave some for manners!"

The selectmen of a New England town have agreed not to make any repairs to the graveyard "unless the occupants complain."

[Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1873, by F. E. ABBOT, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.]

PAUL GOWER.

A NATIONALISTIC STORY

OF

ENGLISH AND AMERICAN LIFE.

CHAPTER XXX.

A NEW YORK BOARDING-HOUSE.

I can fancy few pleasanter conditions for a young fellow, just beginning life on his own account, than finding himself in New York City, entirely master of his actions, and of a well-filled purse, also possessing a friend whom he regards with equal liking and admiration; and when the lucky owner of all these advantages enters upon them fresh from a dull home, in which he has been systematically snubbed, hen-pecked, and domineered-over, they are not likely to be less enjoyed and appreciated. Paul's sorrow at parting with his father was neither very poignant nor lasting; indeed, he thought more of him subsequently than at the time—after a day or two. The New World was, as yet, very new to him; he had youth, health, high spirits, and over a thousand dollars in pocket: hence he discovered an infinite fund of entertainment in everything.

As may be guessed, he very soon acted upon his father's advice, if such it might be esteemed, in quitting the Astor Hotel for the boarding-house in Beach Street, feeling little apprehension of his running counter to it in respect to the more important item of Miss Lizzie Livingston; whom, however, he thought—taken in moderation—might prove an agreeable acquaintance. Seriously, his intentions were quite honest; and, apart from his passion for Kate Sabin—which was altogether too sincere to allow him to be guilty of anything more than a mere temporary flirtation—he shared his father's suspicion that a more intimate knowledge of the young lady might lessen rather than increase her attractions; as, in fact, the event proved. Nevertheless he only mentioned her casually to Richard Sabin, when inviting him to take up his quarters in the same establishment. But this Dick demurred to. He objected to boarding-houses on principle.

"My dear fellow," he said, "the system is a mistake altogether. I should as soon think of contracting with a tailor for my clothes and allowing him to dress me as he liked, without reference to my own taste and convenience, as of giving up the right to eat when and where and what I pleased—to say nothing of choosing my own company. I shall take a room in Broadway, sleep in it, and grub wherever I feel inclined—anywhere and everywhere. You'd much better do the same. You can be as expensive or economical as you please."

But, unaccustomed to Bohemian habits, Paul thought the prospect uncomfortable, and endeavored to change his friend's resolution, being, however, not disinclined to abandon his own, when he found himself unsuccessful. He might, indeed, have done so, but for one of those circumstances which often influence greater events than themselves, and like all circumstances, large or small, have incalculable consequences. This was the receipt of a letter, by Sabin, from his actor-brother at Cincinnati, stating that he had occasion to come East on a professional visit, and asking Dick to meet him at the city of Philadelphia, when, if so disposed, he might accompany him on a short Southern tour, and back to Ohio, there to make the acquaintance of his unknown American sister-in-law and nephews and nieces. Towards the latter proposition Richard expressed perfect indifference, but he assented to the former. Philadelphia was only a few dollars' distance, he said, and might be worth seeing. He would fain have persuaded his friend to go; too, but, supposing that Dick would naturally be engrossed by his brother's society and himself in the way, and perhaps remembering his father's counsel about the advisability of losing no time in seeking employment, Paul declined the trip, resolving to devote the week during which they should be separated to an investigation of the prospects for architecture in New York city—not that he felt much inclined to follow it, under any circumstances, only it seemed but right to make the inquiry. So after Dick had drawn the design for the cover of the Porcupine, on wood, and half-a-dozen comic sketches in addition, by way of putting himself in funds, the two friends parted temporarily at the railroad depot in Jersey City, within less than a fortnight of Dr. Gower's embarkation, from near the same locality. And very lonely Paul felt, when the train had clattered off with his comrade, and as he strolled down the Cunard Dock and recalled the busy scene incidental to the former departure. Only a few days back, and he had appeared surrounded by friends—now they were all gone or comparative strangers: but a few weeks ago and he had arrived in New York, flushed with expectations of a Louisiana home and a father's affection—now the turbid waves of the Mississippi rolled over the first, and the second was far on his way towards seeking new fortunes among the Muscovites—probably by this time in London, or at Thorpe Parva, Northamptonshire. It was hardly possible for anticipation and reality to afford a stronger contrast. I am not sure that this occasion did not affect Paul more seriously than the other leave-taking, as it left him utterly solitary.

It was doubtless in consequence of this loneliness that he presented himself at Beach Street that same afternoon, and, after a brief interview with Mrs. Livingston, who received him very graciously, effected an arrangement for an immediate change of residence; and, getting his luggage transferred at once, slept in the room recently occupied by Mr. Wheeler, that very night. If, however, he had secretly hoped that the bright eyes of Miss Lizzie would soothe his melancholy or her voice charm it away, he was properly punished for his unwarranted longing, by the young lady's absence. She was visiting her uncle, who lived up-town, at Forty-Second Street; and was doubtless the relative alluded to by his father, in his brief account of the family. And, a gentleman boarder being joked about it, over the six o'clock dinner-table, Paul soon identified him as her accepted suitor—the "Charley Fox" of his introductory evening, and the "clerk in a down-town store" mentioned by Dr. Gower. He was a tallish young man, with a rather small head, but a very intelligent, vivacious face, indicating a larger than ordinary share of shrewdness, humor, and approbateness, perhaps alloyed with a dash of impudence, but decidedly prepossessing; also mustached and terminating in an imperial or goatee, after the then popular fashion. As he talked cleverly and amusingly, if with too much assurance—always taking the lead in the conversation and addressing Mrs. Livingston as "mother" (which seemed as if he wanted to anticipate matters)—Paul felt inclined to like Mr. Fox; though after his departure—of course for up-town—most of the other boarders disparaged him.

Paul would have been stranded upon Mrs. Livingston for the evening, as that lady, seating herself in her accustomed rocking-chair, had begun to exercise her usual loquacity at his expense, while his attention strayed to a portrait in oil of Miss Lizzie, over the mantel-piece, when the opportune arrival of a visitor rescued him. As this gentleman was bald, elderly, and corpulent, as Mrs. Livingston called him "General" (though he wore no uniform), and received him with remarkable cordiality, and as it speedily appeared that he had just returned from England, Paul was irresistibly reminded, by this conjunction of coincidences, of General Fladdock and the Norris family in Martin Chuzzlewit; though no such unpleasant results followed his entrance as the young man's virtual expulsion, except in the milder form of his retirement up stairs. To his room, therefore, he went, unpacked his trunk and boxes, smoked a meditative cigar while looking out of window at the moonlight, the little inclosure and tall liberty-pole, wondered what Richard was doing, thought of Kate in England, and the rest of the Newman Street household, envied Mr. Fox up-town, and, when the clock of the adjacent church of St. John struck eleven, went to bed and dreamed that Mills was conducting the Porcupine and would eat sausages during his editorial labors.

Paul soon had ample opportunities of becoming acquainted with his fellow-boarders. These were rather less than the average number in such houses; for, as Dr. Gower has already intimated, Mrs. Livingston did not rely exclusively upon the business for her maintenance, but was also a milliner, having a connection with a large dry-goods establishment in Broadway, of which she represented herself as the prop and pillar; though a little, bushy-whiskered Londoner, who occupied the room next to Paul's, said that she was only "a cutter-out of ladies' bodies," and "boss" of a couple of sewing-machines; and he ought to have known, being on terms of confidential and even tender intimacy with a plump, good-natured Irish girl, employed at the store in question, and tending one of the attics. Notwithstanding this assertion, which he sometimes maintained to her face, and an ultra John-Bullism, impelling him upon all occasions to open disparagement of the United States, the Londoner was, with Mrs. Livingston—who yet prided herself on her nationality—something of a favorite. She called him "Dick" and affected to consider him an original. Like most of the male boarders, native and foreign, he had some clerkish occupation down-town.

Of the latter there were but two, besides those already enumerated; namely Mr. Fox—who, it appeared, was also an Englishman, and whom the Londoner detested—and a remarkably fine specimen of the British snob rampant. He was the greatest "swell" Paul had ever encountered. He had his hair curled and scented, sported elaborately-embossed shirt-fronts, frills and ruffles, wore studs, pins, brooches, rings, and knickknacks innumerable, and generally displayed a rivulet of watch-chain gushing from and meandering over an highly horticultural waistcoat. In pronunciation he eschewed the letter r, installing w in its place, which, taken in conjunction with a hoarse voice and a loud, gasping laugh, communicated a singularly pleasing effect to his conversation. He also swore freely; and Mrs. Livingston thought him a perfect gentleman.

The Americans afforded a fair sample of that large class of our countrymen whom necessity or inclination impels into that bad substitute for a home, a boarding-house; and whose characters are so modified by that peculiar mode of existence that you may recognize the same types everywhere in the United States, from Cape Cod to California. There were two married couples; the husbands bearded, business-like, and commonplace; the wives more or less good-looking, dressy, and desyncetic; "ladies" in virtue of their sex, self-assertion and fine clothes, but in nothing besides; for if they did not literally believe that the former placed them above all obligations whatever, they certainly acted as if under that impression—a very frequent one on this side of the Atlantic. They dawdled away the morning in each others' rooms, promenaded Broadway in the afternoon, and flirted with the gentlemen boarders, or resigned themselves to their husbands' company, of evenings. One had a child, a pretty and precocious girl of eight, who was allowed all the privileges of a grown-up person, including incessant prattling at meals, and over-eating herself on such viands as beefsteak, hot buckwheat cakes, molasses, butter, and pickled cucumbers—collectively or all together—at breakfast; also strong coffee and iced water. In conjunction with a boy of twelve, who appeared to be boarding on his own account, and whom the ornamental gentleman had brought to great proficiency in the art of blasphemy, she pervaded the staircase and sitting-room, made forays into the boarders' apartments, and was petted and spoiled by everybody.

The three or four bachelors of the establishment may be dismissed very briefly. They were New Yorkers of cheap intellectual capacity, whose current ethics appeared to centre in dollars, drinks, and the Emerald; from which journal they got most of their opinions—always affecting to regard its editor as a great scoundrel. To listen to them was to admit that some people do seem to afford an argument for the agreeable Calvinistic dogma of reprobation, or the inherent depravity of human nature; or for the heterodox conviction of George Eliot, that certain lives "are part of a gross sum of obscure vitality that will be swept into the same oblivion with the generations of ants and beavers."

Of all the persons I have enumerated, Paul, in familiar phrase, only took to Mr. Fox, ordinarily termed Charley, who met his advances more than half-way. He was just the kind of young fellow whom people usually nickname after the first or second interview, being as good-natured as he was egotistic; fond of playing first-fiddle, but doing it so cleverly as almost to justify the conceit which inspires the performance; and which duller folks involuntarily discover and resent with quite superfluous animosity. Intelligent, voluble, capable of saying neat things in such an effective manner that it nearly amounted to wit, and possessing an inexhaustible fund of good spirits, he at first excited liking, if not admiration, and then disappointment. "People generally found him out in a week or two," he candidly admitted:—not but what he was, really, a much better fellow than the average of Mrs. Livingston's lodgers, besides their natural superior; only rather self-engrossed and superficial. Quite content to allow anybody to shine as much as he pleased, too young to be critical or distrustful, and very favorably impressed by his lively countryman, Paul found much pleasure in his society and conversation; while Mr. Fox was attracted by his good sense and sentimentality. Very soon they were friends, and Paul—always an excellent listener—became Charley's confidant. He not only told him the circumstances of his engagement with Miss Livingston, but also of a disappointment in another quarter, which had preceded it, involving many characteristic particulars.

"It's a curious business," he began, one evening, when being, as he said, "off-duty" uptown, they strolled round St. John's Square together—a pleasant locality, now abolished by Mr. Vanderbilt's hideous freight depot—"and was very precipitate. You must know that I had just been jilted by another girl—thrown over, sir, in the most infernal manner, on account of my own honesty—a cursed assinine infatuation which induced me to tell her all about my own follies—peccadilloes, sir, which all young men are guilty of, but haven't the courage and candor to acknowledge. We were to have been married, and every morning, as I was dressing, I used to hit myself on the breast and say 'Charley, you rogue!—one day nearer to happiness!' Well, sir, what do you think she did?—after my wedding-suit had come home, too? Sent back all my letters and presents with a note saying she couldn't, wouldn't, and didn't ought to marry me—that she had thought over it, wept over it, prayed over it, and the Lord knows what besides, and concluded that it 'wasn't right' that she should become my wife. There was a sticker for you! I begged and prayed and humiliated myself, but all in vain; and then, of course, got over it. She never could have loved me, you know. Now a fellow is never so sensitive as after an affair of this kind—he'd propose to sixty-nine on crutches, if she showed sympathy for him. And I happened to drop in at the house, one evening, with my brother Fred, who was courting Mrs. Van Densen, Mrs. Livingston's sister—they're married, now, and living at St. Louis—and saw Lizzie. I thought her the queerest, oddest, ugliest little beauty I'd ever clapped eyes on, and told her so; and she riled up, and we began with a downright row, but afterwards got to liking each other—I believe out of sheer antagonism. And one night when we were almost alone, the gas only lit in the back parlor, Al—my other brother, you know,—could read Tupper to us, and Lizzie looked so bewitching with those big, brown eyes of hers, and that mouth—have you ever noticed her mouth?—that I couldn't help stooping over the sofa and kissing her. And she kissed back again, which quite settled the business. And we're to be married as soon as I can afford to take a big room and pay for her board—unless some infernal slip-up happens to throw me on my beam-ends again, which isn't unlikely."

"You don't seem very confident," said Paul, who was both amused and surprised at his friend's frankness.

"My dear fellow, how can I be? Look at what she is—don't I know, as well as anybody? Then I'm afraid I shall have to leave New York and go South—I've got a chance of a first-rate berth at Baltimore, and, but for her, should have thrown up my present situation at Christmas. I wanted to get hitched right off, and clear out, but she doesn't see it. So you may imagine how I feel at the prospect of leaving her exposed to all sorts of temptations, in my absence. D—n the fellows! devil a one of 'em but makes love to her whenever he gets an opportunity! I wonder you haven't had a shy, too; but I dare say you've got your own little sentimentality somewhere else. You're just the fellow to cherish some tremendously absorbing passion and be preternaturally constant to it."

Paul evaded this subject without much difficulty, for Mr. Fox loved to talk of himself rather than anybody else. "Miss Livingston's mother hasn't much authority over her, apparently?" he suggested, pretty sure of effecting a diversion.

"My dear Gower, she never had a mother! You don't call that woman one? Shall we go to the Museum Hotel and have a whiskey-skin? The night has turned cold, and they make capital tods at Riley's. Agreed? drinks it is, then! By Jove, I feel like an iceberg!"

A MODERN MIRACLE.

[The following account of a modern miracle, taken from the St. Louis Dispatch, is much better authenticated than any in the Bible. Yet no Protestant Christian will believe it. The free thinker believes as much in this modern miracle as in the miracles of the Bible; and that is, not at all.—Ed.]

Our neighbor, the Western Watchman, in its issue of this week, contains the annexed communication, the subject matter of which has been a theme of conversation for several days among many Catholic citizens and medical practitioners of this city. The Watchman prefaces the communication with the following editorial paragraph:—

"We publish on our fifth page an account of a wonderful occurrence in the infirmary attached to the Mercy Convent in this city. We regard the account given by Father Schieder and Doctors Cooper and Papin, of sufficient weight to claim for what happened the appellation of miraculous. When we remember what wonders have already occurred and are daily occurring all over the world through the devotion of the Sacred Heart, we cannot feel overmuch surprised that at the intercession of Mary, the 'Lady of the Sacred Heart,' and of Blessed Margaret Mary a la Coque, the foundress of the devotion of the Sacred Heart, a new marvel has been vouchsafed in our days. That a real miracle has transpired we don't see a particle of room to doubt, and that its occurrence has been so unmistakably established should go a great way in stimulating the piety and devotion of the faithful to that fountain of life, health, and holiness, the most sacred Heart of our Lord. The faith which made Miss Schafer whole is the same to which the Redeemer gave a power to remove mountains. Oh! that our separated brethren but knew the 'gift of God.'"

(Communicated.)

"BEHOLD, THE HAND OF THE LORD IS NOT SHORTENED."

In the Convent of the Sisters of Mercy, corner of Twenty-third and Morgan streets, St. Louis, Mo., a wonderful cure occurred, which has created a great sensation. To obviate the spread of false rumors, which ordinarily arise in such cases, and for the greater glory of God, and to the honor of the Blessed Virgin Mary, through whose intercession the cure was effected, as well as for the edification and consolation of the faithful, I have thought it well to state the exact truth, as I have been able to ascertain it.

Theresa Schafer, now twenty-two years old, was reared in the St. Vincent German Orphan Asylum, and, at the age of ten years, was adopted by Mr. Walter B. Schafer and his wife, who were childless. Since then she has lived with them, a quiet, modest, well-behaved girl, though always of delicate health. For the last two years her health has failed more and more, until finally a great tumor appeared on her right side, in the region of the liver, causing her severe pain. Several physicians, among whom was Dr. W. A. Cooper, were called in, with little or no benefit to the patient.

In the meantime the Sisters of Mercy, whose Convent is opposite Mr. Schafer's house, had opened an Infirmary for females, to which out-door patients were also admitted for consultation with the attending physicians. With the approval of Dr. Cooper, Theresa was sent there.

In the beginning of July she had to take to her bed, which was prepared for her in the Infirmary. Finding that human remedies availed her nothing, the sick girl invoked supernatural assistance. Together with the Sisters of Mercy, her nurses, she made a novena in honor of Blessed Margaret Mary a la Coque, hoping to obtain of God the recovery of her health through the intercession of that Saint. Although no answer was vouchsafed to this nine days' prayer, Theresa did not therefore give up her confidence in God. There was at the same time in the Infirmary another sufferer, Magdalen Himstadt, with whom she commenced, without telling any one else, a second novena in honor of the Blessed Virgin, reciting every day the Litanies of the Immaculate Heart of Mary. In the first days of the novena, Theresa seemed to suffer less, but toward the end she became very much worse. For ten days she had eaten scarcely anything, she could not sleep without the help of medicine, she had the greatest difficulty in her natural functions, and was frequently in a state of unconsciousness. Indeed, her condition was such that for her own sake as well as that of the other patients in the room, she had to be removed to a different apartment.

Thursday, August 24th, was the last day of the novena; on Friday it was thought advisable that she should make her confession, as she seemed to be nearing her end. On Saturday she received Holy Communion. Nearly all that morning her eyes were closed, and she appeared to be unconscious. Occasionally, when addressed, she would make some answer, but she did not remember afterwards what she had said during that time. She was evidently sinking, and Doctor Cooper, who visited her some time before dinner, judged her to be dying, saying that she could not live many hours. About eleven o'clock

A. M., the Priest came to administer Extreme Unction. She was then entirely unconscious, but scarcely had the Reverend Father left the room, accompanied by the attendant Sister, than he was recalled. There she sat up in the bed, and said, in a clear natural voice, "I am well; I wish to go home." "Yes," said the Father, "You will go home, up there," pointing with his hand to heaven. They thought she was raving, but as she continued to declare that she was cured, the Sister, leaning over, pressed her hand strongly on the side (which before was so exquisitely painful that she could not endure upon it the weight of a poultice) without eliciting, however, the least evidence of pain.

It was manifest that something extraordinary had happened. The Sister asked her who had cured her? "The Blessed Virgin," was the reply. Theresa then related with great simplicity that before receiving Extreme Unction, she had awakened from her unconsciousness, and, opening her eyes, saw to the right of her, and close to her bed, the Blessed Virgin in the midst of a beautiful light, clothed in white garment, wearing a white veil, and a golden crown on her head, with stars, her right hand being held on her bosom. Theresa at first was afraid, but her fear left her as the Blessed Virgin addressed her, saying: "Do you promise to do what I ask you, if you are cured?" "Yes," was the answer. "Will you take care to have a picture of this apparition placed in this room?" "I will," was the reply. "Will you promise to become a Sister in this Convent, or, if you do not like that, to attend the sick?" "Yes," said Theresa. "On the death of my mother." The Blessed Virgin then said, "On the same day your mother is buried you must enter;" and, with these words, she disappeared, and Theresa became again unconscious, in which state she was anointed.

During the time of the apparition there was no one else in the room except her friend Miss Anna Wentz, who has since entered the Convent of the Good Shepherd. This young lady never saw nor heard the Blessed Virgin, but she noticed in the face of the patient something heavenly and extraordinary, and she heard distinctly some of her answers.

As it was about the hour of dinner, Theresa asked for some food. As the Sister was unwilling to let her leave her bed, dinner, including some meat and potatoes, was brought to her, of which she ate heartily. She then arose, and, having dressed, went to the chapel, where she remained for more than an hour on her knees, engaged in prayer. Afterward, she walked about the Convent, visiting her parents towards evening, with whom she supped, and then returned to the Infirmary. At the usual hour, on Sunday, Doctor Yarnall visiting the Infirmary, was informed of the event, and was not a little astonished to see Theresa coming to meet him, looking well and hearty. On that same day she visited two churches, St. Nicholas and St. Alphonsus, the latter situated on Grand avenue, without experiencing any fatigue.

On Monday, Doctor Yarnall, with three other physicians, came to make a close examination of the case, and recognized that their former patient was in good and perfect health, without the least trace of her sickness. After remaining for a few days with the Sisters, the happy Theresa returned home, where without the least inconvenience, she employs herself in the usual household duties, washing, ironing, and scrubbing.

The reader may judge for himself whether there was not a supernatural power manifested in these events. As to the facts, any one may assure himself of their truth by visiting the parties concerned. We subjoin the statements of the three physicians who were her principal attendants; Doctors Yarnall and Papin are the regular physicians of the establishment, while Doctor Cooper had treated her at her home, and continued to visit her at her entrance into the Infirmary. P. TSCHIEDER, S. J.

ST. LOUIS, MO., Sept. 18, 1871.

MEDICAL STATEMENT.

Theresa Schafer was admitted as an out-door patient of the "Female Clinic" of the Sisters of Mercy, in April, 1871, on the recommendation of Doctor W. H. Cooper, who had been her medical adviser for sometime previously. The history of the case as related by the patient and confirmed by Doctor Cooper is briefly as follows: "For two years she had been in bad health, gradually getting worse; though she had employed some six or eight men, she had derived little or no benefit from treatment. At the time of admission she complained of great pain over the region of her liver, general debility, and occasionally severe attacks of intermittent fever. Upon examination, great tenderness was found over the abdomen; and in the region of the liver there was a large and well defined tumor extending low in the abdominal cavity, which was exceedingly painful when manipulated."

Among the physicians who examined her, I may mention Doctors Papin, M. A. Pallen, L. Charles Boissiniere, Y. H. Bond, W. H. Cooper, J. Dulaney, and others. Various methods of treatment were suggested, tried, and were of no avail.

On the morning of Saturday, August 26th, I was consulted by the Sister in charge to know if the last rites of the Church should not be performed, or rather to learn if the patient was not dying, so that the sacraments might be given. I found her in an unconscious, and evidently in a dying, condition. It was my impression that she might survive as much as twenty-four hours, hardly more. On the following day I found the patient entirely well, the tumor was gone, the functions of the body were evidently in a perfectly healthy condition and properly performed.

M. YARNALL, M. D.

N. NUTH ST.

ST. LOUIS, MO., Sept. 9, 1871.

So far as the above came under my observation, it is correct.

W. H. COOPER.

I saw Theresa Schafer the day before she recovered.

I am satisfied she was then in a dying condition, and that no human skill could cure her. I saw her again the Monday following, i.e., two days after her cure. I examined her then thoroughly in the presence of Drs. Cooper, Quarles, and Yarnall. She was perfectly well and no traces of her disease left.

DR. TIMOTHY L. PAPIN.

THE OUTLOOK.

If any of our thoughtful readers have omitted the perusal of Mr. Blauvelt's article in the August number of Scribner's, on "Modern Scepticism," we beg them to recall the number, and read every word of that paper. They will then obtain a view of the infidelity of the day which will give them food for reflection, and suggestions for action. No paper published during the last five years has presented the extent and nature of modern scepticism with such faithfulness as this. It ought to attract universal attention to the two papers which follow it from the same pen, and summon the whole Christian host to battle under leaders who know something about the basis of Christianity besides the traditional "apologies." It is not a form of Christianity that is now in question. It is not a question between sects. It is a question which involves Christianity itself, and the authority of the Bible. Have we a divine religion at all? Is Christianity anything better than Buddhism, or of any higher authority? If the Christian optimist supposes that these questions are to be met and decided by the "pious-pooh" of sectaries, or the dicta of professional teachers, or the resolutions of conferences and councils, he is very much mistaken. We are inclined to think that the pulpit and the distinctively religious press will have very little to do with the matter, and that the question will at last be settled where it has been unsettled. The pulpit can do very little in any direct struggle with infidelity, because—not to mention other reasons—infidelity does not come within its reach. The religious press can do very little, because infidelity does not and will not read it. Both these powers must be content to preach Christianity as well as they can, and leave the struggle to be decided among those who have a common desire to get at the truth, whatever that may be.

It may as well be understood among Christian men and women that they are every day doing that which brings their religion under suspicion with the unbelieving world. The world does not see the fruits of that divine influence which is claimed for the Christian religion by its professors. Nothing is more notorious than that the educated men of France, Italy, and Spain are infidel; and nothing has been better calculated to make them than the whole policy of the Catholic Church in those countries. They have seen a populace kept in ignorance and poverty through many generations by a Christian Church. They have seen that populace fed with traditions, machine-miracles, shows, processions, humbugs, by a priesthood that is foolish if it knows no better, and knavish if it does know better; they have seen that priesthood taking side with tyranny against every popular struggle for liberty and liberal institutions; they have seen that priesthood grasping at wealth and power, and intriguing for temporal influence all over the world. This is the Christianity they have seen; it is all they have seen; and their conclusions, when made against the Catholic Church, are made against Christianity itself. Does anybody blame them? Not we.

The influence of the prevalent form of Christianity in England is very little better than in the nations mentioned. The world looks on and sees livings bought and sold like commissions in the army—places made in church for younger sons—wine-drinking, pleasure-loving men in the pulpit; and then, when it sees any action, it is with regard to candles, and vestments, and rites and ceremonies that have no more vital relation to the redemption of mankind and service of God than they have to the policy of the Czar in Turkey. It is supposed that men of common sense do not and cannot see through all this stuff and nonsense? Four hundred of these clergymen have just petitioned for what they call "sacramental confession." Drifting toward Romanism, grasping after new and old machinery, busied only in husks and human inventions, quarrelling over bangles, excommunicating their own free thinkers and free speakers, obsequious to worldly grandees, mingling in politics, frowning upon non-conformists as social inferiors,—the great majority of the English clergy are doing what they can to manufacture infidels out of all Englishmen who do their own thinking.

And here in America, how much better are we doing? We fritter away our substance in building costly churches for the rich, in multiplying sects and keeping up differences between them, and in aping the wretched religious fooleries of the Old World. Our organization into a hundred religious sects amounts to the disorganization of Christianity. There are thousands of towns lying religiously dead to-day because there is not Christianity enough in them to unite in obtaining the services of a minister whose brains enough to teach them; and, as a rule, there are from three to six religious societies in all these towns—starveling churches—monuments only to the ambition of the sects which they represent. The world looks on and scoffs. The world looks on and recognizes the lack of power in Christianity, or of such Christianity as it sees, to unify the Church in feeling and effort, and it learns only contempt for it. Every religious press is a party press—published in the interest of a sect and supported by it. So unusual is the spectacle of various bodies of Christians coming together for the accomplishment of a common Christian purpose, that it is noted as something remarkable, and pointed at with self-complacent boasting. We have fashionable churches, and churches made attractive by music that costs enough to support teachers in a half-dozen barren districts, and enough of the exhibition of a worldly spirit to show to keenly observing outsiders that the Christian spirit of self-sacrifice and the Christian faith in the hereafter are not in us—are hardly in the best of us.

We would not be harsh, but we ask, in all candor, if there is not in every Christian country enough in the aspect of Christian people to make their religion seem a hollow pretence, a thing without vital power, a system not half believed in by those who profess it? Does not the world find us quarrelling about non-essential things, striving for sectarian precedence, and practically ignoring the fact that the world needs to be saved through simple faith in and following of Jesus Christ? Really, when the scientist and the naturalist come with their scalpels and crucibles and blow-pipes, and tell us they will believe in nothing they cannot see and weigh and measure, there is but little left for them to do. Whose fault is it that they find their work so easy? Why is it that there is such a flutter when they speak, except that those who profess to be Christians do not half believe in Christianity, and have no rational comprehension of the basis of such a belief as they possess?

Two things must come before scepticism will be overthrown; viz., 1st. A perfect willingness to go into examination of Christianity for the truth's sake alone. Any man who is interested as a partisan, either for Christianity or against it, is unfit for the investigation. So far as the claims of Christianity are to be settled by investigation, they are to be settled by men whose supreme desire is to find the truth wherever it may lead or land them. 2d. Christianity must be better illustrated in life by those who profess it. When Christians everywhere are controlled by a love that takes in God and every human being; when "divine service" consists of ministry to the poor and suffering and not of clothes and candles; when the Christian name is greater than all sectarian names and obliterates them all; when benevolence is law, and humblest service is highest honor, and life becomes divine,—then scepticism will cease, and not till then.—Dr. J. G. Holland, in Scribner's Monthly, for September.

THE JEWS.—Says the Buffalo Express in a recent issue:—"The remarkable agreement recently consummated between the Shah of Persia and Baron Reuter was briefly described in these columns a few days since. The concessions obtained by the baron are very generally and justly regarded as constituting one of the boldest and most brilliant commercial exploits of the age. We do not wish to dwell upon this interesting theme at this time, however, but merely to call attention to the fact that the hero of this affair is a Jew, and to the many prizes which members of this race are carrying off in the general contest for wealth and distinction that is going on in every land.

"Surely, if any race ever earned a right to a free and honorable existence it is the Hebrew. The undying faith and constancy displayed by that people through centuries of persecution, outrage, and unjust discriminations of all sorts in nearly every country in Europe have no parallel in history. They are not a warlike race, and yet they have shown most heroic persistence and undaunted courage in upholding the traditions and faith of their fathers, and in clinging to their own ways, when by a few words of apostasy they might have won protection and all the rights of citizenship. For many a century, to be a Jew on the continent of Europe was to be the prey of every plunderer, an outcast debarred from all the rights even of the humblest Christian hind. In most cities, the Jews were penned up in teeming hives in a portion of the town set apart for their use, and they were locked up for the night as dumb beasts might be. This practice has only ceased in Rome within a very few years. But times have changed, and the proscription of the Hebrew race is every day becoming more the exception, and is surely destined to utter extinction. It is matter for congratulation to every American that no such cruel and bigoted legislation as that so long prevailing against the Jews in Europe has ever disgraced the statutes of this country.

"At the present day, the Hebrew population is a large and valuable element in all the cities of Europe and America. They are invariably industrious, prosperous, and law-abiding citizens. In Europe they are carrying off the highest prizes in politics, music, and commerce, and winning social distinction by their merits, wealth, and influence. A gentleman of Hebrew extraction is the only person the great Conservative party in England can trust with its leadership. In a crisis, the brilliant Disraeli is instinctively looked to for counsel, and his word is law in party consultations. The Rothschild family is so well known that comment is unnecessary. It is far more powerful than nine-tenths of the royal families of Europe. And here is Baron Reuter, who does out news to the press of Great Britain and a part of the continent, and leases Persia for seventy-seven years as he would a shop! The news autocrat of Central Europe is also a Hebrew, named Wolff. The press of Vienna is for the most part owned and worked by Jews. A correspondent writes, that 'in Vienna there are more Jews than crossed the Jordan with Joshua to smite the tribes of Canaan. In the Austrian Empire there are as many Jews as there were in Jude in the time of Titus—far more than there were in the captivity.'

AN OLD COLORED MINISTER, in a sermon on hell, pictured it as a region of ice and snow, where the damned froze throughout eternity. When privately asked his purpose in representing Gehenna in this way, he said: "I don't dare to tell dem people nuffin else. Why, if I were to say that hell was warm, some o' dem old rhumatic niggas would be wantin' to start down dar de bery fust frost!"

Poetry.

IN MEMORIAM.

SEPT. 25, 1862—APRIL 7, 1873.

"Annos septuaginta natus, Un fecerat sua pure maxima pietantur anera, prupertat in senectute, ut his peme delectari videretur."—CICERO, Calo Major.

My eyes are dry—my heart is drenched in tears:

The love that watched my boyhood half-concealed,

Yet crowned with tenderness these later years,

And Nature's tie with soul-consolation sealed;

Shall cheer my life no more; the tale is told

Of all the blessed hours thou gav'st to me,

Filled with a grace that, as thou grewest old,

Made age more beautiful than infancy.

My father, O my father! rent with pain,

My spirit cries out to thee; but the cry

Dies on the air, nor wakes the voice again

That was so swift in the dear days gone by.

Farewell, a long farewell! I must be strong:

How false a son, should I thy virtues not prolong!

ASTERISK.

EMOTIONAL EXCITEMENT MORE WASTING THAN INTELLECTUAL LABOR.—What the physiological psychologists affirm is this: that, whereas serious and calm intellectual work is only very slowly destructive to the nervous health, emotion, unless directed into proper channels, is highly destructive to the stability of the nervous system. And they further say that the conventional ideas as to the propriety and utility of certain kinds of emotional excitement do visibly bear, in the experience of medical men, the very worst fruit possible. They do not say, as the Spectator hints, that the emotion of repentance for real guilt is a thing to be shunned; but they declare that the habit of self-torturing introspection, which the clergy and teachers are especially earnest in recommending as a means of spiritual purification, is so far from promoting the existence of a really high and pure standard of ethics, that it ruins both body and soul, in the majority of cases, wherever it is applied on the large scale. More especially they believe that the habit of inducing unnecessary emotional excitement, in young persons who are just entering the dangerous period of commencing sexual life, is so morally and physically injurious to a large number of individuals, that it may well be questioned whether those individuals might not have been more safely left in total neglect and ignorance.—"Brain-work and the Emotions," in Popular Science Monthly, for February.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS TO INDEX STOCK.

Mrs. F. W. Christern,	New York City,	One share,	$100
Richard B. Westbrook,	Somman, Pa.	" "	100
R. C. Spencer,	Milwaukee, Wis.	Two "	200
R. W. Howes,	Roston, Mass.	One "	100
Chas. W. Story,	Boston, Mass.	" "	100
E. W. Moulding,	Detroit, Mich.	Five "	500
Jacob Hoffman,	Cumminsville, O.	One "	100
John Weiss,	Boston, Mass.	" "	100
W. C. Russell,	Ithaca, N. Y.	" "	100
A. W. Leggett,	Detroit, Mich.	" "	100
B. F. Dyer,	Boston, Mass.	" "	100
James Purinton,	Lynn, Mass.	" "	100
F. A. Nichols,	Lowell, Mass.	" "	100

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING SEPTEMBER 20.

Photius Fluke, $23; Frederic Looser, $3; Jonathan Hiestand, $1; Charles Newcomer, 75 cents; F. Purdy, $3; John Hiatt, 75 cents; E. A. Sawtelle, $3; L. C. Kimball, $3; J. D. Lange, $3; C. L. Carr, $3; T. Dwight Hall, $5; George Tolman, $3; Win. Helm, $3; Thomas Richardson, $1; A. L. Dagget, $3; C. M. Lake, 75 cents; E. T. Billings, $1; G. W. Stevens, $10; "A Friend," $25; Edward Dewey, $20; Edward Wigglesworth, $200; George W. Park, $20; John C. Haynes, $150; Lewis G. Jones, $1.50; G. A. Adams, 20 cents; C. W. Wendell, 35 cents; H. L. Green, 10 cents; A. W. Kellogg, 20 cents; G. H. Foster, 40 cents; James Mallin, 50 cents; D. B. Updegraff, 25 cents.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

RECEIVED.

SEVEN SERMONS by the Rev. Charles Voysey, B.A., preached at St. George's Hall, Langham Place, London: J. Low, 29 Curstorf Street, Chancery Lane. 1873.

OUR FIRST CENTURY. Illustration and Dedication, or Modern Pictorial course Spiritualism. By Charles Bray. Published by Thomas Scott, Esq., London. 1873.

SKETCHES OF JEWISH LIFE AND HISTORY. By Henry Gerson. New York: Hebrew Orphan Asylum Printing Establishment. 1873.

ATLANTIC MONTHLY for September. Boston: J. R. Osgood & Co.

GALAXY for September. New York: Sheldon & Co.

OLD AND NEW for September. Boston: Roberts Brothers.

PENN MONTHLY for September. Philadelphia: 506 Walnut Street.

MONTHLY MIRROR for September. New York: B. J. Stow.

BRITANNIA'S JOURNAL for July. New York: Standard Spiritual Library Association.

WOOD'S HOUSEHOLD MAGAZINE for September. Newburgh, N. Y.

NATIONAL PROTESTANT for September. Philadelphia: S. M. Kennedy.

LADIES' OWN MAGAZINE for September. Chicago: M. C. Bland & Co.

The Index.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY

BY
THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,AT
NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.Toledo Office: No. 35 MONROE STREET. Julius T. Frey, Agent and Clerk.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, THOMAS WENTWORTH
HIGGINSON, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HALLOWELL,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES
VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England),
REV. MONCURE D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.

BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 25, 1873.

NOTICE.

On and after September 1, the publication office of THE INDEX will be at No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. All letters, papers, and other communications should be henceforth addressed to "THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass."

Correspondents and Exchanges will please take notice.

CONVENTION IN NEW YORK.

A Convention of the Free Religious Association is to be held in New York city, at the Hall of the Cooper Institute, on the 15th and 16th of October, with sessions at 10 A.M. (continuing till 2 P.M.), and at 7 1-2 P.M. An opening session, if a suitable place can be found, will also be held on the evening of the 14th.

Among the subjects which, it is expected, will be considered are these:—"The Ecclesiastical Foes of Rational Religion;" "The Cost to Christendom of the Foreign Mission System;" "The Natural Unity of Religion;" "The Platform of the Evangelical Alliance as Opposed to Alliance on the Basis of Humanity;" "The Effect of Advancing Free Thought on Religious Institutions;" "Science and Religion—are they at War?" "The Church and Social Evils;" "Taxation of Church Property,—and other Demands which the Principle of Religious Liberty makes upon the State."

Able essayists and speakers will be in attendance, of whom further notice will be given hereafter.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec'y F. R. A.

GLIMPSES.

THERE is a "Female Seminary" at Nazareth. What next?

REV. DR. SPEAR says that "Adam and Eve constitute the parental headship of the race." What does Darwin say about it?

THE GREAT BALLOON intended to float Professor Wise to Europe, and the Graphic to riches, burst last week. Net result—lives saved and dollars lost.

"FOR NEARLY SEVENTY years," says a reviewer of Tristram's Land of Moab, "no one has ever questioned the site of Machærus." We shall not question it for seventy times seven years.

THE CENTRE Baptist Association of Pennsylvania, with a membership of fifteen hundred, adopted resolutions a few weeks ago against the Christian Amendment. We are glad that the spirit of Roger Williams still lives among them.

THE PRESBYTERIANS have forty-eight millions of dollars of ecclesiastical property; the Catholics have sixty-one millions; the Methodists have seventy millions. It is all untaxed. Who really pays taxes on it? You and other liberals pay part of them.

WITH SOME REASON, the Baptist Examiner thinks it poor business for journals to offer as premiums chromos which only cost from ten to thirty cents, under pretence that they are "worth $5 or $6." Worth $5 or $6 to whom? To the publishers who grow rich by their means?

SAYS REV. MR. MARDEN, missionary at Aintab,

Central Turkey: "You know that baptism and communion, to almost every Oriental Christian's mind, seem a safe passport to Heaven, whatever be the moral character." What is the precise moral value of "Oriental Christianity"? Shall we all pray for its increase?

THE CHICAGO Post refuses to believe that Rev. W. H. Murray killed ten deer at the Adirondacks last July, and ate them at one meal. Such incredulity over the exploits of respectable clergymen disgraces the entire press. We hasten to clear our own skirts by avowing that we swallow the story as easily as the clerical Deer-slayer swallowed his game.

THE LATE PILGRIMAGE of English Catholics to the shrine of Marguerite Marie Alacoque at Paray-le-Monial, about forty miles north-west of Lyons, is likely to be imitated here. The Catholic papers are agitating the project. The priests must make a fat thing of it. "It's an ill wind that blows nobody good," and it's a poor superstition that pays nobody cash.

THE NUMBER of registered Protestants in Turkey, according to Mr. Hagop Matteosian, their official representative, is "23,000 souls" (and, we presume, the same number of bodies). How many years have Protestant missionaries been at work in that country? How many missionaries have been sent there? How many dollars has it all cost? How many dollars per head does it take to convert a Turk? A curious community would like answers to these queries, especially in view of the further statement by Mr. &c., &c., that the said 23,000 souls are "composed of almost every nationality in the empire, but mostly of the Americans connected with the missions of the American Board."

THE CATHOLICS are in earnest in their warfare against our free school system. Their most influential journals call loudly for direct political action, by means of public meetings, election of local school committees, and general organization, in behalf of "separate schools,"—of course to be paid for out of the public funds. There is no doubt whatever that the educational institutions of this country are the objective point of attack by a large part of its own citizens. Our only policy must be in the first place to make the schools thoroughly secular, and then to defend them as the only safeguard of liberty and prosperity. Weakness on this point will be the ruin of republicanism.

THE FOLLOWING paragraph from the Boston Advertiser shows that our correspondents must be particular to put our special address on all communications designed for this office: "The Index, an insurance monthly which has been published for more than nine years past in Cincinnati, O., seven of which was under the name of the Chronicle, and two and a half The Index, will, after the present month, be removed to Boston and issued simultaneously from both cities. Mr. W. T. Tillinghast, manager and proprietor, has engaged the services of J. W. Alden, Esq., as associate editor for Boston, and George D. Eldridge, Esq., will continue as associate editor at Cincinnati, Ohio."

AMONG OUR "GLIMPSES" at things in general, we take a glimpse now and then at the office of the Boston Congregationalist, just across the street. Orthodox journalism appears to pay very well. The A. B. C. F. M. makes its headquarters in the same handsome and commodious building. Hitherto no zealous missionary has been despatched to convert the pagans of THE INDEX office. Why this heartless forgetfulness of the heathenism at their own doors? Perhaps the Celestial Insurance Company considers that the risk in our case is too desperate. Very well—we consider that the premium on their salvation-policies is too exorbitant; and so we are even. To swallow the Congregationalist's creed would certainly bankrupt us intellectually; and we prefer to be solvent a while longer.

FATHER O'REILLY, of St. Mary's Church, New York, declares that Catholics, "as American citizens, claim the right of educating their children as they please." On the other hand, the children have a right, whether they know it or not, to be educated thoroughly in secular knowledge; and the State, as the protector of all rights, has the right to guarantee them such an education. No American citizen has the right to defraud his child of a thorough secular education. If he chooses to superadd to it instruction in his own peculiar doctrines, he can do so; but Father O'Reilly claims for parents a most tyrannical control over their children, in the name of "American citizenship," when he declares they may "educate their children as they please." It is high time to teach the essential right of children to a good secular education, whether their parents "please" or not.

THE DEDICATION of the "Parker Memorial Meeting-House," in Boston, took place last Sunday. The day was perfect; the audience numbered nearly a thousand, apparently filling the hall; the music was good, and an abundance of flowers and plants added to the beauty of the occasion. Mr. John C. Haynes, chairman of the Standing Committee, welcomed the guests in the name of the Twenty-Eighth Congregational Society, and gave a brief historical account of the latter. Rev. Samuel Longfellow then delivered the dedicatory discourse; and short addresses were made by Mrs. Ednah D. Cheney, Mr. John Weiss, Mr. Charles W. Slack, and F. E. Abbot. During the forenoon several hymns were sung, among them one of rare beauty by Mr. W. C. Gannett. This new "meeting-house" is not a "church," but a fine and commodious hall, which will be occupied for miscellaneous secular uses during the week, and for thoroughly free and radical services on Sunday. The whole building is a memorial to the noble and beloved Theodore Parker, first minister of the Society, and is dedicated to Man rather than God, as was more than once intimated. There is every reason to hope that now, with this fine building at their disposal, the Society will thrive and prosper as never before since Parker's death; and if they do, every high human interest in this vicinity will take a new start. Success attend the undertaking now so favorably launched!

AS ONE OF OUR correspondents reports him, Rev. Mr. Hanly, the noted Methodist preacher, declares his belief that "the source of infidelity in every case is in the heart, not in the intellect." We advise our readers to observe the frequency with which this necessary part of Orthodoxy is stated. We say "necessary," because the moment "infidelity" is considered to be the result of merely intellectual causes, its guilt ceases forthwith, and all moral condemnation of it becomes absurd. "The evil heart of unbelief" is a fundamental Christian tenet. Yet nothing could be more false or unjust. "Unbelievers,"—that is, unbelievers in Christianity who are believers in something better,—are usually such in defiance of all the enticements of self-interest; and, as things go, the chances are ten to one that the avowed unbeliever is a sincerer man than the average church-member. Go through the business streets of any city; count up the believers and the unbelievers just as they are found in the shops and counting-rooms; and then judge for yourself whether the morals of the believers ought on the average to be reckoned better than the morals of the unbelievers. For soundness of "heart" as well as head, commend us to the men and women who modestly but boldly avow their unpopular convictions in the face of all seductions to a politic conformity with fashionable superstition. Mr. Hanly and his fellow-pharisees have much to learn, if they speak ignorantly, and much to repent of, if they speak with knowledge of facts as they really are.

IN THE Western Catholic, of Chicago, we find the following explicit avowal of the principles of Catholic journalism: "The position of the Catholic press of America is now well understood. The will and the words of the Sovereign Pontiff are the criteria by which we are to be governed. No one assumes to be the organ of either the universal or a particular Church. There is but one organ of the Church—that is the voice of the Pope speaking ex cathedra. No bishop is responsible for the words of any writer, as we are all liable to err. But writers, priests, and prelates are all accountable to the Church for the doctrines they may hold and teach. We will conform to the desires of the Holy Father, in as far as we can. We are ready at any moment for correction, and will listen to it. We will pay every respect to those who hold the place of Sovereign Pontiff in the particular Church to which we belong. And should we in any manner express ideas contrary to the dogma, or counsel practices against the morals of the Church, we beforehand declare our willingness to retract such ideas and counsels, and submit to the well-defined authority of the Sovereign Pontiff in such matters. This is our position, and that of the press in America, as far as we know." What more mischievous agency could be at work in a free country than a public press which thus avows its own utter servitude under priestly control? The simple fact is that Catholicism is a cancer in the republic, and the only sure way to exterminate it is to insist on strictly universal secular education.

THE F. R. A. REPORT FOR 1873.

The Proceedings at the Sixth Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association, just published, is one of the most interesting of the series. It is quite clear that the Association has a sufficient "reason of being." Since the spring of 1867, it has held annual conventions in Boston, attended by large audiences representing the best intellectual and moral life of New England, and including no small number of members and visitors from all parts of the country. The success of the meetings has been due in no small measure to the peculiar grace and dignity with which Mr. Frothingham has presided over them, to the admirable character of the Secretary's reports, and to the excellence of the general plans and arrangements of the Committee. No Association was ever more fortunate in the selection of its officers; and it is no cause for wonder that the same list has been substantially re-elected year after year.

The influence of these gatherings is not to be estimated by any of the ordinary rules. The Treasurer's reports show no large receipts, the total amount raised the past year having been only $1437.55, and the total amount expended $1320.55, leaving a balance of $117.00. No extensive list of memberships has been paraded; no numerous array of auxiliary societies has been reported; in fact, although many societies have been formed in various parts of the country more or less in sympathy with this, the American Free Religious Association, they have no organic connection with it, and are in no formal sense its auxiliaries. The influence exerted has been purely of a general kind, quite unlike that of associations formed for sectarian purposes. It has consisted in the stimulus given to a large number of individual minds, which have been brought into closer sympathy in a very indirect and informal manner; and the fears entertained by many that there would soon be a new sect formed as the result of the experiment have by no means been realized. In fact, it has been made a subject of reproach that no tangible and pecuniary aid has been extended to local societies, no special effort made to multiply them, and no support given to volunteer speakers and lecturers through the country at large. But nothing of this formed part of the original design of the Association. Those who had the most to do with its first inception were sceptical as to the real value of such methods of working. To represent ideas and principles of a universal character in the most universal manner possible, and to leave these to create local organizations and incite individual speakers to find a foothold for themselves according to their own fitness and capacity, seemed most in harmony with the spirit of the free religious movement; and this has accordingly been the general method and policy of the Association from the start. Nothing could be more unreasonable than the complaints made in certain quarters because the Association did not imitate methods it disbelieved in, and devote itself to the hot-house fostering of local movements in communities evidently unripe for them. This is the sectarian policy; it cannot be the policy of any society which is radically opposed to sectarianism. The wide though somewhat indefinite influence of the Free Religious Association has been far more salutary to the spread of free religious ideas than any partisan enthusiasm could possibly have been. No one thoroughly imbued with the spirit of the new movement can fail to see in this peculiarity, which has been blamed as a fault, one of the most marked excellences of the Association as a working body. There is no likelihood, at least under the existing administration of its affairs, that there will be any change in its policy in this respect.

The Secretary's report in the present pamphlet calls attention to the annual Horticultural Hall Course of Sunday Lectures in Boston, which has been now carried on very successfully for three years under the Association's auspices; to the additional Conventions in Philadelphia and Brooklyn last season; to interesting correspondence, especially from Mr. Mozumdar on behalf of the Brahmo Samaj, of India; to the Social Donation Festival, a new and delightful feature of this year's annual meeting; to the practical work to be done, and to the need of generous liberality on the part of its friends in carrying it on. On this last point we would say that nowhere can money be devoted more judiciously by those who wish to further the cause of rational and free religion than by contributing it to the treasury of the Free Religious Association.

The opening address of the President at the session of Friday morning, May 23, was peculiarly felicitous. After showing that the Catholic Church is incapable of adaptation to modern civilization, instancing its "four great achievements under Pius IX.," namely, the proclamation of the dogma of the Immaculate Conception of the Virgin Mary, the Austrian Concordat, the Syllabus, and the dogma of Papal Infallibility; after showing that the Protestant churches are "crumbling under the action of their own principles," and that "in Unitarianism Protestantism comes to an end,"—he shows that a "new departure is not only possible but necessary." This new departure consists, first, in getting thoroughly rid of sectarianism, and, secondly, in leaving individuals at perfect liberty to work out the final results of right reason applied to religion. Could anything be wiser or more timely than such teaching as this? "As an Association our aim is accomplished when we have achieved liberty,—the right of reason, in its own domain, to eminent domain."

An elaborate essay by Mr. Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion" follows, which it would be impossible to epitomize in the narrow space here at our command. It would be an impertinence to remind our readers that Mr. Johnson is one of the foremost minds in the ranks of New England radicals; his name has for years been known as that of a close thinker and a devoted student of the largest attainments. His great work on "Oriental Religion" is a monument of erudition and philosophic ability, and one of the glories of American scholarship. In the present essay he criticises various definitions of religion (including our own), finds them all defective, and propounds another—"the natural attraction of Mind as finite to Mind as infinite."

Mr. Johnson will, we think, be the last to complain, if we venture to re-consider our own definition in the light of his. He construes the conception of religion as "the effort of man for self-perfection, or for endless growth," as seeming "to exclude, as non-essential to the process defined, the real existence and inspiration of the Perfect itself, without which such effort on man's part, or even the idea of making it, is to most of us inexplicable, and which therefore demands recognition. One of the poles on which the movement turns seems wanting." In other words, he objects to our definition (which is substantially the same as that criticised) because it omits to mention "the Perfect," whose "existence and inspiration" are required to explain man's effort to perfect himself, and should be therefore explicitly recognized. If we do not mistake his language, Mr. Johnson regards all definitions of religion as incomplete which fail to recognize God more or less directly in their "forms of statement." He therefore defines it—"the natural attraction of Mind as finite to Mind as infinite."

Now the old Catholic definition of religion, taken from the false root religare, is substantially the same as Mr. Johnson's; being, as Lactantius expresses it, "the bond of piety by which we are attached and bound to God." If God and Man are distinguishable, his definition is an intelligible one; for in that case God and man are two distinct terms of a definite relation, that is, religion. But when he says, "I do not find religion definable by any distinction of Man from God, but call it the natural attraction of mind in its finiteness to mind in its infinitude," we must confess that we are hopelessly puzzled to see wherein his definition expresses, by its "form of statement," any more than our own. If all mind, finite or infinite, is one and indistinguishable, religion, according to Mr. Johnson's language, would be simply the attraction of mind to itself; and "one of the poles on which the movement turns seems wanting." In order to establish any relation whatever, there must be distinction of terms; and if distinction of terms is expressly prohibited, the relation absolutely vanishes. Mr. Johnson, therefore, falls totally in his attempt to express more than is expressed by our own definition; for the "effort of man to perfect himself" is necessarily the attraction of the real to the ideal, or of imperfect mind to itself conceived as perfect. The terms "finite" and "infinite," applied to mind, can mean nothing more than "imperfect" and "perfect." So long, consequently, as Mr. Johnson forbids all distinction of God and Man, his definition is open to precisely the same criticism which he brings against ours.

But, waiving this point, and passing by Mr. Johnson's prohibition of all distinction between Man and God as a mere inadvertency and inconsistency fatal to his own purpose, we must hold that the resolve not to omit explicit mention of God in the definition of religion exposes the definition itself to a just charge of narrowness. It was to avoid this charge that we deliberately sought a definition which should be neutral on the point of God's existence, and therefore cover all forms both of theistic and atheistic religion. Our definition by no means denies God; it simply forbears to assume him. Unless Mr. Johnson is prepared to take the ground clearly and consciously that there can be no religion without express recognition of God's existence, he will perceive that his own definition is defective in not being broad enough to cover the case of atheistic religion. What will he do with the case of a man who lives under the constant inspiration of devotion to the ideal, yet who deliberately and emphatically denies that there is any such thing as "infinite mind," affirming on the contrary that all mind depends absolutely on nervous organization? Will he call such a man religious or not? The case is no imaginary one; we could point out multitudes of such men. Our own definition of religion is broad enough to include all such men, and yet to include also all those who cherish most devoutly the belief in "infinite mind." In point of breadth, the language of Mr. Johnson's definition seems irremediably defective, provided the possibility of essential religiousness unaccompanied by belief in God is first conceded. It would give us great pleasure to be corrected in THE INDEX, if we have failed to do justice to his definition, and in the interest of truth alone invite him to set us right. That his thought is substantially our own would seem to be implied in this noble sentence: "Whatever, then, excludes any gift or function from that open attraction to perfection on which growth depends, or whatever lays on the conscience burdens of allegiance beyond the claims of the Moral Order and the upward aim, is at once a denial of religion and an offence to rational freedom."

We have left ourselves no room in which to notice as they merit the morning addresses of Mr. Gannett, Mr. Owen, and Col. Higginson,—the essay of Mr. Weiss in the afternoon, and the addresses of Mr. Longfellow, Mr. Thomson, and Mrs. Mott. All we can say is that no thoughtful radical will fail to regard them as constituting a rich banquet for head and heart. Our own address, being republished without change from the Report on another page, is submitted to our readers with a request that due allowance be made for the imperfections of an extemporaneous speech very slightly and hastily corrected for publication.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

When the reduction of the size of THE INDEX was made last April, we promised that justice should be done by an extension of the period of subscription to those subscribers who had paid or should pay $3.00 for a year. The same promise was made in substance by the five Directors of the Index Association who signed the "Card" in THE INDEX of June 21.

The paper having now been re-enlarged to dimensions as great as $3.00 a year will really pay for at our present circulation, the time has come to redeem the promises made; and this will be done in strict fidelity to their letter and spirit. All who remitted $3.00 for a year's subscription at any time between September 28, 1872, and April 1, 1873, are in equity entitled to an extension of five months beyond the date now standing on the printed mail-tags affixed to their papers. All who remitted $3.00 at any time between April 1 and September 1, 1873, are entitled to an extension less in amount, which must be calculated separately in each case. We are now printing as large a paper as we can afford for the price asked; and it is a fair equivalent for the money, $3.00 for twelve pages being at the same ratio as $2.00 for eight pages, our first price and size.

This extension of the subscription period as explained is simply a matter of justice to our subscribers, and will be most cheerfully made. But in order to save an immense amount of labor in comparing the mail-list with the subscription books, for which time cannot be taken without seriously interfering with proper attention to current business, it is necessary that all who wish their subscription periods extended should notify us as nearly as possible of the precise date when they paid the $3.00. For every subscriber entitled to extension who does this, the proper extension will be made at once by changing the date on his printed label. In all other cases we shall be obliged to assume that our subscribers prefer to leave the dates as they are.

And we hope that the majority of our subscribers will be disposed to waive voluntarily their unquestioned right to an extension of time, in order to help the paper and save it from serious, if not dangerous, embarrassment. Should they all insist on it, the protracted postponement of their renewals would involve the paper in unavoidable financial difficulties. THE INDEX, like all other papers, must depend mainly on its subscription list; and if the receipts from this source are cut off several months, the result cannot but be disastrous. Hence we trust that our subscribers will generously contribute the surplus amount already paid in, and renew promptly on the expiration of their present terms. It will be very gratifying to us, and to all who wish well to the paper, if we are early assured of this kind willingness to divide the burden of still recent misfortunes, and to second our own efforts to place THE INDEX at last beyond all need of extraneous aid.

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but hereafter no space will be spared to Errata.

N. B.—Articles for this department should be SHORT, and written only on one side of the sheet.

N. B.—Illegibly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.

N. B.—No responsibility will be assumed for unused manuscripts.

"DISCONTINUE MY PAPER."

EDITORS INDEX:

Gentlemen,—You will please be kind enough to discontinue sending your paper to me after my term of subscription expires. I am fully convinced that you are on the wrong track, and that the teachings of your paper are not for the permanent interests of your patrons. Your paper may seem to prosper for a season; but you and those who follow you will one day, or at some period in the distant future, awake to the realization of your false position, when it will be too late to seek grace and pardon from the Savior you have opposed and ridiculed with all the talent you possessed when living.

You, however, only represent a class that has always existed in the world's history—boasting in their own wisdom. Yours respectfully,

BARLOW A. ULRICH.

[We see no cause to complain of the stoppage of THE INDEX for such reasons as the above. How such a subscription was originally made is a mystery to us. But we hope that Mr. Ulrich will some day see how unnecessary it is to trust for "salvation" to anything but his own honest purpose and vigorous will. These are a "Savior" indeed.—Ed.]

THE HEALTHY ATTITUDE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—It seems to me that the most healthy attitude that can be assumed towards the "Deity question" is that of confession of great ignorance. The believers in the existence of a God are divided into two classes; namely, those who believe through dogma, and those who see God by what they call their intuitions. The latter claim to be possessed of a faculty of mind which plainly shows them that there is a God; and we may believe that a very large number of those who accept through dogma are in a measure assisted by their intuitions. It is therefore probable that a very large portion of the human race accepts the idea of a God by the intuitional method. They say that they have a feeling of reaching out towards, or desire for, the infinite; they translate this perception into a relationship, and finally put it into words by saying "Father." Let them do so if they will: for my part I am content to allow things that are vague to remain vague, until I can arrive at knowledge by a perfectly legitimate process. With my mental powers, I am capable of doing no more. I find healthy work for every department of my mind, the performance of which strengthens my intellect: immediately I attempt to understand subjects which are beyond me, I injure myself by undertaking more than I can do. The muscles of my body are capable of doing a certain amount of work; if I overtax them, I weaken them. I do not deny the existence of God; at the same time, while I recognize the transcendental part of my nature, I have no desire to formulate, even to my own mind, any view of the question which it is possible to express in language. I will not even use the word "infinite," because no assemblage of letters can describe what is so entirely outside of our conceptions.

Yours truly, FREDERIC R. HONEY.
NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 18, 1873.

[In classifying all believers in God as either dogmatists or intuitionists, the writer of the above omits to mention those who believe in him as a result of scientific thought,—that is, who rely on the ordinary processes of reason, and are thereby led to such belief. They certainly come under neither of Mr. Honey's classes. It is true, however, that the "most healthy attitude" towards the problem indicated is that of extreme modesty. An over-positive mood, much more an intolerant mood, proves ignorance of no low degree. Little indeed do we know; but few are they who know their own ignorance. Yet it is not "healthy" to regard ignorance as necessary. Better take a cheerful view of human possibilities, and anticipate the gradual conquest of the unknown by the ever-enlarging intelligence of man. Even if we know little to-day of that ultimate explanation of things which Mr. Honey refers to as the "Deity question," let us hope that the human intellect will yet think out its way to a true and wise solution of difficulties that now seem insuperable to many. If it be true that God exists, it is incredible that a truth so stupendous should be unattainable by reason. Hence we look steadfastly for the inbreaking of greater light, as science climbs gradually up from the physical to the spiritual facts of Nature. Cannot they who shudder at the thought of welcoming doubt on such a subject as the fundamental doctrines of theism see any genuine religiousness in this calm and happy confidence that truth will yet vindicate itself to the intellectual faculties of man, and illuminate his head as well as his heart?—Ed.]

"GOOD-SPEED!"

CURWENSVILLE, Clearfield Co., Pa.,
Aug. 18, 1873.

F. E. ARNOT:

Dear Sir,—I at first esteemed your paper a luxury; I now deem it a "necessary of life." I suppose I could manage to live without it, but it gives expression to thoughts that have been for years revolving in the dim recesses of my inner consciousness, yet lacked form and force. It speaks out bravely and plainly words I have waited and wished, Oh so much, to hear. I have long felt that we were oppressed with the nightmare of superstition, and bound down with the chains of bigotry and intolerance. Thanks to THE INDEX and its brave and true corps of contributors—

"The morning light is breaking,
The darkness disappears!"

and the glorious light of mental freedom dawns upon a priestridden people.

Yours for the unqualified right of investigation of all subjects, and the right of each individual to form his own opinions, HARRY HOOVER.

"FOREIGN INFLUENCES."

The Universalist General Convention will hold its annual session in Washington on the 16th, 17th, and 18th instant, and it has already attracted general attention here to some degree. Several articles of considerable length relative to the history and doctrines of this sect, written by prominent Universalist clergymen, have appeared within the past week in the columns of the National Republican; and one of these, entitled "Religious Opinion a Century Ago," contained the following statement:—

"The American mind, it deserves to be remarked, with all its inquisitiveness and love of novelty, and desire for progress, does not naturally tend to scepticism and infidelity. Indeed, almost all the infidelity, whether vulgar, literary, or scientific, now in the country, is not only of foreign origin, but is constantly nursed by foreign influences."

To the American Christian, whose allegiance is divided between his church and his country,—his Christ and his Constitution,—whose piety prompts him to supplicate the Lord of lords and the King of kings, and whose politics impel him to denounce lords and kings,—such a reflection as the above must be at least gratifying. It is a very broad statement, and, to the Orthodox Christian as well as to the secretaries of the writer's school, a very captivating one. But is it true? Let us see.

An intelligent examination of the principal forms of American "infidelity" would doubtless result in the following classification:—

1. The "vulgar infidelity" of the "Tom Paine" school;

2. The materialistic "infidelity" represented by the Boston Investigator, which same journal, in the absence of a representative of the first class, serves for both;

3. The Spiritualistic "infidelity" represented by the various Spiritualist journals; and

4. The Rationalistic "infidelity" of THE INDEX. The majority of American "infidels" may be included under these four heads; and an examination of the sentiments constantly gaining expression through their representative journals above referred to will enable one to ascertain to what extent they are affected by "foreign influences."

Take the Investigator, to begin with. There is nothing in it that strikes one as particularly foreign. The sentimentalism of Renan, the profundities of German Biblical criticism, and the doubts of English bishops, find no prominence in its columns. Aged, obstinate, and uncompromising, it plods on in the same path it has trod for two-score years, blissfully unconscious of foreign nourishment. Its venerable editor considers himself the apostolic successor of Abner Kneeland, a "development" (by "foreign influences," Mr. Sawyer?) from our reverend gentleman's cherished faith—Unitarianism.

The Spiritualists, who have done more, probably, to break the power of Orthodox Christianity in America than all other elements combined, cannot surely be charged with drawing their nourishment from foreign sources. On the contrary, their doctrines are American in origin, and their mode of organization and general spirit are purely American in their character. "American Spiritualism" has become an accepted and universally recognized name.

How far foreign influences permeate THE INDEX, it is hardly necessary to inquire. "The Demands of Liberalism" have no foreign aspect.

The assertion of the reverend gentleman is one of that numerous class of broad affirmations which are dictated by the desire of the affirmer, rather than drawn from observation or research. The purpose it manifests is that of creating a slight link of unity between the incongruous elements of Christian theology and American nationalism,—an effort as futile as it is foolish.

But what absurdity on the part of the preachers of a foreign religion, a religion born in a foreign land and nurtured for centuries amidst foreign institutions, to talk here in America of "foreign influences" opposing their imported dogmas! A Church with a foreign faith, whose God is a foreign God, whose sacred books were written wholly by foreigners in foreign lands, whose saints and fathers are all foreigners, and whose priesthood has its head-quarters at a foreign capital, to declare here in this new Republic of the West that "foreign influences" "nurture" the protests against it!

So far from this assertion having any foundation in fact, it must be evident to all who study the nature of American Liberalism that the very spirit of American institutions is its true fosterer of "infidelity," and it would not be unwise to find its actual origin in the principles enunciated in the American Declaration of Independence, penned by the "infidel" Jefferson. To carry those principles more completely into practice, and to harmonize national legislation with an unchristianized constitution, is now becoming the effort of a constantly increasing number,—an effort rendered necessary by the insidious encroachments of an exotic superstition which falsely prates of "foreign influences."

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 12, 1873.

THEOLOGICAL ASSUMPTIONS.

In the Watchman and Reflector of Aug. 21st, 1873, are some speculations, stated in argumentative form, about "the intermediate state." The sort of composition of which this is a specimen is exceedingly common in pulpits, as well as in weekly, monthly, and quarterly publications of the theological class; and it deserves more particular and more extensive notice than it has yet received.

Defenders of the popular theology, lay and clerical, often undertake to establish their theories by argument; but they usually rest their superstructure of reasoning upon a basis of mere assumption, quite as unproved, and seemingly as unprovable, as that elephant, standing on a tortoise, which was declared by somebody to be the foundation of the earth. Take a few specimens:—

1. "The intermediate state."

The writer above referred to means by this expression a portion of the future existence of every human being, intermediate between the death of his body and some indefinitely future period. He assumes that, after this indefinitely future point shall have been reached, there cannot possibly be any essential change in the character, career, or destiny, of the individual in question; and his article is designed to show the similarity, in this particular, between that final state and "the intermediate state." In other words, this writer wishes to have it believed that, if any soul, when its body dies, has not reached a certain degree or grade of spiritual character, it must, by God's appointment, thenceforward remain incapable of any improvement!

Why should these things be believed? Why should any believer in God and immortality credit such a notion in regard either to man's final state or to any state preceding it?

2. "The world of woe."

Those who use this expression assume the existence of a place or a state in which God (that same God whom they call just, and full of loving-kindness and tender mercies) will torment vast numbers of men and women forever, having made it for that purpose before he made them!

Why should any one credit such a horrible doctrine as this?

3. "The plan of salvation."

Here it is assumed that God invented and adopted a contrivance to rescue from eternal misery a part, and only a part, of that immense human family for whom he had himself ordained and prepared eternal misery! This misery (it is represented in the popular theology) was ordained by the All-Loving to punish men for following their natural inclinations; that is to say, the inclinations with which they were born by his appointment; the rescue of a part, and only a part, of these condemned ones was arranged (they say) by the All-Merciful; and the mode of doing this, adopted by the All-Just, was to inflict a different and less terrible penalty upon an innocent person!

Why, for heaven's sake, should the mass of frightful inconsistencies included in this assumption be believed?

4. "The great adversary of souls."

Those who use this phrase mean their hearers or readers to believe that there really exists an invisible being, of great power to deceive and deprave human creatures, of immense activity and energy, and of intense malignity; and further, that this evil spirit not only sets himself in opposition to God, the All-Wise, All-Good, and All-Powerful, but will succeed in counteracting his purposes of mercy towards millions of men and women throughout eternity.

Why should such a notion be believed by anybody?

5. "The word of God"—meaning the Bible.

People who talk about "the word of God" mean to represent that God really dictated, and really requires us to believe, all that was written by Samuel, Solomon, and other Hebrews, known and unknown, in the Jewish Scriptures; and by Mark, and Paul, and other converts from Judaism, known and unknown, in the Christian Scriptures.

Why should any one entertain such a belief,—especially after seeing the immense amount of incongruity and self-contradiction involved in it?

6. "The sure word of prophecy."

Those who use this expression wish to have it understood that all the predictions and prophecies recorded in the Old and New Testaments actually have been, or are in course of being, fulfilled; and that they must all be accepted as God's theory.

Why should anybody accept a theory like this,—especially after seeing the numerous contradictions of it by the facts of history and experience?

7. "God's holy Sabbath"—meaning Sunday, the first day of the week.

8. "The house of God"—meaning some building of wood, brick, or stone, in which sectarian devotees assemble weekly to maintain and diffuse the doctrine peculiar to them.

Why should the notions expressed in these two phrases pass current with any reader of the Bible? We all agree in accepting the declaration of the martyr Stephen that "the Most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands;" and both Testaments agree in designating "the seventh day of the week," Saturday, as the only Scriptural Sabbath.

"Our Lord Jesus Christ."

Why should Jesus, the wise and good teacher, be called "our Lord,"—as if our whole allegiance were not due to that "one God" who is testified of in both Testaments, and who bore witness to himself in the human heart before either Testament was written?

Why should that wise and good teacher be called "Christ"—as if he bore the least resemblance to the imaginary "Messiah" of Jewish anticipation and prediction?

This list of unproved and unprovable assumptions might be extended, but it is sufficient. The facts in regard to these phrases, to which I wish to call attention, are the following: No sufficient reason can be produced for acceptance of the theories expressed in them; critical inquiry into the meaning and ground of them is stigmatized by "pious" people as dangerous and wicked; the influence (direct and indirect) of these pious people excludes such inquiry from the daily and weekly press; if one of this class can fortunately be found willing to hear and answer, he will probably answer by evasion; and if, by remarkable good fortune, a direct answer to an inquiry of this sort be ever obtained, it will be found to contain another unfounded assumption, needing itself to be established by evidence, but utterly destitute of evidence.

When respectable custom has brought about the acceptance of notions so false and absurd as those implied in the phrases above quoted, by people otherwise sensible and intelligent, and when the teachers of these people can habitually utter things of this sort as truths without contradiction or question, it seems quite time that protest should be made; or, at the very least, inquiry.

C. K. W.

SCIENCE AND FAITH.

I have clipped the following paragraph from Harper's Monthly Magazine for December, 1872, pages 137, 138: "He (Faraday) combined in a remarkable degree the scepticism of the Man of Science and the faith of the humble Christian. The scientist is almost of necessity a sceptic. It is his business to doubt, and, doubting, to test, try, investigate. As a scientist Michael Faraday was peculiarly sceptical. 'If,' says he, 'Grove or Wheatstone or Gassiot, or any other, told me of a new fact and wanted my opinion either of its value, or the cause, or the aid it could give on any subject, I never could say anything until I had seen the fact.' So it seems Michael Faraday would doubt the testimony of any man on anything of a scientific nature until he had seen the facts; but he was so 'humble a Christian' that he would accept what the nearly forty writers of the Bible presented as truth without doubting, testing, trying, or investigating. He would not believe his dearest friends, no matter how well he knew them to be honest and truthful. He absolutely refused to accept a new scientific idea upon the testimony of others. But he was humble enough to accept the whole of what nearly forty Bible writers had said on religious matters (aye, and on scientific matters, too) without asking to see the facts! He certainly deserves the title of 'humble Christian,' though I cannot see how he can claim to be a consistent philosopher.

What should we think of a king who is so fearful that his servants will poison him that he subjects everything that he eats to the severest tests for poisons, before eating them, but drinks his wines and other beverages without fear, and without subjecting them to any examination, as though he knew not that poison could be put in the cup as well as in the pot? We certainly should say of him that he should apply the same tests to his drinks that he did to his solid food. Similarly, we say of M. Faraday that he should apply the same tests to his religious that he did to his scientific ideas. M. Faraday's friends never found any fault with him for being sceptical, but on the contrary loved him all the more for his rigid devotion to the interests of truth; and to hold that God will find fault with his creatures for requiring proof of their religious views, is in the highest degree derogatory of his character. Even Bible writers have shown that God was quite indulgent to those who doubted, as in the case of Moses saying to God—"Behold they (the people) will not believe me and will say, the Lord hath not appeared unto thee." (Exodus 4: 1.) The Lord did not tell him to damn them if they said so; but proceeded good-naturedly to instruct Moses how to prove the truth of his assertions. So also in the case of the sceptic Gideon; God allowed him to see the facts (Judges 6: 36-40), and seemed not at all displeased with his scepticism. It certainly would be unfair to assume that in these days of grace God is more arbitrary and unreasonable than he was in those days. The God who submitted to a demand for the facts from the sceptics, Moses and Gideon, will not damn sceptics now without first showing them similar proofs. Why, then, should M. Faraday accept the Bible writers any more than Grove, Wheatstone, or Gassiot?

The Jews, as a race, have not been very famous for their devotion to truth. Their father Abraham was more noted for faith than for truthfulness (see Genesis, chapter 20). Jacob and his sons were not always noted for their truthfulness (see Genesis, chapters 27 and 34, also chapter 37, 31st and 32nd verses). Even one of the writers in the New Testament told a lie and swore to it (Matthew 26: 69-74); and, even after preaching the famous sermon on the day of Pentecost, he dissembled. Paul himself had a weakness in the same direction (see Romans 3: 7).

But these men claim, it is said, to have written by inspiration of God, and therefore we must believe them without seeing the facts. The sceptic replies: "Not so; for all writers on religion have made the same pretensions, Joe Smith not excepted, and we will demand of you to see the facts." It is right to doubt, and, doubting, to test, try, and investigate; and a religion that will not stand the severest scrutiny can have but little claim to divine origin. Scientific men are not often proud men—not so often as are Christians; and I suppose M. Faraday was a humble scientific man as well as an "humble Christian." But if he had applied the same tests to religious things that he did to scientific, his biographer would not have called him an "humble Christian." He would then have been "almost of necessity a sceptic." This is surely a poor argument in favor of the Christian religion.

J. G. M.

CONCENTRATION.

Mind and matter are singularly blended in Nature.

The laws according to which the noblest human intellect is acted upon include within their range the lowliest forms of life.

Illustrations of the grandest and most far-reaching truths known to the philosopher can be found in the commonest facts and things familiar to the child.

It is so in the matter of concentration, which is the gathering of the diffused into the intense, and which is quality obtained at the expense of quantity.

We see it where a million men are engaged in the manufacture and use of the invention of one intense mind—the steam-engine of Watt; and we see it when a flash of lightning,—less in quantity than the power produced by the combination of the elements of a drop of water,—by its extreme tension reduces a tower or an oak to ruin.

We may take a small bit of rock which has lain in a hot barren plain, on which the sun's rays may have fallen for a geological era with little or no effect; but let us concentrate the rays by bringing them to a focus on the bit of rock, and we shall see that an amount of heat less than that which idly fell upon it during an hour, shall in a minute or two render it a free flowing liquid.

This principle has much to do with practical science and business. A flame below a certain intensity has no power to reduce a metal, say, iron, and therefore only a small part of the sun of heat applied is utilized; and hence the great economy effected by any invention, such as the hot blast, which increases the intensity of the flame.

What is the main source of loss in our steam-engines? Plainly the heat carried off by the exhaust steam which is not hot enough to generate more steam, and hence any practicable scheme to condense or concentrate heat of low intensity would be of great value.

In human life we trace the same truth taught by the lens and the blast-pipe; concentration of attention and study to a special object produce results unknown where the same power is expended on a general culture only.

It is as if we had each a mound to build from about the same quantity of material, and that the higher it is to be, the narrower shall it be, and the harder must we work; but from the top we shall have a wider range of view than if we had either unduly broadened our foundation or spared our labor. In fact, so much does achievement depend upon industry, that many men of genius have considered it more necessary to success than natural talent. Newton, Sir Joshua Reynolds, Franklin, and Faraday were emphatically of this opinion. If one youth has twice the natural talent of another, but only one-third his application, he shall as certainly be beaten in the race of life by the other as that three exceeds two.

In the present vastly extended range of knowledge, when single sciences have outgrown in volume the limits that all the sciences had in Newton's day, the desideratum would seem to be the concentration of the mind on some particular science or sub-science, taking care to cultivate all knowledge at the same time as far as may be, to counteract the narrowing tendency of a specialty exclusively cultivated.

As the relations of one science to another are being traced continually, and the unity of knowledge becomes more and more evident, we have often to admire a great mind which not only excels in a specialty, but has an unusual general cultivation, which is turned to account in developing the specialty farther and higher; for all Nature is inter-dependent, and each part has a bearing and influence on all, and we must rise from details to generalities in our understanding of the universe.

J. G. H.

WHISKEY MEN AND INFIDELS.

WHITE HALL, Greene Co., Ill., May 22, 1873.

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION:

Gentlemen,—Talking with a Methodist minister yesterday, he informed me that there is an association in Ohio, composed of "Whiskey men and Infidels," who believe neither in morals, Sunday, nor God.

Wishing to know the truth in the matter, I enclose ten cents, for which you will please send me a copy of your paper. An old copy will do as well as a late one; I only want the sentiment and object of your paper.

I am very truly yours,

WILL HACKNEY.

P. S. Free thinking is on the increase here.

MARK TWAIN, a few months after his first baby was born, was holding it on his knee. His wife said, "Now confess, Samuel, that you love the child!" "I can't do that," replied the humorist, "but am willing to admit I respect the little thing for its father's sake."

THE CATHOLIC ATTACK.

[The following article, taken from the last Independent, should be carefully read. Shall the attack succeed? It will be profitable to ignore the issue much longer.—Ed.]

The Roman Catholic clergy of St. Peter's parish in this city have inaugurated a movement which will be observed with interest, as an attempt, under more favorable circumstances than probably exist elsewhere in the country, to break down the public schools, and establish in place of them sectarian schools, under the direct control of the clergy. The first ward seems to have been selected on account of its small population and large proportion of Roman Catholics. By the census of 1870, the total number was only 14,463, of whom 8,022 were foreigners. A new building, erected at a cost of about $200,000, was dedicated, with imposing ceremonies, and in the presence of a large crowd, on the 6th inst. The dedication ceremony was performed by Vicar-General Quinn, who made a tour of the building, sprinkling the walls with holy water, while the attendant priests chanted the "Benedictus." This was followed by several addresses, all of which were, of course, emphatic in approval of the new policy. The speech of the Rev. Father O'Reilly, of St. Mary's Church, is thus reported in the New York Times:

"He said that there were schools already in that parish; but the Catholics, out of their poverty, had clubbed together and raised money to purchase the school which had just been dedicated. They did so because they wanted schools of their own. The public schools were, he confessed, very good in their way; but they were by no means perfect. Those whom the public schools suited were welcome to them; but Catholics would have the schools they wanted. This was only the beginning of the movement. Catholics were determined to maintain their faith, and the only one way to do that was to educate the children in the faith of their fathers. They had just blessed the school, the first words uttered in which every day would be 'Our Father,' and in which every hour would be dedicated in the name of the Trinity. That was what they liked. This was a free country, and people were at liberty to choose whatever system of education they pleased. Catholics would stand by any Jew, Dissenter, or Episcopalian, who, in addition to a secular education, would teach his children in the doctrines of his own particular religion.

"Father O'Farrel, of St. Peter's, in bringing the proceedings to a close, thanked his parishioners for the zeal shown by them in the educational movement. He wished it to be understood that, in this matter, the priests and people went together, and that his parishioners would bear sacrifices, no matter how hard, in order that their children might receive a Christian education. He hoped they would not abate their zeal until every Catholic child in the ward had been brought under the influences of a Christian education. It had been charged by a certain newspaper that they had entered into a conspiracy. It was true that they had entered into a conspiracy—every man, woman, and child, of them; and they made no secret of it. They did not deny that they protested against supplying schools to which Catholic children could not go, just as they would protest against being forced to attend a State church. They claimed, as American citizens, the privilege of educating their children as they pleased. The same gentleman, at the 10.30 mass, pronounced the public school system a failure. He believed that eventually the State must either make all education voluntary and without taxation—or each denomination supporting its own schools—or else, if taxes were raised for educational purposes, each party must receive a fair share. The eighth of September, he declared, would be long remembered by his parishioners as the day on which the first school under the care of the Christian Brothers was established in the parish of St. Peter."

AN EXTRAORDINARY WITNESS.—A Madrid letter in the Siecle says: "Salvochea, the popular hero of Cadiz, has appeared before an examining magistrate. By his examination you may judge what manner of man he is. The question put—Your name? Firman Salvochea. Age? Thirty-one. Religion? To do all the good I can. I have to ask you to swear that you will tell the truth. My habit is always to tell the truth. Good; but you must swear to do so. I refuse to take any oath. Do you know the leaders of the national militia who took part in the rising at Cadiz? Yes, all of them; they are my personal friends. Give their names. Never! no human power can force me to say what I do not wish. Do you know who commanded the insurgents? I had the honor to be obeyed by all my friends, defenders of the rights of the people trampled under foot; but I never commanded. Who ordered the fire on the piquet of artillery at the moment of the publication of the bando of the very excellent Seigneur Peralta? I do not know. Who, after that, organized the resistance? I myself. Who caused barricades to be raised? I, again. Who constructed them? Everybody, young and old, women and children. Who set the galley-slaves free? Nobody; they got out, and I had them pursued, and when they were caught I confined them in the Ayuntamiento, where I employed them in making cartridges and lint. Who planted cannon under the peristyle of the casa consistorial? My companions and I. Who were they? I repeat, do not ask me to give any proper names. I have resolved not to be led away by my resentment; but your insidious questions might be able to prevail over my wishes, and the responsibility of it would fall back upon yourselves."—Journal, Feb. 23, 1869.

Advertisements.

GENERAL NOTICE.

On August 8, 1873, I contracted for the two best advertising pages of THE INDEX for the current year. No advertisements objectionable to the editor to be taken. For terms apply to

ASA K. BUTTS, 36 Dey St., New York.

No improper advertisements, no advertisements of patent medicines, and no advertisements known to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be hereafter admitted into THE INDEX. All advertisements accepted before this date will be allowed to run their time. No cuts admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.
TOLDOO O., June 21, 1873.

THE INSIDE HISTORY OF THE INDEX ASSOCIATION.

By Francis E. Abbot.

This is a handsomely printed pamphlet of 64 pages, containing the full explanation of the recent "INDEX troubles," which was submitted to the stockholders of the Index Association at their Second Annual Meeting, June 7, 1873. It is hoped that every one who has read the statements of the other side will in fairness read this also. Price, post-paid, 25 cents. Address the Author, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER!

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.

The INDEX TRACT NO. 7, "Compulsory Education," is out of print, and therefore orders for it cannot be filled at present. But it is intended to reprint it before long, and all parties ordering a COMPLETE SET will be furnished with it without extra charge as soon as reprinted.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Report, in pamphlet form, of the Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association for 1873 will be published Sept. 1st.

It contains full proceedings of the meeting, including Essays by Samuel Johnson on "FREEDOM IN RELIGION," and by John Weiss on "RELIGION IN FREEDOM." Speeches by O. B. Frothingham, W. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, S. Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, Lucretia Mott, and the Annual Report of the Executive Committee.

Price, 25 cents a copy; in packages of four or more, 25 cents each. It can be obtained by addressing the undersigned at New Bedford, Mass., or, in Boston, of A. Williams & Co., and at Longfellow's.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

Now is the Time to Subscribe
FOR

The Truth Seeker,
An eight-page Quarto, printed on fine Book Paper,

DEVOTED TO

SCIENCE, MORALS, FREE THOUGHT, FREE INQUIRY, AND THE DIFFUSION OF LIBERAL SENTIMENTS.

"Come now, and let us reason together;" let us hear all sides; let us divest ourselves of prejudice and the effects of early education; let us "prove all things, and hold fast that which is good."

PUBLISHED MONTHLY BY THE LIBERAL ASSOCIATION OF PARIS, ILL.

Terms, 50 cents per year; Seven Copies to one address for $3; Twelve Copies to one address, $6—payable in advance.

BEGINNING SEPTEMBER, 1873.
Specimen numbers for examination sent free upon application. In view of the amount of original reading matter furnished, it is the cheapest publication in America. Every Liberal mind should read it. There are certainly in the country friends enough of progress and mental freedom to sustain it. The tax is extremely light.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
Paris, Ill.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—God in the Constitution, by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

HAPPY now are the children whose thoughtful parents have bought for them "Avilude, or Games of Birds." They gather around the table with bright eyes and smiling faces as it is announced, "We are to have a game of Avilude." A whole winter of enjoyment, combined with instruction, for seventy-five cents. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by West & Lee, Worcester, Mass.

"PRACTICAL IDEAS." To inspire a lively taste for rural life among the young people of the cities and villages, and to encourage a more rational and healthful view of their opportunities among those on the farms, is one of the objects of the YOUNG FOLKS' RURAL. Parents should subscribe for it for their children. It is an entirely "new idea," and different from any other paper or periodical in style and character. Sixteen pages and sixty-four columns—THE LARGEST PAPER IN THE WEST. $1.50 per year; single numbers, 15 cents. Address
H. N. F. LEWIS, Publisher,
CHICAGO.

WORKERS WANTED!

For Wood's Household Magazine,

Which, with its premiums, is one of the most attractive in the country. Price of Magazine, ONE DOLLAR A YEAR.

COMMISSIONS LIBERAL, offering a lucrative and agreeable business to those willing to give it proper attention.

VOL. XIII. begins with July, 1873.
Examine our Clipping and Premium Lists.

Two first-class periodicals for the price of one. For Specimen Magazine, and further information, address

WOOD'S HOUSEHOLD MAGAZINE,
Newburgh, New York.
S. E. SHUTES, Publisher.

SELF-HELP.

PREVENTION AND REMEDY.

The Butler Health-Lift

HAS BEEN IN SUCCESSFUL OPERATION FOR TEN YEARS!

Principal Office:
PARK BANK BUILDING, 214 Broadway,
New York.
BROOKLYN, 158 Remsen street, connecting with rooms No. 229 Fifth avenue.

A SCIENTIFIC EXERCISE, concentrated and cumulative, a tonic to the nervous system, a rest to tired brains, a cure for chronic difficulties.

Never exhausting; pleasant, agreeable, combined with rest.

The cheapest and best apparatus for private use to competent parties. Call, or send 50 cents for descriptive pamphlet.

"I know the BUTLER HEALTH-LIFT to be an efficient tonic, especially to the nervous and digestive systems."—C. L. Mitchell, M.D.

Address at Principal Office,
LEWIS G. JAMES, Proprietor.

Standard Liberal Works.

For sale by A. K. BUTTS, 36 DEY STREET, New York.

JEHOVAH UNVEILED, or, The Character of the Jewish Deity delineated. A new and valuable book. Price 35 cents.

EXETER HALL. A Theological Romance. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper, 60 cents; postage 4 cents. Cloth, 80 cents; postage 18 cents.

PAINE'S THEOLOGICAL AND MISCELLANEOUS WRITINGS. 12mo. Edition. Price $1.50; postage 18 cents. This edition contains the last Will and Testament of THOMAS PAINE, wherein he disposes of his real and personal property, amounting to some thousands of dollars, which completely disproves those pious stories respecting Paine's poverty and destitution in his last hours.

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON; Examination of the Prophecies, Essay on Dreams, etc. A very handsome edition in green cloth. Price 75 cents; postage 14 cents.

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON; Being an Investigation of True and Fabulous Theology. Price, cloth, 50 cents; postage 12 cents. Paper, 25 cents, or five for $1.00.

PAINE'S COMMON-SENSE; A Revolutionary Pamphlet, addressed to the Inhabitants of America in 1776. To which is added a brief Sketch of the Author's Life. Price 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

THE LIFE OF THOMAS PAINE, Author of "Common-Sense," "Rights of Man," "Age of Reason," &c., with Critical and Explanatory Observations of his Writings. By G. Yale. Price $1.00; postage 10 cents.

TESTIMONIALS TO THOMAS PAINE, Author of "Common-Sense," "The Crisis," "Rights of Man," "English System of Finance," "Age of Reason," &c. Compiled by Joseph N. Moreau. Price 15 cents.

THOMAS PAINE; The Author-Hero of the American Revolution. Price 10 cents.

THE YAHOO; A Satirical Rhapsody. By the author of "The Great Dragon Cast Out." Price 70 cents.

THE LIGHT OF THE AGE; or, Miracles Explained. By Franklin D. Orcutt. Price 40 cents.

THE LOGIC OF DEATH; or, Why should the Unbeliever or Atheist Fear to Die? By G. Jacob Holyoake. Price 10 cents.

THE FESTIVAL OF ASHTAROTH. A Tale of Palestine, founded on the destruction of the Moabites by the Jews. By A. C. Middleton. Price 15 cents.

Chicago—Second Anniversary of the Great Fire—Exposition Year!

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT!

A TRIBUTE TO THE COMPLETION

OF THE REBUILDING OF

CHICAGO!!

Great Special Number

OF THE

LAKE-SIDE MONTHLY.

A Thorough and Exhaustive Exposition of

CHICAGO

INSIDE, OUTSIDE,

EVIL AND GOOD,

CRITICAL, EXPOSITORY,

DESCRIPTIVE, HISTORICAL.

The OCTOBER NUMBER of The Lake-Side Monthly will be entirely devoted to a series of graphic and sprightly articles upon REBUILT CHICAGO, prepared by the best writers, and arranged to cover all the various aspects of that city at the completion of its Rebuilding.

Among the writers may be mentioned Rev. ROBERT COLLIER, BENJ. F. TAYLOR, Rev. H. N. POWERS, Prof. NATHAN SHEPARD, Hon. JOHN M. BINGLEY, Rev. DAVID SWING, and many other well-known names.

The topics treated are as follows:—

- The Chicago of the Past.
- The Chicago of the Conquerors.
- The Chicago of the Thinker.
- The Chicago of the Hand-Worker.
- The Chicago of the Carrier.
- The Chicago of the Business Man.
- The Chicago of the Student.
- The Chicago of the Artist.
- The Chicago of the Visitor.
- The Chicago of the Opium.
- The Chicago of the Engineer.
- The Chicago of the Traveler.
- The Chicago of the Christian.
- The Chicago of the Educator.
- The Chicago of the Manufacturer.
- The Chicago of the Philanthropist.
- The Chicago of the Farmer.
- The Chicago of the Socialist.

Price 35 cents. For sale by all New Dealers. Trade supplied by the American News Company, New York, and Western News Company, Chicago.

F. F. BROWNE & CO.,

Publishers,

LAKE-SIDE BUILDING, Chicago.

The Commercial Review

- AND -

MANUFACTURERS' JOURNAL.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY BY

G. H. ADAMS & BRO., Publishers,
Cleveland, Ohio.This is the only exclusively COMMERCIAL
and TRADE JOURNAL in Northern Ohio, and it also devotes a great deal of space to

Manufacturing News,

Railroad Intelligence, Financial Facts, and everything of Interest to Business Men.

It is invaluable to

Merchants and Manufactur-

Who buy or sell in the Cleveland market;
and it is the BEST

Advertising Medium

For business men of all classes in this section of the State.

SUBSCRIPTION, $3.00 PER YEAR.

A. H. Butts & Co.'s New Publications.

The Essence of Religion.

GOD THE IMAGE OF MAN.

Man's Dependence upon Nature the Last and
Only Source of Religion.Translated from the German of LUDWIG FEUER-
BACH, by Professor A. Loos.
12mo. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cents.To see man trembling and exulting at the sight of his own shadow touched Feuerbach to the soul.
Feuerbach's Atheism was intended to restore man to himself. His Materialism was designed to prevent man's exulting in dreams. He denied the personal immortality of the soul—yes, he did,
and for the same reason that he denied the personal existence of God. He wished to preserve the integrity of existence, to make mortality immortal, to breathe the spirit of eternity with time, to compress all humanity within human limits,
and get the full benefit of this life while it lasted.
He was jealous of the future life; he begrudged
every drop of feeling that was spilled over the edge of the grave, and lost on the other side. This world was rich enough for him, and ought to be rich enough for anybody; and to see it neglected, misused, bartered, made him heart-sick. — Prophet's Horticultural Hall Lecture, Jan. 1873.

Materialism:

ITS ANCIENT HISTORY, ITS RECENT DE-
VELOPMENT, ITS PRACTICAL BENEFIT-
CENCE.By Dr. L. RUECHNER, author of "Force and Matter," "Man in Nature," &c., &c.
Translated from the author's manuscript by Professor A. Loos. 25 cts.The Childhood of the World;
A SIMPLE ACCOUNT OF MAN IN EARLY TIMES.

By EDWARD CLODD, F.R.S.

12mo. Paper, 50 cents. Cloth, 75 cents.

Extract from a letter from Professor Max Müller
to the author:—"I read your book with great pleasure. I have no doubt it will do good, and hope you will continue your work. Nothing gives me so much pleasure as having to unlearn in youth, manhood, and even old age, so many things which we were taught as children. A book like yours will prepare a far better soil in the child's mind, and I was delighted to have it read to my children."E. B. Tylor, F.R.S., in "Nature" says:—"This gentle little volume is a child's book as to shortness and cheapness, and simplicity of style, though the author reasonably hopes that older people will use it as a source of information not popularly accessible elsewhere, as to the life of Primitive Man and its relation to our own. . . . This book, if the time has come for the public to take it, will have a certain effect in the world. It is a mere compilation from the authors mentioned in the preface, but takes its own ground, and stands by and for itself. Mr. Clodd has brought out his philosophy of life, and used his best skill to bring it into the range of a child's view."

The Religion of Humanity.

By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

second Edition, with Fine Steel Portrait. 12mo.
Cloth. Price, post-paid, $1.50.Christianity and Materialism
Contrasted.

By E. F. UNDERWOOD.

handsome forty-five page pamphlet. 16 cents.

Mr. Underwood's best Lecture.

The Influence of Christianity on Civilization.Eighty-eight page pamphlet. Price 25 cents, address the publishers.

Asa K. Butts & Co.,

35 DEY STREET, N. Y.

LOUIS BLACH.
194 Jefferson Ave., Detroit, Michigan,
MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN
INVENTOR AND PROPRIETOR OF
Black's Patent Interchangeable Spectacles,
and Self-Attaching Spring Eye-Glasses. Importer of all kinds of Optical Goods. The best Spectacles fitted to the Eyesight so as to improve it.ARITHMETICAL
CARDS AND GAMES.
Agents Can Make Money.

SEND FOR A PACK.

With these Cards the drill of Mental Arithmetic is made mere pastime—hundreds many (including common card) games can be played. Teachers and pupils, and everybody should use them for instruction and amusement. AGENTS WANTED. One pack, with book of instructions, sent post-paid for fifty cents. Address P. H. BATESON, Drawer 90, Toledo, O.

The Sunday Morning Voice.

Issued every Sunday morning, and delivered by carriers to all parts of the city. Also sold at the news stands, and by newsboys.THE VOICE has a large circulation, and is regarded as the best advertising medium in Cleveland. Published by the

Voice Publishing Company,

55 and 57 FRANKFURT STREET,

Cleveland, Ohio.

The Influence of Christianity
on Civilization.

BY B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Popular fallacies concerning this question have had no more honest and fearless exposition than is given us in this handsome pamphlet. Mr. Underwood has treated this momentous theme with dignity, candor, and grace, yet with that vigor which has made him so popular on the platform among the Liberals of the West. Nor does he lack in erudition. He is profuse in quotations from standard histories, largely Christian, and shows conclusively but clearly from their own testimony what a drag upon civilization that stupendous fanaticism has been.In paper covers; single copies, 25 cts. Address the publisher,

ASA K. BUTTS, 35 Day Street, N. Y.

Real Estate Securities,

paying 8 to 10 per cent. interest, or

INVESTMENTS IN REAL ESTATE,
IN CHICAGO AND VICINITY,
if judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The oldReal Estate and Loan Agency
OF

ERNST PRUSSING,

145 Randolph St., - - CHICAGO.

(Established 1853)

Guarantees perfect title and ample security in all its Real Estate Loans.First-class securities always on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge.Real Estate Investments made on commission and on shares; taxes paid, &c.Orders of capitalists and real estate owners respectfully solicited.

HIGHER LAW.

A Romance.

By EDWARD MAITLAND, author of "The Pilgrim and Shrine." 12mo., cloth, $1.75."There is no novel, in short, which can be compared to it for its width of view, its cultivation, its poetry, and its deep human interest. . . . except 'Romola.'"—Westminster Review."Its careful study of character, and the ingenuity and independence of its speculations, will commend it to the admiration
even of those who differ from its conclusions
most gravely."—British Quarterly Review.

THE PILGRIM AND THE SHRINE.

By Edward Maitland. Third edition. 12mo.
cloth, $1.50. Postpaid on receipt of price."One of the wisest and most charming of books."—Westminster Review.

Address ASA K. BUTTS,

35 DEY STREET, NEW YORK.

For Plain and Fancy

JOB PRINTING,

- IN ENGLISH OR GERMAN,

Such as

Business Cards,
Pamphlets,
Constitutions,
Invitations,
Ball-Cards,
Hand-Bills,&c., &c., send your orders to the undersigned, where they will be filled promptly and at very low rates.

Waechter am Erie Printing Co.,

77 MICHIGAN STREET,

Cleveland, Ohio.

A NEW "SCHWARTZ" NOVEL.

Now Ready.

The Son of the Organ-Grinder.A Novel. By MME. MARIE SOPHIE SCHWARTZ, Authoress of "Gold and Name," "Guilt and Innocence," &c. Translated from the original Swedish by SELMA BONO and MAR-SIE A. BROWN. With a fine portrait and a sketch of Mme. Schwartz.12mo.; cloth, extra, black and gold, $1.50; paper, $1.00."Full of interesting incident, and really a study of character."—N. A. and U. S. Gazette, Phila."Likely to be even more popular than the author's previous books."—Literary World, Boston.

Also,

The Cross of Berny;

OR

IRENE'S LOVERS.

A Novel. Written jointly by MME. EMILE
DE GIRARDIN, MME. THEOPHILE GAUTIER, JULES SANDAUB, and MEYER. Translated from the last French edition.

12mo.; cloth, extra, $1.50; paper, $1.00.

"The most remarkable and powerful foreign novel translated since 'On the Heights.'"

Northern Lights.

Tales from the SWEDISH and FINNISH. Collected and translated by SELMA BONO and MARIE A. BROWN, the translators of the "Schwartz" novels. Handsomely illustrated with original Swedish designs redrawn by BENNELL.

12mo.; cloth, extra, black and gold, $1.50.

This story book is a new comer in every sense of the word; it is the first Swedish juvenile that ever visited America; and as such it should meet with a warm welcome, independently of its intrinsic merits, which are very great.

PORTER & COATES, Pub's,

PHILADELPHIA.

For sale by all Booksellers.

Important Scientific Works.

BY PROF. J. CLERK MAXWELL.

(Ready To-day.)

A Treatise on Electricity and Mag-
netism. By J. Clerk Maxwell, M. A., F. R. S.,
Professor of Experimental Physics in the
University of Cambridge. 2 vols.,
8vo. With illustrations. $12.The Depths of the Sea. An Account of the General Results of the Dredging Cruises
of H. M. S. Lightning and Porcupine during the Summers of 1865, '66 and '70. By
Prof. W. H. Thompson, F. R. S. Medium
8vo., with nearly 100 exquisite wood-cuts and 5 colored maps. $2."It is impossible to read its fascinating pages without feeling awakened within us a desire to emulate the author in his efforts to obtain a knowledge of life beneath the waters, of which most of us know nothing."—Journal of Applied Chemistry."It is splendidly illustrated and popularly written, with much humor, and the treatment, like the subject, is anything but dry;
it is a volume altogether worthy the interest
and importance of its subject."—Popular Science Monthly."The volume, which forms one of the most important contributions of the season to the science of physical geography, is brought out in a style of rare typographical elegance, and
is copiously illustrated with admirable drawings from Nature. It will fill a choice place
in the library, both for the interest of its contents and the beauty of its execution."—*N. Y.
Tribune.*"Nothing can be more complete than the account of the scientific results of these voyages, which are fully illustrated by wood-cuts
of the strange forms of life brought from the dark depths of the ocean, by charts of soundings and elaborate tables of the deep sea
temperature. The book is another example of that mingling of literary interest with scientific completeness and value, which is the true form of what is called the populariza-tion of science."—*Daily News (London).*Zoological Mythology; Or, The Legends
of Animals. By Angelo de Gubernatis,
Professor of Sanscrit and Comparative Literature at Florence. 2 vols., 8vo., cloth, $3.The Scientific Bases of Faith. By Joseph John Murphy, author of "Habit and Intelligence." 8vo., cloth, $5.Old-Fashioned Ethics and Common-Sense Metaphysics, with Some of their Applications. By William Thomas Thornton, author of "A Treatise on Labor." 8vo., cloth, $5.50.

New Book by Amedee Guillemin.

The Forces of Nature. A Popular Inroduction to the Study of Physical Phenomena. By Amedee Guillemin. Translated from the French by Mrs. Norman Lockyer, and edited, with Notes and Additions,
by J. Norman Lockyer, F. R. S. Imperial
8vo., with 11 colored plates and 400 wood engravings, cloth, $12.50. [Now ready.]"This book is a luxurious introduction to the study of the physical sciences. M. Guillemin has found an excellent translator in
Mrs. Norman Lockyer, while the editorship of Mr. Norman Lockyer, with his notes and additions, are guarantees not only of scientific accuracy but of the completeness and intensity of the information."—Daily News (London).

Address ASA K. BUTTS, 35 Day Street, N. Y.

Standard Liberal Works.

For sale by A. K. BUTTS, 35 DEY STREET,
NEW YORK.THE RIGHT OF MARRIED WOMEN TO
HOLD PROPERTY. Judge Hertell's argument in the House of Assembly of the
State of New York, in the session of 1867,
in support of the bill to restore to married women "The Right of Property." Republished by order of the will of Mrs. Barbara Amelia Hertell, 1867. Price, 20 cents.WAT TYLER; a Dramatic Poem in three acts. By Robert Southey, Esq. Price, 30 cents.THE DIEGESIS; being a Discovery of the Origin, Evidences, and Early History of Christianity, never yet before or elsewhere
so fully and faithfully set forth. By Rev.
Robert Taylor. This work was written by
Mr. Taylor while serving a term in Oakham (Eng.) Jail, where he was imprisoned for blasphemy. It contains 440 pages, octavo,
and is considered unanswerable as to arguments or facts. Price, $2.00; postage, 25
cents.THE DEVIL'S PULPIT—By Rev. Robert
Taylor—with a sketch of the Author's Life
—containing Sermons on the following subjects:—The Star of Bethlehem, John
the Baptist, Raising the Devil, The Unjust
Judge, Virgo Paritura, St. Peter, Judas
Iscaariot Vindicated, St. Thomas, St. James,
and St. John—the Sons of Thunder, The
Crucifixion of Christ, the Cup of Salvation,
Lectures on Free Masonry, The Holy Ghost, St. Philip, St. Matthew, The Redeemer. Price, $2.00; postage 20 cents.ASTRO-THEOLOGICAL LECTURES—By Rev. Robert Taylor, containing the following Lectures:—Belief not the Safe Side,
The Resurrection of Lazarus, the Unjust
Steward, The Devil, The Rich Man and
Lazarus, The Day of Temptation in the Wilderness, Ahab, or the Lying Spirit, The Fall of Man, Noah, Abraham, Sarah, Mel-
chisedec, The Lord, Moses, The Twelve
Patriarchs, Who is the Lord? Exodus,
Aaron, Miriam. Price, $2.00; postage, 20
cents.THE SYNTAGMA—By Rev. Robert Taylor,
author of the "Diegesis," "Devil's Pulpit,"
"Astro-Theological Sermons," etc. Price,
including postage, $1.00.THE INFIDEL'S OR INQUIRER'S TEXT-BOOK. Being the substance of 13 Lectures
on the Bible, by Robert Cooper. Price
$1.50; postage, 15 cents.Half Hour Recreations in Popular Science.

EDITED BY DANA ESTES.

The growing demand in this country for Books on popular science encourages the editor and publishers to issue this series of papers, compiled from the works of the most popular scientific writers.

25c per Part; $2.50 for 12 consecutive Parts.

No. 1. Strange Discoveries Respecting the Aurora and Recent Solar Researches. By Richard A. Proctor, F. R.
A. S.No. 2. The Cranial Affinities of Man and the Ape. By Prof. Rudolph Vir-
chow, of Berlin, author of "Cellular Pathology." Fully illustrated.No. 3. Spectrum Analysis Explained, and its Uses to Science Illustrated. With a colored plate and several wood cuts.No. 4. Spectrum Analysis Discoveries, showing its Application in Microscopical
Research and to Discoveries of the Physical Constitution and Movements of the Heavenly Bodies. From the works of Schellen,
Young, Roscoe, Lockyer, Huggins and others.No. 5. Nebulae, Meteoric Showers, and Comets.No. 6. Unconscious Action of the Brain and Epidemic Delusions. By
Dr. Carpenter, author of "The Microscope
and its Revelations," "Human Physiology,"
&c.No. 7. The Geology of the Stars. By
Prof. A. Winchell, of the University of Michigan, author of "Sketches of Creation."The Unity of Natural Phenomena.

An Introduction to the Study of

THE FORCES OF NATURE.

Being a popular explanation of the latest discoveries in the domain of Natural Science, including the "Correlation of Forces,"
"Mode of Motion," "Force of Gravity," and "Mutual Controversibility of the Forces of Nature."

From the French of Emile Salgey.

WITH NOTES AND AN INTRODUCTION

BY PROF. T. F. MOSES,
OF URBANA UNIVERSITY.

1 vol., crown, 8vo. $1.50.

"In this charming treatise, M. Emile Salgey gives a very lucid account of the latest mode
of speculating on the Physical Facts of the Universe. It is a mode which may be described as bringing all the resources of modern science to the proof of the fact that the human mind is incapable of any intelligible conception of physical facts which does not resolve itself into matter and motion. There is in fact but one science under many names,
and that science is mechanics. Atoms, and
the laws which regulate their movements—
this is all our material universe."—*Blackwood's Magazine.*The above sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

ASA K. BUTTS & CO., 35 Day Street,

New York.

SEPTEMBER 30th

WE PRINTED A LARGE EDITION OF A

LECTURE ON

BUDDHIST NIHILISM,

BY

F. MAX MUELLER, M. A.,

Professor of Comparative Philology in the University of Oxford; Member of the French Institute, etc.

DELIVERED BEFORE THE GENERAL MEETING OF THE Association of German Philologists, AT KIEL, 28th SEPTEMBER, 1869.

Translated from the German.

Price 10 cents
(The English Edition sells in New York at 50 cents.)

ASA K. BUTTS & CO.,

38 DEY STREET, NEW YORK.

Buechner, Dr. L. Man: in the Past, Present, and Future. A Popular Account of the results of recent scientific Research as regards the Origin, Position, and Prospects of the Human Race. Translated by W. S. Dallas, F.L.S. Cloth. 12mo. $3.

CONTENTS: INTRODUCTION--WHENCE DO WE COME? The Antiquity and Original State of the Human Race, and its development from a barbarous beginning.--WHAT ARE WE?--Present Position of Man in Nature, his developmental history and production from the egg cell.--Origin and Genealogy of the Human Race.--WHERE ARE WE GOING?--Future of Man and of the Human Race.--Government.--Nationalities.--Society.--Capital.--Labor and Laborers.--The Family.--Education.--Woman.--Marriage.--Morals.--Religion.--Philosophy.

APPENDIX--Scientific Evidence, containing Notes, Explanations, and additions of the text.

"This work, from its bold premises, and sweeping conclusions, will certainly be regarded as startling, in its defence of received opinions."--Liverpool Advertiser."Whatever may be one's opinion as to the extreme views of the author, no one can read this book without feeling that he is in the presence of a man of fine intellect and of wide culture."--Daily Bristol Times."The important questions--Whence do we come? What are we? and Where are we going?--are discussed by the author, and it is not the least of the merits of his work that to each of these questions a distinct and intelligible, if not wholly convincing, answer is given."--Scotsman."The most conspicuous merits of this volume are its terseness and its freedom from unpleasant dogmatism. It states with fairness the arguments which have been adduced in opposition to those which it supports."--Illustrated Review."This author's views have all the force and lucidity which flow from the entire consistency and simplicity."--Medical Times and Gazette."We approve of the effort to introduce into our language so fearless and outspoken and honest a labor as that which Dr. Buechner has performed. The book contains nothing that will be new to those who have followed minutely anthropological science for the past ten years, though it certainly contains, in a pithy and masterly style, everything that has been achieved by the English and foreign savants in that space of time; but to the general reader it offers a masterly summary of the facts, reflections, and ultimate conclusions that have been put forward in regard to Man's origin."--Popular Science Review."Dr. Buechner has the gift of easy exposition. His generalities are put with praiseworthy neatness; his well-selected examples clinch them hard, and just in the right place."--Nature."He is eminently judicial, weighing carefully and fairly the arguments for and against, and delivering judgment after independent investigation."--Public Opinion.

NOW IN PRESS OF

A. K. BUTTS & CO.

"DOMESTIC"

PAPER

FASHIONS. CATALOGUE.

"DOMESTIC" SEWING MACHINE COMPANY, New York.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO., Bankers, LEROY, MINNESOTA.

Money loaned on short time, or for a term of years, on unincumbered improved farms, at 12 per cent. per annum, interest net. Interest payable annually. All expenses for abstract of title and recording mortgage paid by borrower. We collect and remit to any part of the United States free of charge.

REFERENCES.--First National Bank, McGregor, Iowa; Gilchrist & Co., McGregor, Iowa; First National Bank, Austin, Minnesota; City National Bank, Chicago, Illinois; Allen, Stevens & Co., New York City.

"PRACTICAL IDEAS." To inspire a lively taste for rural life among the young people of the cities and villages, and to encourage a more rational and healthful view of their opportunities among those on the farms, is one of the objects of the YOUNG FOLKS' RURAL. Parents should subscribe for it for their children. It is an entirely "new idea," and different from any other paper or periodical in style and character. Sixteen pages and sixty-four columns--THE LARGEST PAPER IN THE WEST. $1.50 per year; single numbers, 15 cents. Address

H. N. F. LEWIS, Publisher, CHICAGO.

THE BEST NEW SINGING BOOKS.

Choice Trios. For High Schools and Seminars. By W. S. Tilden. Just out. $1.00

River of Life. For Sabbath Schools. By Perkins, Bentley, and forty other composers. 35c

Cheerful Voices. For Common Schools. By L. O. Emerson. 50c

Hour of Singing. For High Schools. By Emerson and Tilden. $1.00

Standard. For Choirs, Conventions, &c. By Emerson and Palmer. $1.50

Devotional Chimes. For Social Meetings. By Asa Hull. 75c

Musical Treasure. For the Parlor. (Vocal and Instrumental.) $2.50

Seven admirably constructed books, whose sales are to be numbered by the hundred thousand, so perfectly is each fitted to the popular taste.

Either book sent, post-paid, for the retail price.

Oliver Ditson & Co.,

BOSTON.

Charles H. Ditson & Co.,

711 Broadway, New York.

HIS MARRIAGE VOW.

BY MRS. CAROLINE FAIRFIELD CORBIN,

AUTHOR OF

"Rebecca; or, A Woman's Secret."

One handsome 16mo. Volume. Price $1.50.

This story, as indicated by the title, is a presentation of certain phases of the questions now agitating many minds, concerning the prerogatives and limitations of love. It does not claim to treat the subject exhaustively or in detail, but simply to illustrate certain principles which must in the end have great weight in deciding the question of the perpetuity of the marriage relation.

Apart from this subject, or rather as a continuation of it, the claims of a rational Christianity, as founded upon faith and love, and as opposed to the Materialism of science and reason, are presented with force and clearness.

The bearing of modern spiritual phenomena upon the contest between faith and reason is also discussed.

The story has been pronounced by good critics to be one of the most powerful and interesting ever issued from the American press. The characters are well delineated, and the moral tone pure and elevating.

For sale by

ASA K. BUTTS & CO.,

38 DEY STREET, NEW YORK.

Prizes for Compositions.

Every three or four months the publisher of the YOUNG FOLKS' RURAL offers a batch of CASH PRIZES for best compositions--stories, sketches, essays, letters, poems, etc., for which all under 21 years can compete. Full particulars given each month. Single numbers 15 cents, or $1.50 a year for twelve numbers.

H. N. F. LEWIS, Publisher, CHICAGO.

TWO

Lovely Landscape Chromos.

A pair of exquisite little landscape chromos of most lovely Western American scenery, "Morning on the Mississippi," and "Sunset on the Sierras," are being given to the subscribers of the YOUNG FOLKS' RURAL. They are perfect copies of paintings by straight, and are mounted and varnished without extra charge, and sent by first mail, postage paid, to every subscriber. The YOUNG FOLKS' RURAL is the "largest and handsomest paper for young people published," and already has over 100,000 readers. $1.50 per year. (In clubs of four and upwards only $1 per year.) Splendid premiums for making up clubs. Single numbers 15 cents, or free to those who wish to form clubs. Address

H. N. F. LEWIS, Publisher, CHICAGO.

All Interested in the Progress of Science Should Read

NATURE,

A Weekly Illustrated Journal of Science.

The attention of all interested in the general progress of knowledge is earnestly invited to this Journal, which has now become the accredited organ of the leading scientific men, in communicating their views to each other and to the public.

One of the leading objects of this periodical is to awaken in the public mind a more lively interest in science. With this end in view, it provides original articles and reviews, written by scientific men of the highest distinction in their various departments, expounding the Grand Results of Scientific Research, discussing the most recent scientific discoveries, and pointing out the bearing of science upon civilization and progress, and its claims to more general recognition, as well as to a higher place in the educational system of the country.

There will also be found in Nature complete abstracts of all important papers communicated to British, American, and Continental Scientific Societies and Periodicals, and Reports of the Meetings of Scientific Bodies.Among the contributors to Nature will be found the names of almost every man of note in the various departments of scientific inquiry in England, America, and the Continent of Europe.As questions of science compass all limits of nationality, and are of universal interest, a periodical devoted to them may fitly appeal to the intelligent classes in all countries where its language is read. The proprietors of Nature will aim so to conduct it that it shall bear a common claim upon all English-speaking peoples.Nature is published in London; it asks, as it will be found to deserve, the liberal patronage of the thinking classes of the United States. Its articles are brief and condensed, and are thus suited to the circumstances of an active and busy people who have little time to read extended and elaborate treatises.Every intelligent man is now expected to know something of what is going on in the scientific world; the columns of Nature will give a summary of it, varied, compressed, and authentic.

Yearly Subscription, $5. Single Numbers, price 12 cents. Sent for two months, as a trial subscription, on receipt of 75 cents.

THE PRACTITIONER.

A Monthly Journal of Therapeutics.

Edited by

FRANCIS N. ANSTIE, M.D., F.R.C.P.

"To hard-worked medical men, in general country practice, with little time for reading, and few opportunities for professional conversation, such a journal as this, bringing every month the latest ideas in medical practice and the latest records of important cases, ought to be invaluable."--London Guardian.

Yearly Subscription, $4. Single numbers 40 cents. Sent two months as a trial subscription, on receipt of 80 cents.

Address

A. K. BUTTS & CO.,

38 DEY STREET, NEW YORK.

A GREAT OFFER.

Horace Waters & Son, 421 Broadway, New York, will dispose of 100 Pianos and Organs of first-class makers, including WATERS, cash, and balance in small monthly payments. New 7-Octave first-class Pianos, all modern improvements, for $275 cash. Organs, $35 to $75. Double-Reed Organs, $100; 4-stop, $110; 8-stop, $125 and upwards.

AGENTS WANTED.

LADIES!

Eureka Machine Twist,

50 and 100 Yard Spools,

AND THE

Eureka Button-Hole Twist,

10 Yard Spools,

ARE THE BEST IN USE.

For Sale at all Trimming Stores.

IRON IN THE BLOOD.

PERUVIAN SYRUP,

AS

IRON TONIC.

THE PERUVIAN SYRUP Vitalizes and Enriches the Blood, Tones up the System, Builds up the Broken-down, Cures Female Complaints, Dropsy, Debility, Humors, Dyspepsia, &c.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy from weak, sickly, suffering creatures, to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

Caution.--Be sure you get the right article. See that "Peruvian Syrup" is blown in the glass. Pamphlets free. Send for one. RETH W. FOWLE & SONS, Proprietors, Boston, Mass. For sale by druggists generally.

SOMETHING NEW.

LIFE INSURANCE

ON THE

SAME BASIS AS FIRE INSURANCE.

PAY FOR IT AS YOU GET IT.

NO "NOTES," "DIVIDENDS," "RESERVES," OR OTHER DEVICES

to collect more money than is actually required to secure all the benefits of Life Insurance.

On this plan the National Life Insurance Co. of Chicago has actually paid the heirs of deceased members $129,000, at a cost to them of only $3,900.10. Had those persons been insured on the old high-rate plan, their heirs would have received only $66,746.12.

INVESTIGATE, AND SAVE MONEY BY INSURING

ON THIS PLAN, AND

MAKE MONEY

by securing an agency for it. Address, NATIONAL LIFE INSURANCE CO., 78 and 80 Van Buren St., Chicago.

THE LIBERAL CHRISTIAN

FOR 1873,

HENRY W. BELLOWB, EDITOR,

Will endeavor, not only to maintain its present reputation as

ONE OF THE BEST WEEKLY JOURNALS OF

Religion, Literature, Science, and Art

Now published in this country, but to fulfill, more completely than ever before, its part of the work of supplying the American people with the

Best Thought on the Highest and Most Vital Themes

Of both general and particular interest, in all departments of human life. To this end, special arrangements have been entered into with able writers and correspondents to keep the columns of The Liberal Christian supplied, during the year 1873, with a pleasant variety of good articles and letters on the most stirring topics of the day.

The several departments of the paper--Fellowship of the Spirit, Our Contributions, Signs of the Times; Original and Selected Articles; Our Literary Record; Editorial; The Week's News--Ecclesiastical, Political, and General; Correspondence; Our Boys and Girls; Our Scientific Record; The Five Arts--will each receive the special care of the gentlemen and ladies under whose charge they have been placed; and no effort will be spared to provide A WEEKLY FAMILY JOURNAL Worthy of the Patronage of American Homes, and of the Enlightened Nineteenth Century.

Price of Subscription, $3 per Annum, Payable in Advance.

Upon application by letter, specimen copies will always be sent free.

Jos. N. Hallock, Publisher,

P. O. Box 109.

214 Broadway, New York City.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 4.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1873.

WHOLE No. 199.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for sectarian educational and charitable institutions shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, it is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —:

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

So far as I am concerned, the above is the platform of THE INDEX. I believe in it without reserve; I believe that it will yet be accepted universally by the American people, as the only platform consistent with religious liberty. A Liberal League ought to be formed to carry out its principles wherever half a dozen earnest and resolute Liberals can be got together. Being convinced that the movement to secure compliance with these just "Demands" must surely, even if slowly, spread, I hope to make THE INDEX a means of furthering it; and I ask the assistance and active co-operation of every man and every woman who believes in it. Multiply Liberal Leagues everywhere, and report promptly the names of their Presidents and Secretaries. Intolerance and bigotry will tremble in proportion as that list grows. If freedom, justice, and reason are right, let their organized voice be heard like the sound of many waters.

FRANCIS E. ABBIOT, Editor,
BOSTON, Sept. 1, 1873.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
BOSTON, MASS.—J. S. Rogers, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
VINELAND, N. J.—L. Bristol, President; E. G. Blaisdell, Secretary.
JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
BREMEN, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

BY A. W. S.

JOSEPH ARCH, the English labor reformer, is in this country, and will soon visit Boston.

THE ASTOR LIBRARY, in New York, contains nearly one hundred and fifty thousand volumes.

THE Independent asks the question, "Can a minister be an honest man?" Upon due reflection, we should say that he might, if he would try hard.

SOME OF KATE FIELD's friends told her that they would rather "see her dead" than have her take to lecturing. Miss Field, however, preferred to lecture.

THE Morning Star (Baptist) says: "As between the Christian religion and Darwinism, no sensible mind can hesitate which to indorse." No, we should think not.

A JEWISH HOSPITAL has recently been dedicated in Philadelphia. Its doors are "to be open to the sick, regardless of creed, race, or color." Long may it wave!

CHARLES BRADLAUGH lectures in Boston to-morrow evening. The Golden Age says he is "now acknowledged to be the most powerful platform-orator in England."

A PRETTY POEM, lately published, tells how a little girl, in a Scotch kirk, weary of the minister's long praying, stepped softly to his side and said: "Oh, sir, please say, Amen."

DE QUINCEY says that German and Greek are the two richest of human languages. We remember that Gen. Scott, when running for the Presidency, thought very highly of "the rich Irish brogue."

THE FOURTH PLANK in the Chicago Spiritualist Convention platform reads thus: "That the ultimate value of Spiritualism consists in its capacity to better the condition of individuals and the race." Good.

REV. DR. TALMAGE has, in New York, a "Free College for training Christian men and women." We suppose that means that men and women are free not to go as well as to go to it. We certainly hope so.

THE Independent says: "The practical difference between pantheism and atheism is one that we confess ourselves unable to appreciate." Can the Independent appreciate the difference between everything and nothing?

THE Christian Union says: "It is certain that nearly all heathen religions are bottomed on the fear of God." Why should any Christian think less of them for that? The Christian's Bible says: "The fear of God is the beginning of wisdom."

CHARLES BRADLAUGH says: "I claim the right to use force to defend right; but I utterly repudiate force as an initiative in any political or social movement in attacking wrong, in any country where parliamentary rule prevails." This seems to us good doctrine for a reformer to hold.

THE Christian Union speaks of "an accident which befel a certain eminent clergyman, in preaching, the other day." It says "his teeth dropped out in the middle of a severe attack on the looseness of Mr. Beecher's theology." Mr. Beecher ought to know better than to do such things.

THE NEW YORK Post says that Postmaster Filley, of St. Louis, has been "forgiven," and "will still retain his office." This is the official who would make his poor clerks pay the expenses of his magnificent entertainment of President Grant; and this, also, is the President who is in favor of civil service reform!

IN NINETEEN STATES of this Union—New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, District of Columbia, South Carolina, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, and Kansas—marriages between whites and blacks are legal.

MR. SUMNER's decision to enter the lecture field this season, it seems, was based upon the professional advice of his physician—Dr. Brown-Séquard. We trust that his renewed strength may continue unabated for many years. It is the almost single glory of our American politics, that such a man stands in their midst faithful, pure, and firm.

THE UNITARIANS are rejoicing over a recent accession to their ranks of one Rev. Mr. Savage from an Evangelical denomination. We hope our Unitarian friends will not be too much elated; if Mr. Savage is a really progressive man, his present halt to them may be changed to a future farewell. They may be to him only a half-way house on his way to Free Religion.

THE Catholic Review says: "We have ourselves, at present, a very decided conviction that images of our Lord and of his Mother have moved their eyes—'winked'—on various occasions and in a distinctly miraculous manner. We have believed all this, and more, on what we consider good evidence." This astonishing credulity causes us also to "wink," and rub our eyes, and look again, to see if we have read the Review correctly. But we surely have!

A CORRESPONDENT to the Springfield Republican expresses great solicitude in regard to the religious spirit at New Haven, and especially in Yale College. It fears that spirit is gradually dying out there, evidence of it appearing in the fact that the college students do not willingly submit to the rule of daily prayers and Sunday worship, and that the laboring classes of New Haven almost entirely neglect to go to church. The day of compulsory religion has gone by. If we are to have any, hereafter, it must be natural and voluntary.

LADY JULIET POLLOCK, in the Contemporary Review, confesses and deplors the fact that the rising generation of English youth are neglecting to read Shakespeare. She says that he is a "dead classic" to them, "well placed on the bookshelf and allowed to rest there." Wordsworth, Pope, Swift, Gray, Goldsmith, and Campbell, she says, "are not much better remembered." America, she thinks, improves upon this. "It is there," she remarks, "that our own classics are prized and revered as worthy models." We are very glad if this last be true.

A NICOLA, a Christian philosopher of Italy, says: "There is not a dogma of Christianity more useful or true than this one of eternal punishment. Weaken faith in it, and you will soon see the consequences." We think, indeed, that the Church misuses it in allowing the literal old hell to subside. It has ever been its most effective means for the "conversion of sinners;" and if it would continue to maintain its authority over ignorant minds, it must not spare this element of terrorism, but on every possible occasion use it to the best advantage. The New York Methodist minister was right, when he said that the reason why Methodism did not advance its borders more was because its preachers "had left hell out of their sermons." If you drop "hell," then also drop every sort of religion but natural religion.

DR. BELLOWES preached the sermon at the recent dedication of a new church for the Second Hawes Congregational Society, in South Boston. In that sermon we find him reported as saying: "The Unitarian must leave open many questions that other Christians have peremptorily closed up; and must have oftentimes the courage to say, 'I don't know.'" This is certainly a very frank and truly liberal statement. But we are puzzled to understand what those things are which the Unitarians "don't know." We believe that they claim to "know" that there is a personal God, that man is immortal, and that Christianity is the divine religion. Yet all these are regarded by rationalists as "open questions." Will the doctor please to be even more explicit, and tell us what those things are which Unitarians really "don't know?"

[FOR THE INDEX.]

We See as We Are.

BY WILLIAM C. GANNETT.

"Blessed are your eyes, for they see," said Jesus, "and your ears, for they hear."—almost as if it were strange that eyes should see and ears hear! It is very strange if they do not see, do not hear,—is rather our first thought. But then how is it that two pairs of eyes look at the same thing and see such very different things? Where there is but one fact, how is it that after asking a dozen observers, What is that fact? you will not then have found out the whole of it,—if eyes see?

The boy and the robin are both up in the cherry-tree. The cherries are red and ripe for both. The robin pecks away, and only thinks how good they are, I suppose. The boy thinks that, too; but through his head there flashes a memory of the leafless tree of winter, of the white blossom that stayed but a week and then fluttered away, of the hard, green berries that were left and slowly grew into the crimson, juicy fruit; and, with the memory, a wonder how it all came to be. How differently the two creatures look at the same fact!

That boy looks with his mother at the sky of night, where the stars twinkle for both. The boy wonders what they are, and how they got there, "up above the world so high." The mother wonders, too, but tells him a dim story of great globes and suns peopling the space, as the cherries peopled his tree. What a different thing the same night-sky means for her!

There was a man, some eighteen centuries ago, going about the Galilee roads and talking of his Father, and a kingdom of heaven soon to come upon the earth. And a few men and women looked at him and said, even they half-doubtingly, Thou art our Jewish Christ! While ninety-nine out of every hundred who saw and heard him thought, A new prophet possibly! A travelling Rabbi! A wine-bibber! A friend of sinners! A blasphemer! A man demented with a devil! It was a question of fact; and the same look on the face, and the same tone in the words, and the same tenderness and wrath of manner were before their eyes to judge by,—and what was the fact?

Here is a universe around us! And all of us, born into it, born a part of it, have to accept it as a fact. But what is this fact we accept? God, say some. Matter and force, say some. Matter, force, and a mystery, say others. Or suppose our eyes all see the "God"—ask a little farther and we soon find out that, though we all agree that God is one, yet we are looking at very different Gods indeed.

We begin to believe Jesus—Blessed are the eyes that see, and the ears that hear.

Now the explanation is simple enough, but, like most things that we call simple, marvellously rich in suggestion. "The deep secret is the open secret." You can put it in five words that a child, just beginning, could spell,—We see as we are.

TWO TRUTHS HINTED.

We see as we are. The words dimly hint two great truths. One is that it takes more than eyes, then, to make vision. Which, of course, is true. Every new impression joins on to the vast net-work of previous impressions, interprets itself by them, and means much or means little to us according to their amount. The difference between the truth and the man is hardly in the better organ (the hawk high up above the hill-top sights the mouse in the meadow-grass; the insect often has a hundred lenses to our one)—is not in the better organ, but rather lies in this,—how much past consciousness has each? We see, hear, feel, think, will nothing without using all we are up to that moment; not only the full store of organized consciousness that we have acquired ourselves, but also that which our parents and their ancestors have gathered in the family blood through centuries, and handed down to us, the heirs of all these ages of development. That is what we use every time we simply "see" and "hear." Is it not a great suggestion?

And the second truth hidden in the five short words is that, since there is thus no limit to our growth of eye-sight, there is more in a thing than we ever see at any given time. Every fact in the universe is a little universe of fact in itself, a miracle that we see farther and farther into, only to reach the feeling how little we know about it. A pebble—what more common? Why, that pebble is older than Adam! Think what it could tell you, if you had ears to hear the stones cry out. A snowflake,—what more trifling? Trifling! We might as well call the planet itself trifling. If you could tell me all about that snowflake, you would have "found out" God,—that is all! And so about any other seeming insignificance. It is often a great comfort when beset with religious doubts to remember this, that we never are seeing to the bottom of a truth, and that, meanwhile—

Our faiths are foolish by falling below,
Not coming above, what God will show;
His commonest thing holds a wonder vast,
To whose beauty our eyes have never past,
God's fact, in the present, or in the to-be,
Outlines the best that we think we see!

Are not the short syllables, "We see as we are," becoming full of meaning? In everything we look at, there is more than any one has yet looked at; and the depth of each one's present insight depends on how much past insight he possesses already—that is, on how much he is already. Simple as the five words sound, I feel for one as if I could embrace but a very little of their vast meaning, and can phrase that little imperfectly. Let us try to see into it by the clearer way of illustration.

ILLUSTRATIONS: I. IN NATURE.

First, in Nature, the outward universe, we see what we are,—that is, what we see is in proportion to our previous knowledge.

Go with an artist friend into the fields. He sees lights in the grass, tints in the clouds, shadows on the mountain, which your eye will hardly catch even when pointed out. "Mr. Turner," said a friend one day to him, "Mr. Turner, I never see in Nature the glows and the colors you put into your pictures." "Ah! don't you wish you could, though?" was the painter's answer. Read one of the great poems with a poet friend. His face will flush, his voice will tremble, while you are cold and even-toned. As he pauses over this and that passage, you will wonder how you passed its beauty by so unconsciously. Go to Europe: what you bring back in your memory and your note-book will be exactly proportioned to the knowledge of history, and art, and men, you carry with you. Humboldt spent five years in America, and it took twelve quartos, and sixteen folios, and half a dozen helpers, and many years, to put on record what he saw. Most men find little new in a walk in the woods, or a mountain tramp. Thoreau would sight out new facts, as one picks up flowers. "He had a whim of extolling his own town and neighborhood as the most favored centre on the planet for natural observation. 'I think nothing is to be hoped from you,' he writes, 'if this bit of mould under your feet is sweeter to you than any other in this world, or in any world.' He found the red snow in one of his walks, and expected to find the Victoria Regia, and returned Kane's Arctic Voyage to a friend from whom he had borrowed it, with the remark that 'most of the phenomena noted there might be observed in Concord.'" And that same Humboldt walked up Vesuvius with two of his friends one day, and the world grew richer in knowledge from that single excursion. A scratch on a rock in a Maine blueberry pasture will tell Agassiz that an iceberg passed that way ages ago, or that glaciers once lay there and ground their course southward. To you and me it is a scratch on a rock. A bit of chalk in Huxley's hands will bring up facts, not legends, of the oozy bed on which the Atlantic cable rests, and report how life went on at the time the Dover Cliffs were formed. The sunbeam has just been unravelled, and its fine lines are found to have been telling men for ages, and in a voice as multitudinous as light itself, the secret structure of the sun; but only to-day has the world grown wise enough to begin to understand the utterance. The whole realm of Nature, as it opens itself to modern science, reiterates with every new discovery the grand, inspiring, simple law—men see in proportion to what men are; every past sight counts into new visions.

Those sudden glimpses of great truths, those marvels of insight at whose mystery the world catches breath, exemplify, they do not contravene, the law. We call them inspiration, genius, revelation. Whatever it be, it is only a new sight proportioned to the past seeing. "The great mind sees the idea in the fact; the little mind, only the fact." Only a man like Newton detects a law of gravitation in the fall of a ripe apple from its bough. Only a Goethe picks up a deer's skull in the woods and exclaims, "These parts are but the spinal vertebrae modified!" Mayer draws blood from a sick man's arm in some tropical country, and notices that the blood is of a brighter red than he has been wont to see up North. To Mayer, but not to the myriad doctors who had used their lancet before, it was hint sufficient to put him on the track of the correlation of forces, the great scientific consummation thus far of the century. Darwin is struck by certain facts in the distribution of South American plants, and he follows out this simple lead to his doctrine of the origin of species. Give Cuvier a tooth or a bone of an animal whose race ran out thousands of years ago, and sometimes he could reconstruct its figure, and the rocky archives of its burial-place would prove his vision right! And Agassiz (the story, I believe, is strictly true) thrice dreamed his way into the stone and saw the creature lying there with the structure which his hammer afterwards uncovered. Cuvier and Agassiz, Darwin and Mayer, could do these things, but not the common seers of science; because each man can only see in proportion to what he is and has already. The better mind, the deeper insight; the greater fund of knowledge already acquired, the greater fund of knowledge vouchsafed.

II. IN MAN.

Let us turn from Nature to Man. Here we come upon a ground common to all, to readers and those who have no time or no taste for reading, to men of science and those, like most of us, who can only swallow the crumbs that fall from their table, and wonder what the loaf must be that can make such rare crumbs. We see in men what we are,—that is, we see in them those possibilities of nobleness and ignobleness which we have caught sight of in our own inward experience. "If the fool sit beside the wise man all his life, he will perceive the taste of the law as little as the spoon the soup; but if one who is intelligent sit beside the wise man for a single moment, he will as quickly taste the law as the tongue tastes the soup"—so runs a Buddhist maxim which does not lose its sense in coming round the world. The sinner may believe in sainthood, but his saint will be very different from the saint's saint. In turn, it may be doubted whether any one "born saint" can truly realize what the strong temptations are that beset some of us, and what the moral weakness is.

Oppressions linger and crimes abound among us,—still, look around and then look back to see how the spirit of society towards its poorer members and lower classes and more degraded races is altering for the better. The change will be a cause, but it must first be the consequence, of a finer inward moral tone. We see more because we are more. The prison has long been the den where the least agreeable could be herded out of sight; for those whose fangs proved most injurious nothing better than killing could be devised. It is not the discovery of this century that our criminals are men and women with genius of angels in them, that souls and consciences go behind the barred gates and into the striped clothes; but it is only after all these centuries of growth that our eyes have come to see the fact plainly, and the governments begin to think of their prisons as reform-schools. So with the treatment of the insane, and those maimed from their birth in mind. We used to see in them beings past the touch of reasonable and kind address. To-day we see miracles wrought by human sympathy and human patience. The nation's conscience at last begins to stir—stir faintly—in our relations with the Indian. The savagery of war grows more horrid in the light of Healing Commissions and Peace Tribunals. The word "slavery" has become an abomination in people's eyes. Garrison's motto no longer seems too strong,—"A covenant with death and an agreement with hell," John Brown "wins the world through shame." The readjustment of the laborer's relation to capital is the great question at issue now, no doubt will be the great question of the next few hundred years; for it is but the modern form in which the mediæval, or rather the chronic, problem of popular emancipation confronts the civilization of the day. But the fact that so many of the best minds are already engaged on the problem, in full sympathy with the laborer, shows how different our vision is of what are called the lower classes from that which has hitherto prevailed. Now, even when a prophet like Carlyle speaks slightly of the masses,—"England is twenty-seven millions, mostly fools,"—and especially when he writes of us, "America is eighteen million bores," we only laugh and pity the seer. When Emerson speaks of the "guano-races" of mankind, we remember his "Boston Hymn" and the other noble utterances, and that his phrase is but the terse way of stating half a truth. Never before, I suppose, has there been such a wide-spread hopefulness for mankind's future on the earth or off the earth, and never so much charity of heart and helping of hand to those men and classes and races who seem the farthest down among their brothers.

"Power to become sons of God!"—what grander text than that from John's mystic explanation of the Divine light that has transformed the world from chaos to order, and men from brutishness to glory! "Power to become sons of God!"—it is the great cry ringing through all the earnest struggles upward of the oppressed, and the great inspiration which nerves every man to do his utmost by and for and with a poorer friend. We see as we are. Do men appeal to us in this way as sons of God, or beings with power in them to become such? Are the streets full of souls to us, or only of bodies more or less clean, more or less agreeable, more or less fashionably clothed? A look of scorn in my eyes, a feeling of indifference or contempt in my heart, at any ignorance or shame I might see in a shanty or a street-car would convict me to myself of being something like what I saw. If I were the son of God, I should see the sonship in all others. How is it with the children and the sick and the feeble-minded in our homes? What do we see in them? The slowness and the bother and the ill-temper and the weak will? If that be all, then alas for us! We see what we are. And he who sees no more reveals how little more there is within himself. The best man thinks the best of others. None think so much of you as God. It must be so; and is not that encouraging! Perhaps the secret of Jesus' power with the common people was that of many another of their best teachers,—he saw more in them than less pure eyes saw. Through the degradation and the ignorance and the sin the pure eye pierces to the live soul deep within, the slumbering embryo in which humanity and civilization and eternal life lie folded up. And if ever we feel despondent at the long delays of history and the seeming abortions of human life, we can murmur to ourselves this thought, and with humility regain our patience:—

"What if God's great angels, whose waiting love
Beholdeth my pitiful life below,
From the holy heights of their heaven above,
Could not bear with this worm till its wings do grow?"

III. IN RELIGION: IDEAS OF GOD.

Now to come to that for which I have cited all this illustration, from our seeing of Nature and our seeing of Man, is it not more plain what is meant when we look still higher, up to God, and say, We see in him what we are in ourselves. We call ourselves finite, him infinite; but that which we think of as infinite for him is what exists as finite in ourselves. The difference to our minds is of degree rather than kind, save as we try to dimly guess how degrees become kind. At any given time, the God whom the nation worships is the reflex of its own highest conception of morality and intelligence. As man grows wiser and better, our image in the heavens takes on beauty.

It is so with things less important than morality. Very long ago it was noticed that the Ethiopian gave his god a black face and woolly hair, while the Thracian gave his his own blue eyes and fair complexion. In our Christian art the Virgin's face betrays the nationality of the painter. Murillo makes her a Spanish peasant-girl; Raphael an Italian woman with some Roman ruins in the background. The German artists made their angels round-faced frogs. Two or three hundred years ago a Dutchman wrote a book to prove that Dutch was the language of Paradise. But the old Epicureans thought that the gods probably spoke Greek; and Brigham Young says that English is God's language; and Swedenborg, with ear laid a little closer to the truth, reveals that the angels always seem to be talking in the tongue to which each listener was born. And thus throughout religion. Our heaven-hope is the dream of joy we have on earth. The hell-torment is the agony we fear worst on earth. If our idea of creation is only that of manufacture, then God is the great machinist making and repairing his worlds: anything but that will seem like atheism. If our idea of providence is that which the Jew held, then God is the arbitrary elector and pre-ordainer of a man's and a nation's destiny: let one deny special providence and answers to petitions, and he will seem to be a man with no religiousness. If our idea of goodness and of justice be that of Augustine's age, then we can believe in the dogmas of transmitted guilt and transmitted propitiation and the fearful fate of unbelievers. God is the great merchant, then, bartering man's salvation for so much suffering paid over by another. Let one doubt the moral possibility of such a transaction and we still have friends to tell us, "You do not feel the enormity of sin."

The instantaneous creator, the special providence, the interposing God, the chosen nation, the supernatural deliverer and teacher, have had their place in the seeing of the past and made men's joy and faith, because in this way best their minds have grasped the idea of God's life in history. As men are in culture, they see in history. To judge of any historical question, like "the origin of Christianity," for instance, save from the stand-point of wide study, is as if a man should lecture on the sun, knowing nothing of what the spectroscopic and telescope have shown. Very noble are the words of the New Testament, but he who insists that their nobleness cannot be paralleled out of other Bibles, or that they are unmixed with intellectual error, or that whatever spiritual impulse Jesus and Paul gave to the Roman world cannot be naturally explained, betrays more reverence than knowledge. The good which a Jesus and a Bible do is to emphasize and so to introduce the better view. The harm which a Jesus and a Bible do is that the reverence for them keeps the old views prominent when it is time for another change. That is not their fault, but ours. Our education tends to make us disown whatever actual better vision comes afresh to us, who have eighteen hundred years more of human insight organized within us. It is true that one may not only rashly give up, but rashly lay hold of, the better thought; in which case it will not do him all its good. But the fact remains that, with the broader reading of to-day into the long processes of man's development, the seeming exceptions disappear, and we are led on to grander glimpses of a God as uniform in history as in the operations of the rest of Nature,—led on to see how, in accordance with great laws—

... "Through the ages one increasing purpose runs,
And the thoughts of men are widened with the process of the suns."

This grander view is the later one,—why? Because the earlier ages could not see the truth in it, man's eyes not then having acquired enough experience. As the light flows into our minds and shows us all phenomena in new relations, one by one the old ideas fade and vanish, not into nothingness, but to give place to something akin which is truer; and this in turn, no doubt, must suffer change into something better yet. Never think that you have got to the end of your thinking, that there is not a truer and better yet than you have ever thought.

And with that caution borne in mind, and ever openly avowed, it surely seems higher truthfulness to use the best truth possible to our hour rather than to keep the shut lips in religion which some men prefer. Higher truthfulness, for instance, to say of the One Almighty Force of the universe, "It is our God and Father," rather than to call it "the Unknowable." To that extent it is not unknowable. The mystery lies not below, but above, all our ideas of Personality, Fatherliness, and Life. God is all that we think and name—and infinitely more.

Thus as to our idea of God, the purely intellectual conceptions that we have of him and of his action,—that is proportioned to what we are in ourselves, to our degree of knowledge and our theories of right.

IV. IN RELIGION: TRUST IN GOODNESS.

But when we have gone past the idea of God, and feel that the truest thing our lips can utter is that we trust in him, and yet that in saying so we cannot tell ourselves a tithe of what we mean, then most of all we find this law holding good that we see as we are. Here we touch the bottom which underlies all the shifting currents of thought. Whatever church we belong to, whatever age men belong to, what we and others really want, brought down to its last essential meaning, is—trust in goodness. Goodness everywhere and at all times. Goodness that holds the mass, and every individual in the mass. A goodness which is general only in the sense that it includes everything special. A goodness, like that which Jesus believed in, that actually the sparrows are watched by a Father's care, and that hairs are verily numbered. A goodness which does not elect some to salvation, which does not save a dying world, but which means that all things that live shall know what more life is, what happiness and progress are. We want faith in a goodness that shall be to all deaths and disappointments and seeming cruelties and failures of Nature, and to our very sins, what the ocean is to the rain-drops that fall upon its surface,—not merely an oblivion that closes over the dimple, but a living bosom which grows fuller and fresher and grander for each dimple that breaks its smoothness. To really see God closely—is it not to have some such faith in goodness as this? and when our religiousness has come to mean this, then we know right well that we are close down by the heart of Being itself, and are feeling for ourselves: "I and the Father are one!"

Is it not so, friends? Is not this what we want, the most careless, the most sceptical of us all? We have some faith in goodness,—do we not want more? We have some purity in our hearts,—would we not like to know all that Jesus meant by his beatitude, that the pure in heart see God? We do not haunt flats and marshes all the week; still we feel (is it not so with you, too?) that the air is clogged about us, and we want to rise singing into the clearer sky we know there is above our heads. Put it thus, and all know that their own case is described. To laugh at religion is simply to laugh at cheer and peace and power to endure and hope; it is to laugh at the heart of happiness. Any one can rejoice when things go well with him, but when things do not, then to rejoice! Who knows what drafts this winter is going to make on his courage, his quiet, his trust that the world is not a sham and his own life a failure? Religion reduced to life-terms means just this abiding trust in goodness, the source of all glad feeling and eager action. And a hundred persons have religiousness, to one who has it very consciously and calls it by that name; and nearly every one wants it, however far his honest doubt or his rough scoffing or his quiet self-reliance takes him outside of the churches. We look at others—the most unreligious do—others who seem all full of a happy faith that makes "life, death, and the great hereafter one grand, sweet song," and wish, wish we had the eyes to see what they see,—without, of course, the errors of their fancy. We look at the great heroes of life and faith, and in our secret hearts worship them. That is the secret of worshipping through Jesus. Indeed, it must help many. Nay, we look at lofty moments in our own lives, mountain summits of our own sacrifice or obedience, when we know prayer was a mighty reality and joy to us, and say to ourselves,—Blessed were our eyes in those days, for they did see, and would to God they could see again!

And that, again, brings us back to our great secret. It is we on whom all rests, for we see as we are. The vision cannot be given, handed over; cannot be taught, even. The revelation is open to all. Inspiration is free as the air. But spiritual vision (revelation, inspiration, if you call it so) has its law, as sure as the laws of physical optics. And one law is—you see what you are. Your trust is measured by your purity. Your sight of goodness by your obedience to it. God is clear enough, if you are godlike enough. The whole secret is already yours—is it not?—for we must have learned, if really we have panted for more trust, that the trust somehow deepened not mainly in proportion as we prayed and sought the Church or read of Jesus, but as we lived our highest. When we say that the Father was revealed more clearly to Jesus than to most men, this, I think, is all we can mean—that his capacity of seeing goodness was greater than most, because his power of being good was greater. Whoever approaches his character approaches his vision. God is more "my God" on that day on which I have been more his child. Life is the great word,—not worship; or rather life becomes a conscious worship. Right motive and right action draw the veil and show the God of right. And therefore the home and the school and the shop, where we practise religion, are the real shrines to which the churches are but porches. Life is the one word left us, and we begin to know for ourselves that "the life is the light of men." Be true,—the skies are full of truth! Be just,—those skies, we think, would fall before one act of injustice really had a place in God's universe! Be the brother,—God is Father. Be pure,—you cannot help seeing him of the beatitude. No revelation to another will give us this faith, though it may help; in our agony we want to see with our own eyes. No philosophizing and culture will give it either, though they may help; one day's contact with some of those experiences which try men's souls, now and then, convinces us that there is something which reason alone does not bring to us. But underneath friend, Bible, reason, we do find,—it is a simple fact,—that we are not alone, thank God! One's own clench on Love and Right will leave us sure of Love and Right through all things. That and nothing else will do it.

And so it is not the great and the wise that have this faith most bright, but the really humble and pure. It is not this sect or that in which we find it, spite of any proud assurance. The beatitude reads not, Blessed is the Orthodox, Blessed the Unitarian, Blessed the Radical, for he shall see God,—but simply "Blessed is he who hungers and thirsts after righteousness," "Blessed is he who is pure in heart, for he shall see God;" and all the sects are one in holy men.

"Come! O thou Traveller unknown,
Whom still I hear, but do not see,
My company before has gone,
And I am left alone with thee.
Speak! or thou never hence shalt rove,
And tell me if thy name is—Love?"

And, friends, the answer is—the echo of our own name.

THE PEOPLE of England must have been profoundly ignorant in Queen Elizabeth's time, when a forged clause added to the Twentieth Article of the English Creed passed unnoticed till about forty years ago.

In the Act Thirteenth, Elizabeth, anno 1571, confirming the Thirty-nine Articles of the Church of England, these Articles are not engrossed, but referred to as comprised in a printed book—entitled, Articles Agreed to by the whole Clergy in the Convocation holden at London, 1562. The forged clause is: "The Church has power to decree rites and ceremonies, and authority in controversies of faith." That clause is not in the Articles referred to, nor the slightest hint of any authority with respect to matters of faith. In the same year, 1571, the Articles were printed both in Latin and English, precisely as in the year 1562. But soon after came out spurious editions, in which the said clause was foisted into the Twentieth Article, and continues so to this day. A forgery so impudent would not pass at present, and its success shows great ignorance in the people of England of that period.—Sketches of the History of Man, by Lord Kames, 1788.

[Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1873, by F. E. ABBOT, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.]

PAUL GOWER.

A RATIONALISTIC STORY

OF
ENGLISH AND AMERICAN LIFE.

CHAPTER XXXII. (Concluded.)

"Yes," replied Paul; "it was little Bowers, as we supposed. There appears to have been a conspiracy of about half-a-dozen persons, at the expense of the little man, whom they hoaxed into a ridiculous quarrel about something or other, of which this mock-duel was the climax. The pistols were only loaded with gunpowder, and a brother of Golding's, an engraver, went as doctor, with blue spectacles, a stomach-pump, and a case of dentist's instruments, to look professional. When the principals fired, Golding fell, and pretended to be severely wounded, and a couple of sham policemen, ambushed for the purpose, chased little Bowers and his second into a swamp, ultimately allowing him to get back to New York in a state of mingled apprehension and vain-glory which must have been very edifying to witness. They actually kept him disguised in a wig, and beard, and goggles, for a couple of weeks, during which time Golding was supposed to be convalescing. The farce ended in a supper and general jollification, when the belligerents were solemnly reconciled, and Bowers' courage and magnanimity extolled to the skies. They made him drunk, and he sang all his songs twice over. Golding says it has given him such a taste for duelling that he wanted to challenge an old gentleman who trod on his toes in a railway car, and talks of nothing but the code of honor, as he calls it."

"What an awful little fool!" commented Sabin, whose contempt for the victim of the hoax was much more unqualified than Paul's, the latter having really liked Mr. Bowers; and not without reason, as will appear in the course of this history. And the topic and twenty minutes brought them to Fulton Street, where the Porcupine office was situated—up a flight of very steep and dirty stairs and over a billiard saloon.

It comprised two rather small rooms, the first devoted to the sale of the paper—which, so far as the mechanical department went, was produced at a neighboring job-printing office—the second, to editorial and miscellaneous purposes. In the former, behind a new, unpainted, deal counter, heaped with piles of the Porcupine, there officiated a red-headed Irishman, who, at the time of our friend's arrival, was engaged in swearing at a crowd of newsboys occupying the space outside, and all clamorously demanding to be served first, or reciprocating the vender's compliments. Behind the counter were also a couple of engravers on wood, who piled their trade near the windows, one of which—its occupant being corpulent and perched upon a high stool—was, so to speak, thereby extinguished. Lastly, from the half-open door of the "sanctum" there issued tobacco-smoke, laughter, and loud talking; wherefore Dick made no scruple at lifting up the flap of the wooden barricade and entering, followed by Paul.

They were received magniloquently by Mr. Brough, who, seated at a desk of the same description as the counter, was writing, or trying to write, in a room eight feet by ten, occupied by half-a-dozen noisy individuals, to say nothing of the clamor without; almost affectionately by Mr. Woodruff—who put his arm round Sabin's shoulder, like a friendly boy, and asked, "When could he let them have some more drawings?"—and with cordiality by Golding and the rest of the assembled contributors, saving only Mr. O'Byrne; who, now that he knew that both young men were of no higher social distinction than himself, naturally felt it incumbent on his dignity to treat them with lofty self-assertion. This, however, mattered but little; very soon they were increasing both the volume of cigar-smoke—which would have rendered the atmosphere asphyxiating but for the outlet afforded by the larger apartment—and the conversation. As this related almost exclusively to the Porcupine, its favorable reception by the public, great merits and prospects, it possessed more interest for the talkers than the reader, and is therefore omitted from this narrative: suffice it to say that as Dick drew thirty dollars in advance of Mr. Woodruff—who was a little surprised at his promptness in demanding that accommodation—and as, in answer to Paul's rather timid and awkward application to Mr. Brough, preferred under cover of the noise, that good-natured gentleman informed him that he would be happy to receive any contributions which might be submitted to him, and entertained no doubt that his young friend's literary and artistic productions would prove equal to the high standard of excellence already attained in the Porcupine (whereupon the editor winked), the visit proved entirely satisfactory to our friends, though it makes no figure in this history.

At its conclusion, and during the inevitable adjournment to Crook and Duff's which followed, in answer to an inquiry from Richard Sabin, Golding offered to conduct him to a building up-town, where he might obtain an eligible studio and lodging, such as he had talked about to Paul. Some of his own artist-friends lived there, Bohemian-fashion, the young American said; he had once occupied a room in it himself. Accordingly the three set off together, and after walking a mile or more up Broadway, then gay with its afternoon frequenters, arrived at the tenement in question; a huge six-story one, the staircase of which, Dick observed, ought to deter loafers and fellows who hindered you at your work, it was so lengthy. As, in addition to this advantage, the upper rooms had evidently been constructed with a view to their occupation by artists, having north windows, high up near the ceilings—which gave them rather a prison-like aspect, especially when unfurnished—they suited Sabin exactly; hence, finding the landlord's agent on the premises, Dick closed with him at once for ten dollars a month, that sum putting him in possession of a capacious apartment near the roof, overlooked by nothing but the sky, and including gas and water privileges. Which business transacted, and a bargain struck with an Irishman, who officiated as porter, for the cleaning out of the room and incidental "chores," Richard put the key in his pocket and returned down-town with Paul, Golding leaving them at Bleecker Street, where he boarded.

The friends dined together at an English tavern, Dick declining an invitation to Beach Street, and subsequently purchased such furniture as he needed in the Bowery. When Paul parted with him and got home to Mrs. Livingston's, he found quite a festive assemblage in the boarding-house parlor, of which Miss Lizzie—newly-arrived from her uncle's—was the centre and cynosure. She received him with bewitching archness and cordiality, and presently asked—though Mr. Fox was at that moment turning over the leaves of her music-book—

"Who was that splendid-looking fellow you were walking with on Broadway this afternoon—the tall one, I mean, with the whiskers and mustaches? I passed right by and you never noticed me. Do you know, I'm quite in love with him!"

CHAPTER XXXIII.

WHEREIN RICHARD SABIN LAYS DOWN A SQUARE OF HELL'S PAVEMENT.

Paul did not fail to repeat Miss Livingston's complimentary remarks to his friend, nor likewise to describe the young lady in such a manner as to pique his curiosity. It therefore naturally followed that, a few days afterwards, Dick spent an evening at Beach Street; where his good looks, behavior, and conversation greatly deepened the impression he had made upon Miss Lizzie. Sabin possessed that quiet, caressing manner towards women which, in conjunction with a handsome person, is often irresistibly attractive; he was never betrayed into saying a disagreeable thing to them; never seemed to exert himself, but always pleased. He could look a compliment far better than most young men could utter one; and his natural, unconscious air of superiority rendered all he did immensely effective. Besides, he was seldom at the pains to be sincere with the sex, having—perhaps in consequence of his past experience—rather a contemptuous opinion of them. Then he rarely talked generalities, and most of his remarks had a spice of individuality, often verging on the confidential. Hence Miss Lizzie (on her very best behavior) was delighted with him; indeed, there occurred some rivalry between her and her mother to attract his regard. To the latter he listened with edifying interest, when he was not near the sofa or piano, between which Miss Livingston pretty fairly divided the evening; now smiling, laughing, and chattering—for she inherited no small share of her parent's volubility—anon singing song after song, with apparently inexhaustible facility, brilliancy, and enjoyment, until the young men wondered both at the strength of her lungs and the extent of her memory. Dick, complimenting her, asked "whether there was any song which she didn't know?" at which she laughed triumphantly, and rattled off afresh with such vigor that some passing loafers in West Broadway shouted, "hi! hi!" and clapped their hands in appreciation, as if they had been at the theatre. But in reply to Richard's observation, Mrs. Livingston, who had as much idea of a joke as a codfish, was kind enough to enumerate several ditties with which her daughter was unacquainted; and also to volunteer one herself, entitled "My Baby Bo-o-y" (that was how she pronounced it), to Miss Lizzie's accompaniment; at the vocal part of which performance Paul had much ado to preserve his gravity, though Dick never relaxed a muscle of his face, except to smile approval at the conclusion, when he politely thanked the lady and handed her to her rocking-chair—Lizzie looking round at the transaction with a queer, arch glance in the big, brown eyes and bewitching little countenance. She told Paul afterwards that it was "too bad" of his friend "to make game of mother, though she did scream like a peacock, and that was a fact."

The young man to whom this opinion was confided certainly played third party during the evening's entertainment; in sporting phrase he was "nowhere," compared with his all-popular friend. However, he endured the ladies' neglect with comparative equanimity: he had been all day long engaged in writing to that friend's sister, in answer to the letter already submitted to the reader; which employment naturally involved a stirring-up of old feelings; and he was, besides, accustomed to Dick's social successes—indeed admired him in consequence. As for Miss Lizzie's legitimate suitor, poor Charley Fox, whose existence she chose utterly to ignore for the time being, he was, happily for his peace of mind, absent (on a curious duty, sometimes exacted by down-town employers from their clerks—that of showing a Southern customer nocturnal life in New York), and would hardly return home before the small hours of the morning. Paul could not help feeling rather guilty towards him for having introduced such a dangerous rival to his field-mistress, especially when he observed her evident determination to captivate him, if the prodigal display of her peculiar fascinations could effect it. And though these were of rather a superficial and demonstrative nature, yet the girl's face and animal spirits rendered them very attractive to Dick Sabin, who was, as we have seen heretofore, extremely susceptible towards beauty, and entertained no very high standard of female character. Again, Miss Lizzie had a trick of interlarding her exuberant nonsense with odd, abrupt bits of candor, the wilfulness of which sounded like originality; and a very little wit, or pretence of it, goes a great way with the other sex, in conjunction with bright eyes, curls, and an agreeable person. Richard, therefore, showed himself sufficiently sensitive to the advances made towards him, which included so much familiarity as to more than justify Mrs. Livingston's remonstrances of "Lizzie! I'm surprised at you!" "What told Mr. Sabin that?"—though she only got snubbed by her daughter for her pains. Ultimately, indeed, the elder lady fell back upon Paul, leaving the others to a tête-à-tête at the piano, and talked to that hapless young man so remorselessly that his attention soon succumbed, and he sat looking at her with no more consciousness of what she was saying than the rocking-chair whereon she reclined—being mentally three thousand miles away with Kate Sabin in Newman Street. But as he maintained the attitude of listening, it did quite as well for Mrs. Livingston, who, convinced that she was both distinguishing herself and delighting her auditor, went on in an interminable dissertation on the difference between English and American character, and the political, social, and religious aspects of the two countries—on which subjects she was an undoubted authority, having derived her opinions, on one side, from the Britons she had known in her capacity as mistress of a boarding-house.

The striking of twelve by the French clock upon the mantel-piece at length put a period to Paul's endurance and his friend's enjoyment; it being a full hour beyond the orthodox time for turning off the gas in such establishments. Miss Lizzie accompanied the young men to the door, and not only gave both her hands to Sabin in parting, but, with a queer little parting grimace, lifted one of them to his countenance, and pulled his mustache—which has been described as long and dependent—a kind of challenge responded to so promptly that perhaps it was well that Mrs. Livingston appeared at the parlor door, in time to prevent further retaliation. On seeing her mother the girl laughed saucily, cried, "Good-night!" and ran up-stairs; whither, after some additional leave-taking, that lady and Paul followed, to their respective bed-rooms. And Richard, with a quickened pulse, lit a cigar and walked up-town to his studio and sofa-bedstead, thinking of Miss Lizzie and the evening's entertainment by the way.

Apparently, the latter subject hardly bore the morning's reflection, for when Paul rallied him about it, during an afternoon call, and supposed he would be eager to revisit Beach Street, his friend surprised him by saying that he intended expressly to abstain from so doing, for at least a week or more; adding his reasons for what he acknowledged was an act of self-denial—

"It won't do," he said. "That little girl is too pretty, and too deucedly impulsive altogether. I don't want to get entangled in any business of the sort, knowing what comes of it. I have had experiences. One can see with half an eye that she's a thorough-going little coquette, and as wayward and wilful as you please, besides being as egotistic as her fool of a mother—which is saying a great deal. I am not as enough to think she cares for me—or for anybody—because she likes a night's flirtation; but it's best to pull up in time. I intend to stay away at least long enough to show that I don't mean anything. If it hadn't been for—well, that little salute in the passage—I shouldn't have minded. But, really, one got on so fast with her that I should expect the mother to leave us alone next time, and only return to ask whether we'd agreed upon the day, and offer her blessing. She looks quite capable of it."

"Why, she is engaged already," answered Paul—speaking of course of Miss Livingston—and accordingly told his friend of Charley Fox, eulogizing him as an agreeable fellow, whom Richard would like, on acquaintance.

"Well, all I can say is, he'd better marry her out of hand—and then I don't envy him." Saying which, Dick pumice-stoned the box-wood block he was operating upon, with additional energy.

"Why?" inquired Paul, thinking of his father's advice and opinion of the same young lady.

"Why?" echoed Sabin,—"look at the girl, and then ask the question! If ever the devils of perversity and self-will possessed anybody, they look out of those eyes of hers. No! no! A bewitching little creature to talk to, to flirt with, to kiss, if she'll let you; but from marriage, Good Lord deliver us! She'd hearken forbearance itself into licking her!"

"She'll be sure to inquire about you, and expect your return. She has reason."

"I can't help it. The evening was very pleasant—too pleasant altogether for repetition. 'Lead us not into temptation.' I want to keep out of mischief, and to avoid doing any. It costs rather more self-denial than I am used to to act virtuously, as it is already; and so I tell you."

And he adhered to his resolution, not going to the house for near a fortnight, during which interval the wisdom of his conduct was sufficiently demonstrated by the behavior of Miss Lizzie. But, in the first place, Mr. Fox—considerately informed of all that had occurred, and a good deal that had not, by Mrs. Livingston—took Paul to task for bringing "that d—d handsome friend of his," as he called Sabin, to the establishment, and thereby impairing the young lady's allegiance towards himself. Charley's remonstrances were at once whimsical and good-natured, and indicated an estimate of the girl akin to that of his supposed rival, only differing in his matrimonial conclusions:—

"I don't blame the fellow," he said. "I should have done just the same with another girl, if I'd got the chance; but it's none the pleasanter for that, especially when you can't help yourself. You know what she is, Gower—jealousy and expostulation are quite out of the question. She fires up directly, and there's a row. I'm obliged to stand it for the present, and take her, faults and all, or the engagement's off. And I am fond of the little witch, and be hanged to her! It's curiously humiliating, I grant; but, mind you, it's not going to last. Only wait till we are married, and then see if the stronger intellect—the superior nature—doesn't assert itself, and mould her to its wishes. Sir, I tell you that girl shall do upon me—shall worship the very ground I walk upon—in six months. She has capacities in her for loving, sir, which I alone am destined to develop—it's a wild, untrained, extravagant nature, but rich, sir, rich! In that hope I put up with her numberless impertinences—her infidelities! I know very well there's a whole raft of sweeps and snobs with whom she flirts like mad directly my back's turned. I can chaff them out of their boots face to face—but Cesar was stabbed from behind! As for your friend, is he in earnest about her, or only fooling?"

Paul, laughing, said that he thought Sabin had no serious ideas of aspiring to Miss Lizzie's affections, though he acknowledged her powers of fascination.

"Well, I'm glad of that, because he's infernally good-looking, you know, and has that air of style about him which goes so far with women—the dear, little, preposterous, delightful sex whose privilege it is to make fools of all of us! I saw him down-town, one morning,—one of the woodpeckers on the Porepine pointed him out to me in Ann Street. Introduce us if you get an opportunity, before I leave for Baltimore, which happens next week. How the flies will be buzzing round my little honey-pot, while I'm away, and be d—d to them! One comfort is"—Mr. Fox spoke with some confusion of metaphor—"that she has got a sting of her own, and can use it at her expense, as well as mine. And another is, that I'm hefty on correspondence—can write letters, sir, that'll thrill a woman's nature to its innermost core—saturate her with sentiment! And Baltimore's not so far off, after all—and if she does throw me over, perhaps it'll come easier at a distance." With which rather contradictory sources of prospective consolation, Mr. Fox betook himself to the store down-town.

When three nights had elapsed without the reappearance of Richard Sabin at the Beach Street boarding-house, Miss Livingston fulfilled Paul's prediction by inquiring the cause of his friend's absence, at first expectantly, then surprisedly, then with undisguised pique and anger. "Was he not coming?" she asked, sharply; "he had seemed to spend a pleasant evening—what had Paul been saying to him against her?" Startled at the abrupt transition from offended vanity to suspicion and insult, confused by the suddenness of the attack, at once hurt and sorry and unwilling to retaliate, the young man stammered out a denial of her injurious implication, coupled with the weak excuse that Sabin was very busy; for which he was justly punished by Miss Lizzie's declaring that she didn't care a cent about it anyhow, and so he needn't think it; whereupon, and with a muttered remark about Englishmen being a pack of conceited fools who never knew their own minds for a day together, the young lady flounced out of the room, leaving Paul considerably disconcerted. Nor did she speak to him for some days, but continued in a fit of the sulks, of which her legitimate admirer, Mr. Fox, was the principal victim. In his words, she was "as savage as a meat-axe" towards everybody.

Sabin only laughed when he heard what had transpired, though he was more pleased at it than he chose to acknowledge; and perhaps found it additionally difficult to keep his resolution. Still he persisted, notwithstanding his meeting Miss Lizzie on Broadway, one afternoon, looking her prettiest, when she responded to his polite bow by turning up her nose, obscuring her countenance with a blue parasol, and increasing her pace—a cut direct, which he swore he would not accept, but repeat his visit, whenever he chose to do so. And this intention he carried out on the twelfth night after his first appearance in Beach Street.

Perhaps it was lucky for his reception that, unlike the former occasion, there happened to be several persons beside Miss Livingston and her mother in the boarding-house parlor. These were the two married women before mentioned as inmates of the establishment, the little bushy-whiskered Londoner, and the General who had called on the first night of Paul's domestication, and since then become a frequent visitor, turning out an old flame of the landlady's, and a prominent New York politician. In consequence, Dick was enabled almost to ignore the positive rudeness of Miss Lizzie; who, in reply to his salutation, just stared at him, conveying into the big, brown eyes a singularly unpleasant expression of disdain and defiance; and, without answering one word, went on chattering to the Londoner. Sabin, however, had sufficient self-control to betray no discomposure, but continued his compliments to the rest of the ladies, to whom Mrs. Livingston presented him. She, by the way, welcomed the offender with much cordiality, probably because he had chagrined her daughter; but, before long, contrived to turn him over to one of the ladies, in favor of her elderly admirer; while Paul, engaging the other, the company resolved itself into couples, and the conversation into duets, until some observation from the General (who, perhaps, found his partner's exceptional solo rather monotonous) challenged larger sociality, when the assembly became as chatty as could be desired—only Miss Lizzie never condescended even to look towards Sabin. She had plainly made up her mind to repudiate him henceforth, as a puppy and masculine flirt, who was unworthy of the least consideration.

But Dick, on his part, "had resolved to kill her in her own humor," first by assurance and impossibility, her own humor," first by assurance and impossibility, next by interest and tacit solicitation—wherein he unconsciously imitated Paul's behavior on his introduction to the young lady, though in the face of a much more formidable obstacle than mere indifference. He was by no means certain of success, perhaps not very anxious about it, which counted in his favor; for a coquette will always resent unconcern, thereby evincing one form of interest, which may be skillfully transmuted into another; and any individual who, in such a case, can persist in acting as if quite at his ease will be pretty sure of having the advantage in the long run, unless—after estrangement—latent, becomes spoken, indignation. Now the wily Richard talked with such perfect good-humor and naturalness to all about him (with one exception) that, without making a scene and herself ridiculous, besides enlisting the sympathies of the company entirely in behalf of the enemy, Miss Lizzie could not indulge in any outburst of her decidedly vixenish temper, notwithstanding the strong inclination she felt towards verbally assaulting him; so she sat, and sulked, and snapped at the Londoner, rendering herself so intensely disagreeable that he presently succeeded into general conversation. More irritated than ever, Miss Livingston betook herself to that grand safety-valve of feminine excitement, the piano, and banged out a terrific sonata or two, when it became a matter of courtesy, or policy, to ask her to sing—which she tartly refused. So one of the married ladies obliged the company, then the other, then Mrs. Livingston, and then Dick Sabin. He had declined or evaded the request on the former occasion; now he sang his best, both sentimental and comic, playing his own accompaniment, to universal applause. Rising at length from the instrument, he turned suddenly to Miss Lizzie, and looking her full in the face—with perhaps a trifle of appeal in his own and in his voice—requested her to succeed him. It was a bold experiment, and Dick, for one, would not have been much surprised if she had bestowed a vigorous slap upon his earnest countenance, and then bounced out of the room. But she did nothing of the kind. Making one of her queer, little, habitual grimaces, she suddenly complied, sitting down and singing with even more than her usual brilliancy and fascination. After that, it was of no use pretending to treat him with either insolence or indifference; he had conquered, and half an hour's talk only completed his triumph. Whether she understood his conduct and divined its motive, or was influenced merely by caprice, the girl evidently condoned his offence and received him again into favor, though unaccompanied with the familiarity of heretofore. When he departed—for the evening was productive of nothing demanding further description—she took leave of him in the parlor, saying, abruptly: "I shan't ask you to call again, but you know your way to the house and can come if you like!"—which Dick rightly interpreted into reconciliation.

"It'll do first rate, this time," he remarked to Paul Gower, who walked part of the way home with him, the hour being comparatively early: "the girl has more brains underneath that curly wig of hers than I had given her credit for—and more good-nature, too. I like her for it. I can go there with perfect impunity now."

Dick spoke rather ruefully, as if dissatisfied with his own success. Whether he judged correctly, this history must determine.

THE WOMAN SUFFRAGE QUESTION.

A CRITICISM OF THE COURT IN THE CASE OF MISS ANTHONY.

The principal point in the controversy has been whether or not Judge Hunt was right in adjudging Miss Anthony guilty of the alleged crime of voting, without any voluntary assent on the part of the jury impelled to try her.

I stated in my address that the decision was illegal, and a most flagrant violation of constitutional right; viz., that of trial by jury. My young legal friend takes issue with me, and insists that this arbitrary act of Judge Hunt is right, and that I am wrong. This is a question of such magnitude, and so intimately concerns the personal liberty of the individual, that it becomes one of vital importance to every man, woman, and child throughout this land. If it shocks the nerves of my friend T. that I should criticise a Judge of the Supreme Court, so be it. I must leave his nerves to the soothing influence of time and more mature deliberation. Believing as I do that a dear friend, and an American citizen, has been stricken down by a most cruel, arbitrary, and unconstitutional act, termed a judicial trial, I shall certainly exercise my prerogative as a citizen to speak if I may not vote; and that without fear or favor of Mr. T. or of Judge Hunt. The time has passed in this country for the perpetration of such an outrage, and for placing a padlock upon our lips, at the risk of being again stigmatized by Mr. T. as exhibiting myself as "utterly failing to comprehend the simplest of the legal points involved in this not intricate matter."

I will proceed. And first it is proper that we look at our chart and take our bearings. Our chart is the Constitution of the United States. It says, Article 3, Section 2:—

"The trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury." "In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed. . . . And to have the assistance of counsel for his defence."

The law under which she was tried provides, that any person who shall knowingly vote where they may not be lawfully entitled to vote, or vote without having a lawful right to vote, shall be guilty of a crime, &c.

It appeared on the trial; First—That she was advised by one of the oldest and ablest judges in this State, Hon. Henry R. Selden, that she had a legal right to vote. Second—It appeared by the evidence of that judge, in the presence of this court and jury, that he so advised, and that he gave such advice in good faith, believing that she had such right. Third—It also appeared that when she offered to vote, the question whether, as a woman, she had a right to vote, was raised by the inspectors, and considered in her presence, and they decided that she had a right to vote, and they received her vote accordingly.

At the close of the testimony the defendant's counsel insisted upon the following propositions: First—That the defendant had a lawful right to vote. Second—That whether she had a lawful right to vote or not, if she honestly believed that she had that right, and voted in good faith in that belief, she was guilty of no crime. Third—That when she gave her vote she gave it in good faith, believing that it was her right to do so.

The defendant's counsel insisted that the first and second propositions were questions of law, and the third and last was a question of fact for the jury to determine, and asked leave to address the jury upon that question. This the Court declined to grant. The Court then instructed the clerk to take the verdict, and the clerk said: "Gentlemen of the jury, hearken to the verdict, as the Court hath recorded it; you say you find the defendant guilty of the offence charged. So say you all." No response was made by the jury, either by word or sign. They did not consult together in their seats or elsewhere. Neither of them had spoken a word, nor had they been asked whether they agreed upon their verdict. The defendant's counsel then asked that the jury be polled; i.e., that each juror be asked separately and distinctly whether this was his verdict.

The Court said: "That cannot be allowed. Gentlemen of the jury, you are discharged;" and they left the jury box.

Now will Mr. T. be kind enough to inform me at what stage of this astounding legal procedure the jury trial came in. The Constitution says that, not Judge Hunt, not the Circuit Court of the United States, but the jury shall try. These twelve men that sat in the jury box had nothing more to do with Miss Anthony's trial than any twelve spectators who may have happened to be present. If twelve wooden men had sat in their places, the same result would have been obtained. There was no concurrence of the jury. There was no voluntary assent. It was, "Hearken to the verdict as the Court has recorded it;" not, "Gentlemen of the jury, what is your verdict?" The trial, so far as it may by legal fiction be called a jury trial, was a mere sham and pretence, and a most gross and palpable violation of the constitutional provision above quoted.

Again, I am told by lawyers whose opinions I respect, that the right of the criminal to have the jury "polled" is a long and well-established custom. This was denied. Indeed, I am informed by one of the best legal minds in this State, that the right was never before denied to a party against whom a verdict was rendered; and reference can be made, if necessary, to a number of cases showing that the right to poll the jury is an absolute right in all cases.

Now the answer Mr. T. makes to this is, that the act itself constitutes the crime, and it makes no difference what the intention of the accused may have been. Until my young friend's advent I had supposed that intent was the principal ingredient of crime. From the highest to the lowest grade of crime the felonious intent has heretofore been the gravamen of the charge. But this old-fashioned law, it would seem, has outlived its day. And my young friend T. appears as a new luminary upon the legal horizon. That I may not be charged with misrepresentation, I quote his own language: "The legal offence was in the act, not in the intentions accompanying it, as Mrs. Lozier seems to imagine. The voting being admitted, the only thing the jury could pass upon was admitted; with motives and intentions they had nothing to do." And this from a justice of the peace, I believe.

Now, I humbly submit that the intent which accompanies commission of an act is a very important fact in determining the question of crime, and the intent being a fact the jury only can determine that fact. And right here I respectfully submit that my illustration of the man with the "choice fowls" is in point. The pith of that illustration was this; that if a man honestly believed, though mistaken, that his own fowls were in his neighbor's grounds, and should drive them home, he can not be convicted of the crime of stealing. Why not? Because there is one quality of the crime lacking; viz., the felonious intent to steal. But according to the logic of my young friend the man guilty of such a "fowl" proceeding should be summarily convicted by the Court upon admitting that he took the fowls; for my friend says, "The legal offence was in the act, not in the intention. The (taking) voting being admitted, the only thing the jury could pass upon was admitted; with motives and intentions they (i.e., the jury) had nothing to do." Blackstone says, in his Commentaries, referring to theft: "The taking and carrying away must be done animo furandi; i.e., with a felonious intent." What a blockhead Blackstone must have been!

Now among other eminent law writers I quote such expressions as the following: "Intention is a fact." Again: "The intention of the defendant is a question for a jury to determine." Again: "The felonious quality consists in the intention of the prisoner to defraud the owner." Again: "If goods are taken on a claim of right of property in them which the taker honestly, though mistakenly, believes he possesses, it is no felony." Again: "Mistaking another's property for one's own, is neither legally nor morally a crime." Again: "In all cases of larceny, the question whether he took them in good faith under a claim of right, are questions entirely for the jury, to be determined by them upon a view of the particular facts of each case."

Now let us apply this principle of law to Miss Anthony's case. The statute under which she was tried says that if she shall knowingly vote without the lawful right to vote, then it shall be a crime. The law does not say that if she shall vote without lawful right, then it shall be a crime; but if she shall knowingly vote without lawful right, then, and not till then, shall it be a crime. Now whether or not she voted knowingly it to be unlawful, was a question of fact which that jury, and no other tribunal on earth, had the right to try. And in determining that question, the jury had a right to take into consideration the "good faith under a claim of right" on the part of Miss Anthony. And in support of that position, her counsel should have been permitted to argue to the jury that the advice of eminent counsel that she had the right, and the decision of the inspectors of election, who were acting in a judicial capacity, that she had such right, and the absence of anything to conceal her sex; and the public, open-handed, innocent manner with which she performed the act,—stripped the offence of that vital ingredient, viz., criminal or felonious intent; and then, upon the rendering of the verdict by the jury, the question of fact would have been finally and constitutionally determined.

Suppose my legal friend should be living upon the border line of New York State and Connecticut. The boundary line is in dispute. You are not quite certain upon which side of the line you live. The law provides that you must live in the State one year before you can vote. You desire to vote. You consult a civil engineer who has surveyed the line, and some good lawyer who has examined the description, the construction of which is in dispute. They both tell you that you live in New York State. You present yourself to the inspectors of election, and inform them as to your exact residence. They deliberate, and decide to receive your vote. Subsequently the boundary line has got into the courts, and the courts have put their construction upon the disputed point; and, lo and behold, you find you were a resident of the State of Connecticut at the time you voted. You have certainly voted "without the lawful right to vote;" but will my young learned friend say that under such circumstances you have committed a crime? Is not the fact that you voted by a mistake, without the intent to commit the offence, and not knowing that you were not entitled to vote, a great and controlling fact in the determination of your alleged offence? and should not the jury be permitted to decide?

Again, let us suppose that you are in doubt as to your age. An election is near at hand. You know you are about twenty-one years of age. You go to the old Family Bible, and there find that you were born twenty-one years before the day preceding the election. You vote. Subsequently it appears that the Bible record was wrong. It turns out that you were born twenty-one years before the day succeeding the election. Are you guilty of a crime? Of course you are, according to the proposition of my disputant.

My friend, in one of his flippant flings, charges me with absurdity. I will not retaliate. I think it more in accord with good sense and good breeding that our readers should judge of the merits of the argument. I feel, therefore, that the action of Judge Hunt, in not permitting the question of fact as to intent to be considered by the jury, was a violation of one of the most sacred rights handed down to us by our Anglo-Saxon forefathers. From the days of King John, the right of trial by jury has been guarded as one of the most sacred rights of the citizen. For a violation of this right, the early colonists emphatically protested in the Declaration of Independence; and, in the language of that instrument, slightly altered, I arraign Ward Hunt as "a judge whose character is marked by an act which may define a tyrant, and who is unfit to be the judge of a free people."—Mrs. C. S. Lozier, in the Yonkers Statesman.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS TO INDEX STOCK.

Mrs. F. W. Christern,	New York City,	One share, $100
Richard B. Westbrook,	Somerset, Pa.	" " 100
R. C. Spencer,	Milwaukee, Wis.	Two " 200
R. W. Howes,	Boston, Mass.	One " 100
Chas. W. Story,	Boston, Mass.	" " 100
E. W. Meddough,	Detroit, Mich.	Five " 500
Jacob Hoffner,	Camminsville, O.	One " 100
John Wells,	Boston, Mass.	" " 100
W. C. Russell,	Boston, Mass.	" " 100
Thos. N. Y.	Detroit, Mich.	" " 100
B. F. Dyer,	Boston, Mass.	" " 100
James Purinton,	Lynn, Mass.	" " 100
F. A. Nichols,	Lowell, Mass.	" " 100
J. S. Palmer,	Portland, Me.	" " 100
Robt. Ormiston,	Brooklyn, N.Y.	" " 100

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING OCTOBER 11.

George S. Johnson, $3; Palanski Carter, $3.75; R. C. Hasset, 75 cents; F. L. Comstock, $3; James Dillaway, $3; D. B. Allen, $1.50; Ella Groot, $5; Benjamin A. Andrews, $4; William P. Draper, $4; J. S. Palmer, $10; Henry Parkman, 50 cents; S. Patton, 25 cents; D. M. Bennett, 10 cents; James Ruddle, 10 cents; George M. Wood, $3; R. M. Whipple, $1; Annie F. Curtis, $1; D. D. Lum, 10 cents; John Curtis, $2; George H. Foster, 90 cents; John H. Campbell, $3; F. G. Monroe, $3; F. B. Crosby, $3; Charles E. Rider, $3; Paul Zimmerman, $3; E. Penland, $3; A. G. Moody, $3; William H. Eastman, $3.10; L. F. Gardner, $13; John Consalus, $23; H. W. Beecher, $6; George Lee, 25 cents; William T. Hall, 50 cents.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Postage on THE INDEX is five cents per quarter, dating from receipt of the first number; payable in advance at the place of delivery.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY

BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,
AT

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Toledo Office: No. 35 MONROE STREET. Julius T. Frey,
Agent and Clerk.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAHAM WALKER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHESEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), Rev. MONCURE D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 16, 1873.

NOTICE.

On and after September 1, the publication office of THE INDEX will be at No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. All letters, papers, and other communications should be henceforth addressed to "THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass."

Correspondents and Exchanges will please take notice,

GLIMPSES.

PIUS IX. has declared, in a special exhortation to the South American Bishops, that "in America, as elsewhere, the Freemasons are excommunicated and anathematized."

GERMAN LIBERALS should subscribe for Der Reformator, a live and free weekly, published at Adrian, Michigan, by Messrs. C. Lohmann & Son. It advocates the same cause as THE INDEX, and merits a hearty support.

ACCORDING to Rev. A. Decoppet, of Paris, a delegate to the Evangelical Alliance, there are only about 800,000 "Protestants" in France; that is, Protestant Christians. There are many there who "protest" against Romanism, but are not included in this count.

SAID THE Queen of Holland to M. Thiers: "The Papacy is a bad thing." "Yes, your majesty," replied the ex-president of France, "it is; all who interfere with it are sure to perish." He forgot to add that all who don't interfere with it are equally sure to perish.

REV. W. H. H. MURRAY recently gave a lecture on the "Civilized Heathen," which is a most powerful argument against "Foreign Missions." He showed that in many respects the "heathen" are far more civilized than the Christians who would convert them. How long will it be before Mr. Murray comes into collision with his own church?

A MEMBER of the Young Men's Christian Association who is opposed to furnishing "amusements" in the Association's rooms declares that "there is amusement enough in the Gospel of Jesus Christ." It must be confessed that the sayings and doings of Young Christians, if they correctly expound his Gospel, bring to light some very amusing features of it.

THE CATHOLIC Bishops of Brazil are waging relentless war against the Freemasons. The same thing is done by a body of zealous Protestants in this country who think the Catholics a trifle worse than the Freemasons themselves. What is the matter? If Catholics and Protestants both fight the same enemy, are they not allies? Or is it a three-cornered duel?

AT MR. BRADLAUGH's lecture in Steinway Hall, New York, a Mr. Brindley, of England, a member of the Evangelical Alliance, rose and called him a "liar." A cool reply extinguished him. "Let him proceed," said Mr. Bradlaugh; "he represents the aristocracy." What aristocracy? We do not know his social position at home; but as an "Evangelical" he certainly does represent the religious aristocracy of Christendom.

PRESIDENT WOOLSEY, at the opening session of the Evangelical Alliance, succinctly and vigorously expressed the central object of the gathering. "The present age," he said, "calls preeminently for union; for the assaults upon Christianity are especially formidable. Then, while each of us values his own special form of worship more than others, we should all make but one regiment of the army of Christ, to march in a body against the common enemy." Let nobody be deceived. The entire aim of the Alliance is the destruction of free thought.

A TEACHER, explaining to his pupils the meaning of the word "identity," said that different parts of a thing might be changed or replaced without destroying its identity. One of the scholars inquired whether his jackknife would be the same knife, if he broke the blade and had a new one put in. "Yes, it would." "Would it still be the same knife, if I broke the handle afterwards, and had another put in its stead?" "Ye-es." "Well, supposing I then had the old blade and the old handle repaired and put together, what knife would that be?" No answer is recorded. We are reminded of this story by the attempt of the Evangelical Alliance to re-unite the sects which split off at various times from the Christian Church. Perhaps the discarded blade and discarded handle will make a knife after a fashion; but what knife is it?

"THE GREAT DANGER of our Christianity," says the Boston Globe, "is not from the devotees of science, but from the devotees of mammon. We trust that the Evangelical Alliance will recognize this central fact. Infidelity would disappear before any real fidelity on their part to the teachings of their Master." What twaddle! The Alliance are not such fools as the Globe would have them be. They know well enough that they cannot put rationalism to sleep with any such "soothing syrup" as the Globe prescribes. They must either refute "infidelity" or exterminate it. It is not caused by the personal wickedness of Christians, but by the intrinsic untruth of Christianity, as exposed by modern science. Look to your logic, gentlemen champions of the faith, as well as your morals, or you will make yourselves ridiculous. You can never conquer rationalism by being "better boys," but only by being better reasoners.

FROM AN EXCHANGE we gather some interesting information concerning the Young Men's Christian Associations. They are stronger and more flourishing than ever before, numbering more than 900 Associations, and enrolling in their membership more than 150,000 young men. Their libraries are increasing; their treasures are well supplied; their debts are diminishing; their buildings are multiplying; their activity is great. Thirty-eight of these Associations own buildings worth $1,914,450; forty-three have buildings worth more than $10,000 each, and aggregating more than $447,000. Of these the costliest is in New York, worth $500,000; Philadelphia has built one worth $300,000; while Boston is to build one worth $150,000. In Washington, $200,000 are similarly invested, and in San Francisco $100,000. Newark, N. J., Montreal, Poughkeepsie, Indianapolis, Cleveland, Toronto, St. John, N. B., and Germantown, Pa., have each a building worth from $35,000 to $80,000.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE was formed in London in 1846. It has held five conferences previous to the present gathering at New York, the last being at Amsterdam in 1867. The following nine propositions constitute its platform, which it would be simply absurd, or worse, for any Unitarian or Universalist to pretend to accept:—

- "1. The divine inspiration, authority, and sufficiency of the Holy Scriptures.
 - "2. The right and duty of private judgment in the interpretation of the Holy Scriptures.
 - "3. The unity of the Godhead and the trinity of the persons therein.
 - "4. The utter depravity of human nature in consequence of the fall.
 - "5. The incarnation of the Son of God, his work of atonement for the sins of mankind, and his mediatorial intercession and reign.
 - "6. The justification of the sinner by faith alone.
 - "7. The work of the Holy Spirit in the conversion and sanctification of the sinner.
 - "8. The immortality of the soul, the resurrection of the body, the judgment of the world by our Lord Jesus Christ, with the eternal blessedness of the righteous, and the eternal punishment of the wicked.
 - "9. The divine institution of the Christian ministry, and the obligation and perpetuity of the ordinances of baptism and the Lord's Supper.
- "It being, however, distinctly declared that this brief summary is not to be regarded in any formal or ecclesiastical sense as a creed or confession, nor the adoption of it as involving an assumption of the right authoritatively to define the limits of Christian brotherhood, but simply as an indication of the class of persons whom it is desirable to embrace within the Alliance."

When the Independent urges that Universalists should be included in a body which expressly, though informally, declares its belief in endless punishment, it exhibits in a melancholy degree the demoralization produced by trying to ride the two horses of Orthodoxy and Rationalism at the same time.

HOLYOAKE AND BRADLAUGH.

On the evenings of March 10 and 11, 1870, one of the most remarkable debates on record was held in the New Hall of Science, 142 Old Street, City Road, London. The disputants were Mr. George Jacob Holyoake, editor of the Reasoner, and Mr. Charles Bradlaugh, editor of the National Reformer.—Mr. Austin Holyoake, brother of the former, being in the chair. Both of the disputants were distinguished representative men of English "Secularism," so called,—a word first selected by Mr. Holyoake himself about the year 1852 to designate the most extreme school of English radicalism. The subject of discussion was the question whether the principles of Secularism necessarily include Atheism. Singularly enough, both men were not only Secularists but also Atheists, though espousing somewhat different types of Atheism. Mr. Holyoake was an Atheist in the sense of not being satisfied with the current proofs of Theism; the whole spirit and tenor of his thought was affirmative rather than negative; and he inclined to emphasize the positive truths of knowledge rather than the interrogations of doubt or the denials of disbelief. Mr. Bradlaugh was an Atheist in the sense of being satisfied with his own disproofs of Theism; he considered the non-existence of God a settled fact of reason; and he inclined to begin with this fact as the first step of all thorough-going reform. The speeches of each were characterized by the same tone of intense conviction, and by equal evidences of strong and original thought. Altogether, it was one of the most notable discussions ever carried on before a public audience. Without attempting to give even an outline of it, the presence of Mr. Bradlaugh in the United States at the present time prompts us to touch briefly on one or two of its leading points.

As expounded by Mr. Holyoake, "Secularism" was originally proposed as "a new name for a new form of free thought, in which we would deal with the agreements at which free thinkers had arrived, maintaining those propositions about which we have agreed in common, and which were perfectly independent of Atheism or Theism." More specifically: "If you desire a brief summary, which may be given in a few words, of what the principles to which I have adverted point to, so far as meets the object of this discussion, I would state them thus:—1. Secularism maintains the sufficiency of secular reason for guidance in human duties. 2. The adequacy of the Utilitarian rule which makes the good of others the law of duty. 3. That the duty nearest at hand and most reliable in results is the use of material means, tempered by human sympathy, for the attainment of social improvement. 4. The sinlessness of well-informed sincerity. 5. That the sign and condition of such sincerity are free thought, expository speech, the practice of personal conviction within the limits of neither outraging nor harming others." And again: "I am here to maintain that neither the existence of God nor the non-existence of God, neither the mortality nor the immortality of the soul—that none of these doctrines are in any way necessary—that they are separate and independent from these Secular tenets."

Yet in this very debate he quotes, as still holding to it, the following passage from his Limits of Atheism: "Affirmative Atheism of the intellect is a proud, honest, intrepid, self-respecting attitude of the mind. The Negative Atheism of mere ignorance, of insensibility, of lust and gluttony and drunkenness, of egotism or vanity, whose talk is outrage, and whose spirit is blasphemy,—this is the gross negation of God which superstition begets in its slavery, and nurtures by its terrors. These species of Atheism I recognize only to disown and denounce them. Of these the priest is the author who preaches the natural corruption of the human heart, who inculcates the guilt of free thought, the distrust of reason, and despairs of self-reliant progress. Utterly different from this is the Atheism of reflection, which seeks for conclusive evidence, which listens reverentially for the voice of God, which weighs carefully the teachings of a thoughtful Theism, but refuses to recognize the officious, incoherent babblement of intolerant or presumptuous men." Once more, he said: "I think the Theist assumes an infinite knowledge when he says he knows there is a God. I think he who says that one is impossible betrays an equal capacity for knowing everything."

In reply, Mr. Bradlaugh, quoting with approbation some earlier utterances of his opponent, said that Secularism is "going to teach men the physical laws on which health depends; the moral laws on which happiness depends; the intellectual laws on which knowledge depends; the social and political laws on which prosperity and advancement depend; the economic laws on which wealth depends. Now to do this, you must challenge the theological doctrine that God regulates health. . . . So that, in fact, before you can be a Secularist to take the position Mr. Holyoake takes, you must reject all supernatural supervision, reject all Theistic control; and if that is not in reality and fact being an Atheist, then I confess I have yet to learn the meaning of words. "The word Atheist does mean to be without God, but it does not mean to be without morality. To me every idea of God is such that, as a Secularist, I am bound to deny." Again: "Although at present it may be perfectly true that all men who are Secularists are not yet Atheists, I put it to you as perfectly true that in my opinion the logical consequence of Secularism must be that the man gets to Atheism, if he has brains enough to comprehend. . . . The whole basis of our Secular cause is in direct ignoring and denial of the possibility of any such [future] state of existence at all." "I say you cannot get your lesson of morality without Atheism. . . . You cannot have a scheme of morality without Atheism. . . . I think the Secularist is one who has learned enough of the 'how' of his existence to know that, instead of death being a last venture on an untried existence, it is an entire cessation of his individual existence. This is the broad ground I take. I hold that the logical consequence of Secularism is the denial, the absolute denial, of a Providence." Once more: "If the position of the theologian is to be taken—if you are to admit his proposition of the infinite power, the infinite wisdom, the infinite kindness, and goodness, and constant interference of God, you at once get a fatal barrier in the way of all your Secular work."

Such was the tenor of this extraordinary discussion,—such the opinions and spirit of these able and transparently sincere men. To despise such Atheism, or such Atheists, is to convict oneself of infinite arrogance, self-righteousness, and self-conceit. The only comments on this debate we have at present to offer are briefly these:—

1. That the God denied seems throughout to be the God of Christian supernaturalism or intuitionism rather than the God of comprehensive and scientific naturalism.

2. That the "religion" which cannot find respect, sympathy, and fellowship for such Atheists as men is precisely the religion which the world can most excellently and permanently dispense with.

A LETTER FROM MR. VOYSEY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—Your own editorial note at the foot of Mr. Samuel R. Honey's letter about the title of "Reverend," in THE INDEX of September 4, renders any explanation on my part nearly superfluous.

For the sake of the "weak brethren," if I may good-naturedly so designate such scrupulous people as Mr. Honey, let me inform him that I have not assumed the title of "Reverend" at all. It is a title conferred on me by the State; and I have some very good reasons for retaining it. Among other reasons, it is because it marks my real position as a citizen in the eyes of the law; namely, that I am a clergyman, and intend to remain a clergyman, of the Church of England.

It is, perhaps, not known in America that a man can only retire from this position by a voluntary legal process, and can only be deprived of it by law, on conviction of gross immorality.

On the occasion of my own condemnation by the Privy Council in 1871, numbers of ignorant persons made the mistake of supposing that I had been "unfrocked;" i.e., degraded from being a clergyman,—whereas I was only deprived of my income and office as Vicar of Healaugh. It is, therefore, of some importance, as evidence of a fact, that I should retain my legal status and title.

Moreover, although the position of a clergyman has some drawbacks, disqualifying him for a seat in Parliament, and debarring him from earning his bread at the English bar, or by commerce, yet there are certain other advantages and privileges belonging to the position which I am not at all inclined to give up. In addition to these reasons, I retain my position as a clergyman of the Church of England, in order to mark my determination not to join any other religious denomination, with which I might otherwise have been identified against my will.

The fate of the Church of England is not yet sealed, and may be very different from what her wisest and most severe critics anticipate. At present enslaved by Parliament, Parliament can release her at will. It is quite on the card that all dogmas will be abolished. In case of such an event, I should greatly bewail my desertion of my present rights.

Let me only add my hearty sympathy with Mr. Honey in his detestation of all priestly or clerical assumptions. But I hope the age is past in which it would be possible to confound the use of title conferred by the State with the long-exposed pretensions of ecclesiastical or sacerdotal authority. As Mr. Conway's position is entirely different from mine, I leave him to speak for himself. Meanwhile, I may say that in this country Mr. Conway never assumes the title of "Reverend."

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
CHARLES VOYSEY.
CAMDEN HOUSE, Dulwich, S. E., Sept. 22, 1873.

A LETTER FROM MR. JOHNSON.

We are very glad to have the privilege of publishing the following letter:—

SALEM, Oct. 5, 1873.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT,—I appreciate your candor in asking to be set right, if your notice of the essay read by me at the last meeting of the Free Religious Association misinterprets the definition of Religion therein proposed. But I shall hardly undertake the task; for, though your reading is certainly somewhat wide of my intent, I doubt if I can make the language plainer than as it now stands. A clear and careful statement is seldom, or never, helped by attempts at paraphrase or explanation. It should take its chances at recognition. Doubtless it is inevitable that the common mother-tongue be rendered by every reader, spite of all notes and interlinears, into the dialect of his own special experience.

The reference made in the essay to your thesis, that Religion is the effort of man to perfect himself, was, however, so slight and incidental that it seems but just to give you some further account of what was meant by it.

My criticism, you will recollect, was to the effect, not that the statement implied, of necessity, a narrow or one-sided belief on your part, but that it was inadequate as a formal definition of Religion. (I do not in fact pretend that any definition is not more or less so.) To this, as to all similar formulas, in which the only term recognized is "Man," I was careful to concede the largest margin for possible expansion of the meaning of that term beyond its ordinary use; leaving also an analogous margin to other formulas of an opposite tenor, in their use of the correlative term "God." There might well be, in the former case, I allowed, an intention on the definer's part, although unexpressed, to include within the idea of the Human that of a divine inheritance or manifestation of the Infinite. But this ideal completeness is surely not suggested, even if it is not denied, in the description of man's highest relations as an effort of his imperfection to arrive at perfection by its own powers alone. Here the forces relied on as creative of growth start from the lowest stages of it, and nothing higher or broader than each stage of attainment, as it arrives, enters in explanation of what it now is, or as ground of what it is to become. The less accounts for the greater, while the greater is needless to the less.

Now whatever latitude we may here have reason to accord to the definer's own conception of Man, the real question is whether the elements thus defined as imperfect give sufficient account of that upward attraction to the Unseen and Unknown, that sense of indefinite possibilities, that advancing moral and spiritual ideal, which Religion, if it means anything, affirms. Must there not be a form of polarity,—a mutual relation between the seeker for perfection and the Perfect itself, whose harmony it is that makes obedience and liberty to be one and the same? And if so, should not both realities be distinctly recognized in our definition? In other words, can Religion be fairly presented by what I have called unipolar formulas?

It is true that the reality of the Perfect may not be distinctly rejected in these formulas. In a very important sense, it cannot, in any case, be quite excluded by them. Perfect and Imperfect are correlative, and the very statement of the one implies the other. But this very necessity makes the matter worse; since what the unipolar definition, thus limited in its negative consequences, succeeds in doing is simply to cause man's relation to the Perfect to be regarded as a purely external one; as of a force self-moved towards it. And so we should approach new gulfs in that fictitious antithesis between God and Man which vitiates theology, and runs out one way into superstitious personalities, and the other way into blind negations.

I would, therefore, make Religion centre in an element which, far from perpetuating old distinctions of this nature, must represent an essential unity of Finite and Infinite. The common term for all intelligence is Mind. Itself the substance of all such relations as belong to religious sentiment, conviction, or action, it includes both sides, and calls for no other pole external to itself.

So far from believing the "express mention of God necessary to the definition of religion," I require neither of the terms, God or Man, for that purpose, but prefer to employ, in place of words ever apt to be used as mutually exclusive or liminary, a broader and more distinctly inclusive one; namely, Mind. Hence the statement that "Religion is the natural attraction of Mind as finite to Mind as infinite;" a statement, however, for which I certainly do not claim anything more than approximation to the truth; and I am thankful for all suggestions which may improve it.

That such essential unity of the Finite and Infinite, or their constant mutual implication in the movement of religion, would prove them "indistinguishable" in any sense that makes a polarity within their wholeness impossible,—is, to me, in no sense apparent. Not a branch of physical science but is full of symbols of this necessity of polar relations within every unit of positive force. To expel them from religion is to exclude religion from the sphere of science. In the realm of ideal purpose, they appear under a form correspondent to the grandeur of the aim. Inexhaustible resources implied on the one hand, and free aspiration on the other, in a unity which can never be essentially dissolved, nor mechanically divided,—are alike indispensable as grounds and guarantees of progress.

Whether this definition "derives religion from religare" (to bind or fasten again), or from some other word, or whether it more resembles the "Old Catholic," or the new Positivist statements of belief,—is, to me, immaterial. But it is not easy to see how there can be any more religation in an upward attraction proceeding from infinite light and law, than in dependence on the efforts of an imperfect being to perfect himself for all power to ascend the steps of growth. Effort is, of course, essential in either case; though the spontaneities of natural attraction are certainly as real an element of religion as any form of effort. But do the invitations of free space, and boundless living atmosphere ever opening before the soul, intimate bondage, that we should seek the sense of liberty solely in some upward push or self-originated boost of force from inferior stages of our life? I do not, of course, say that your definition necessarily involves this, and I know that you do not yourself believe in such inverted methods; but I would prefer avoiding a mode of definition which naturally suggests them.

My own definition, on the other hand, falls, you think, in not covering the cases of the materialists and atheists, to whom "the Infinite" is a term without meaning; classes to whose interest you have (perhaps somewhat excessively) conformed in the phraseology of your own. But the purpose of a definition is to be true, and adequate to the subject defined; not to cover every possible shade of opinion and belief. The classes referred to would, doubtless, be the last to concur in your objections, or, in fact, to accept any definition of religion as accurate, which should make that hated term include themselves. And as we have no dictionary authorized to settle the meaning of doctrinal terms, so no formulas can escape being interpreted by prejudices either in behalf of, or against, the words they seek to define.

The question whether a man admits that he believes in the Infinite, or not, is one thing; whether, as observers, we discover in his conduct that by such ideal faith he is unconsciously stirred and fed, even while denying it, is quite another, and a point of far greater moment. And if, judging in this broad way, I should affirm that I find no one destitute of the religious element, my definition of religion is, so far as I can see, quite competent to cover even the universal position. As for conforming our use of terms to the purpose of covering all meanings that may be given them by all classes of minds, I doubt if we shall find it conducive either to just definition, or to better mutual understanding.

One word more. I have stated that among my reasons for preferring Mind to Man, as centre of the religious ideal, is this: that while "Man," especially when distinctly defined as imperfect, requires (for completeness of statement) that God should be implied as correlative idea, while yet representing God as in a more or less external relation to the whole sense and experience of religion, the perfect having no other recognition than as an effort of the imperfect,—Mind, on the contrary, naturally includes both poles under one conception; perfect and imperfect alike lying within its all-embracing unity. "Self-perfecting Man," and "self-perfecting Mind," do not therefore express precisely the same idea, as definitions of religion; and if obliged to choose between them, I should certainly select the latter form.

I do not overlook your suggestion that Mind also is inadequate as a centre of unity; itself also demanding a correlative pole, whether this be found in matter, or reside in some substance as yet to us unknown. The "Philosophy of the Unconscious" well deserves to be studied. An ultimate ground of all things, whereof what we now call consciousness can afford but slight conception, belongs to the ideal of modern science and faith. But all this involves no negation of mind in the largest sense. No such ultimate ground is conceivable for man except in forms and terms provided by intelligence: not the intelligence of Man distinctively, as not-God; nor intelligence as confined to his sense of self-originated force,—but the intelligence of Mind, as the unity of "oversoul" with inward purpose and power. And it is in this sense that, whatever he believes or knows, whether as matter or any other form of being, is, in its ultimate, and can only be, a revelation in, and by, thought. Of religion in special, it would seem manifest that it at least cannot be conceived as ever existing, apart from the convictions and aspirations of mind.

Cordially yours, SAMUEL JOHNSON.

Every reader interested in the very important endeavor to make clear and just our modern conception of Religion, as a great fact of human life, will join with us in thanking Mr. Johnson for the above letter. It is of no small moment to weigh well the words to be used in such an endeavor; and the contribution of every competent mind towards a finally acceptable definition should be gratefully received.

Without entering on any further discussion of Mr. Johnson's definition, we would respectfully inquire whether he does not unintentionally belittle ours, when he refers to it as "the description of man's highest relations as an effort of his imperfection to arrive at perfection by its own powers alone"? Does he not think, as we do, that the words italicized by us indicate a limitation gratuitously and incorrectly read into our definition, and not properly inferable from it? The "effort," surely, may be either "by its own powers," or by other and higher powers: the definition criticised implies the latter just as much as the former, and leaves the question between them open. The fact of the "effort" is the essential fact of Religion; the explanation of this fact, whether by the "Finite," or by the "Infinite," is a matter of speculation on which thinkers are not agreed. The difference between our two definitions is not, therefore, exactly as Mr. Johnson conceives it: for his assumes in terms the existence and attractiveness of the Infinite Perfect, while ours does not (as he thinks) even verbally exclude it, but merely leaves the fact to stand as it is, whether or not this fact implies the Infinite Perfect. In our opinion it conduces greatly to clearness of thought to separate the definition of a fact from all inferences and assumptions whatever, even if they are really correct.

ENGLISH IS HALF German and half Latin. It holds a position among the principal languages now used in scientific intercourse very like that which was held by French between Latin and several modern languages. The discovery of America doubled its use, and the movement of populations in both hemispheres fixes its destiny. It is now spoken in Great Britain by 31 millions, in North America by 47, in Australia and New Zealand by 2 millions—in all, 77 millions of people. German is spoken at the present time by 62 millions, French by 40-1.2 millions. Then De Candolle estimates that, as the population of England doubles in fifty years, and that of the United States, Australia, &c., in half that time, the probable number of English-speaking people in the year 1970 will be 800 millions, when, at their present rate of increase, German will be spoken by 124 millions and French by 69-1.2 millions. Moreover, English is much more spoken in Africa and in Southern Asia than all other European languages put together. The language of more than three-quarters of Christendom, and of the most active and the most reading people, will necessarily be the one into which all valuable works in other tongues will be translated, that in which they will have many times more readers than in their originals. Already, as our author remarks, German works are largely read by French-speaking people in English translations. As this goes on, English must become the dominant, if not the universal, language so far as science and literature are concerned.—Nation.

AFTER A SHARP contest, the running of the street cars on Sundays was permitted in Philadelphia, with the proviso that bells on the horses were to be omitted. Until recently this proviso was observed, but on some of the lines the jingling of bells disturbs the devotions of the piously inclined, and they are asking that the whole business be stopped.—St. Louis Globe.

Communications.

OUTSIDE OR INSIDE OF CHRISTIANITY.

F. E. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—As I am one of your later subscribers, very likely you have said much in explanation of your position which I have not seen; but as there must be many later readers like myself, will you please reply to the following considerations?

There are three principal reasons, as I understand it, why you stand outside of Christianity, neither of which, from anything that I have seen, appears to have validity.

1. You would be UNDERSTOOD.

Are you understood? Are there not thousands, who, seeing your denunciation of Christianity, suppose you to denounce what you do not? There is no questioning this. How can you place yourself in opposition to that religion which is LOVE, and to the influence of so pure and true a life as that of Jesus, and not be misunderstood? Suppose the records are faulty; that Jesus taught some doctrines which you do not believe,—yet, according to all accounts that we have, he was the divinest man, and he taught that religion consists in the love and practice of good. He taught "the power of a pure soul to achieve all things by the power of purity alone." Theodore Parker says that he taught the "absolute religion." Yet you refuse to call yourself a Christian, and you make war upon the influence of such a soul. It has been several times demonstrated in my presence that you are misunderstood in your present position. So far as my observation extends, you are more grossly misunderstood than you would be if you stood inside. I conclude, therefore, that there is some explanation for your course, which I have not seen.

2. You would be EFFICIENT.

That is, you would find a platform where all men, of all nations and opinions, may meet together for religious search and endeavor. But how is it possible to reach men by standing outside of all that they have counted sacred, or beautiful, and true? Is not the most effective place to reach men on their own ground? What can you do with Catholics by sweeping all their convictions and associations away in the beginning? Are men readily won by an assumption of superiority which goes so far as to break up all common standing ground? Why not include all, instead of excluding? If you cannot eat soup out of the same bowl, may you not eat it at the same table? or at least in the same house? Why go so far? Is not the essential part of all religions true? If man has lived these ages without attaining to anything worth recognizing, what ground is there for hope in the future? This profound separation with the past, and assumption of sudden light, seems to me to sacrifice the sympathy of the very people it is desirable to reach, and operate against that efficiency which you desire.

3. You would be RIGHT.

Independent of effectiveness, and the understandings of men, you would be right. It is safe to say that to be a Christian is to be Christ-like. The gist of his doctrine was that love of God with all the heart, and of neighbors as ourselves, was the substance of religion. He illustrated this doctrine by his life. He was pure, affectionate, and so devoted to the interests of mankind as to die for his convictions. This, according to radical research and exegesis. Do you teach a different doctrine? If not, is it wrong, in this age, and this country where he is so tenderly loved, and his religion so dear to millions of hearts, to say that you are not a Christian?

It seems wrong to me. The sweetness of your own religion is that very LOVE which Jesus taught as religion, and which is fairly called Christianity. If he believed in endless pain, and the approaching judgment,—ideas common to his countrymen,—this circumstance should not make us less willing to receive the substance of his doctrine. Neither this belief, nor any other incidental belief, can justly be held up before men to conceal his beautiful life, and those sentences which contain the substance. Right demands fair treatment, even of the son of Joseph and Mary.

In Nature we have the new, but always growing out of the old, and closely related to it. We have this in history. We are likely always to have it. Not at one bound does one ascend Mont Blanc, nor will the world so ascend—can I say Mount Zion? When, therefore, you cut off the old with one swing of the axe, or cut it so nearly off, you weaken hope of the new. I am myself a radical—have been squeezed—but from my stand-point you are injuring radicalism in religion. And hence I would like such an answer to these queries as will help me to more sympathy with your course.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass.

[The impossibility of finding room in THE INDEX for all the excellent articles we have received must be our apology for delaying publication of the above, and other communications like it. We respect the spirit of this gentle expostulation, and offer a brief reply.

1. It is true that we wish to be "understood." But it is more important to be "right;" and if we are right, it may be necessary to be misunderstood by many. We have never denounced all that the word Christianity is made to cover, nor all that it properly covers; on the contrary, we have denounced only what we consider the untrue and the hurtful in it. Love, certainly, we could not denounce. But is love all that Christianity means in history? Does it not also mean hate, cruelty, persecution, falsehood, evil of many kinds? Does not H. B. studiously pass by the darker side of Christianity—its intolerance of unbelief, its hostility to freedom of thought and speech, its invincible repugnance to new and democratic ideas? The disciple of Jesus cannot discriminate in his master's teachings; but he who is "outside" can, accepting the good, rejecting the bad. All this ought to be understood, even if it is not; and the best way to make it understood seems to involve the necessity of being misunderstood ourselves—a minor consideration.

2. We would gladly be "efficient" in the cause of universal brotherhood. But this would be impossible if we failed to point out the higher ground on which alone universal brotherhood is practicable, namely, the ground whence all special religions are seen to be antagonistic to it. Surely we assume no personal superiority of any kind; we only point out the superiority of ideas which all should aspire to practise in common life. From the common table of HUMANITY we would gladly eat with all, taking cheerfully the lowest seat; but it is better even to starve than to sit with those who eat at the table of an exclusive and intolerant religion which is inhumane to all but its own disciples. We would feed on a past older than Christianity,—old as man, old as God, new as the ever-living present, new because freedom and truth are new forever.

3. Yes, gladly would we be "right." That is the main thing. For this reason we cannot acquiesce in any view of Christianity which makes it consist in simple love of God and Man. To believe that is to be wrong. Christianity includes faith in Jesus as the Christ, and obedience to him, as if he were in fact "the way, the truth, and the life." No matter whether we are understood or not, efficient or not: to that truth we must be true, and so be right. Whoever can show us that Jesus is indeed the Christ that he claimed to be, will convert us heart and soul to Christianity; and then our "outside" days will be over. Until then, we remain outside of Christianity simply and solely because we are not a Christian. If this protest put into act helps any one to understand what Christianity really is, it will not be in vain.—Ed.]

ARE PERFECT MEN PERFECT VILLAINS?

EDITOR INDEX:

Your definition of religion as "the effort of man to perfect himself," involves me in great embarrassment. I enclose you a prayer which I composed some years ago, and which was published at the solicitation of some of my friends. It has met the approval of Jew and Gentile; and, although some have objected that it does not ask in Christ's name, the answer has always been that Christ, in the only form of prayer which he is said to have given, did not wind up with "and this we ask for Christ's sake," yet I have no objection, if they think it will give more potency to the prayer, to their adding anything to it that they may think proper. In this prayer it is asked "that men may attain unto the perfection of their natures." To attain he must use effort, and therefore, according to Mr. Abbot, he performs a religious act. Of course, the only thing he can perfect is his own nature; and hence my embarrassment. Without discussing mooted subjects, there is no question, whatever may be the reason, that our natures greatly vary. One man is ambitious, another covetous, another syrophantic, another lustful, and so on. And these qualities or attributes are variously compounded in each individual. The perfection of a prize-fighter is not the perfection of a George Fox. Yet, if each man is to perfect himself, his notion of perfection will be dependent upon his dominant faculties. And so while we shall have some few perfectly conscientious, we shall have, as we have at present, the bolder part perfect villains through greed of gain and lust of power—the lust of power to satisfy the greed of gain; and with this, among weaker natures, syrophanticism, and every low and mean attribute more perfected.

Will you please to descend from generals to particulars, and state how this religion is to be applied to render it practicable? There seem to be certain faculties which we should like to see annihilated; but annihilation is not perfection.

R. E. P.

A PRAYER OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

Grant, most gracious God, we beseech thee, that the governments of this world may be so settled and established upon such just, wise, and generous principles, that civil, moral, and religious liberty may be secured to all peoples. That the down-trodden and oppressed of the earth may be enabled to rise, and that they may be placed above want; and that famine and disease, and war and pestilence, and crime and misery may be banished the earth forever. That the darkness of error and of superstition may be dissipated from every mind, and that the light of truth, of knowledge, of wisdom, and of learning, may irradiate every understanding. That woman may be raised to that position for which thou hast qualified her; that the avocations of life, as fitted for her, may be opened up unto her, and that she may receive the just reward of her labors. That the functions for which thou hast constituted the sexes may be looked upon with honor, esteem, and respect, and that the propagation of offspring may be under the control of a wise intelligence.

That all thy peoples may worship thee in spirit and in truth; that they may fill the earth with thy praise as it is already with thy glory; that they may attain unto the perfection of their natures, the fruition of all those joys and pleasures for which thou hast rendered them susceptible; and that, passing their time here in brotherly love, in peace, quiet, and contentment, endeavoring the welfare of each other, in the study of thy laws, and in the contemplation of the glories of thy universe, resigned and submissive to thy will, may they reach a ripe old age, and pass from hence calmly and placidly, in the blessed hope of a continued existence, through the abundance of thy goodness and mercy. And these things we ask for thy creatures' sakes, for we are thine, and all that we have, and possess, and enjoy, are thine, and of and from thee; blessed be thy name forever, for thou only art to be worshipped and glorified, and unto thee is to be ascribed all might, power, majesty, and dominion, forever and ever.

[The difficulty of our correspondent seems quite gratuitous, in the light of his own "prayer." What does he mean by praying that "men may attain unto the perfection of their natures"? That they may become more "ambitious, covetous, aycophantic, lustful," &c.? Of course not. Perfection cannot mean merely the development of every diseased tendency of human nature, but rather the development of all its tendencies in healthy and natural proportions. The former, surely, is the very idea of imperfectness. No faculty should be annihilated, but all should be regulated; that is, reduced under the rule or law of right reason. The perfection of a prize-fighter, for instance, would involve the abandonment of prize-fighting and all other brutality, and the cultivation of his humane tendencies. Without "descending" from any imagined heights, we venture to suggest that our correspondent give us credit for using the word "perfect" in as rational a sense as he uses the word "perfection" in his own prayer.—Ed.]

THE JUDICIAL OATH.

"We demand that the judicial oath, in the courts, and in all other departments of the government, shall be abolished; and that simple affirmation, under the pains and penalties of perjury, shall be established in its stead."

In connection with the above "Demand of Liberalism," the following extracts from The Pilgrim and the Shrine appear to me sufficiently interesting and appropriate to merit being placed before the readers of THE INDEX:—

"But it is our system of judicial swearing that has struck me as so exceedingly curious.

"His evidence was essential and satisfactory, but the lawyer who was on the other side very nearly succeeded in rejecting it, and was only foiled by the singular wit of the witness. He was reputed to be an 'infidel,' whatever that may be, and on his entering the witness-box, the counsel stopped the clerk who was about to administer the oath, saying that he wished to ask the witness a few questions about his religious opinions.

"The witness observed that when sworn he should be most happy to answer any questions about the case before the court, but that his opinions concerned nobody but himself; they were not evidence, and nothing he could say unsworn could be evidence; he hoped, therefore, his honor, the judge, would save him from any irrelevant curiosity.

"The judge, however, answered—what seemed to me a most reasonable appeal—by intimating that it was necessary to answer the counsel's questions.

"Perhaps then," said the witness, 'I may be informed if—not being sworn—I am bound to speak the truth?'

"Not legally," said the judge.

"Witness thanked the judge, and, turning to the counsel, said, 'Now, then, sir, you may just ask me what you please, and I'll endeavor to frame my answers to suit you!'

"Seeing that an examination under such circumstances would be a farce, the lawyer requested that the oath might be administered. This done he again commenced:—

"Now that you are legally bound to speak the truth, I desire to know if you believe in the New Testament, on which you have been sworn?"

"Turning to the judge with an expression of mock humility, witness said, 'I pray your honor's protection.'

"The judge told him to answer the question.

"But, your honor, it's not fair. He wants to make me commit myself, because he knows my evidence will tell against him."

"Exactly so," said the counsel, blandly smiling.

"What," asked the judge, 'do you mean, by making you commit yourself?'

"Why, your honor, he wants me to disqualify myself for being sworn as a witness, by acknowledging that I believe in the Divine authority of a book that contains a positive injunction against swearing at all!"

"On hearing this most unexpected reply, the lawyer answered the judge's inquiring smile by throwing himself back in his seat, and declining to oppose the witness.

"Does it not seem strange that the very truthfulness which would induce a man to acknowledge his disbelief should be used to discredit him?"

"It seems to me absolutely certain that a little advance in the public intelligence will cause the oath to be discarded altogether. As an appeal to the supernatural it really means nothing, and as a legal contract it might be made equally binding, and less objectionable."

Selected for THE INDEX by MRS. J. R. WALKER.

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 27, 1873.

CORRUPTERS OF YOUTH.

In the time of Socrates, the priests of the religion then and there prevailing taught several notions of a very peculiar sort in regard to the Divine character and attributes.

They described several supernatural personages, various in their relation to, and action upon, mankind, but each Divine, and each entitled to honor, reverence, and obedience; to prayer, and public acknowledgment as God.

The characteristics and the actions attributed to these gods often varied very much from what men regarded as rectitude, justice, and goodness. But the priests would not, on this account, admit any abatement of the claim of these deities to reverence and obedience. It was assumed that the gods had a right to act as they pleased, and that men had no right to criticize them.

Even the chief of these deities, Jupiter—sometimes called "the father of gods and men"—was jealous, passionate, and wrathful, unjust, and vindictive. His kindness to men was bestowed by favoritism, irrespective of good or evil in their characters, and he doomed many, without pity, to endless misery in hell.

Since Socrates taught the justice and goodness of God (thus denying, by implication, the divinity of any being who was unjust and cruel), the priesthood combined to accuse him, and caused him to be condemned and executed as a criminal. Strange to say, their accusation against Socrates, founded expressly on this teaching, was that he was "a corrupter of youth!"

We now see, not only that Socrates was right, deserving honor instead of punishment for the teaching in question, but that the real corrupters of youth were the priests who opposed him, and that such a religion as they taught necessarily tended to, and produced, corruption of manners and morals.

How is it then that we, approving Socrates, and condemning those priests, accept and follow other priests who teach, under the name of Christianity, some of the worst of the errors which Socrates contended against?

Our clergy teach, as the Greek priests did, that there are several personages, each of whom is to be worshipped as God.

Our clergy teach, as the Greek priests did, that the Divine favor is to be obtained only through blood offered in sacrifice.

Our clergy teach, as the Greek priests did, that a good life does not avail without sacrificial blood, and that this blood will secure acceptance, even to one who has led an evil life.

Our clergy teach, as the Greek priests did, that it is a sin to doubt or criticize the legends respecting the Divinity, which they present as divinely inspired; and this although their legends declare, as the Greek ones did—

That God chose a certain nation to enjoy his special favor and protection, and not only left the rest of mankind comparatively disregarded, but expressly commanded the favored people to assail and expel, or even exterminate by indiscriminate slaughter, some of the other nations.

That God once commanded a falsehood to be told, deliberately deceiving a man expressly to lure him to his destruction.

That He once commanded a father to kill his own child.

That He once begot a son by intercourse with a woman.

That He is habitually jealous and wrathful, and that He has often spared the guilty, and punished the innocent.

Their only reason for teaching these monstrous and incredible things is that it is so asserted in one or another of the books, often of unknown authorship, which they have agreed to call "sacred."

These books, collected by unknown persons in far distant ages, not only make, of themselves, no claim to sacredness or infallibility, or even unity of design or purport, and not only fail altogether of external evidence sufficient to establish for them either unity, or sacredness, or infallibility, but the internal evidence gained by comparison of their various parts with each other completely disproves the qualities claimed for them by the clergy.

Such examination disproves the unity of the collection of writings called "The Bible," since the history and laws of two different religions have been bound together in the volume so named.

Such examination disproves the sacredness of this volume, since sundry of its authors attribute limitation, imperfection, and unworthiness of various kinds to God.

Such examination disproves the infallibility of this volume, since its various parts often contradict themselves and each other.

If the Athenian priests could fairly be called "corrupters of youth" for doing these three things, namely,—attributing imperfection and unworthiness to the Deity; demanding that He be honored and revered in spite of these defects and vices; and crying out against the teachers of a purer theology and religion, as dangerous men,—then the clergy of our time, since they unite in doing these same things, are truly "corrupters of youth," and of the whole community. Their acknowledged service to the community in other ways cannot equal, nor even approach, the injury they do in the regular exercise of their profession by the constant inculcation of the doctrines above named.

OBSERVER.

JUDAS ISCARIOT.

MR. ABBOT:—

While present not long since at a Methodist revival, and the last of its series of meetings, in which, as customary, the members of the church were solicited to speak of their religious "experiences," my attention was somewhat excited by hearing one of the leading members make the following remark:—

"Where would we have been if Christ hadn't died?"

The thought came to me, on hearing this, that, if Judas could have been present, or had the expression been made while it was possible for him to have heard it, he too might have said, "Where would you be if I hadn't betrayed him?" and, accepting the expression made by this lover of Jesus to the justification of his deed, does it not seem natural that he should be justified in being jealous of his share of Orthodox divinity?

Certainly, here is, in the name of Judas, if there is any justice in such an expression as that made by this member of the church, a legitimate call for dues of long standing. If justice be included in the "blessed plan of salvation," it follows, as a matter wholly unavoidable, that, if this "plan" had been premeditated by God, it is to be presumed that He assigned by appointment the parts to the several actors, who, in the fulness of the time selected, figured most conspicuously. To this end Judas performed his mission of betrayal; next, the Jewish rabble performed theirs in putting Christ to death. To each, then, some credit must attach itself for thus having carried out successfully a mission, without which the "plan of salvation" could hardly exist. In other words, Christ might have lived to an advanced age, and have died a natural death, for which, no thanks from Orthodox.

To those men whose knowledge of God has led them to conceive views directly the opposite to those of the Church belief, and who cannot, for a moment, think Him to have ever been anything less than infiniteness of Love, Justice, and Wisdom, such exultant and boastful expressions, though made ignorantly of what they involve, are the means of creating a disgust that is only exceeded by their pity for those who make them.

I once labored under the impression that the benefit the human family have received from Christ was owing not a little to his having once lived. But if in his death mankind have a cause for rejoicing; if in his death was fulfilled a part of the "divine plan," by enduring which in the sight of his enemies he was alone worthy of gratitude, and if on his death so much depended, why did not the "divine" pleasure manifest itself in the selection of one of less worth to the living, and thus vindicate in a measure the statement that God is the "God of the living"? Or, better still, if so much depended upon the death of a righteous man,—if through the atonement of one man the future of man was to be blessed for all eternity,—why had not all this taken place before?

Even a thousand years seem sufficiently long for God to have completed his "plans." Why wait three or four thousand years, and, in the meantime, permit untold millions of the human race to be cut off by death, for the want of only one person to make good the terms of "salvation"?

In all that length of time, how many hearts would have responded to the praise of God,—how many souls would have been gathered in the spiritual harvest, that now are lost in continual death, if we are to believe Orthodoxy!

To conclude, I see no possible way of indorsing the "blessed plan of salvation," but by electing a fit person in the "Trinity," in the person of Judas; and I would also urge a remembrance of the Jewish rabbi's.

Very truly,

CASTLETON, ILL.

C. W. NEWTON.

CLASSIFICATION OF THEISTS.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—You take issue with Frederic R. Honey when he divides the believers in the existence of a God into "dogmatists" and "intuitionists," and you say there is a third class who believe in God through a process of scientific reasoning.

May I ask you to indicate such a process of reasoning into which "intuition" does not, in some shape, enter.

An answer to this question may involve you in writing a lengthy article, but it occurs to me that the importance of the subject well merits it.

Yours,

NEWPORT, R. I., October 2, 1873.

[Mr. Honey will find in the Index Tract No. 11 an answer to his inquiry. Any criticism of this lecture, if of reasonable length, will be welcome to our columns.—Ed.]

FATHER HYACINTHE insists on still remaining a Catholic, and believes that he can do so. Protestantism is not sufficiently churchly for him. In his fifth lecture at Geneva he said that for the building of a reformed Catholic church there were three plans: "The first would reconstitute it on the basis of simple Deism. This he rejected, because Deism was only a philosophy, and not a religion. The second was to accept Protestantism as a solution of the problem; but Protestantism had not preserved enough of the church. For him more symbols were necessary. He wanted the chain of efficacious sacraments, embracing the whole life of man from baptism to extreme unction; he wanted a historical hierarchy and a visible centre of unity, such as is now at Rome, but might be elsewhere in the future." It remains to be seen if this scheme of church reorganization is feasible.

Advertisements.

GENERAL NOTICE.

On August 8, 1872, I contracted for the two best advertising pages of THE INDEX for the current year. "No advertisements objectionable to the editor to be taken." For terms apply to

ASA K. BUTTS, 36 Dey St., New York.

No improper advertisements, no advertisements of patent medicines, and no advertisements known to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be hereafter admitted into THE INDEX. All advertisements accepted before this date will be allowed to run their time. No cuts admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.
TOLEDO, O., June 21, 1873.

THE INSIDE HISTORY
OF THE INDEX ASSOCIATION.

By Francis E. Abbot.

This is a handsomely printed pamphlet of 54 pages, containing the full explanation of the recent "INDEX troubles," which was submitted to the stockholders of the Index Association at their Second Annual Meeting, June 7, 1873. It is hoped that every one who has read the statements of the other side will in fairness read this also. Price, post-paid, 25 cents. Address the Author, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER!

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.

THE INDEX TRACT NO. 7, "Compulsory Education," is out of print, and therefore orders for it cannot be filled at present. But it is intended to reprint it before long, and all parties ordering a COMPLETE SET will be furnished with it without extra charge as soon as reprinted.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Report, in pamphlet form, of the Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association for 1873 will be published Sept. 1st.

It contains full proceedings of the meeting, including Essays by Samuel Johnson on "FREEDOM IN RELIGION," and by John Weiss on "RELIGION IN FREEDOM." Speeches by O. B. Frothingham, W. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, S. Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, Lucrèce Mott, and the Annual Report of the Executive Committee.

Price, 35 cents a copy; in packages of four or more, 25 cents each. It can be obtained by addressing the undersigned at New Bedford, Mass., or, in Boston, of A. Williams & Co., and at Long's.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OR LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

Now is the Time to Subscribe
FOR

The Truth Seeker,

An eight-page Quarto, printed on fine Book Paper,
DEVOTED TO
SCIENCE, MORALS, FREE THOUGHT, FREE INQUIRY, AND THE DIFFUSION OF LIBERAL SENTIMENTS.

"Come now, and let us reason together," let us hear all sides; let us divest ourselves of prejudice and the effects of early education; let us "prove all things, and hold fast that which is good."

PUBLISHED MONTHLY BY THE LIBERAL ASSOCIATION OF PARIS, ILL.
Terms, 50 cents per year; Seven Copies to one address for $3; Twelve Copies to one address, $5—payable in advance.

BEGINNING SEPTEMBER, 1873.
Specimen numbers for examination sent free upon application. In view of the amount of original reading matter furnished, it is the cheapest publication in America. Every Liberal mind should read it. There are certainly in the country friends enough of progress and mental freedom to sustain it. The tax is extremely light.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
Paris, Ill.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

PORTLAND SCIENTIFIC MEETING.—Extra TRIBUNE No. 10, eight pages, now ready, contains a complete report of the Portland Meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science; illustrated in the same style as the previous extras of THE TRIBUNE Series. Extra No. 11 will also contain letters describing Deep Sea Drilling, and the work and discoveries of the U. S. Fish Commission. Price ten cents per copy.

The Hayden Expedition Series of Letters will shortly be issued in an Extra.
The first series of Nine Extra Sheets, containing over fifty Lectures and one hundred and thirty Engravings, and Credit Mobilier Report, for fifty cents. Address

THE TRIBUNE, New York.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED.

A Practical Book, one that Architects, Builders and Carpenters cannot afford to be without, entitled Detail Cottage and Constructive Architecture.

Containing seventy-six FULL PLATES, twenty plates more than before offered in a similar work for Ten Dollars.

PUBLISHED UNDER DIRECTION OF A. J. BICKNELL.

Showing a great variety of designs for cornices, brackets, windows and window-caps, doors, pilasters, porches, chimneys, observatories, towers, chimney-tops, balconies, canopies, scrolls, gables and sawed ornaments, fences, stairs, newels, architraves, mantels, plaster finish, &c., &c., including forty-five perspectives, elevations, and plans of modern designs for cottages, with details, and eighteen elevations of summer houses, villas, seaside cottages and country houses, together with fourteen designs for streets and store fronts, with inside finish for stores and banks; also, framing for dwellings, barns, exhibition buildings, roofs, bridges, &c., &c., making in all a practical book for architects, builders, carpenters, and all who contemplate building or remodelling wood, stone or brick buildings. One large quarto volume. Sent free by mail or express on receipt of price, $10.

Bicknell's Village Builder and Supplement.

THE VILLAGE BUILDER shows elevations and plans for cottages, villas, suburban residences, farm-houses, stables and carriage-houses, store-fronts, school-houses, churches, court-houses and a model jail. Also exterior and interior details for public and private buildings, with approved forms for contracts and specifications, containing fifty-five plates, drawn to scale, giving the style and cost of building in different sections of the country. Revised Edition with three additional plates, showing inside finish for stores, banks and insurance offices, and two elevations and plans for low-priced dwellings; also, a variety of details added to several plates. Quarto volume, issued Feb. 1, 1873. The SUPPLEMENT contains twenty plates, showing eighteen modern and practical designs for country and suburban residences of moderate cost, with elevations, plans, sections, and a variety of details, all drawn to scale. Also, a full set of specifications, with approved form of contract and estimates of cost. The two books in one volume. Price $12.
Parties desiring the Supplement only will be supplied, post-paid, on receipt of $5.

Architecture.

By CUMMINGS AND MILLER.

A practical book on architectural details; containing over one thousand designs and illustrations showing the manner of constructing cornices, door-ways, porches, windows, verandas, railings, French roofs, observatories, piazzas, bay-windows, cut-stone work, various styles of modern finish and street-fronts of houses, stores, &c., &c. One large quarto volume. Price, post-paid, $10.

Modern American Architecture.

By CUMMINGS AND MILLER.

Containing designs and plans for villas, farm-houses, school-houses, cottages, city residences, churches, &c. Also trussed roofs, interior store finish, and many exterior details. In one large volume, bound in cloth, fifty-four plates, price $10.

Loth's Practical Stair-Build-er.

A complete treatise on the art of building stairs and hand-rails, designed for carpenters, builders and stair-builders. Illustrated with thirty original plates. By G. EDWARD LOTH, professional stair-builder. One large quarto volume, bound in cloth. Price $10.

Designs for Front Doors.

Embracing a variety of front entrance doors, both double and single, of original conception, of every grade, from the plain door for the cottage to the elegant and costly door for the mansion or villa, together with eighteen designs of interior architraves; also, several designs of irregular interior ornamental architraves and exterior entrance finish, canopies, &c., all of modern design. By G. B. CROFF, architect. Twenty-two large plates, extra Morocco cloth. Price, post-paid, $5. Sent by mail or express, pre-paid, on receipt of the price. Address

THE TRIBUNE, New York.

Walt Whitman's Books.

LEAVES OF GRASS. New Edition. 40pp. Bound. $2.
AS A STRONG BIRD ON PINIONS FREE. Just issued. 40pp. Bound. $2.
DEMOCRATIC VISTAS. Political Essay. 70pp. 75 cents.
Also a few copies of John Burroughs's NOTES ON WALT WHITMAN AS POET AND PERSON, $1.
THOS. O'KANE, PUBLISHER, 130 Nassau Street, New York.

The town of GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., is the most thriving town in the West for its size and age. It stands at the head of steam navigation on the Grand river, and in the midst of a fertile country.

Its manufacturing facilities are not to be surpassed by any town in the country, East or West, as the rapids in the Grand river here give it practically an unlimited water power. The facilities for shipping manufactured goods to all parts of the United States and Canada are unrivalled, except by our most metropolitan cities, as no less than seven railroads centre here, and more are in process of construction. A glance at a map of isothermal lines shows that Grand Rapids enjoys a much milder climate than many places farther south. The great fruit region of Western Michigan lies at her doors. Quits within the city limits is a gypsum mine extensive enough to supply the world for centuries. But the town has found, and for a dozen years to come will find, its main source of prosperity in the lumber interest and kindred manufactures.

It is the depot and outlet of the immense lumber region of North Western Michigan. The variety, extent and quality of the lumber are what have made Grand Rapids the most notable place in the country for the manufacture of Household Furniture. The great house of NELSON, MATTER & CO. ships the most finished and elegant furniture to all parts of America. They have, the past season, made large shipments to the far South and to California. They have recently built one of the largest factories in the country, fitted with the latest improved machinery and situated near an immense hardwood timbered forest. Thus they are enabled to compete with any market.

GRAND RAPIDS is beautifully situated on rolling land, in a very healthy region, and is supplied with nearly all the conveniences of the most metropolitan city, such as gas, street railways, and its water works are now in process of erection. The public schools are excellent, and naturally there is a large and influential element of Freethinkers, and one which is increasing rapidly. An agent of THE INDEX here last year obtained over twenty subscribers in a short time. But time and space would fail us to enumerate the attractions of this thriving city. Any one desiring further information may address HENRY MILLER, REAL ESTATE AND LOAN AGENT, Grand Rapids, Mich., or ASA K. BUTTS, 36 Dey Street, New York.

Elegant Juvenile Books

FOR THE FALL TRADE.

I.

CHATTERBOX.

New volume for 1873. With a beautiful CHROMO LITHOGRAPH FRONTISPECE.
Quarto. 412pp. Boards, Handsome Colored Cover, $1.50. Same in cloth, Full Gilt Side and Back, $2.50.

This publication has attained an unprecedented popularity, both in this country and in England. It is profusely and handsomely illustrated, and the stories, sketches, etc., are selected with the greatest care for the instruction as well as the amusement of children. It is sufficient to say that those who have seen the previous volumes that Vol. V. is fully equal to its predecessors.

II.

LITTLE FOLKS.

NEW FALL VOLUME.

A Companion to CHATTERBOX. With Chromo Lithograph Frontispiece.
Quarto. 412pp. Boards, Colored Cover, $1.50. Same in cloth, Silver and Gilt, $2.50.

One of the most attractive books for children ever published. It contains many stories, legends, and narratives, facts from Natural History, and other reading calculated to amuse, instruct, and make children happy.

Beautiful Illustrations on Every Page.

III.

SUNDAY.

Reading for the Young. With a beautiful CHROMO LITHOGRAPH FRONTISPECE.
Quarto. Uniform with CHATTERBOX. Handsome Colored Cover, $1.50.

All who are interested in making the Sabbath a bright and happy day, as well as a sacred one to children, will be pleased with this new publication. Sunday-school teachers and others who wish to secure wholesome Sunday literature for the young will find this book exactly suited to their purpose. It contains full and readable material for use in the Sunday-school or at home.

IV.

THE CHILDREN'S PRIZE.

New Volume for 1873. With Chromo Lithograph Frontispiece.

Small Quarto. Boards, Colored Cover, 75 cents. Full of rich engravings, stories, sketches, poetry, music, etc., suitable for the education and instruction of children.

The American News Co.,

Are the exclusive Agents for the above books.

Newest and Best

MUSIC BOOKS!

DITSON & CO. publish 1000 Music Books suited to every taste and every occasion. Descriptive catalogues sent free. Among the most recent and best are:—

FOUR OF SINGING. $1.00
For High Schools and Seminaries.

CHOICE TRIOS. $1.00
For High Schools and Seminaries.

THE STANDARD. $1.50
The Banner Church Music Book of the season.

THE RIVER OF LIFE. 25
Unequaled in Variety. Uneexcelled in Quality. A Sabbath-school Song Book by 40 Composers.

CHEERFUL VOICES. 50
L. O. Emerson's Latest School Song Book.

THE ORGAN AT HOME. $2.50
Undoubtedly the best Collection for Reed Organs.

DEVOTIONAL CHIMES. 75
Neat, Complete, Perfect. For Social Meetings.

All are Choice Books. Already in great demand. Sent, post-paid, for retail price.

Oliver Ditson & Co.,

BOSTON.

Charles E. Ditson & Co.,
711 Broadway, New York.

The Great Family Newspaper.

THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE.

Which publishes all the news.
Which is honest and independent in all things.
Which instructs and educates its readers at the same time that it gives them the news.
Which reports the best thoughts and opinions of leading men, as well as the actions of others.

Which published the only full and accurate reports of all the new and valuable scientific lectures of the past year, making a complete library at merely nominal cost.

Which gave a complete and adequate account of the transactions of the American Association for the Advancement of Science at its recent annual meeting at Portland, Me., and republished the same in a TRIBUNE Extra Sheet.

Which published, entire, Agassiz's great series of lectures on the Method of Creation, the final conclusive scientific answer to the Darwinian theory.

Which has reported fully and faithfully, during the past year, the lectures of Tyndal on Light; of John Weiss on Shakspeare; of Wendell Phillips on Art; of Prof. Young on Astronomy; Youmans on Science; and of Bret Harte, Parton, and Mark Twain, on lighter subjects.

Which published Beecher's Yale theological lectures in full—eleven practical sermons to young ministers.

Which has the most complete and intelligent foreign correspondence of any paper in the United States.

Which carries on no quarrels with its rivals, and excludes mere personal issues from its columns, devoting the space thus rescued to news and more important matters.

Which recognizes agriculture as the foremost industry of the country, and prints more information of value to the farmers of the country than any other daily paper, if not more than any agricultural paper.

Which admits no impure or immoral advertisements to its columns, nor publishes anything which is not befitting a refined family circle.

Which is always the first, fullest, and most trustworthy in its news, sparing neither money, effort nor exertion to supply its readers complete information of every important event.

Which anticipated every other paper in the country, and the government itself, in the news of Custer's victories over the Sioux on the Yellowstone, and of the safety of the Polar survivors.

Which had the fullest, most graphic and intelligent accounts of the events of the recent great financial crisis.

Which disclosed the crimes and corruptions of the Brooklyn ring in advance of all other papers.

Which was never so prosperous and flourishing as at the present time, and which is erecting the finest newspaper office in the world.

THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE is published in three editions: Daily at $10 per year; Semi-Weekly at $3; and Weekly at $2 per year. For clubs the following extremely low rates for the Weekly have been adopted:—

TO ONE ADDRESS. (All at one Post-office.)
5 copies	$1.50 each.
10 "	1.25 "
20 "	1.10 "
30 "	1.00 "

And an extra to each club.

TO NAMES OF SUBSCRIBERS. (All at one Post-office.)
5 copies	$1.50 each.
10 "	1.25 "
20 "	1.10 "
30 "	1.00 "

And an extra to each club.

For clubs of Fifty THE SEMI-WEEKLY TRIBUNE will be sent as an extra copy.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY TRIBUNE.

1 copy, one year, 104 numbers..... $ 3.00
5 copies, or over, for each copy.... 2.50
10 copies (and one extra copy) for.... 25.00

NELSON, MATTER & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF

FURNITURE.

SALE-ROOM, 26 and 31 Canal Street.

WAREHOUSE, 3, 5, 7 and 9 Huron Street.

FACTORY, Foot of Lyon Street.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN.

THE MYSTERY OF MATTER

AND OTHER ESSAYS.

BY J. ALLANSON MITCHELL.

300 pages. 12mo. Cloth. $3.50. Postage 30 cents.

CONTENTS.—I. The Mystery of Matter. II. The Philosophy of Ignorance. III. The Antithesis of Faith and Right. IV. The Essential Nature of Religion. V. Christian Pantheism.

Address

A. K. BUTTS & CO.,

36 DEY STREET, NEW YORK.

A. K. Butts & Co.'s New Publications.

The Essence of Religion.

GOD THE IMAGE OF MAN.

Man's Dependence upon Nature the Last and Only Source of Religion.

Translated from the German of LEOPOLD FEUERBACH, by Professor A. Loos. 12mo. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cents.

To see man trembling and exulting at the sight of his own shadow touched Feuerbach to the soul. Feuerbach's Atheism was intended to restore man to himself. His Materialism was designed to prevent man's exalting in dreams. He denied the personal immortality of the soul—yes, he did, and for the same reason that he denied the personal existence of God. He wished to preserve the integrity of existence, to make mortality immortal, to breathe the spirit of eternity with time, to compress all humanity within human limits, and get the full benefit of this life while it lasted. He was jealous of the future life; he begrudged every drop of feeling that was spilled over the edge of the grave, and lost on the other side. This world was rich enough for him, and ought to be rich enough for anybody; and to see it neglected, misused, flouted, made him heart-sick. — Frothingham's Horticultural Hall Lecture, Jan. 1873.

Materialism :

ITS ANCIENT HISTORY, ITS RECENT DEVELOPMENT, ITS PRACTICAL BENEFICENCE.

By Dr. L. BUCHNER, author of "Force and Matter," "Man in Nature," &c., &c.

Translated from the author's manuscript by Professor A. Loos. 25 cts.

The Childhood of the World;

A SIMPLE ACCOUNT OF MAN IN EARLY TIMES.

By EDWARD CLODD, F.R.S.

12mo. Paper, 50 cents. Cloth, 75 cents.

Extract from a letter from Professor Max Müller to the author:—"I read your book with great pleasure. I have no doubt it will do good, and hope you will continue your work. Nothing spoils our temper so much as having to unlearn in youth, manhood, and even old age, so many things which we were taught as children. A book like yours will prepare a far better soil in the child's mind, and I was delighted to have it read to my children."

E. B. Tyler, F.R.S., in "Nature" says:—"This genial little volume is a child's book as to shortness, cheapness, and simplicity of style, though the author reasonably hopes that older people will use it as a source of information not popularly accessible elsewhere, as to the life of Primitive Man and its relation to our own. This book, if the time has come for the public to take it, will have a certain effect in the world. It is not a mere compilation from the authors mentioned in the preface, but takes its own ground, and stands by and for itself. Mr. Clodd has thought out his philosophy of life, and used his best skill to bring it into the range of a child's view."

The Religion of Humanity.

By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

Second Edition, with Fine Steel Portrait. 12mo. Cloth. Price, post-paid, $1.50.

Christianity and Materialism Contrasted.

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.

A handsome forty-five page pamphlet. 15 cents.

Mr. Underwood's best Lecture.

The Influence of Christianity on Civilization.

Eighty-eight page pamphlet. Price 25 cents.

Address the publishers.

Asa K. Butts & Co.,

36 DEY STREET, N. Y.

MANUALS

OF Mathematical Instruments,
Microscopes,
Magic Lanterns,
Meteorological Instruments.

Physical Apparatus,

Profusely Illustrated and priced, mailed to any address on receipt of 10 cents each.

JAMES W. QUEEN & CO., Opticians,
234 Chestnut St. 601 Broadway,
PHILADELPHIA. NEW YORK.

Mention that you saw this in THE INDEX.

Real Estate Securities,

paying 8 to 10 per cent. interest, or

INVESTMENTS IN REAL ESTATE,

IN CHICAGO AND VICINITY,

if judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The old

Real Estate and Loan Agency

OF

ERNST PRUSSING,

143 Randolph St., - CHICAGO,

(Established 1853)

Guarantees perfect title and ample security

in all its Real Estate Loans.

First-class securities always on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge. Real Estate

Investments made on commission and on shares; taxes paid, &c.

Orders of capitalists and real estate owners

respectfully solicited.

The Commercial Review

- AND -

MANUFACTURERS' JOURNAL.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY BY

G. H. ADAMS & BRO., Publishers,

Cleveland, Ohio.

This is the only exclusively COMMERCIAL and TRADE JOURNAL in Northern Ohio, and it also devotes a great deal of space to

Manufacturing News,

Railroad Intelligence, Financial Facts, and everything of Interest to Business Men.

It is invaluable to

Merchants and Manufacturers

Who buy or sell in the Cleveland market; and who is the BEST

Advertising Medium

For business men of all classes in this section of the State.

SUBSCRIPTION, $3.00 PER YEAR.

A NEW "SCHWARTZ" NOVEL.

Now Ready.

The Son of the Organ-Grinder.

A Novel. By MME. MARIE SOPHIE SCHWARTZ, Authoress of "Gold and Name," "Guilt and Innocence," &c. Translated from the original Swedish by SELMA BORG and MARIE A. BROWN. With a fine portrait and a sketch of Mme. Schwartz.

12mo.; cloth, extra, black and gold, $1.50; paper, $1.00.

"Full of interesting incident, and really a study of character."—N. A. and U. S. Gazette, Phila.

"Likely to be even more popular than the author's previous books."—Literary World, Boston.

Also,

The Cross of Berdy;

OR

IRENE'S LOVERS.

A Novel. Written jointly by MME. EMILE DE GIRARDES, MME. THEOPHILE GAUTHIER, JULES SANDEAU, and MERY. Translated from the last French edition.

12mo.; cloth, extra, $1.50; paper, $1.00.

"The most remarkable and powerful foreign novel translated since 'On the Heights.'"

Northern Lights.

Tales from the SWEDISH and FINNISH. Collected and translated by SELMA BORG and MARIE A. BROWN, the translators of the "Schwartz" novels. Handsomely illustrated with original Swedish designs redrawn by BENSELL.

12mo.; cloth, extra, black and gold, $1.50.

This story book is a new comer in every sense of the word; it is the first Swedish juvenile that ever visited America; and as such it should meet with a warm welcome, independently of its intrinsic merits, which are very great.

PORTER & COATES, Pub's,

PHILADELPHIA.

For sale by all Booksellers.

LOUIS BLACK.

194 Jefferson Ave., Detroit, Michigan.

MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN

INVENTOR AND PROPRIETOR OF

Black's Patent Interchangeable Spectacles, and Self-Attaching Spring Eye-Glasses. Importer of all kinds of Optical Goods. The best Spectacles fitted to the Eyesight so as to improve it.

The Influence of Christianity on Civilization.

BY B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Popular fallacies concerning this question have had no more honest and fearless exposition than is given in this handsome pamphlet. Mr. Underwood has treated this momentous theme with dignity, candor, and grace, yet with that vigor which has made him so popular on the platform among the liberals of the West. Nor does he lack in erudition. He is profuse in quotations from standard histories, largely Christian; and shows conclusively but clearly from their own testimony what a drag upon civilization that stupendous fanaticism has been.

In paper covers; single copies, 25 cts. Address the publisher,

ASA K. BUTTS, 36 Dey Street, N. Y.

For Plain and Fancy

JOB PRINTING,

IN ENGLISH OR GERMAN,

Such as Business Cards,
Pamphlets,
Constitutions,
Invitations,
Ball-Cards,
Hand-Bills,

&c., &c., send your orders to the undersigned, where they will be filled promptly and at very low rates.

Waechter am Erie Printing Co.,

77 MICHIGAN STREET,

Cleveland, Ohio.

THE

SPIRIT OF REFORM.

COLBY & RICH,

14 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON, MASS.,

Issue weekly the

BANNER OF LIGHT.

An exponent of the Spiritual philosophy of the nineteenth century.

The above is a first-class, eight-page, family Newspaper, containing forty columns of INTERESTING AND INSTRUCTIVE READING, classed as follows:—

LITERARY DEPARTMENT.—From French and German.

REPORTS OF SPIRITUAL LECTURES.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

MESSAGE DEPARTMENT.—Spirit-messages from the departed to their friends in earth-life, given through the mediumship of Mrs. J. H. Conant.

ORIGINAL CONTRIBUTIONS.—From the most talented writers in the world.

All which features render this Journal a popular Family Paper, and at the same time the harbinger of a Glorious Scientific Religion.

Terms of Subscription in Advance:

Per year	$3.00
Six months	1.50
Three months75

Specimen copies sent free.

We confidently call the attention of the friends of progress and reform, whether in material or spiritual matters, to the self-respecting and dignified tone, and the liberal position assumed and maintained by the Banner of Light in the past, the same being the guarantee of future usefulness.

Colby & Rich also publish and offer for sale, at the Banner of Light Bookstore, many books and pamphlets of a spiritual and reformatory nature.

The complete works of Andrew Jackson Davis; also books by Judge J. W. Edmonds, Mrs. Emma Harting, William Howitt, Hon. Robert Dale Owen, D. D. Home, Prof. William Denton, Miss Lizzie Dutton, J. M. Peabody, Mrs. J. S. Adams, Prof. S. B. Britten, Hudson and Emma Tuttle, Henry C. Wright, Warren Chase, Charles S. Woodruff, Dr. A. B. Child, Mrs. Lois Walmsley, P. B. Randolph, Warren S. Ballow, George Stearns, and others will here be found.

THE COMMONWEALTH LIFE INSURANCE CO.

GENTLEMEN of standing and ability (either in professional or mercantile pursuits) are desired in all parts of the country to represent this reliable company. Our plans of Insurance are simple, popular, and honest.

Address 178 Broadway,
NEW YORK.

407 Broadway, N. Y.,
NEAR CANAL STREET.

BABCOCK Fire Apparatus EXTINGUISHERS.

HOOK AND LADDER TRUCKS, ENGINE AND TANKS.

F. W. FARWELL, Secretary.

Buchner, Dr. L. Man: in the Past, Present, and Future. A Popular Account of the results of recent scientific Research as regards the Origin, Position, and Prospects of the Human Race. Translated by W. S. Dallas, F.L.S. Cloth. 12mo. $3.

CONTENTS: INTRODUCTION—WHENCE DO WE COME? The Antiquity and Original State of the Human Race, and its development from a barbarous beginning.—WHAT ARE WE?—Present Position of Man in Nature, his developmental history and production from the egg cell.—Origin and Genealogy of the Human Race.—WHERE ARE WE GOING?—Future of Man and of the Human Race.—Government.—Nationalities.—Society.—Capital.—Labor and Laborers.—The Family.—Education.—Woman.—Marriage.—Morals.—Religion.—Philosophy.

APPENDIX.—Scientific Evidence, containing Notes, Explanations, and additions of the text.

"This work, from its bold premises, and sweeping conclusions, will certainly be regarded as startling, in its defiance of received opinions."—Liverpool Advertiser.

"Whatever may be one's opinion as to the extreme views of the author, no one can read his book without feeling that he is in the presence of a man of fine intellect and of wide culture."—Daily Bristol Times.

"The important questions—'Whence do we come?' 'What are we?' and 'Where are we going?' are discussed by the author, and it is not the least of the merits of his work that to each of these questions a distinct and intelligible, if not wholly convincing, answer is given."—Spectator.

"The most conspicuous merits of this volume are its terseness and its freedom from unpleasant dogmatism. It states with fairness the arguments which have been adduced in opposition to those which it supports."—Illustrated Review.

"This author's views have all the force and lucidity which flow from the entire consistency and simplicity."—Medical Times and Gazette.

"We approve of the effort to introduce into our language so fearless and out-spoken and honest a labor as that which Dr. Buchner has performed. The book contains nothing that will be new to those who have followed minutely anthropological science for the past ten years, though it certainly contains, in a pithy and masterly style, everything that has been achieved by the English and foreign savants in that space of time; but to the general reader it offers a masterly summary of the facts, reflections, and ultimate conclusions that have been put forward in regard to Man's origin."—Popular Science Review.

"Dr. Buchner has the gift of easy exposition. His generalities are put with praiseworthy neatness; his well-selected examples clinch them hard, and just in the right place."—Nature.

"He is eminently judicial, weighing carefully and fairly the arguments for and against, and delivering judgment after independent investigation."—Public Opinion.

NOW IN PRESS OF

A. K. BUTTS & CO.

HAPPY now are the children whose thoughtful parents have bought for them "Avilude, or Game of Birds." They gather around the table with bright eyes and smiling faces as it is announced, "We are to have a game of Avilude." A whole winter of enjoyment, combined with instruction, for seventy-five cents. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by West & Lee, Worcester, Mass.

WORKERS WANTED!

For Wood's Household Magazine,

Which, with its premiums, is one of the most attractive in the country. Price of Magazine, ONE DOLLAR A YEAR.

COMMISSIONS LIBERAL, offering a lucrative and agreeable business to those willing to give it proper attention.

VOL XIII. begins with July, 1873.

Examine our Clubbing and Premium Lists.

Two first-class periodicals for the price of one. For Specimen Magazine, and further information, address

WOOD'S HOUSEHOLD MAGAZINE,
Newburgh, New York.
S. E. SHUTES, Publisher.

"PRACTICAL IDEAS." To inspire a lively taste for rural life among the young people of the cities and villages, and to encourage a more rational and healthful view of their opportunities among those on the farms, is one of the objects of the YOUNG FOLKS' RURAL. Parents should subscribe for it for their children. It is an entirely "new idea," and different from any other paper or periodical in style and character. Sixteen pages and sixty-four columns—THE LARGEST PAPER IN THE WEST. $1.50 per year; single numbers, 15 cents. Address

H. N. F. LEWIS, Publisher,
CHICAGO.

SELF-HELP.

PREVENTION AND REMEDY.

The Butler Health-Lift

HAS BEEN IN SUCCESSFUL OPERATION FOR TEN YEARS!

Principal Office:
PARK BANK BUILDING, 214 Broadway,
BROOKLYN, 158 Remsen street, connecting with rooms No. 229 Fifth Avenue.

A SCIENTIFIC EXERCISE, concentrated and cumulative, a tonic to the nervous system, a rest to tired brains, a cure for chronic difficulties.

Never exhausting; pleasant, agreeable, combined with rest.

The cheapest and best apparatus for private use to competent parties. Call, or send 50 cents for descriptive pamphlet.

"I know the BUTLER HEALTH-LIFT to be an efficient tonic, especially to the nervous and digestive systems."—C. L. Mitchell, M.D.
Address at Principal Office,

LEWIS G. JANEY, Proprietor.

HIS MARRIAGE VOW.

BY MRS. CAROLINE FAIRFIELD CORBIN,

AUTHOR OF

"Rebecca, or, A Woman's Secret."

One handsome 16mo. Volume. Price $1.50.

This story, as indicated by the title, is a presentation of certain phases of the questions now agitating many minds, concerning the prerogatives and limitations of love. It does not claim to treat the subject exhaustively or in detail, but simply to illustrate certain principles which must in the end have great weight in deciding the question of the perpetuity of the marriage relation.

Apart from this subject, or rather as a continuation of it, the claims of a rational Christianity, as founded upon faith and love, and as opposed to the Materialism of science and reason, are presented with force and clearness.

The bearing of modern spiritual phenomena upon the contest between faith and reason is also discussed.

The story has been pronounced by good critics to be one of the most powerful and interesting ever issued from the American press. The characters are well delineated, and the moral tone pure and elevating.

For sale by

ASA K. BUTTS & CO.,

36 DEY STREET, NEW YORK.

Prizes for Compositions. Every three or four months the publisher of the YOUNG FOLKS' RURAL offers a batch of CASH PRIZES for best compositions—stories, sketches, essays, letters, poems, etc., for which all under 21 years can compete. Full particulars given each month. Single numbers 15 cents, or $1.50 a year for twelve numbers.

H. N. F. LEWIS, Publisher,
CHICAGO.

TWO

Lovely Landscape Chromos.

A pair of exquisite little landscape chromos of most lovely Western American scenery, "Morning on the Mississippi," and "Sunset on the Sierras," are being given to the subscribers of the YOUNG FOLKS' RURAL. They are perfect copies of paintings by Streight, and are mounted and varnished without extra charge, and sent by first mail, postage paid, to every subscriber. The YOUNG FOLKS' RURAL is the "largest and handsomest paper for young people published," and already has over 100,000 readers. $1.50 per year. (In clubs of four and upwards only $1 per year.) Splendid premiums for making up clubs. Single numbers 15 cents, or free to those who wish to form clubs. Address

H. N. F. LEWIS, Publisher,
CHICAGO.

All Interested in the Progress of Science Should Read

NATURE.

A Weekly Illustrated Journal of Science.

The attention of all interested in the general progress of knowledge is earnestly invited to this Journal, which has now become the accredited organ of the leading scientific men, in communicating their views to each other and to the public.

One of the leading objects of this periodical is to awaken in the public mind a more lively interest in science. With this end in view, it provides original articles and reviews, written by scientific men of the highest distinction in their various departments, expounding the Grand Results of Scientific Research, discussing the most recent scientific discoveries, and pointing out the bearing of science upon civilization and progress, and its claims to more general recognition, as well as to a higher place in the educational system of the country.

There will also be found in Nature complete abstracts of all important papers communicated to British, American, and Continental Scientific Societies and Periodicals, and Reports of the Meetings of Scientific Bodies.

Among the contributors to Nature will be found the names of almost every man of note in the various departments of scientific inquiry in England, America, and the Continent of Europe.

As questions of science compass all limits of nationality, and are of universal interest, a periodical devoted to them may fitly appeal to the intelligent classes in all countries where its language is read. The proprietors of Nature will aim so to conduct it that it shall bear a common claim upon all English-speaking peoples.

Nature is published in London; it asks, as it will be found to deserve, the liberal patronage of the thinking classes of the United States. Its articles are brief and condensed, and are thus suited to the circumstances of an active and busy people who have little time to read extended and elaborate treatises.

Every intelligent man is now expected to know something of what is going on in the scientific world; the columns of Nature will give a summary of it, varied, compressed, and authentic.

Yearly Subscription, $5. Single Numbers, price 12 cents. Sent for two months, as a trial subscription, on receipt of 75 cents.

THE PRACTITIONER.

A Monthly Journal of Therapeutics.

Edited by

FRANCIS N. ANSTIE, M.D., F.R.C.P.

"To hard-worked medical men, in general country practice, with little time for reading, and few opportunities for professional conversation, such a journal as this, bringing every month the latest ideas in medical practice and the latest records of important cases, ought to be invaluable."—London Guardian.

Yearly Subscription, $4. Single numbers 40 cents. Sent two months as a trial subscription, on receipt of 60 cents.

Address

A. K. BUTTS & CO.,
36 DEY STREET, NEW YORK.

"DOMESTIC" ELEGANT IN DESIGN!
PAPER FAULTLESS IN FINISH!
Agents Wanted.
SEND FOR CATALOGUE.

FASHIONS. "DOMESTIC" SEWING MACHINE COMPANY, New York.

A GREAT OFFER.

Horace Waters & Son, 481 Broadway, New York, will dispose of 100 Pianos and Organs of first-class makers, including WATERBURY, at extremely low prices for cash, or part cash, and balance in small monthly payments. New 7-Octave first-class Pianos, all modern improvements, for $275 cash. Organs, $55 to $75. Double-Reed Organs, $100; 4-stop, $110; 8-stop, $125 and upwards.

AGENTS WANTED.

LADIES!

THE Eureka Machine Twist,
50 and 100 Yard Spools,
AND THE Eureka Button-Hole Twist,
10 Yard Spools,
ARE THE BEST IN USE.
For Sale at all Trimming Stores.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO., Bankers,
LEROY, MINNESOTA.

Money loaned on short time, or for a term of years, on unencumbered improved farms, at 12 per cent. per annum, interest net. Interest payable annually. All expenses for abstract of title and recording mortgage paid by borrower. We collect and remit to any part of the United States free of charge.

REFERENCES.—First National Bank, McGregor, Iowa; Glüchert & Co., McGregor, Iowa; First National Bank, Austin, Minnesota; City National Bank, Chicago, Illinois; Allen, Stevens & Co., New York City.

SOMETHING NEW.

LIFE INSURANCE ON THE

SAME BASIS AS FIRE INSURANCE.

PAY FOR IT AS YOU GET IT.

NO "NOTES," "DIVIDENDS," "RESERVES," OR OTHER DEVICES

to collect more money than is actually required to secure all the benefits of Life Insurance.

On this plan the National Life Insurance Co. of Chicago has actually paid the heirs of deceased members $199,004, at a cost to them of only $3,990.10. Had these persons been insured on the old high-rate plan, their heirs would have received only $80,746.12.

INVESTIGATE, AND SAVE MONEY BY INVESTING

ON THIS PLAN, AND

MAKE MONEY

by securing an agency for it. Address,
NATIONAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.,
78 and 80 Van Buren St.,
Chicago.

THE LIBERAL CHRISTIAN

FOR 1873.

HENRY W. BELLOWES, Editor.

Will endeavor, not only to maintain its present reputation as

ONE OF THE BEST WEEKLY JOURNALS OF

Religion, Literature, Science, and Art

Now published in this country, but to fulfil, more completely than ever before, its part of the work of supplying the American people with the

Best Thought on the Highest and Most Vital Themes

Of both general and particular interest, in all departments of human life. To this end, special arrangements have been entered into with able writers and correspondents to keep the columns of The Liberal Christian supplied, during the year 1873, with a pleasant variety of good articles and letters on the most stirring topics of the day.

The several departments of the paper—Fellowship of the Spirit, Our Contributors, Signs of the Times, Original and Selected Articles, Our Literary Record, Editorial, The Week's News—Ecclesiastical, Political, and General; Correspondence; Our Boys and Girls; Our Scientific Record; The Fine Arts—will each receive the special care of the gentlemen and ladies under whose charge they have been placed; and no effort will be spared to provide a WEEKLY FAMILY JOURNAL worthy of the patronage of American Homes, and of the Enlightened Nineteenth Century.

Price of Subscription, $3 per Annum. Payable in Advance.

Upon application by letter, specimen copies will always be sent free.

Jos. N. Hallock, Publisher,
P. O. Box 109.

214 Broadway, New York City.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 4.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1873.

WHOLE No. 200.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for sectarian educational and charitable institutions shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

Therefore, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —:

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

So far as I am concerned, the above is the platform of THE INDEX. I believe in it without reserve; I believe that it will yet be accepted universally by the American people, as the only platform consistent with religious liberty. A Liberal League ought to be formed to carry out its principles wherever half a dozen earnest and resolute Liberals can be got together. Being convinced that the movement to secure compliance with these just "Demands" must surely, even if slowly, spread, I hope to make THE INDEX a means of furthering it; and I ask the assistance and active co-operation of every man and every woman who believes in it. Multiply Liberal Leagues everywhere, and report promptly the names of their Presidents and Secretaries. Intolerance and bigotry will tremble in proportion as that list grows. If freedom, justice, and reason are right, let their organized voice be heard like the sound of many waters.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

Boston, Sept. 1, 1873.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
BOSTON, MASS.—J. S. Rogers, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
VINCENNE, N. J.—L. Bristol, President; E. G. Blaisdell, Secretary.
JUNCTIONVILLE, NED.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
OSCEOLA, MO.—E. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

BY A. W. S.

THERE ARE two hundred Republican Clubs in England, and a National Republican League.

IT IS RELIABLY stated that about ten per cent. of the children in Massachusetts do not attend school.

THE CATHOLIC PAPERS call Victor Emmanuel "the robber king of Italy," because he has confiscated the Church property.

REV. W. R. ALGER, late of the Boston Music Hall Society, is delivering a course of liberal Sunday sermons and lectures in Chicago.

"J. W. H.," in THE Woman's Journal, begins an article by saying: "The summer is ended, and we are not saved." We are very sorry to hear it.

THE Woman's Journal says: "The air of the State House may be as fuliginous this winter as it was the last." We hardly know whether to be alarmed or not.

CHARLES SUMNER says: "In my opinion, Disraeli is one of the most remarkable men of this age, when we remember the obstacles he had to overcome to reach the position he occupies in England."

WHERE IS The Golden Age? Some say it is in the past; some that it is in the future; but the last that we heard of it, it was in New York. We wish it would come more regularly to THE INDEX office.

ONE OF THE speakers in the Evangelical Alliance said: "Was it not time they should all be sick of denominationalism?" Yes; we hope to hear that every member is prostrate with that sickness before long. It has already overtaken us, and we have it badly.

THE EVANGELICAL Sunday-schools, in England and the United States, proposed to "unite in prayer," October 19, in behalf of the "Sabbath-school cause." Very good. If prayer be a means of improvement, we certainly think our Sunday-schools need praying for.

S. H. MORSE read an excellent essay before the Second Radical Club, Monday evening, October 18, on "The World's Peace." Everybody desires peace, but few seem to know how to get it. Let each resolve that he will be peaceable—if not peaceful—and see, then, how soon the reign of peace will come.

THE FIRST PRAYER, at the opening of the Evangelical Alliance, was made by Rev. Dr. Hodge, of Princeton. The reporters secured it; and thus we are enabled to say—as we do cheerfully—that we never read or heard a prayer more full of complimentary allusions to Delity, whether he be considered as one or three.

ONE OF THE speakers at the late Spiritualist Convention, in Chicago, somehow or other, got this sentence into her speech: "As the salt sea-foam falls from the created waves of the benighted ages." If we had been a member of that convention, we should have requested that "eloquent" lady to "rise to explain" (if she could) her mixed metaphor.

CHARLES BRADLAUGH won a signally great and deserved success at Music Hall, last Friday evening, by his earnest and impassioned eloquence. He was handsomely introduced by Wendell Phillips, and warmly congratulated by Charles Sumner. It was fitting that these two noble men should have honored the platform of Mr. Bradlaugh with their presence.

THE CHIEF STRENGTH of the republican movement, in England, Mr. Bradlaugh says, is among the artisans of Manchester, Sheffield, and other manufacturing towns, and the Bacup valley; and among the miners of Northumberland and Durham. The chief hostility to it he naturally finds among the territorial aristocracy and the clergy of the Established Church.

IN THE MIDDLE of the hard, anxious, driving, busy life of this great city, it is refreshing to hear, now and then, strains of music from some peripatetic band or strolling street-singer, even though they be not of the classic order. Nor can we unite in indiscriminate curses of the hand-organs, they being sufficient sometimes to provoke our hearts and ten-cent pieces to gratitude.

IT SEEMS that an Englishman must sometimes leave his native island and come to this country, in order to meet socially one of his fellow-countrymen. This was the case with Mr. Charles Bradlaugh. At the Lotus Club, in New York, he met for the first time with Mr. Wilkie Collins, class distinctions being so marked, in England, that he had never there been accorded this privilege!

AN OLD "classic" trick has recently been revived in France. Some of our readers, doubtless, have read how a wooden horse was once introduced into the ancient city of Troy, to the wonderment and subsequent dismay of the citizens. The French tobaccoists, last summer, undertook to smuggle cigars into France inside of baby rocking-horses, but the police detected the innovation and put a stop to it. Moral: the study of the classics ought to be discouraged.

WALLACE refused to admit certain colored men to his theatre, in New York. They sued him. The papers say that the judge "allowed the defendant to put in an unverified answer, which is considered adverse to the plaintiffs." How often these "unverified answers" are "put in," not only in legal but in every other kind of controversy! But the "unverified answer" never can disprove the verified question; and when society says it does, let the plaintiffs appeal.

THE Liberal Christian, of October 18, has a long, very kind, fair, and appreciative article on the Sixth Annual Report of the Free Religious Association. It thinks so highly of the Free Religious men and women that it cannot refrain from appropriating them to Christianity, thus: "In this home these Free Religionists have been reared, and from it they have derived their moral and spiritual life. They are themselves, in spite of their protest, a branch or offshoot of the Christian body, and we do not doubt will, in due time, be felt to be a part of Christ's life and fruit."

A WRITER in the Independent, on "Japanese Politeness," says that "it is a paradox, not easily explained, that the bully is the distinctive product of Christian nations." "New elements of gentleness, courtesy, and obedience," he thinks, will enter into our civilization, when "the humanity in China and Japan" mingle with our American society. "The grave and dignified courtesy which one sees daily among these 'degraded heathens' is delightful and edifying even to a Christian. From the old shaven head bent with age, to the child just graduated from the breast, politeness seems to be an instinct." Yet the same writer says that the missionary work "must go on, because the Master has ordered it." Yes, let it go on, and come on; and, let us hope, we shall get converted quite as fast as "the heathen" will.

ON THE WHOLE, we cannot but regard the late meeting of the Evangelical Alliance as a sign of progress, considering what its avowed object was. That object was the Unity of the Evangelical denominations. This unity the Alliance claimed to accomplish by getting its members "to agree in essentials, giving up non-essentials." Really, but one "essential" was insisted on; and that was, as Lord Alfred Churchill said, "belief in Christ." This is a very vague and indefinite "essential," as the Alliance itself will find, when it comes to ask for an explanation of it from all round the board. The Unitarians "believe in Christ," after a fashion, and many radicals will acknowledge that they do. When the Alliance comes to trying to settle down on this basis, it will find that this last "essential" is no secure basis after all; and then the next step will be—unity in spirit, not in belief. And so "the world moves" in the right direction.

Old Miracles and New.

[Notre-Dame de Lourdes. Par Henri Lasserre. Forty-ninth Edition. Paris, 1872.]

If there is anything more striking than the thoughtless credulity with which men accept statements agreeing with their preconceptions it is the stubborn incredulity with which they receive statements at variance with those preconceptions. The devotees of each religion, and even of each sect into which a religion is so commonly split up, accept, and even adore, the absurdities of their own belief, while they scan, with a sceptical severity that cannot be surpassed, the not greater follies of other systems of belief. In no respect is this fact more glaring than in the case of miracles. Each church has its own special miracles, devoutly believed in, but repels with contempt or horror the alleged miracles of other religions. Happy that it is so. Were superstition not in its essence and nature a dividing folly, could it but muster in one herd all its votaries, common sense and truth would have a hard battle for existence.

Of late much has been heard of the plague of pilgrimages made by pious Catholics to a small town on the French side of the Pyrenees. Lourdes has acquired a fame, possibly more respectable than La Salette, and is now the resort of thousands who visit it to share in the papal indulgence, or to try the efficacy of its miraculous water. The fame of Lourdes has been growing, for it is now upwards of fourteen years since the things were first done in it that are commemorated in "Notre-Dame de Lourdes." Notre-Dame is fortunate in her historian. M. Lasserre is a very clever writer; he has made a most careful collection of the facts; and he has woven the whole into a triumphant vindication, as it must be in the eyes of Catholics, of the miracles of Lourdes. We do not doubt that he is truthful; if he were not he would soon be tripped up. We must give him credit for high artistic skill in the arrangement of his material; but we must have permission to question his impartiality. So far as his book deals with persons, it is egregiously one-sided and unfair; so far as it deals with facts, we may say, without contesting their substantial accuracy, that they are gilded and adorned with a very lively imagination. He uses the language, and falls into the vein, of the most sincere piety, and his book is filled with observations that are the delight of the pious peasant, and a standing joke for unbelievers. But the main facts stand out so clearly that in dealing with them we may take the narration as honest and truthful. As to accuracy we say nothing at present, as that is, perhaps, a higher kind of truthfulness than we have a right altogether to expect.

In the spring of 1858 there lived at Lourdes a poor day laborer, whose daughter, Bernadette Soubirous, aged nearly fourteen, is the heroine of the story. This girl was weak and little, looking as if she were only eleven or twelve, and she suffered from asthma, but was not otherwise in bad health. She had no education, and could neither read nor write. She was, if we may believe the author, ignorant of religion, and knew nothing but two or three phrases, strung together by her beads: "Notre-Père, Je vous salue; Je crois en Dieu; Gloire au Père." About the middle of February she went out one day, with two other little girls, to gather wood in a place near Lourdes, now of celebrity, the "Roches Massabieille." Suddenly she heard a rustling wind, but on looking round saw nothing; every leaf was still. Again she heard it, and on looking beheld a woman of unsurpassable beauty, surrounded by a glorious halo, and standing in the air in face of a grotto. This vision lasted for some time—a quarter of an hour, says the author. At this moment, the two other girls were separated from her by some distance, and they saw nothing. On the way home little Bernadette told them the wonderful thing she had seen, "quelque chose habillé de blanc." Of course, her two companions believed and trembled, upon which the author makes this appropriate remark: "The soul, in its native purity and innocence, is naturally inclined to believe; doubt is not a disease of naïve childhood." On going home the story was repeated to mother Soubirous, who, very properly, told Bernadette it was all childish nonsense. But, nonsense or not, Bernadette was determined again to see the beautiful "Dame." She repaired to the same place, again with companions, who themselves saw nothing, but were astonished at the change that passed over Bernadette. She seemed in ecstasy, her face was transfigured, illumined, radiant. On one occasion, to anticipate a little, Doctor Dozous watched her pulse, which maintained its regularity. Her lips moved, but without making any sound; her face was slightly pale, and it was observed that for several seconds she did not breathe. This sort of thing was repeated in the presence of hundreds of witnesses, day after day, in all eighteen times, and with only two failures. It is noteworthy that on the first occasion when she failed to see the "Dame," she was much agitated by her apprehension and examination by the Commissary of Police, and on the second she was put out by the acclamations of many hundred throats, roaring, "Behold, the Saint."

If it had ended here, we should have heard nothing more of the pilgrimages to Lourdes. At first Bernadette confined herself to the mere statement that she saw a beautiful "Dame," who or what she was she knew not. No sooner, however, was the story bruited abroad than the eager faith of the mob at once divined the secret. Why, of course, it was the Virgin. M. Lasserre admires the fine instinct of the people—the voice of God—for surely a woman of incomparable beauty could be none other than the stainless Virgin, whose beauty, we are assured by M. Lasserre, charms even God himself. "La Vierge sans tache, de la Beauté admirable qui charma Dieu lui-même." It may astonish Protestants to learn from the same high authority that the Trinity consists of four persons.

The Virgin, M. Lasserre tells us, is the daughter of the Father, the spouse of the Holy Ghost, and the mother of the Son (p. 190). It was this Exalted Personage, said the popular voice, that condescended to visit the maiden of low estate of Lourdes. The Virgin not only appeared, but spoke, and carried on conversation with Bernadette. She confided to the little girl three secrets, concerning herself only, and two announcements to the outer world. One was to build a chapel; the other disclosed her name. "I am," said the incomparable lady, "the Immaculate Conception."

Bernadette delivered the first message to the curé of the parish. He, unlike naïve childhood, asked a sign. "I will believe it is the Virgin," said he, "if the roses in the grotto should blossom." That sign was not given him; but his desire was fulfilled in a manner more beneficial to the sick, and disastrous to the doctors. During one of these interviews Bernadette was ordered by the Virgin to eat a bit of the "Dorine," of the family of the Saxifrage, and to bathe on a spot where there was nothing but sand and rock. Bernadette obeyed the heavenly direction. She scraped the soil, and soon brought out a little water. By-and-by the water increased, and in the course of a short time it poured forth in a stream, which latterly came to more than 100,000 litres in the twenty-four hours. We are assured by M. Lasserre that it is an incontestable fact that, up to this moment, there was no spring of water on that spot. This water soon displayed miraculous properties. Stories of wonderful cures spread like wildfire through the district. M. Lasserre gives the details of more than a dozen cases, but we need only cite one as characteristic of the rest. Louis Bourriette suffered an injury to the eyes by an explosion. In spite of the "Faculté" he grew worse and worse, till he was unable to distinguish a tree from a man. He tried the water, and in a few minutes could see distinctly. An Episcopal Commission examined numerous witnesses, and, reported on the medical cures in three divisions. The first consisted of those where the cure was due to ordinary therapeutic causes, the second class was doubtful, the third, numbering nineteen authentic cases, contained nothing that was not wholly inexplicable by any natural causes. This part of the report rested on the authority of two doctors, Verges and Dozous. The chief test of the miraculous was the suddenness of the cure; but they also remark on the chronic nature, in some cases, of the diseases, and the fact that the water cured totally different classes of diseases. The water was examined by chemists, whose reports, however, are at variance, one attributing to it a much more decided saline character than the others.

Such is a meagre and most imperfect outline of the story of M. Lasserre. It is impossible to convey in a short space anything like an adequate impression of the facts. These are not, indeed, we take it, in dispute. They raise for Protestants a serious question. By the Catholic Church the miracles at Lourdes are to be accepted as genuine; for both the bishop of the diocese and the Pope have solemnly assured the faithful of the genuineness and reality of the wonders done by the holy water of Lourdes. The bishop in his judgment states his case, unanswerably, from a theological standpoint. To him it is not a question of the possibility of miracles; it is his creed that they are possible, and have occurred; the only question for him is one of evidence—are the alleged revelations real or not? Supernatural intervention is in his view a vera causa, a sound basis on which reasoning can be supported. He states that the patriarchs and the prophets were favored with celestial visions; and he affirms that the age of miracles has never ceased, but that in all times they have continued for the edification of believers. M. Lasserre says very truly that with the humble, untaught, pious soul there is no difficulty in admitting supernatural evidence; if God can heal him by medicine, is he not able, if he please, also to heal him without medicine? Once admit that the supernatural is a real agent in Nature, and the reasoning of the peasant is irresistible. It is only a question of evidence, of the honesty of the witnesses, and their accuracy. The Protestant who affirms that the age of miracles is past is on the horns of a dilemma. Where is he to draw the line? At the death of Christ? Certainly not, for the New Testament is full of miracles subsequently performed. On the death of Apostles? If so, why? Obviously such a line is perfectly arbitrary, for it is nowhere stated in the Bible that miracles were to be kept up while the Apostles lived and no longer. The Catholic view is the only consistent one. Give the Pope as much evidence for a miracle in the year 1858 as in the year 25, and he is ready to accept it. But the Protestant repudiates all evidence of miracles after the year 70. If he does not, how is he to meet the evidence contained in M. Lasserre's book?

At the first glance it is perfectly manifest that the evidence for the miracles of Lourdes is, to a prodigious extent, stronger than the testimony to the Biblical miracles. The weakest part of the Lourdes business is undoubtedly the "transfiguration" of Bernadette. That part of the case must rest on her veracity. Of that, however, there seems no reason to doubt. She was apprehended by an officious Commissary of Police, and subjected to all that torture of secret examination in which the French police are such notorious adepts, but she could not be shaken. She got no pecuniary advantage from her visions, as her parents resolutely declined even the smallest benefaction. She was too young to be the chosen instrument of a diabolical priestly conspiracy; in short, she seems to be perfectly credible. Every one who believes in her vision can say with great force: "I have the written testimony of M. Henri Lasserre, the official examination of Bernadette before the Police and the Episcopal Commission, and, at second-hand only, the testimony of hundreds of persons to the appearance of Bernadette during her ecstasy, even to the evidence of the doctor, who calmly counted the beats of her pulse. It is but yesterday; the story is published and read by thousands and thousands; there is a keen and vigorous opposition in the public press, and if M. Lasserre be not the witness of truth, his falsehood would meet with instant exposure." Compare this with the evidence, say, for Paul's converting vision. In the first place, there is a mere naked statement by an anonymous writer, never, so far as we know, subject to any attestation whatever. We do not know his authority, whether his information was at first hand, or several degrees removed, or mere rumor and gossip. If it was false or erroneous, there was no public press ready to denounce it. But assuming, and that is to make an immense concession, that the story is authentic and literally true, all that it comes to is a statement by Paul that he saw a light from heaven. The men who were with him did not see it, although they heard the voice. The light was not objective, though the sound was. But, in regard to the light, the case is precisely the same as the vision of Bernadette, with this advantage, that in her case the vision was repeated, thereby removing one source of error. They who believe that Paul saw a light from heaven are far more bound to admit that Bernadette Soubirous saw a woman of surpassing and superhuman loveliness, enveloped in a blaze of glory, and announcing herself as the Immaculate Conception.

Many Protestants hold that the vision of Paul was purely subjective, and that really there was no light from heaven, as he supposed. To such the case of Bernadette Soubirous presents no difficulty. But the fountain must stagger them even. Everybody, we are told, says there was no fountain in the place before; but at the touch of a little child, following the impulse of an ecstatic vision, a spring of water does, and increases to its present dimensions. The feat is not without its parallel in sacred history. Without referring to the sacred pool of the New Testament, or the miracles of Elijah or Elisha, we may simply mention the celebrated miracle of Moses, who struck a rock and saved his people. The evidence of that miracle is as light as a feather compared with the testimony produced by M. Lasserre. Take next the miraculous cures. M. Lasserre gives the testimony of the doctors in attendance on the persons who were cured, and, in all the important cases, we have a report of two respectable medical men. Moreover, all that has occurred, is, so to speak, under our eyes, in the full blaze of publicity, in an age of daily papers, in the presence of scientific men and an educated and unbelieving bourgeoisie, and all the facts have been the subject of a judicial investigation in the open light of day. If testimony such as is referred to in the New Testament is sufficient to prove a miracle, then the testimony from Lourdes is simply overwhelming. It would be interesting to know upon what grounds the reverend gentlemen who lecture on "Christian Evidence at St. George's Hall" reject the miracles of Lourdes, and accept other miracles, not supported even by a fraction of the evidence.

To the scientific man, who is so simply, and not also a theologian, the imposing array of evidence from Lourdes shatters itself to pieces upon the rock on which science is built. No scientific man is called upon to assert the abstract impossibility of supernatural causes. To him nothing is a cause which is not always such. If the fountain of Lourdes has always the same effect in the same circumstances, then it is a cause; but if one day it heals, and the next day, in a case perfectly identical, it does not, then it is not a cause. Science knows only of uniform causes. But this is not the case with the water of Lourdes; for the same evidence that establishes its miraculous power shows that in other instances it had no power whatever. Now, of this kind of cause, a scientific man will frankly own he knows nothing. He has no experience of them; and they are opposed to the fundamental assumption on which all his experiments and observations proceed—the uniformity of Nature. While, on the one hand, every step in knowledge reveals to him more and more the all-pervading uniformity of Nature, and the deceitful appearances of irregularity upon which are founded the crude popular notions of cause, on the other he knows that nothing has been more common than the allegation of irregularity, spontaneity, and miracle; he knows that such phenomena are met with only by the ignorant, and that they hide themselves from the ken of the scientific inquirer. It will need a good deal more than the reports of Doctors Dozous and Verges, the judgment of a committee of priests, and the opinions of a flippant and picturesque writer, to make him recognize the existence of a new and anomalous kind of causation. He knows that the Virgin Mary never appears except in a devout Catholic population, and he knows why. He knows, moreover, that if the supernatural does not in the future interfere more than he has found it do in the past, he may safely leave it out of his calculations, without incurring the least danger of his predictions being upset.

Very different is the Episcopal reasoning. "This young girl," says the bishop, "saw and heard a being calling itself Immaculate Conception,—a being invested with the human form, but neither seen nor heard by any of the crowds of spectators who were present. It was, therefore, a supernatural being." Now the chief test by which the illusions of the imagination are distinguished from the objects of sense is their being shared in by one only, or by more. If every one in the crowd had seen the Virgin, undoubtedly that would have gone far to establish her objective reality; but the fact that nobody saw or heard anything, except Bernadette Soubirous, is as good evidence as could be wished that there was nothing to be seen or heard. She stated that she spoke to the Vision in a loud voice; but she did not, for not a sound escaped from her. If, therefore, she was wrong in saying that she heard herself, it is rather too much to pretend that she is an authority on the question of hearing what no other person heard. The subjective character of the vision is shown by other two circumstances, of which M. Lasserre does not perceive the importance. Several other girls saw the Virgin, or, rather let us say, the same vision as Bernadette. M. Lasserre tells us they were girls of high character, but he names only one, Marie Courrière. Nothing more likely. Afterwards, some others, less satisfactory to the priests, asserted that they also were partakers of the blessed privilege, and at one moment there threatened a perfect epidemic of saints; but the curé spoke to them very sternly, and the imitators ceased from troubling. We cannot help thinking that a little application of the same severity would have nipped the Lourdes miracles in the bud; but that severity was not applied. It was only when the visions were becoming a scandal that the voice of authority was exerted. As miracles go, those of Lourdes are very respectable; but however much they may disturb the serenity of a creed fixed in unstable equilibrium, they are to science what the Welsh fasting girl was,—a melancholy evidence of human ignorance and credulity.—London Examiner.

(Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1873, by F. E. ARNOT, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.)

PAUL GOWER.

A NATIONALISTIC STORY

OF

ENGLISH AND AMERICAN LIFE.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

THE PORCUPINE.

"The Weekly Porcupine"—as the New York newsboys (who love a good, mouth-filling cry) preferred to style it—was at first so successful that its publisher and proprietor devoted a large portion of his time to going about asking people to drink, bragging of its circulation and merits, and conversationally discounting the immense fortune and reputation which he and all persons concerned in the enterprise were "bound to realize" from it. The contributors were punctually paid on the Saturday after the appearance of their articles in print; the artists got their money when they brought in their drawings on wood (and in some instances before); the engravers were cheerful and confident countenances; and the job-printers never had to wait for the settlement of their weekly bills. The newspapers, and especially the hebdomadal ones, in which the new periodical had been liberally advertised, gave it very favorable notices, congratulating their readers on the establishment of a genuine "American Punch," capable of supplying that desideratum in comic journalism, the lack of which was so universally admitted, as former attempts in the same direction sufficiently demonstrated. Mr. Brough, they went on to say, besides being one of the most accomplished and versatile of actors, was, likewise, a gentleman of acknowledged wit and literary ability, and therefore preëminently qualified for the post of editor; Mr. Woodruff had acquired ample experience as a publisher in connection with that amusing little sheet, the Pepperpot (which the plan of the Porcupine would, in no respect, conflict with); while the names of their talented artists and contributors offered a satisfactory guarantee for the variety and excellence of their productions. Under which stimulants, and the judicious "bidding" of the town with huge posters, representing a magnified version of Sabin's cover, printed in staring colors; and also such indirect puffs as could be inserted in the "New York Correspondence" of distant papers,—the public bought so freely of the Porcupine in its inception, that Mr. Woodruff's exultation was, perhaps, not to be wondered at. Unfortunately both cause and effect were alike evanescent. In the sequel the periodical proved to be only the latest chapter of a long history of failures, which have rendered the idea of a successful imitation of the famous London Charivari something of a joke in the Empire City. As a choice sample of these many miscarriages—one which really attained a much more protracted existence than either its unlucky predecessors or followers, and was, besides, the means of introducing our young Englishmen to the world of New York journalism,—the Porcupine claims a few pages of description.

Of course it copied the shape, size, and general appearance of Punch; nor would it have been difficult to detect, in its pages, attempts at the various forms of wit, irony, satire, and burlesque popularized by the British model; and to which the Fleet Street jester owed his original success and celebrity. Of course, it had "big cuts," "socials," and initials; and addressed itself to politics (of which more hereafter), the follies of the day, and things in general. Equally, of course, its small fry made very small fun of that last refuge for the jocularly-destitute—advertisements. All this, and more, may be taken for granted in a comic paper. It was a sort of intellectual hot-house, entrance-fee six cents, wherein miserable, little, unoffending newspaper-paragraphs were forced to blow into crops of abortive puns; where awkwardly-lain trains of words were constructed with painful premeditation, in order to explode dismal jokes, heretofore concealed, in malice prepenne, within them. It was a literary "Nigger Minstrel," in which the corps of writers and artists performed ground and lofty tumblings, and, as some of them would have said, "knocked things around" promiscuously. It was a hospital for halting verses; the misbegotten bantlings of small poetsasters who found the epigrams they ended with in bar-rooms; and of amateur effusions by ladies of more or less smartness or silliness, over alliterative signatures. It contained a great deal of trash, some wit, more cleverness, and a little humor. If the unpremeditated is alone truly complete, as Carlyle informs us, perhaps when a number of individuals enter into serious responsibilities to be funny once a week, in cold blood, unrelieved by occasional gravity, they inevitably condemn themselves to dullness; the cream of intellect must become milk-and-water under such periodical skimmings; the champagne of inspiration ought to prove flat and mawkish when always on draught at three-pence a glassful. But I must attempt still further to discriminate the Porcupine by an account of the literary peculiarities of its principal contributors.

Mr. Brough wrote as he talked, only, perhaps, more grandiloquently. As an actor and an Irishman he had illimitable faith in flowing sentences, fine-sounding words, and long-tailed verbs and adjectives; amidst which, if an occasional drollery struggled to the surface, it was always half smothered in periphrasis. He possessed, in perfection, that particular form of language denominated by his countrymen blather-skit. His notion of fun mainly consisted in the application of splendid and redundant phraseology to ludicrous or commonplace occurrences. A most prolific dramatist, he had written plays which bore the same relation to comedy that a mask does to a living face; melodramas of such fearful and wonderful construction that not even the author retained any idea of their plot, after the first two or three scenes; farces in which rodomontade and rigmarole passed muster for broad humor; and some really good burlesques. These productions, and a volume or so of stories, in imitation of Carleton and Lover, and various contributions to periodical literature, combined with his unquestionable merits as an actor, had given him a factitious reputation, and induced Messrs. Ritchings and Woodruff—the first of whom was an ex-tailor and vendor of a patent medicine, the second nothing in particular—to offer him the editorship of the Porcupine. In fact, nearly everybody liked the jolly manager, including his company, who were playing on half-salaries to more than half-empty houses; his creditors, who spoke of him with a kind of affectionate desperation; and his first wife, who had been divorced from him and was married again. "Mr. Brough," she said, "was one of the most delightful of men, only there was no living with him." His rhymes and parodies were the only things worth mentioning of his contributions to the Porcupine.

Mr. O'Byrne's characteristics as an author have been sufficiently described already. He supplied poems à la Ingoldsby, stories and social sketches, and a great variety of articles in as many styles, being, in all of them, extremely flippant and fashionable, and sometimes amusing. He was terribly severe on rich people, depicting them as invariably wicked, frivolous, and contemptible; their wives as fools, their daughters idiots, their sons rakes, and themselves as "plutocrats," "mammonites," and upstarts. In a similar spirit, he fell foul of Mr. Brown, of Grace Church, a personage whom New Yorkers recognize as "an institution" of their city, being not only sexton of that edifice, but also grand arbiter and manager of all the balls of "upper-tendom," his peculiar functions including the introduction of eligible young men to such entertainments, and to "society" in general. It was said that Mr. Brown had originally performed this office for Mr. O'Byrne; but whether the shrewd upholsterer, after taking him up, had seen reason for putting him down again, did not appear; however, it is certain that the young Irishman, besides attacking him in the Porcupine, pursued him through several similar publications. Mr. O'Byrne assumed an air of lofty condescension towards all persons connected with the paper, abused it anonymously in the Timeserver, and, where he thought he could do so with impunity, claimed to be its editor.

Of a different quality than the productions just described, were those of George Golding, who, though he seldom took pride or pains in prose authorship, or scrupled at scribbling off any kind of rubbish which commanded a ready sale, and scoring it afterwards, was wont to boast that he never composed verse "unless he felt like it;" and the result bore witness to the truth of the assertion. To be sure, the best of his poems—lyrics exhibiting an exquisitely sensitive appreciation of Nature in her brighter or sadder aspects, a most delicate fancy, and a capacity for charming equally with mirth and melancholy—reached the public through other mediums than the poorly-paying Porcupine; still, his natural faculty was such, that he rarely fell to rhyming without giving evidence of a higher order of merit than is common in such periodicals. He was not very deep, perhaps, or highly imaginative, but always pleasant, and generally delightful; and united the happiest fluency of versification with a knack of inventing new combinations of it—and this without playing tricks with syntax, putting words on the rack, or otherwise impairing the apparent spontaneity of his style. He had no literary affectations, seldom imitated anybody, and was never betrayed into turgidity of epithet by the desire of saying fine things. How, with his detestable cynical philosophy, he contrived to keep the divine afflatus so fresh and (mostly) so pure, God knows! but he did, even to the last; nor is the anomaly unprecedented. Perhaps it involves the unconscious recognition of a higher moral standard than such natures pretend to, an instinctive homage to the sacred gift of poetry. Unquestionably, the Porcupine owed much of its early success to Golding's writings, and Dick Sabin's illustrations.

There were but two or three exceptions to the average uniformity of the rest of the contributors, as described in a previous chapter, who may be dismissed with but brief notice. One was Maury's, the kindest of inveterate punsters, whose vein of peculiar, genuine humor had once afforded the town a really original and entertaining series of papers, published in that fine old magazine, the Jawbreaker, the editor of which, Jolly Vampire, Esquire, paid their author (and everybody else) in puffs and flattery, instead of dollars, which might have been the reason why he had subsequently devoted himself to the more profitable employment of writing advertisements for an eminent "capillarist," as he called himself, or professor of the art of developing hair upon the human cranium and countenance. (Maury's, by the way, was rather bald himself, which looked as if he didn't believe in his patron.) Another was Neatherd, the poet, nicknamed "Daisy" by his friends and acquaintances, after the example of Steerforth, in David Copperfield, and likewise in compliment to the freshness and innocence of his appearance, who, possessing a deep voice, strove to intensify it by talking like a stage-ruffian, his verses being as tragic as his speech; though he was socially of a decidedly convivial turn, and would go direct from the completion of stanzas of a perfectly suicidal tendency to unlimited "whiskey-skins" and tobacco. A third and last contributor may be instanced in George Washington Makeweight, who only did paragraphs, jests, and conundrums; who was chronically impecunious, and whose literary capital lay chiefly in his animal spirits. He would say, gravely: "I must make a joke to-day—I want lunch!" or having, as he termed it, "got off" a good thing at Crook and Duff's, would rush round to Fulton Street, dispose of it, return, and spend the proceeds in treating the company—or, anathematizing Woodruff for "not seeing it," as the chance might happen. For the Porcupine paid ready money for such light merchandise, at the rate of from twenty-five to fifty cents per item—in the days of its prosperity.

Admitted to this fraternity in virtue of a few pictorial contributions which had sufficient merit to please Messrs. Brough and Woodruff, Paul soon began to try his hand at scribbling, succeeding, in fact, better with his pen than his pencil, for he could never attain the facility and effectiveness of his friend, who speedily became artist-in-chief to the paper, producing such a variety of illustrations of all kinds that there would have been no need of other draughtsmen, but for his good-nature, and occasional fits of indolence. Paul was too nervous, of too anxious a temperament, to excel as an artist; he worked painfully, often spolling his conceptions by over-elaboration—not being able to let well alone—a fault especially fatal to comic drawing, which should always look sketchy, and, as it were, jauntily correct, as the late John Leech understood to perfection, and which but few of his successors seem to have any idea of; for they either give us pre-Raphaelite crudity, or German literalness—as if art had no higher pretensions than mere photography. But in writing, though he was, at first, haunted with an embarrassing sense of the responsibility of appearing in print, he soon began to feel more at his ease, and commonly found plenty to say. His affection for books has been mentioned already; in his boyhood he had devoured all the volumes of fiction and light literature which he was able to get at, with an avidity sharpened by the rarity of the indulgence; and subsequently increased his store of desultory reading until it afforded a fair amount of capital to draw upon in the way of reference and illustration; while his letters to Kate Sabin and Harry Franklin had supplied an average apprenticeship in composition. Arriving in the United States with his eyes and ears open, a keen appreciation of the novelty of all about him, and a lively capacity for enjoyment and observation, it was impossible that he should want subjects. So he went to work with a great deal of zeal and enthusiasm, being delighted to see himself in type, and inordinately proud and happy in his new employment. Probably he believed in the Porcupine more than the rest of the contributors, and would have thought it an excellent paper—but for its politics.

These were pro-slavery, in deference to the predominant tone of public opinion in New York City—which then, as now, carried its political conscience in its breeches-pocket. Actors are seldom, if ever, reformers; they depend too much on popular favor not to side with the majority, and gravitate naturally towards wealth and privilege; and Mr. Brough's nationality, as well as his profession, biased him in the same direction; while Mr. Woodruff also belonged to the "Democracy;" hence, probably without much concerted arrangement, the Porcupine swam with the stream. That being the case, the reader may infer that, in a business point of view, its conductors were acting shrewdly; but a little reflection will convince him of their error. Not to mention the obvious advantages of having such a subject for attack as the monstrous anomaly of slavery in a republican country—involving, in its thousand and one phases, an altogether inexhaustible fund for the honest employment of wit, satire, irony, and ridicule—the Porcupine, in taking an opposite course, inevitably committed itself to dullness and mediocrity. Though the experiment has often been tried, wit and humor have rarely been successfully prostituted to base ends; they are the play of intellect, and, naturally, ally themselves with justice and humanity, and, perverted, lose half their force; as, according to Homer, Jove deprives a man who becomes a slave of half of his soul. It was difficult to be funny or amusing on the side of the great national iniquity, which was, even then, growing towards a bloody solution; and, besides stultifying itself in attempting to do so, the Porcupine fought against the moral sense and intelligence of the community, in which only—let them be in never so much a minority—such an enterprise must find permanent countenance and support. The Democracy didn't want a comic paper—such mirth as they required was supplied by the Emerald and its contemporaries,—the Republicans despised it; wherefore, after its first burst of success, the Porcupine languished. Indeed, it very nearly came to an end in the third month of its existence, when a crisis occurred which ought to have finished it, instead of being the prelude to a new lease of life of rather peculiar character.

This originated in the sudden secession of Mr. Woodruff, who, in popular phrase, unexpectedly "sloped," leaving the paper on the hands of Mr. Brough, who was already more than sufficiently embarrassed by his theatrical difficulties. There were a variety of scandals afloat in explanation of the publisher's conduct, including debt, gambling, and the payment of his addresses, simultaneously, to no less than three young ladies; one of whom, discovering his perfidy, had attempted to shoot him, and to "cowhide" her rivals—but we need trouble ourselves with nothing further than the fact of his departure, nobody knew whither. He left behind him, in Fulton Street, a handsome new ledger, containing his accounts, in the shape of exactly three entries—two of "Cash in the draw," and one of "Sundries." Mr. Woodruff was not an educated man, and his business capacities may be estimated by the circumstance that the Wizard of the North-East actually sent in a hundred-dollar bill in payment for a "big cut" puffing him, twelve months after its appearance in the Porcupine, he having visited the antipodes during the interval, and the debt been forgotten. It is, therefore, extremely probable that apprehensions of a financial collapse, as well as the realization of a social one, had their influence in determining Mr. Woodruff's summary means of extricating himself from both kinds of responsibility.

THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

We do not envy the man's candor or Christianity who can read, from beginning to end, the hundred pages just published of "Proceedings of the Sixth Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association, held in Boston, May 29 and 30, 1873," and rise from it with only a sneer on his face, or a shrug of easy indifference in his shoulders. To find so many men of high intelligence, broad culture, poetic genius, and pure character, laying the most elaborate studies in religion upon the altar of freedom and truth, is a phenomenon of the rarest interest, and the gravest significance. We complain that physics and commerce have drawn all the finest talent out of the service of religion; that men of genius and taste have become indifferent to piety; that faith, and awe, and aspiration are departed! Here is a plain refutation of the slander. So much severe, earnest, honest thought about religion as is contained in this pamphlet, so much vital interest and concern for its themes, so much evidence of profound sincerity, are not to be easily found, in any equal space, in any religious literature of any time.

The severest thinker may find himself tasked to follow Mr. Samuel Johnson through his profound and comprehensive study of "Freedom in Religion." Mr. W. C. Gannett answers "the main objection which Liberals in religion bring against Radicals in religion," in a speech as full of penetration, instruction, and severe fidelity to conviction, as it is of sweetness and piety. Mr. Robert Dale Owen furnishes a remarkable paper on Spiritualism, which is enriched by a quotation from Mr. Alfred Wallace, of the highest value, and the rarest scientific courage. Mr. Higginson, whose speculations on religion always seem to us the least valuable of his writings, and whose arrogance shows itself very disagreeably in the contemptuous way in which he goodies men, at least his peers, furnishes a very readable paper—for who can escape the charm of his style, let his subject be what it will?

Mr. John Weiss gives us the antithesis of Mr. Johnson's theme, in an essay on "Religion in Freedom," a very remarkable paper, brimful of thought, and sparkling with metaphor, but charged with a Rabalais humor, which does not always escape the suspicion of malice and scorn. But the great suggestiveness, the genuine originality, the real insight, shown on every page, make us grateful for the attempt to explore and lay open what is a sort of terra incognita to most religious inquirers. Mr. Samuel Longfellow cannot speak without winning respect, confidence, and love; and, in his paper, simple, genuine, unambitious, and yet profound, he says things as likely to commend Free Religion to the forbearance of its enemies as anything in the whole report. Mr. I. S. Thomson's speech, as coming from one who has passed from the bluest Calvinism through Methodism into Free Religion, is of lively interest and real value, and his testimony in regard to the inside condition of Orthodox Christianity is very fresh and instructive.

Mr. F. E. Abbot gives altogether the least destructive, nay, the most constructive, contribution his crystal clearness of thought, and cold, dry intellect have ever furnished to the theme of religion, since he made his break with Christianity. Mrs. Mott ends all with a calm, elevated speech, in which she shows how serene a soul can be in the possession of inward light, after the Christian faith has lost historic authority, even though death be near, and the future unknown.

Altogether, the temper and spirit of these "proceedings" is so different from what would be expected from people denying the name of Christians, and many of them not shrinking from theoretic atheism, that we cannot but feel that the phenomenon presented is one of the most serious and tender kind, which it would be a sort of irreligion to treat with levity or disrespect.

It is hardly necessary for us to say that the open quarrel with Christian faith, which the Free Religious Association represents, is chiefly a quarrel of religious men claiming to have a higher and holier religion, of a wholly uninstituted form, with what they pronounce to be an effete, incredible, and now demoralizing, religion, honored by the rest of the world as Christianity. The religion they have is natural religion scientifically demonstrated, or received only as far as it is demonstrated; and the religion they disown is Christianity, received by most of us as a birthright by inheritance and tradition, an historical faith, which, so far as it contradicts demonstrated or scientific natural religion, we know few liberal Christians who would be willing to be held by, or who would acknowledge that any such contradiction was possible otherwise than through erroneous ideas of what Christianity is, or erroneous ideas of what natural religion is.

But this kind of Christianity is precisely what Mr. Abbot, in especial, will not allow to be Christianity at all. Christianity, he insists, is not anything in itself—it is only what the Church has said it was, and specially, if we understand him, what the Roman Church has said and made it—the most permanent, consistent, and coherent of all the institutional and historical forms of Christianity. Go back into your logical fortress and home, is the spirit of his critique in THE INDEX, if you pretend to be Christians, and defend it, and we will respect you; but Protestantism and this thin, ghostly Unitarianism, which claims all the freedom of Free Religion itself, and all the advantages of faith in historic Christianity, we do not find a foe worthy of our spear.

If Christianity, we beg leave to say, were not alive and growing, if it were not a life which providentially organized itself in humanity, capable of assimilating whatever in human experience and history was congenial to it, and capable also of casting out its own dying or dead matter, then we should not undertake to defend it. Considered as a finished and completed thing, a mechanical and not a dynamic thing, a thing only of the past, or capable of being defined perfectly at any one era for all other eras, we repudiate it just as we repudiate the binding power of any previous interpretations of the Scriptures, always open to fresh glories as new lights appear. What is permanent is the life that entered into the world in the person, character, and spirit of Jesus Christ. That life organized in freedom a body which is visibly the Church, or, better, Christendom, for we include the secular and the worshipful elements and influences in Christianity in our idea of the Church; and this Church or this Christendom are the natural home of the faiths and graces which honor humanity and predict its destiny. In this home these Free Religionists have been reared, and from it they have derived their moral and spiritual life. They are themselves, in spite of their protest, a branch or offshoot of the Christian body, and we do not doubt will, in due time, be felt to be a part of Christ's life and fruit. They boast of including him and all that is good in the Church in their larger sweep. But it will, in due time, appear whether "they bear the root or the root them." We shall see whether Christianity is not more expansive, deeper and farther reaching than they are; whether the Christian Church, visible and invisible, which they reject, is not able to hold its own against all that science, philosophy, and Free Religion can bring to overthrow or supersede it.

In our judgment, Christ and Christianity are the chief animators of science, philosophy, and freedom, the main sources of moral and spiritual life. Christianity shows itself capable of accepting, assimilating, digesting, and growing upon all that science and philosophy furnish that is new and true, while science and philosophy are yet unable to digest or assimilate her. Which is the most alive and the most universal, Christianity or science? Science makes discoveries by the hands of a few men of extraordinary insight and genius, and Christianity in due time proceeds to convert these discoveries into means for blessing and building up the moral and spiritual life of millions. The Church as an institution of worship may be tardy and conservative and cautious, but Christianity always has disciples of a non-ecclesiastical order, who do her work when the Church neglects it, or is engaged in holding on to the root instead of pruning and tending the tree of life. Free Religion may suppose that it is doing a greater work than the Church and Christians. But it is deceived by its critical spirit and narrow estimate of life. Christianity is not critical, is not scientific, is not philosophical. It accepts aid from all these. But it is intensely human and intensely divine, full of hope, faith, and love; and with its Christ and his spirit it makes even the dry bones of old statements do more for human welfare, for art, poetry, and moral and spiritual life than all the scientists and philosophers and Free Religionists can accomplish when they put all their gifts together. It is well enough to talk as Mr. Weiss does about missionaries of science going into dark alleys and lanes and tenant-houses and giving a salvation from typhus, as the real gospel, but almost the only people that do go into these places for any good purpose are these despised Christians; and they go moved by the gospel which Christ was and taught.

We dare say that the Free Religionists think the late Evangelical Alliance in New York, whose meeting they have so soon followed up with one of their own, was engaged in a very belated and even foolish sort of work, which science and philosophy and Free Religion can well afford to ridicule or scorn. We know very well how some of them—not all—must think of it, from Mr. Weiss's and Mr. Thomson's papers. But we make bold to say that when Free Religion, or even liberal Christianity, can give as vital proofs of Christian power and warm, palpitating life, full of efficiency and fruits, as the faith and spirit that prevailed there, or show as much vital faith in God and humanity, we shall be glad to herald it abroad; and this, in spite of bad theories of its own working, in spite of sentimental catch-words and dogmas and superstitions which we wholly discard and which shut us out of its assemblies. But the river of God, which is full of water, is also full of floating things, drift and sand, and strange birds and beasts. It is a navigable and mighty stream, and it alone never fails, so that the great interests of society are always near its banks and all things that thirst frequent it. To have the main stream of gospel work and power as free from all disorderly freshets and repulsive admixtures as the artificial streams that men can dam and embank is not possible. The working Church is never wholly up with the science and philosophy of the time; it has to stay behind, so far as intellectual progress goes, with the people and wait for them. It has those "fictions" Mr. Gannett speaks of—honest fictions, which are like the foolish-wise stories with which mothers beguile their sick children. But who can look upon the tenderness and devotion with which either Catholic priests or Protestant Orthodox ministers wait on the spiritual wants of the common people, and sacrifice their own intellectual culture, and scientific growth, and even some measure of their liberty, in the disinterested service of humble and only partially grown souls, without gratitude and reverence and some self-suspicion, whether the self-culture we hear so much of as religion's last word furnishes as sweet and holy an impulse?

We rejoice ourselves to represent another portion of the Christian Church whose mission is just opening, in which more light and more culture are to be made consistent with equal faith and a like devotion to the life and inspiration of Jesus Christ. We have thrown off, or Christianity has thrown off in us, a great amount of dogmatic tissue which would not serve it longer in our age or sphere of work. But we abide by the historic Church and the faith once delivered to the saints. We do not expect Orthodoxy to fellowship us. It is far better we should only desire to fellowship her, for she would not allow us to look on our Free Religious friends with either hope or sympathy. But as Christianity is not orthodox, we take her leave to welcome our Free Religious friends with a frank avowal of our distaste for, and distrust of, their main position so far as it is non-Christian, but with a sincere respect for their ends, their rights, and their personal characters, and without any fear of their doings or any fear of being mistaken in our attitude towards them.—Liberal Christian.

A CHALLENGE TO PRAYER.

[The appended article, by William R. Hooper, in the Boston Congregationalist, is one of the very few strictly candid replies to the now famous "prayer-gauge" proposition, which have been made by Evangelical writers. Most of them cover up their own reluctant scepticism as well as they can; this writer has enough "faith" to accept the test proposed.—Ed.]

Professor Tyndall has lately sent to the Contemporary Review a letter from a friend for whom he vouches, proposing that the efficacy of prayer be tested by comparison between the patients of two wards or hospitals, for one of which, in addition to its medical practice, prayer shall be made by all the body of the faithful; while in the other, medical science is alone to be depended upon. As far as I am aware, the religious press has unanimously declined the proposition on the grounds that prayer is not to be weighed in balances; that Professor Tyndall and his friends have misunderstood the nature of God's promises and the belief of the Church therein; that in answer to a similar proposition nearly two thousand years ago, Christ declined to show signs, or to come down from the cross; and that if the trial were made and decided in favor of prayer, the irreligious scientific world would still find some other way of evading the result.

But the test named by Professor Tyndall is not a new thing; it is one that had been previously selected by God himself. Writing nearly a generation after Christ, and therefore under the Christian dispensation, and for all Christians who should come after him, the Apostle James gives the following precept: "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him; . . . and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up." No doubt is even intimated; there are neither limitations nor conditions to this potency of prayer. A more positive promise is not to be found in the Bible. "The prayer of faith shall save him." "The Lord shall raise him up." Professor Tyndall's friend has selected the only test concerning which we have God's positive assurance. It will not do to decline this challenge because Christ refused to give a sign, or to come down from the cross. Professor Tyndall and the scientists of Great Britain are not persecutors nor mockers,—they are simply unbelievers. They are gentlemen of character and study, of great intellectual ability, who employ that ability in the search for material truth, though with a strong bias toward infidelity. Doubtless they prefer to find truths that will confirm them in their dark collapse of faith; they send forth this challenge with an undoubted expectation of a victory over God's people. But God in answer to effectual fervent prayer can confound them as easily as he confounded Pharaoh or Balaam. These gentlemen are the leading scholars in material studies, of the leading Protestant nations of the world. They are of great influence in the domain of thought, and have proposed a test of the power of prayer, the mere declining of which will give them the victory they desire to win. To fear this test, to decline this challenge, except upon grounds which a disinterested party should acknowledge to be sufficient, is to admit that Christians dare not take God at his word. The effect on the irreligious mind of the world will undoubtedly be a confirmation of existing scepticism, as well as a creation of new.

In the dispensations before Christ the motive why God should answer prayer was that "it may be known this day that thou art God in Israel." Moses pleaded with God not to disinherit his people, lest the Egyptians should hear of it and they should tell the Canaanites, and these latter should say that God was not able to bring them into their land. God would be honored by idolatrous Egyptians who persecut, and by Philistines who warred against, his people; and he claims a similar honor from the scientists of to-day. When Elijah performed his great miracle of the fiery consumption of the stones and dust of the altar, after twelve barrels of water had been poured over them, he accomplished it by pleading with God "that it may be known this day that thou art God in Israel." Miracles were performed, not so much because of their first result towards man, as because they set forth God's glory. Throughout all the history of the Jewish or the Christian Church, I find no instance where any one relied on God and was disappointed. Submission was as much an element then as now; yet no faithful prayer was ever refused. The irreligious world to-day denies the existence of God; or claims that if he does exist, he lives and moves so far away that he is unable to control the powers of Nature. This is the real secret of this last offer. A strong believer in the material chain of cause and effect, the maker thinks that not even God can break one of the links of that chain. He therefore proposes a test substantially the same as that inspiration had previously penned. God made the first offer of this test, and infidelity has accepted it.

The glory of God maintains the same prominence in the Christian dispensation that it did in the Jewish and the Abrahamic. All these dispensations agree in the ascription of successful answers to prayer, when the leading element of that prayer is his glory. The miracles of Elijah and Daniel, who preceded Christ, are no greater violation of the laws of Nature than those of Peter and Paul who succeeded him; while the promises to faith in the New Testament are as much more numerous and clear than those of the Old, as the lights of modern science are than those of the times of Aristotle and Esculapius.

The miracles of all dispensations are recorded for our encouragement. In one of the most remarkable of all limitations of natural laws—when rain was withheld from a guilty land for three years and six months—we are expressly told by James that it was in answer to prayer; and he adds for our encouragement and in anticipation of the modern objection that God would hear Elijah more quickly than ourselves, that this prayer was offered by "a man subject to like passions as we are." God's promises of answer to prayer are in such bold terms that no uninspired man would have dared to invent them. It is against the laws of gravity that we should be able to say to a mountain, "Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea;" but we have the promise of it. It is against the law of medical science that prayer should cure the sick; but the Lord has promised to raise him up. And if "the great body of the faithful" to whom Professor Tyndall's friend addresses himself, or "the elders" whom James expressly clothes with this miraculous power, unite in prayer that God, for his own glory and for the confounding of scepticism, should cure the sick of a certain ward or hospital, I can see no doubt of a favorable result; that is, if any dependence be placed on God's promises. Whatever we ask for, we are to receive. Certain irreligious persons among the most learned of the earth's population, deny all power to prayer, all interference by God with the laws of Nature. They challenge the world to a material test already named in the Bible. If that challenge is accepted and that prayer heard, it will be as much to the glory of God as the march of the Israelites through the Red Sea, or the withholding of rain for over three years. It will put an end to scientific infidelity for more than one generation. But if that challenge is not accepted, the irreligious mind of the world is confirmed in scepticism. Students of every land will be pointed to a crucial test which Christianity dared not accept. Oh, Christians, "be not afraid, but only believe." If prayer is offered for specific answer and to God's glory, there can be no doubt of the result. From the time of Adam to our own, no one was ever yet brought to confusion by too much trust in God.

THE RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF TEMPORAL POWER.

I wish to communicate to you to-day some positive information with regard to the vast plans of the Jesuits, already set on foot, for the re-establishment of the temporal power. . . . The Catholic Church, whose spirit is now to be found in the catacombs of believing and generous hearts, but whose visible body has been changed into an immense party, purely political, has been admirably organized by the fathers; it has become an innumerable "Landwehr," trained by an iron discipline, and accustomed to a blind obedience. This stupendous organization, which is the greatest sacrilege, the most abominable violence, that the order of Loyola has perpetrated upon the mystical Spouse of Christ, perverting its aim, its doctrine, and its nature, is now an accomplished fact. The sanctuary of the soul has been invaded, the right of judgment has been taken by assault, conscience terrorized over and trampled under foot, individuality destroyed, the fold of Christ has become the seruum pecus of Horace—the army of darkness, of slavery, of death; a procession of pale Jesuits, as it were, marches against liberty, civilization, light,—against the Gospel itself. The pilgrimages, the mysterious signal for which was given from the impenetrable abysses of the sect, are the mobilization of the army of the Church, corrupted and degraded.

The pilgrimages of the present day are inspired not by love, but by hatred against a Christian nation, and the heart of the God-man is sacrilegiously taken as the masonic emblem of that hatred. The mystic flames of that heart symbolize the inextinguishable wrath, and the ferocious vengeance that are burning in the hearts of a people who are weeping over their lost power, and the kingdom of this world that has been taken from them.

But these pilgrimages, which signify something foreign to the spirit of Christianity, something monstrous, are not vain and platonic demonstrations of those who cannot otherwise express the rancor, the envy, and the rage that are consuming them. On the contrary, they have an aim eminently political; they are preparatory exercises, the schooling, the theatrical rehearsals of the future crusade against Italy.

Trained by these marches and countermarches, the pilgrims will understand their business perfectly by the opening of the Holy Year.

On January 1, 1874, if God gives him life and strength, Pius IX. will proclaim the Great Jubilee, anticipating it by a year. At the signal of the Vatican, Italy and Rome will become the object of all the pilgrimages hitherto directed to local sanctuaries. A countless number of pilgrims, more numerous than those who in 1093 cried, "It is the will of God," will pour down upon the Peninsula. Caravans of five, ten, or fifteen thousand pilgrims, chanting sacred hymns, will enter into the Holy City. Every band will carry the national banner, and the standard of France will float in every direction. M. Fournier and M. de Courcelles will know how to protect their pilgrims; the representatives of the other Powers before the Holy See will loudly demand liberty for those who are discharging a religious duty. Among those will be the Zouaves of Charette, and all the fanatics of Paray-le-Monial. It will be impossible to prevent collisions between the pilgrims and the people. A conflict will be inevitable, and the crusaders, if they are able, will try a tentative blow with the arms supplied from the Vatican. To repress them, the police will not be sufficient; the troops will have to act. Blood will flow in the streets of Rome. Then what is called the Catholic world will cry, "Murder!"—the Italians will be proclaimed the butchers of the martyrs of Christ. The conflict between Charette's Zouaves, dressed as pilgrims, will be the signal for the intervention of France.

Behind the French troops will be the cosmopolitan army of the universal reaction. The shout will be raised, "Death to Italy!"

Then the astonished world will perceive that the "sacred heart," the flaming effigy on the banner of the pilgrims—that to which M. Belcastel dedicated France, to which Archbishop Manning dedicates the work in England—was only an incendiary bomb-shell.

I believe that in this terrible and final attempt, liberty and civilization and justice will triumph with Italy over the false and lying gods. I believe that the bastard Catholicism that now reigns will succumb as Paganism did at the Milvian Bridge before the Labarum of new-born Christianity. But if the Catholic of Paray-le-Monial, the monstrous offspring of Jesuitism and of the old age of Pius IX., were to triumph for a few years, he would only have to blame himself afterwards for finding a huge heap of ruins on the spot where the superb dome of Michael Angelo was raised; he would have to impute to none but himself the vanity of the efforts to find again among the fragments and ashes of the Vatican the charred bones of the prisoners and the Cross of Christ buried for centuries beneath the Catholic victory—beneath the hecatombs of Italy.—Roman Correspondence of the Gazzetta d'Italia.

POSTMASTER BILLINGS, of Santa Clara, has received the following letter. It tells its own sad story:

"To the Postmaster of Santa Clara:

"Will you be so kind as to inquire if there is such a man as George Ray in your city; or where he is if he has left Santa Clara? He is about thirty-seven years old, dark eyes and hair, not very tall, and is a carpenter by trade. He is my dear father, and we have not heard a word from him for more than two years. Ma is left with five children, and I am the oldest, and am fourteen years old. Sometimes ma thinks he is dead; but I dreamed the other night that he came home to us, and it has made me think so much about him that I cannot help writing to you, for I cannot give up all hopes. Oh, dear Mr. Postmaster! will you do this favor for a poor, homeless girl? and you shall have many warm thanks. If you can see him, or hear where he is, will you be so good as to send him this letter? Will you please answer? Yours truly,"

"My Dear, Dear Pa: How can I tell you how sad my heart is while I write to you, not knowing whether you are dead or alive. Do you love us any more? Why is it that we don't hear from you any more? If you are sick and discouraged, we will try and help you to come home, and then we will work and take care of you. Oh, how hard it is to live as we do, now that the children are all separated! Willie is at the State Reform School in Lancaster, in this State, and ma does not have to pay his board; a man in Berlin has adopted Frankie as his daughter, and a rich farmer in the country has Libbie as his child, and Henry is at Fredericksburg. I am working for wages in a small family in Massillon. Ma has learned the dressmaker's trade and sews by the day in this city, and helps me all she can. She has been working in Fulton for the last two weeks, and will be there some time. It is hard to have no home, no pa to love us—and oh, pa, do take pity on us, and come back! We will all receive you with open arms. And how happy we will be to have you with us, as you have been once! Oh, pa, do write and tell us if you love us still. Your sorrowful daughter,"

"EMMA A. RAY.

"MASSILLON, Stark Co., O."

WHEN MEN have once acquiesced in untrue opinions, and registered them as authenticated records in their minds, it is no less impossible to speak intelligibly to such men than to write legibly on a paper already scribbled over.—Hobbes.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

SWEET FERN LEAVES.

A quick, new growth, since August rains,
Restored the withering earth;
This tender stem more living seems
Than even a fresh spring-birth.

Like carven stone each perfect leaf,
And yet they spring and curve
So lovingly about the stem
One almost sees them swerve.

And tinged with red is every leaf,
As though a crimson tide
Were coursing through their slender veins,
Such as through mine doth glide.

How can they be so beautiful
In color and in form,
Beyond a sculptor's, painter's art,
With living currents warm,—

And not be fashioned by a mind,
And quickened by a heart,
As far beyond the human
As is Nature beyond Art?

How can they be so beautiful
And not enkindle joy
In the Artist who created them,—
A bliss without alloy?

Oh, sweet fern leaves, my burning bush,
My sermon and my kirk,
I feel your happy Maker near,
Rejoicing in His work!

M. B. W.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS TO INDEX STOCK.

Mrs. F. W. Christern,	New York City,	One share, $100
Richard B. Westbrook,	Sonman, Pa.	" " 100
R. C. Spencer,	Milwaukee, Wis.	Two " 200
R. W. Howe,	Boston, Mass.	One " 100
Chas. W. Story,	Boston, Mass.	" " 100
E. W. Meddaugh,	Detroit, Mich.	Five " 500
Jacob Hoffman,	Cumminsville, O.	One " 100
John Welsa,	Boston, Mass.	" " 100
W. C. Russell,	Ithaca, N. Y.	" " 100
A. W. Leggett,	Detroit, Mich.	" " 100
B. F. Dyer,	Boston, Mass.	" " 100
James Purinton,	Lynn, Mass.	" " 100
F. A. Nichols,	Lowell, Mass.	" " 100
J. S. Palmer,	Portland, Me.	" " 100
Robt. Ormiston,	Brooklyn, N. Y.	" " 100

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING OCTOBER 12.

Smith Wright, $3; J. P. Smith, $3; Charles W. Story, $3; William H. Wheat, $3; Della C. Hutchinson, 75 cents; E. E. Clough, $2.50; Daniel F. Child, $100; J. L. Righter, $3; Richard Burke, $1.50; J. W. Higgins, $3; E. T. Peters, $3; J. C. Smith, $3; H. Muzzey, $3; W. D. Brewer, $3; Jonathan W. Hastings, $3; Charles N. Norris, $3; Matilda Goddard, $3; William W. Palmer, $3; W. H. Young, 50 cents; Sarah F. Earle, $4.75; Jonathan W. Sullings, $3; Hudson Tattle, $2; James Beveridge, 40 cents; W. H. Boughton, $10; G. C. Winchester, $3; John Bank, 50 cents; M. V. Sims, 10 cents; David Porter, 25 cents; H. C. DeLong, $1; George Houghton, 40 cents; George H. Foster, 45 cents; E. A. Kingsbury, 10 cents.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Postage on THE INDEX is five cents per quarter, dating from receipt of the first number, payable in advance at the place of delivery.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

RECEIVED.

Books.

THE STORY OF GÖTTE'S LIFE. By George Henry Lawes. Abridged from his Life and Works of Goethe. Boston: James B. Osgood & Co. 1873. (Price $1.50.)

Pamphlets and Periodicals.

"ACCORDING TO ST. JOHN." On the Deity of Jesus of Nazareth. Part II. A Comparison between the Fourth Gospel and the Three Synoptics. By the Wife of a Beneficed Clergyman. Edited and Prefaced by Rev. Charles Voysey, B.A.

FIVE LETTERS ON A CONVERSION TO ROMAN CATHOLICISM. By Robert Rodolph Suffield. ORTHODOXY FROM THE HEBREW POINT OF VIEW. By Rev. Thomas F. Kirkman, M.A., F.R.S., Rector of Croft, near Warrington.

AN ADDRESS TO ALL EARNEST CHRISTIANS. By T. Lumisden Strange, late Judge of the High Court of Madras, etc. [The above all published by Thomas Scott, Esq., No. 11, The Terrace, Farquhar Road, Upper Norwood, London, S.E.]

PROCEEDINGS OF THE Fifth Meeting of the International College of Surgeons Association, held in Cincinnati, Ohio, June 10, 11, 12, 13, 1873. Milwaukee: Cramer, Alkns & Cramer. 1873.

IOWA SCHOOL JOURNAL for September. Des Moines: C. M. Greene.

MATERIALISM: Its History and Influence on Society. By Dr. L. Blücher. Translated by Alexander Loos, A.M. New York: A. K. Butts & Co. LECTURE ON HUNDRETH NINTHISM. By Prof. Max Müller. New York: A. K. Butts & Co. [Reprint.]

New Music.

THE RIVER OF LIFE. For Sunday-schools. By H. S. Perkins and W. W. Bentley. Boston: Oliver Ditson & Co. Also, by the same, ROSE-LOVE'S REQUIA—FANCY—EASY SONATINES—La Fille de Madame Angot—Two Melodies—Toward a Mazurka.

The Index.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY

BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,
AT

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Toledo Office: No. 35 MONROE STREET. Julius T. Frey,
Agent and Clerk.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, THOMAS WESTWORTH
HIGGINSON, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HALLOWELL,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES
VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England),
REV. MONCURE D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 23, 1873.

NOTICE.

On and after September 1, the publication office of THE INDEX will be at No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. All letters, papers, and other communications should be henceforth addressed to "THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass."

Correspondents and Exchanges will please take notice.

GLIMPSSES.

IT IS FUNNY enough to see a prominent Boston paper praising up "every good Evangelical of the old school, of the school of John Bunyan and William Ellery Channing"! It cannot sneak into the good graces of Evangelicals by quoting an arch-heretic as one of their number.

THE POPE has written to Emperor William that, having been baptized, the latter is the former's subject. The Emperor bluntly denies the soft impeachment, and declares he has "no Mediator but Christ." He would have come nearer the truth if he had said he had no Mediator at all.

"THE RULERS of the Roman Church," said the Rev. Matteo Prochet, of Italy, to the Evangelical Alliance, "have the women through the confessional and the children through the schools; and then they make the nation theirs." Shall America learn no wisdom from Italy's experience? Let her at least save the children both from Romanism and Evangelicalism, by making the schools thoroughly secular.

WE TRUST nobody will suppose that the reports of our paper on "The Cost to Christendom of the Foreign Mission System," as published in the New York dailies, were either full or accurate. Especially as to statistics, the reporters made the wildest work of our statements. The paper will be published in THE INDEX by-and-by in its turn. Meanwhile critics will do well to "look before they leap."

THERE ARE TWO ways of fighting your enemy. One is to meet him face to face, and grapple him in deadly earnest. The other is to slink up behind his back, stick a pin into his calf, and then incontinently take to your heels. The Liberal Christian adopts the former; the Christian Register adopts the latter. But as the pin happens to be pointless, what is the use of running away, good neighbor? THE INDEX wars neither on women nor children.

REV. DR. GEORGE F. POTTER, of Pompey, N. Y., presented a resolution favoring the taxation of church property to a Democratic county convention. For this honorable action the Syracuse Radical Club has with great propriety passed a vote of thanks to Dr. Potter. It is hardly to be expected that many clergymen will favor a policy which is plainly inimical to their own interests; but there is all the more reason for expressing respect for those who do.

REFERRING to the questions raised by Darwinism, the Morning Star, published in Dover, N. H., by the Freewill Baptist denomination, says: "They are such as do not vitally affect Christianity either way, so far as we can judge." Will the Star be honest enough to say explicitly that Christianity can dispense with the doctrine that all men are now under the condemnation of God by reason of Adam's Fall? Darwinism dispenses with Adam; can Christianity do so? Please give a sincere, straightforward answer to this question, good Star!

AN ARTICLE by Rev. James Freeman Clarke in the Christian Union defends the right of "bolting" whenever the majority of a party resolve to do what is wrong. "We argue," he says, "that the interests of the party are best served by letting it be defeated when it nominates bad candidates or indorses bad measures. The righteous voter smites it for its benefit. But if the party is incorrigible and refuses to go the right way, then the righteous voter makes his bolt perpetual and leaves it." Dr. Clarke gives good doctrine. We thank him for justifying our course a few years ago in "bolting" from his own denomination, when it "refused to go the right way."

THE Liberal Christian thinks we are self-deceived in holding that the work of THE INDEX is affirmative, not negative, and points us for proof to our articles on "Agitation" in its issue of Sept. 4. What was the whole object of those articles? To kindle a generous enthusiasm for the more perfect development of American ideas—that is all. If the Independent or the Liberal Christian can find anything more "affirmative" than the affirmation that freedom, natural morality, and equality of human rights should be made the basis of all private and public life in a far higher sense than ever before, we shall be very glad to know what it is. The "Demands of Liberalism" are the most comprehensive and positive programme that can be offered for the more thorough Americanization of America. If not, why not?

THE CONGRESS of Mexico, according to the New York Herald, has decreed the following additions or amendments to the constitution of the republic:—

1. The Church and State are to be separate.
2. Congress cannot make laws prohibiting or establishing any religion.
3. Matrimony is to be a civil contract.
4. Religious institutions cannot possess property.
5. A simple promise to speak the truth, complying with obligations contracted, with penalties in case of violation, is substituted for the religious oath.
6. Nobody is obliged to give his or her services without just compensation.
7. No contract is to be permitted which aims at the sacrifice of the liberty of man in the matter of work, education, and religious vows. (The laws thus do not recognize monastic orders, nor permit their establishment by any denomination or under any pretence.)
8. And no contract will be allowed to be made among persons consenting to their own proscription or banishment.

"THE ONLY MEANS or machinery existing on the earth for the salvation of men is the Baptist church." So said Rev. J. D. Fulton, D.D., at the recent Bible Union anniversary; for which utterance he is severely taken to task by the Morning Star (Freewill Baptist). Its rebuke "reminds us of a little story," as Mr. Lincoln would remark. A company of Irishmen came to a well one moonlight evening, and, mistaking the reflection of the moon in the water for a fine cheese, formed a nice plan to secure the prize. The first man grasped the curbstone firmly with his hands, the second man hung down the well by grasping the first man's feet, and so on, till a chain was formed by which the last man was confidently descending, when suddenly the first, being nearly exhausted by the strain, exclaimed—"Howld on till I spit on me hands!" Whereupon they all went down together to pick up the cheese. When the Morning Star lets go of the doctrine of salvation through "immersion" alone, spectators conclude it has stopped to "spit on its hands." We peer pensively over the edge of the well as it and its dependents get "immersed" more thoroughly than they expected, and tender our respectful regrets that it falls, after all, to secure the cheese of "salvation" it went for.

CHARLES BRADLAUGH lectured in Boston, at Music Hall, October 17, to a great audience. On the platform were Wendell Phillips (who introduced the orator of the evening in the most complimentary manner), William Lloyd Garrison, Charles Sumner, and others. The address was one of the most powerful, eloquent, impassioned appeals that we ever listened to; and it was clear that, from the first sentence, Mr. Bradlaugh carried his audience by storm. Nothing could have been more manly, modest, and dignified,—nothing more free from intemperate rant, or the tricks of the demagogue. His subject was "The Republican Movement in England;" and the massive physique of the man grew luminous with the light of moral enthusiasm, as he set forth the wrongs of the "mob, but a mob with wives and children,"—the "mob" that sympathized with the North in its great struggle for universal freedom,—the "mob" that was only the oppressed common people of England, hungering and thirsting for the true republic that should give them a chance to "live" and not merely "exist." Mr. Bradlaugh is strong of brain and staunch of heart,—nobody can doubt it who hears him, and is not himself either weak of the one or rotten of the other. A great and noble future is before him, in the work to which he has given himself; and we wish him a success that shall prove to be England's redemption from all oppression. If we have caught the spirit of the man, he himself hopes for no other.

THE GROWING UNREST of the Orthodox sects at the spread of liberal opinions and practices is very marked. The St. Louis Dispatch of September 23 states that a formal Alliance has just been formed by the Evangelical ministers of that city to prevent the "desecration of the Sabbath." A meeting was held at Centenary Church, Rev. Dr. Brooks presiding, at which the following agreement was adopted: "The undersigned, ministers of the Lord Jesus Christ, hereby solemnly covenant with God and with each other that we will unite as a band of Christian brethren in seeking to arrest the appalling desecrations of the Lord's day, now so prevalent in our midst, and to stay, with the help of the Almighty, other alarming evils growing out of it, or connected with it, that not only assail our common Christianity, but threaten the foundations of social order. We pledge our mutual aid, sympathy, and prayers in the work entrusted to our care; and, for the sake of manifesting our oneness in Christ, we declare our belief in the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost; in the divine inspiration of the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments; in the fall and ruin of man by sin; in the atoning sacrifice of Jesus upon the cross as the only ground upon which salvation is offered to all and received by the believer; in regeneration by the Spirit, and in practical holiness as the fruit of vital union with our risen Lord. We cordially invite the co-operation of Christians of every name, who can meet upon the foregoing basis, to assist in carrying out the purposes of this organization." Dr. Campbell and others called attention to the notorious desecrations of the Sabbath in St. Louis—companies with banners and music marching through the streets; saloons and places of business open all day; and the exodus of thousands on each Sunday into the country in quest of pleasure, instead of going to church. They maintained that an alliance of ministers could successfully fight this growing evil. A meeting of the Alliance is to be held every Monday afternoon at the Centenary Church. It remains to be seen what course of action they will adopt.

THEY ARE DISCOVERING now-a-days all sorts of proofs of Noah's flood. Dr. Schliemann has dug up evidence in the site of ancient Troy that Homer was a first-class reporter, and ought to have been "Special Correspondent of the Athens Gazette from the Seat of War." But his exploits are thrown into the shade by George Smith, "an accomplished archaeologist attached to the British Museum," who has raked up on the banks of the Tigris a fragment of a slab containing the orders given to Noah for his embarkation by the Assyrian god Hea (not the Hebrew god Jehovah!), and also "important information in reference to the creation of the world." That is just what we want, as it will confound the naughty fellows who dare to dispute Genesis. How this discovery is going to help Orthodoxy, however, when it seems to reduce the story of the Noachian deluge to an Assyrian myth, is not clear to our purblind vision; yet great are the rejoicings over the revelations now made, as if such would be their effect. The Boston Globe continues as follows: "The old collection of Assyrian inscriptions in the British Museum contained the instruction of God to Noah to warn the world because of the wickedness of the people. The subsequent predictions of the Deity and His command for embarkation are as follows in the fragment of baked clay secured by the representative of the Daily Telegraph, which are of the highest interest to students of Biblical history: 'On the coming of the flood which I shall send, thou shalt enter into the ship, and the door of it thy ship turn; thou shalt send into the midst of it thy corn, thy furniture and goods, thy gold and silver, and thy female slaves, the sons of the army, the beasts of the field, the animals of the field; all that thou hearest thou shalt do. . . . They shall spread and they shall guard the door of the ship. Sisit attended and opened his mouth, and spake, and said to the god, Hea, his Lord.' This is followed by five lines of the speech of Sisit, which, in consequence of mutilation, cannot be exactly translated, and in his answer the Assyrian Noah describes the difficulties in the way of the work. Of course, there are differences between this account and that given in Genesis, but the resemblances are much more remarkable. The beasts mentioned as going into the ark are not the representative pairs of all living creatures, but animals for food and agricultural purposes, while the escaping household possessed corn, slaves, gold and silver."

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The following rule has been adopted with reference to subscriptions to THE INDEX, and will be observed on and after December 1, 1873: THE INDEX will be discontinued to each subscriber immediately on the expiration of his term of subscription as marked by the printed mail-tag, unless the subscription is renewed in advance, or unless direct notice is received that the subscriber intends soon to renew it. But a bill will be sent to each subscriber a few weeks previous to the expiration of his term, in order that he may have an opportunity of renewing without suffering any interruption in the receipt of his papers.

The purpose of the above rule is simply to meet the case of subscribers who do not wish to renew their subscriptions, but are not considerate enough to notify us of the fact. All subscriptions are properly payable in advance, and we are greatly obliged to those who renew at or before the expiration of their terms; but it is not intended to insist unreasonably on advance payment when, as sometimes happens, subscribers wish to renew but find it burdensome to do so at any particular time. Our wish is to accommodate our subscribers as much as is possible without endangering the safety of the paper; and we hope that all will be satisfied with the rule now adopted. Of course, all who are entitled to an extension of time, as recently explained, but who are indisposed to waive it for the sake of helping the paper, have only to notify us, and the proper extension will be made. Several hundreds of bills have just been sent out from this office, which we hope will be promptly honored; and if each subscriber will only take the trouble to send us the name of another new one, the kindness will be gratefully appreciated.

THE NEW YORK CONVENTION.

The recent convention of the Free Religious Association in New York was quite as successful as could be expected, considering the unpopular character of the movement that gave it birth. The sessions of the Evangelical Alliance during the previous week had been crowded to overflowing; and, compared with these, our meetings were of course inferior in point of numbers. Yet the great hall of the Cooper Institute was nearly filled at the evening sessions by large audiences, which manifested their sympathy by frequent and hearty applause; and the full reports given in the New York dailies, especially in the Tribune, multiplied them in fact immensely. To give in THE INDEX a report of these various meetings, covering the three evening and two morning sessions, would be impossible, and we shall not attempt it; but several of the papers read will be published in these columns, beginning with next week. One of the most brilliant and effective of them, an essay on the "Taxation of Church Property," by Mr. James Parton, will probably soon be issued in tract form by the Association; and it ought to have the widest possible circulation, being exactly such a treatment of the subject as is best calculated to arouse interest among those not specially interested in it heretofore.

So far as our comrades are concerned, we never heard better speaking on the platform of the Free Religious Association. The topics chosen were practical and timely, and nothing could have been more evident than that the Association has a "sufficient reason for being," notwithstanding the World's labored scepticism on this point. That there should be an efficient religious association without a definite creed seems incredible to the World, although hundreds of business and political and scientific associations are in active and successful operation all about it; nor have we ever noticed that the World was particularly puzzled or befogged over the fact. Yet why is a creedless religious association any more anomalous than a creedless manufacturing or banking association? Provided there is a definite object in view, any association has a bond of union; and a creed is necessary only to such associations as make the propagation of it their direct practical object. A creed would be as absurd in the Free Religious Association as it would be in a banking company. Our object is the increase of intelligence with reference to religion, the increase of pure and rational efforts for the well-being of man, the increase of a generous and catholic fellowship among men and women of all beliefs; and inasmuch as creeds tend directly to prevent these objects, it would be as ridiculous for the Free Religious Association as for a Life Insurance Company to lay down a creed for its members. It is singular how much pains some people take to misunderstand us; and when the World flounders helplessly about over the very intelligible position of the Association, it is enough to raise a smile on a bust of the "weeping philosopher." However it suits these self-obscurated cetaceans of the press to lash wildly about with their tails, and to spout furiously over the absurdity of other fishes in daring to be born, the Free Religious Association finds quite as good a reason for inhabiting the great deep of humanity as any one of the demonstrative monsters that wax so late over its audacity in venturing to swim the same seas with themselves.

CHRISTIANITY DEFINED ONCE MORE.

A venerable Southern gentleman who has strongly interested himself in the work of THE INDEX, and signified in many ways his warm sympathy with the objects which its editors and supporters have at heart, suggests that "thou explain frequently, if not keep a standing definition, of what thou meanest by the term 'Christian' or 'Christianity.'" By common usage, he says, these terms "include everything in man's nature and conduct that is good, true, beautiful, lovely, and pure, and nothing to the contrary of these. And when thou opposeth 'Christianity,' places thyself 'outside of Christianity,' or objects to 'Christian' morality, thou art misunderstood by the general reader, greatly to thy disadvantage, as being opposed to those valued qualities just enumerated, when, if I understand thee, thy opposition is only to the restricted Evangelical or Ecclesiastical sense of the word, which includes a belief in the natural depravity of the human race through Adam's transgression; in salvation being attained only through the blood of Jesus, shed on Mount Calvary by the Jews; in the infallibility of the Scriptures; and in the eternal punishment of all who do not accept these dogmas, which includes a large and constantly increasing number. The desire that THE INDEX may not contain weapons that can be used by its opponents against thee and it, as also against the real facts of the case, is what prompts me to make this suggestion, which I trust thou wilt excuse."

So far from finding anything to "excuse" in so wise and kind a suggestion, we have nothing but sincere thanks to express to our friend for making it. However often we may explain what we mean by the terms in question, our meaning is very frequently misrepresented, sometimes ignorantly, sometimes carelessly, sometimes (we fear) maliciously.

Once more, then, we would say that Christianity is the religion taught by the Christian Church; that its most fundamental or essential doctrines are those in which all branches of the Christian Church unite; and that its spirit, character, and tendency must be learned from the history of the Church, and not from any individual's speculations as to what Christianity, the Church, or the history of either, ought to be. Instead, therefore, of identifying Christianity with Roman Catholicism alone, or Calvinism alone, or Unitarianism alone, or with any one branch of the Church alone, we hold that the history of the Church in all its forms, Roman, Greek, and Protestant, must be studied together, in order to discover the real doctrine and spirit of Christianity and its real influence on the development of civilization.

When so studied, it appears that all Christian theology clusters about the doctrine that "Jesus of Nazareth is the Christ of God," that is, the Divinely appointed King, Redeemer, and Savior of the world. This one doctrine is the cornerstone of all other Christian doctrines, and has never been questioned by any branch of the Church that calls itself Christian. Give up this, and Christianity is given up. One may cleave devotedly to what is "good, true, beautiful, lovely, and pure," and yet be either a Christian or an anti-Christian; for these qualities belong to humanity, not to Christianity. But no one can be a Christian who does not cleave to the "Christ of God." Whoever discards him and yet claims the Christian name, deceives both himself and others by it. The loose identification of Christianity with all goodness and truth in general is born of confusion of thought, and tends to make it still more confused. As incidental to the transitional stage of the modern world, however, such confusion is natural, and perhaps necessary, at least until men shall have come to a clear consciousness of their own position as affected by modern science.

"JAMES JENKINS," said a schoolmaster to his pupil, "what is an average?"
"A thing, sir," answered the scholar, promptly, "that hens lay eggs upon."
"Why do you say that, you silly boy?" asked the pedagogue.
"Because, sir," said the youth, "I heard a gentleman say the other day as a hen would lay, on an average, a hundred and twenty eggs a year."

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but hereafter no space will be spared to Errata.

N. B.—Articles for this department should be SHORT, and written only on one side of the sheet.

N. B.—Illegibly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.

N. B.—No responsibility will be assumed for unused manuscripts.

THE SIN OF USURY.

NEW BEDFORD, Mass., Oct. 10, 1873.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX—

I ask a little space in which to point out the fallacies which I think I see in your reply to the question of Mr. Heberling—"Is Interest-taking Unjust?" Permit me to follow your own notation, and pardon me if I change the order.

(1.) The sins of livery-stable keepers must not be allowed to serve as a shield for those of usurers. The real question at issue, I take it, is not whether this class or that class take more than cost, but whether taking more than cost is morally right. To quote Adam Smith in this connection is of no avail. The first two paragraphs of the fifth chapter of his Wealth of Nations contain a statement of principles which the profit-making system directly violates, and which is, in fact, a clear and complete refutation of all the rest of his book. He says: "The real price of everything, what everything really costs to the man who wants to acquire it, is the toil and trouble of acquiring it. What everything is really worth to the man who has acquired it, and who wants to dispose of it, or exchange it for something else, is the toil and trouble which it can save to himself, and which it can impose upon other people." This plainly conflicts with the profit-idea.

(5.) After basing, in (1.), the right to take interest on the justice of profit and rent, you now turn about, and base the latter on the former. Reasoning in a circle would not be surprising in one who, like myself, is comparatively unaccustomed to controversy; but from the pen of one who prides himself that "his logic is seldom caught napping" (I quote from memory), it is hardly to be expected. The average rate of interest at any time is regulated by the average necessity of the borrowing class, which is just as cruel as to base it in any individual case upon individual necessity. But education, you say, is the proper remedy for poverty. To put the cart before the horse is anything but conducive to progress. People can't obtain education until they have something to buy it with. Any system which educates my neighbor's children at my expense, bears injustice on its very face.

(2.) We should exchange equal burdens, not equal benefits. If I possess an article which cost me only one day's labor, and which would be of great benefit to my neighbor, and he has another which he was a year in producing, and which would be of equal benefit to me, am I justified in making the exchange? In accordance with what code of morals can I justly claim one year of his time in return for one day of mine? To lose control over one's own labor is to become a slave. By what right may I subject him to three hundred and sixty-four days of slavery? The right of might, and that alone.

(3.) This paragraph is mainly true, although, in the case of the factory-children, the system serves to keep breath in their bodies, and is in that sense a benefit to them.

(4.) That compensation for risk is strictly equitable is certainly true, but that it forms any part of the ground on which interest strictly defined is based, is certainly not true. Webster defines interest as the "premium paid for the use of money." Pray, what has use to do with risk? Finally, you defend interest on the ground that a man has a right to charge for foregoing any use which he may have for the money he lends, whether that use be legitimate or illegitimate. O tempora! O mores! What could be more barbarous than this? To commit highway robbery by means of a revolver is an illegitimate use to which to put that article, but, by such a principle as yours, the possessor of the revolver has a moral right to charge, when lending it, for sacrificing an opportunity of committing that crime. If this be Free Religion, put me down as a slave to the religion of the Bible, which, however tyrannical in its pretensions, intolerant in its dogmas, and inhuman in its precepts, possesses at least this one redeeming virtue—that it does not justify human beings in owning more than they earn.

Yours truly, BENJ. R. TUCKER.

[We follow the order which Mr. Tucker has adopted above.]

(1.) The practice of livery-stable keepers in charging for the use of their horses and vehicles was not quoted to shield anybody's sins, nor was it considered as a sin in itself. Mr. Heberling himself apparently approved the practice in question, and we simply argued that, if the liveryman was right, so was the man who charged a moderate interest for the use of his money, since the principle involved was the same in both cases. Mr. Tucker is quite mistaken as to the "question at issue." It was not "whether taking more than cost is morally right," but whether all interest-taking is morally wrong. We cannot turn aside at present to discuss irrelevant issues.

(5.) The "reasoning in a circle" which Mr. Tucker imagines he has detected cannot be found in our article. Having misconceived the subject under discussion, it is not surprising that he avoids the dreaded "circle" by shooting off at a tangent. We pointed out the strict analogy between interest and profit or rent, but did not base the justice of either on that of the other; as Mr. Tucker will perceive at a glance, if he will take the trouble to read carefully the article he has criticized. The justice of taking interest, of charging profit, of levying rent, and of demanding wages, depends on the answer to be given to a deeper question than Mr. Tucker appears yet to have considered, namely,—has anybody a right to say he owns anything? Did he ever reflect that to challenge the right to make a reasonable profit is at bottom to challenge the right to own property of any sort? By what right does the seller charge even cost to the purchaser? Why is not all property common to all? Why was not Proudhon right when he declared that all property is robbery? Mr. Tucker does not seem to be aware that, when he denies all right to take interest, he logically denies all right to demand wages or even to charge original cost; for he is in fact denying the right to property itself, and should plant himself on the most ultra communism. He either goes too far, or not half far enough.

As to the hasty and ill-advised phrase "quoted from memory," we can only say that we regret it as one of the too frequent lapses of an over-busy pen. Let it pass into forgetfulness: we are sorry ever to have said so unjust a thing, for it does less than justice to our real desire. The pride of logic is a poor substitute for the love of truth.

Does Mr. Tucker oppose the public school system? It would seem so; but we hope not. If nobody is to be educated till he can pay for it himself,—if radicals are to count it "unjust" to be called on to bear their share of the burden of educating the wretched children of the street,—farewell to all possibility of a true republic on this earth.

(2.) If Mr. Tucker and his neighbor are equally desirous of an exchange, and equally derive benefit from it, it takes a clearer head or a keener conscience than ours to discern any wrong in the transaction. There is no "right of might" in the case; it is a voluntary and advantageous barter on both sides.

(4.) Our indignant young correspondent would have written this paragraph quite differently, if he had not been so swift to draw wild inferences from a plain statement of fact. But the indignation comes from a generous heart; and, though it has elsewhere found vent in vehement and pointed personal criticism, we forget the causelessness in the generosity of it. Better a wholesome wrath with suspected wrong than a cold and bloodless complacency in the existence of wrong known to be real. Mr. Tucker has our sincere respect, and we hope he will take our reply good-naturedly, as not by any means intended to encourage the "illegitimate use" of "revolvers."—Ed.]

THE FUTURE LIFE—"WHICH NO ONE KNOWS" OF.

In the "Notes and Comments" of THE INDEX for October 9 is a word of criticism on Bishop Stevens' late sermon at the confirmation of a new Bishop of Massachusetts, in which the preacher said a bishop's work "had this advantage over secular occupations, that he worked for eternity."

Of this it is remarked by Mr. Stevens: "Nobody has any right to snub this life, or anything belonging to it, out of deference to another, which is problematical, and which no one knows anything about."

I would quite agree with THE INDEX in the folly and false spiritual pride of depreciating this life, that the priestly vocation may be unduly elevated; but is it not a singular assumption to say that no one "knows anything about a future life"?

I have equal right to say, and do say, that I know of a future life, by evidence patent to my senses as well as to my reason and intuition—the one testing and confirming the other. And what I say a host of men and women would say, and among them scientists, scholars, jurists, practical men of business, and royal thinkers, whose names the world will not let die. I look over the list of INDEX stockholders, and am glad to see there large contributors who would say they know of the life beyond; and it seems absurd and uncourteous to tell them they do not know. Is there not a little free dogmatism in this assertion?

I am glad to hold close to the value of this life, and the glory of our work here,—and, as the only way to make our ripper and later days on earth the richest and best is to do well and truly the duties of youth and middle age, so the only way, whereby that future life shall be still richer and better than even the golden ripeness that makes a wise and harmonious old age so beautiful here, is by the noblest and best living, through our to-day on earth, that shall open to a nobler and better to-morrow in a higher-life.

But I do not wish to give my own views so much as to suggest that it is hardly in accord with the free religious spirit, as I understand it, to tell "all the world and the rest of mankind" what they do not know!

How well-timed and fortunate that your Free Religious Convention in New York comes just after the great meeting of the Evangelical Alliance, where the ministers left the bars down and laid themselves very open to most damaging criticism.

I trust the significance, and the good and ill, of that meeting of the Alliance may receive due attention in your meeting, and that your doings may appear in THE INDEX, and in pamphlet form as well.

Especially I hope you will protest against, and stoutly resist, their efforts to "evangelize" our free State by "God in the Constitution"—and all like sectarian and belittling desires. Cordially and frankly yours,

G. B. STEBBINS.

DETROIT, Mich., Oct. 11, 1873.

[I am very sorry that my friend Stebbins thinks me discourteous and dogmatic in regard to believers in a future life, when it was far from my intention to be either. Perhaps all that I meant to say, in the "Note" referred to by him, was this—that, so far as I know, no one knows anything about the future life. I am aware that there are those who claim to know a great deal about it; but the burden is on them to prove that they know what they claim to. Thus far I remain unconvinced that any one has any more knowledge of the future life than I have myself; and I confess—not gladly—that I have none. Until I receive demonstration of the soundness of other people's knowledge, I trust it will not be deemed discourteous in me to say that I think they do not know.—A. W. S.]

JESUS AND NATURAL RELIGION.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

It is gratifying to see how fully Gerrit Smith recognizes the supreme authority of natural religion, as he does in his letter published lately in THE INDEX. I cannot help thinking that he lays undue stress upon the importance of the name Christian. Jesus is set down as the model man. At the same time it is admitted that the only fair test of truth, in morals and religion, is an appeal to Nature. Yet Jesus taught supernaturalism, and seemed to believe in them. He believed, for example, in the existence of angels and devils; and, to be logical, if it is assumed that he was right in so doing, it must be high time to inquire whether any naturalist has made successful researches as to the whereabouts of such creatures, and as to their genesis, structure, and habits. If such or any other supposed facts are entirely beyond the reach of inquirers, and no evidence bearing upon them is accessible, then it seems very clear that they are no part of natural religion.

Natural law remaining always the same, natural religion must depend on that. Anything which is really a part of natural religion must be capable of being verified by it; and anything which is a part of natural religion cannot be so because Jesus or any other person may have taught it, unless the natural law was made by such teaching; which would be quite absurd. In the nature of things Nature's law must always be open to observation, if the proper means of observation are used; and the spuriousness of anything that is pretended to be a part of natural religion, and is not, may be detected at any time.

In the letter mentioned, Jesus is spoken of as having had a mission on earth, and it is said that he was the supreme expositor of natural religion. If Jesus is really to be taken as the supreme expositor of natural religion, the fact or principle that he is such must itself be a part of natural law. Then, of course, anything that Jesus says becomes by force of natural law a dogma of natural religion,—a thing, by the way, which it is a good deal to assert, and hard to prove. Well, supposing it to be assumed, if Jesus asserts anything which would seem to be supernatural, we must conclude that the thing asserted is perfectly natural after all. If we should really admit this, I am not sure that some of us would not appear almost as fanciful as do those Unitarian doctors of divinity who avow a sober faith in all the miracles related in the New Testament, while they deny that there is anything supernatural in them. Here is a kind of faithful resignation that some people would deprecate. It does not even deserve the charity sometimes due to misguided zeal. Though the judgment of him who is a strong partisan, or who is carried away by an indiscriminate admiration, may be open to suspicion or distrust, there is more hope of honest error of opinion than of the timidity and dishonesty which sets aside the dictates of common sense.

It is not easy to see that all difficulty is removed by saying that myth is to be rejected. Where supremacy is admitted, authority follows, which terminates all capacity to draw the line between myth and truth. Not only can no such line be drawn where authority is admitted, but it is then only by some subterfuge that anything mythic can be rejected. For, by way of analogy to the rule that "law is silent where armed force prevails," judgment must sleep where authority prescribes. Then all honest and clear interpretation ceases, and hypocrisy and confusion of thought and conscience become the prime, essential virtues of the Christian. And it is not a very desirable state of things where, while one man, whose reason cannot be quite trampled out, raises at times some little ferment, a much larger number, through want of thought, or through love of peace, or fashionable indolence, accept the strangest fictions, or let them pass without question.

Thus what is natural becomes overborne by what is fanciful, or mixed up with it. In view of such necessity, it is no more than charitable to say that perhaps not all that is asserted by Jesus and his Evangelist biographers, whose statements are involved with his, is true, and that some things, which he is represented as having said or done may not fall in with natural fitness. Then, lest things should be left at loose ends, various questions here and there may be supposed to arise. In the letter mentioned, he is said to have departed very widely from his true nature who sells the drunkard's drink, or who grows the materials for it; and it may be asked—was it right for Jesus to drink wine, to speak without disapproval of the proper method of preserving wine which had undergone a strong fermentation, to be actually engaged in making wine, as he was said to have been at the marriage in Cana of Galilee,—as to the manner of the making of which, by the way, the domestics might have been much mistaken? Could it have been wine that was made there, or was it an imitation of it, supposing that after all Jesus was really there, if not on the third day, then on some other day, and that there was some sort of foundation for the story? Did not Jesus show his good sense in recognizing the healthfulness and the invigorating power of wine, when properly used?

Are not rich men as likely to be good men as poor men are to be so? Was Jesus right in setting down all rich men as quite incapable of salvation or redemption? Is it not a great piece of liberality for rich men to have a very high opinion of Jesus, who had no bad opinion of all rich men? Yes, he did have a bad opinion of them. Although he said, "Blessed are the merciful; for they shall obtain mercy," he had no mercy for the rich. He says it is easier for a cable to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of Heaven. Cable must be the word; and it is said to be found in some copies. Some bungling transcriber has got into the narration the letter eta instead of the letter iota, which makes all the difference in Greek between camel and cable. Surely, if Jesus, carpenter as he was, had sense enough to put timbers together to make a house, he never would have used so absurdly incongruous a comparison as that of a camel going through the eye of a needle. Perhaps, aside from such want of probability, the change is not important: and a camel might be as likely to get through as a cable. But now, although it was beyond the reach of the imagination of the disciples, it may be an interesting problem to some who deal in lore celestial to tell how great a stretch of omnipotence would be required to squeeze a cable through the eye of a needle. Not only is there no salvation for rich men, but there is no redemption. When they get into a bad predicament, they can never hope to get out. Evidence of this is the extravagant allegory about the rich man and the beggar at his gate, hell and Abraham's bosom. Such sentiments cannot seem very natural or reasonable to most people, though they were quite so to Jesus; who, it appears, belonged to a sect which thought there was a sublime virtue in poverty.

No fear need be entertained of being cut off from all privilege of prayer by ceasing to be called Christian. Prayer is not exclusively Christian; and men's notions of it will differ with their prevailing sentiments and aspirations. To set up one's idea of its legitimate use and nature as a rule for another's conscience might be an office as delicate as that of the blind man, who should claim to be a judge of colors. Yet some things concerning it would seem, aside from prevention wrought by superstitious teaching to commend themselves to natural reason. A modest and steadfast reliance upon the power and wisdom of the Almighty, in view of his law as beneficent and unchangeable, must ever be, to the conscientious Theist, as cheering and consoling as it is natural and necessary. But the Christian or other person who should undertake to move a mountain, or even a small stone heap, by prayer, would incur no little ridicule. To avoid this it is likely that those who make parade of wordy petitions let them apply to subjects in glaring the inefficiency of prayer is not so obvious and glaring. If Jesus or anybody else ever assured people that prayer could remove a mountain, and cast it into the sea, the assurance was, of course, sufficiently ridiculous. But the examples of prayer, which he is reported to have set, are not all open to such objection. Witness the beautiful, sublime, and comprehensive system of practical philosophy embraced in what is called the "Lord's prayer;" as to which it may not be impertinent to mention some things implied, if not fully expressed. "Our Father who art in heaven;" that is, a recognition of God as common father of all mankind, who are therefore to be looked upon as brethren. "Hallowed be thy name;" that is, let the real God of Nature be adored, and let all the false gods of history and fable be repudiated. "Thy kingdom come;" let God be recognized as the only king and ruler, whose moral law is that of natural justice. "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven;" let the universal peace and harmony, the necessary consequence of general practical recognition of that law, prevail between man and man, which find place in the motions of the heavenly bodies, and in the other great operations of Nature. "Give us this day our daily bread;" what is necessary is to be desired, not what is superfluous, and the struggle for useless wealth is a kind of madness. "And forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us;" that is, God is on the side of justice, including courtesy and charity, which we will not rebut modes of justice, and that which we will not rebut to others cannot be claimed, or seriously asked for ourselves. "For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory;" that is, all human rights are given by natural law, which rights being secured, there is no occasion for devotion to petty despots, or greater tyrants; and to reach after wide dominion, or to encourage others in doing so, is rebellion against the law of Nature.

In all this there is nothing superstitious, and nothing necessarily outside of natural religion. These sentiments are entertained by very many persons who accept no living man as master, and the reported sayings of no dead man as a finality.

The word Christianity may be applied to various things. If it is claimed that moral law and true natural religion should be so called, the obvious answer is that such things can be exclusively appropriated by no man or party. They are in their nature fixed and eternal, and are to some extent mistaken, or irreverently treated, when they are helped out by any special teaching, or identified with it. And if Christianity contains nothing beyond them, it cannot supply their place, or answer a useful purpose, which they do not answer. If it does contain anything beyond them, it must be objectionable for that reason, and is as bad in substance as it is useless in name. If, in the sense before mentioned, Confucius and Socrates were, as some persons seem to think, better Christians than Jesus himself, even that is no good reason for calling good men Confucians or Socraticists.

Words are to be taken as generally understood. Christianity stands before the world as a cumbrous piece of machinery of fabulous traditions and superstitious observances, the object of which is supposed to be to save the soul in a world to come. While it has a little that is moral, incidentally connected with it, as all religions have, it contains much that is selfish, wicked, and demoralizing. It is not safe for naturalists in religion to call themselves Christians. The broad humanity of such men as Gerrit Smith may well be trusted; but when the seed is widely scattered, the danger is that, in a different soil, it may spring up into a harvest of mischief. Faith receives no check or correction from Nature, which it makes a virtue of ignoring, and the religious zeal which waits upon it may seek, in its own vindication, to sanctify the wickedest animosity and to justify the most horrid cruelty and persecution. The despotic temper of ecclesiasticism is not softened by any recollection of the natural piety of Jesus, whose name it sometimes dishonors, while that natural piety may operate to give it, in the estimation of superficial observers, an air of respectability.

If highest health and comeliness of moral constitution are his whose existence is enlivened by some generous purpose, then a sorry invalid is he whose life is spent in a mean and selfish study to secure his own salvation, at the hands of a stingy, jealous, and malignant Deity whose existence he has had the misfortune to assume. If it is allowable to apply to those called spiritual the wisdom of an old saying, "It is an ill wind that blows nobody any good," such person may safely dismiss all apprehension as to the welfare, in a world to come, of all the soul he will have left to save.

CHARLES COLLINS.

NORTHERLAND, Pa., Sept., 1873.
P. S.—Accipiamus quam nobis exprobat Julia sententiam, facilius sapientior quam consilio benignior—"Delenda est Christianitas." Aut delenda est Christianitas, aut, divinitus data, sola ipsius Dei legis interpretes (si revera quis sit Deus), ratio libera et naturalis rejicienda. C.

SIMPLICITY OF THE GOSPEL.

In the daily prayer-meetings of the Boston Young Men's Christian Association great stress is laid on the "simplicity of the gospel;" its eminent adaptation to commonplace people, people with no special ability, or cultivation, or intelligence. The exhorters in those meetings quote, with great satisfaction, the Scriptural phrases that "not many wise are called," and that God "has hidden these things from the wise and prudent, and revealed them unto babes"—it being assumed as unquestionable that the speakers and their proselytes are the "babes." As most of the persons newly persuaded to attend those meetings belong, unmistakably, to the class unintelligent and uncultivated, there is a sort of serpentine wisdom in this representation of ignorance as spiritually advantageous; but a little sifting of the theological assumptions there set forth as "the gospel" will show that they are as destitute of "simplicity" as they are of truth and reason.

In the meetings above referred to, it is assumed as unquestionably true that whatever is prayed for in faith will be granted. In justification of this belief, they quote this saying, attributed by Matthew to Jesus: "All things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive." They assume that Jesus really said this; that this promise is made to all believers now, just as much as to those to whom it was first spoken; and that true faith is shown by receiving this promise literally, with child-like confidence, and acting upon it as if it meant just what it says. This very morning (Monday, October 6th), the need of such faith was insisted on, and the certainty of its efficacy set forth in the following relation, represented by the speaker as actual fact:—

The father of a family, who had long been an infidel, before going six miles from home on business, urged his wife and daughter not to attend a revival meeting which was going on four miles away, in the opposite direction. They, however, went, and the daughter was immediately converted. As she remained on her knees after the meeting was closed, the officiating minister went to her, and repeated to her such texts of Scripture as he judged suitable to instruct and encourage her. When the text from Matthew above quoted was uttered, she asked in astonishment if those words were the minister's own, or quoted from the Bible. On being assured that they were Bible words, she continued three-quarters of an hour fervently uttering this petition: "Oh Lord, send my father here! Oh Lord, send my father here!" At the end of that time, to the astonishment of all, her father arrived, and inquired what was wanted of him. The daughter then prayed, with still greater urgency, for three-quarters of an hour more: "Oh Lord, convert my father! Oh Lord, convert my father!" At the end of that time he was converted!

And then he informed them that, while at a place of business ten miles away, he had heard a voice authoritatively directing him to go immediately home. Closing his business in haste, he drove home as fast as possible. Immediately on arriving, he again heard an articulate voice, directing him to go at once to the meeting. Going there, four miles further, he found his daughter praying for his arrival; and in three-quarters of an hour more his conversion was granted in answer to her second petition. All this was seriously related in the Young Men's Christian Association meeting, not only as unquestionable fact (a minister having told it to the narrator), but as clearly an answer to prayer, and clearly, also, proof that fulfillment of the Scriptural promise above quoted was now, and always, to be expected. And so, evidently, the majority of those present received it.

Two or three mornings previously, prayers had been earnestly requested for these two things: First, that brother T.'s two sons might be converted that very day; next, that the considerable sum of money so much needed by brother McK. might, that very day, be sent him. Prayer to this effect being made with unusual fervor by one of the brethren, with accompanying exclamations of "Amen" and "Glory" by other brethren, seeming to show that they heartily joined in the request, I thought the case a good one for accurate observation. So, after the meeting, I asked the brother who had prayed whether, among his various petitions, he could distinguish, at the time of making them, which was "the prayer of faith." Considering a moment, he answered that he thought he could. I then inquired whether the prayer he had just uttered was made in faith. He said it was. Undoubtedly so? Undoubtedly so. Then I said that, as the two requests and the prayer were offered in faith for the accomplishment of certain things to-day, we should probably hear to-morrow that brother T.'s two sons had been converted, and that brother McK. had got his four hundred dollars. The praying brother replied, as he left me, "We must remember that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years."

This is a specimen of the simplicity of the gospel, under the manipulation of these brethren.

Take another instance:—
Upon the desk in the prayer-room of the Association lie copies of the blank here following:—

BOSTON YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.
DEVOTIONAL MEETINGS.

To the Leader of this Meeting:—

Will you please fill the blanks at the bottom of this sheet, stating the general feeling of the meeting, under the head of "Remarks," and leave at the Librarian's desk.
E. E. Cook, Chairman Committee.

Number of persons who asked prayers for themselves, that they may become Christians:

Number of persons requesting prayers for others:

Number of conversions reported at this meeting and not before:

REMARKS.

After the close of the morning meeting of Tuesday, October 7th, observing that the leader of the meeting was going away without complying with the above request, I called his attention to it. He decided, however, that it was best to make no record, either in reply to the statistical questions, or under the head of "remarks," and left the paper blank. A truthful record would have read as follows:—

Persons asking prayers for themselves, None.

Persons asking prayers for others, None.

Number of conversions reported, None.

REMARKS.

Meeting began half an hour late, with three persons present; and closed at the usual time with five present.

There was but one prayer besides the official introductory prayer of the leader, no other person seeming inclined to pray.

There was no exhortation except by the leader, no other person seeming to have anything to say.

There was no singing at all, not even a closing doxology.

A large part of the half hour was spent in embarrassed silence, and much of the leader's exhortation and prayer was mumbled unintelligibly to those present, being evidently uttered only on account of his official obligation to carry on the meeting.

The Boston Young Men's Christian Association, by importunate solicitation, raise thousands of dollars from the community every year to sustain their operations and pay the salaries of their officials; and they do this on the ground, first, of great spiritual service, salvation to the souls of those who follow their counsel, and, next, of subsidiary works of beneficence. Both these classes of achievement are set forth in statistical detail in their annual reports. The question is, how much those statistics are "cooked" or "doctored," by leaving out unsatisfactory facts, and reporting satisfactory ones on insufficient evidence.

For instance: Prayers are offered there, in answer to verbal and written requests for an immense number and variety of things: for the salvation of individual souls, for the restoration of back-sliders, for destruction of the influence of Universalists, Spiritualists, and other persons there classed as "infidels;" for fresh faith and zeal to languid believers, that A. may be prepared to die, that B. may be restored to health, that C. may attend the camp-meeting, that D. may be led to establish family prayer, that E. may realize the danger of trusting to his own works, that F. may be brought down low in the dust before God, that G. may succeed in finding employment, that H. may be prospered in his business, that J. may be led from Nature's darkness into the light of the gospel, that K., L., and M. may this very hour give themselves to Jesus, that N., O., and P. may be fully saved and saved now, &c., &c., &c., &c.

Of the granting of the great majority of these requests there is no evidence whatever, and of many it is perfectly manifest that they are not granted. Yet, not only is the admission never made of the failure of any one of these requests, but whenever any event occurs more or less resembling one of the things asked for, that is immediately paraded as an undoubted answer to prayer, and also as proof that whatever is asked in faith will certainly be granted. In short, there is much reason to believe that in the annual reports, and other published documents, as well as in the daily meetings of the Boston Young Men's Christian Association, it is customary to suppress or ignore all facts (as well as all ideas) inconsistent with the theories of the group of churches, self-styled "evangelical," to which they belong.

Is it worth while for the community to pay the thousands of dollars annually asked for by this Association without scrutiny into the matters above hinted at? and especially without considering whether souls are saved by a system of operations like the above? and whether people are to be paid for saving them by the use of such means? C. K. W.

A QUESTION TO MR. HEBERLING,

WHO ARGUES THAT "TO TAKE INTEREST ON MONEY IS WRONG."

EDITOR INDEX:—

Suppose that Mr. Heberling, after working hard all his life, found his health so poor that he could work no longer, but, having laid by a little surplus of earnings, invested it so that the interest would just support himself and family, while the principal would not be sufficient to carry them through life without suffering want: under these circumstances, would it be right or wrong for Mr. Heberling to refuse to take the interest? Suppose that the merchant who borrows his money makes a profit of equal amount by his sagacious use of the capital, thus securing enough to support himself and his own family: would it be right or wrong to refuse to take the profit? Will Mr. Heberling please answer through THE INDEX?

Respectfully, CARL H. HORSCH.

DOVER, N. H., Oct. 13, 1873.

JOHN STUART MILL'S ATHEISM.

He seemed to me quite different from any other man I have ever seen. He was in no sense a negationist or a destructive as to the character of his mind; he never approached any person or any dogma with bow and spear; he never sought to make captures. He dealt in affirmations, uttered his truths in a luminous, genial way, and if he offered an opinion fatal to your prejudices, it was as if he offered you the rarest flower from his garden. Such tenderness! There was something pathetic in his treatment even of wrongs, as if there were written in his breast the motto of the Eastern king, "Act as if you watched over an infant." Such humility! "Buddha sat down on the grass, and the grass became a jeweled throne." He took the lowest seat, and published therefrom eternal laws. Never shall I forget the sensation produced here, during the second great canvass in which he stood for Parliament, by his outburst of horror at the image which Mansel had set up as the Christian God, in contending that the highest human morality must be altogether different from the morality of an Infinite Being. "I will," said Mr. Mill (whom I must here quote from memory)—"I will call no being good who is not good in the same sense as I mean when I apply that term to my fellow-men. And if there be any such being, there is one thing which, however powerful, he cannot make me do—he cannot make me worship him. And if such a being can sentence me to hell for not so calling him, to hell I will go." This sentence was dragged out at the election, and placarded the walls as a specimen of "Mill's atheism"! Canon Kingsley, preaching at the time in the Chapel Royal, quoted the words, and said, "To my mind these words express the most exalted Christianity." And another said, "The religious world owes a great debt to this man it has distrusted, who, when a blow was aimed at the moral majesty of God, upheld the shield." They who had best studied and pondered Mr. Mill's works—still more they who knew him personally, and could witness his life and conversation—required no such vindications. They would not be at any loss to see in this outbreak of feeling in the midst of a philosophical essay an instance and expression of the depth and strength of its author's religious feeling. And it is probable that if Mr. Mill's intimate friends were one and all asked to-day what they considered the profoundest element in their great friend's character, each would reply: his essential religiousness.—M. D. Conway, in Harper's Magazine.

SOMEbody tells this nice little story of the Sage of Concord. He was one evening discussing, amid a group of admirers, some one of those little questions of philosophy, ethics, and religion with which he is so delightfully at home, when an orthodox young man present ventured to interrupt him with a damaging Scripture text, prefacing it with, "But, Mr. Emerson, Job says"—The sage turned his cold wise eyes on him, and with sublime self-complacency replied, "It is immaterial to me, sir, what Job says." This was doubtless intended for immediate effect upon the gentleman from Andover, rather than as a permanent estimate of the gentleman of Uz.—Golden Age.

IN A REAL property case before a French judge, at an early period of the Revolution, the defendant, whose title was contested, proved that the estate had been in his family for more than two hundred years. "Well," said the judge, "it is now full time for another family to have a turn."

Advertisements.

GENERAL NOTICE.

On August 8, 1872, I contracted for the two best advertising pages of THE INDEX for the current year. "No advertisements objectionable to the editor to be taken." For terms apply to

ASA K. BUTTS, 38 Day St., New York.

No improper advertisements, no advertisements of patent medicines, and no advertisements known to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be hereafter admitted into THE INDEX. All advertisements accepted before this date will be allowed to run their time. No cuts admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.
TOLEDO O., June 21, 1873.

THE INSIDE HISTORY
OF THE INDEX ASSOCIATION.

By Francis E. Abbot.

This is a handsomely printed pamphlet of 54 pages, containing the full explanation of the recent "INDEX troubles," which was submitted to the stockholders of the Index Association at their Second Annual Meeting, June 7, 1873. It is hoped that every one who has read the statements of the other side will in fairness read this also. Price, post-paid, 25 cents. Address the Author, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER!

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 cents.

The INDEX TRACT NO. 7, "Compulsory Education," is out of print, and therefore orders for it cannot be filled at present. But it is intended to reprint it before long, and all parties ordering a COMPLETE SET will be furnished with it without extra charge as soon as reprinted.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Report, in pamphlet form, of the Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association for 1872 will be published Sept. 1st.

It contains full proceedings of the meeting, including Essays by Samuel Johnson on "FREEDOM IN RELIGION," and by John Wels on "RELIGION IN FREEDOM." Speeches by O. B. Frothingham, W. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, S. Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, Lucetta Mott, and the Annual Report of the Executive Committee.

Price, 25 cents a copy; in packages of four or more, 25 cents each. It can be obtained by addressing the undersigned at New Bedford, Mass., or, 1/2 Boston, of A. Williams & Co., and at Long's
WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF DEX WRITERS.
Including
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

Now is the Time to Subscribe
FOR

The Truth Seeker,
An eight-page Quarto, printed on fine Book Paper,

DEVOTED TO
SCIENCE, MORALS, FREE THOUGHT, FREE INQUIRY, AND THE DIFFUSION OF LIBERAL SENTIMENTS.

"Come now, and let us reason together;" let us hear all sides; let us divest ourselves of prejudice and the effects of early education; let us "prove all things, and hold fast that which is good."

PUBLISHED MONTHLY BY THE LIBERAL ASSOCIATION OF PARIS, ILL.

Terms, 50 cents per year; Seven Copies to one address for $3; Twelve Copies to one address, $5--payable in advance.

BEGINNING SEPTEMBER, 1873.
Specimen numbers for examination sent free upon application. In view of the amount of original reading matter furnished, it is the cheapest publication in America. Every Liberal mind should read it. There are certainly in the country friends enough of progress and mental freedom to sustain it. The tax is extremely light.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
Paris, Ill.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God is the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

SOMETHING NEW.

LIFE INSURANCE
ON THE
SAME BASIS AS FIRE INSURANCE.
PAY FOR IT AS YOU GET IT.NO "NOTES," "DIVIDENDS," "RESERVES,"
OR OTHER DEVICES

to collect more money than is actually required to secure all the benefits of Life Insurance.

On this plan the National Life Insurance Co. of Chicago has actually paid the heirs of deceased members $199,664, at a cost to them of only $3,999.10. Had these persons been insured on the old high-rate plan, their heirs would have received only $95,748.12.

INVESTIGATE, AND SAVE MONEY BY INSURING
ON THIS PLAN, AND
MAKE MONEY

by securing an agency for it. Address,
NATIONAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.,
73 and 80 Van Buren St.,
Chicago.

First Issue—1874.

THE ALDINE ALMANAC.

—A—

BROCHURE OF AMERICAN ART.

With Illustrations by the best American Artists, Designed and Engraved expressly for this work.

Will be ready Oct. 15th.

THE ALDINE ALMANAC has been gotten up regardless of expense, with the purpose of making it, beyond competition, the most beautiful publication of the kind ever attempted in this country. Unlike other almanacs, it is not filled with second-hand cuts, but is purely original. Every design has been made and engraved by the best artists expressly for its illustration.

THE ALDINE ALMANAC is truly national in conception, and will be at once accepted as the standard for taste and accuracy in every section of the United States.

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS.

THE CALENDARS.

Mr. John S. Davis, a young and rising artist, who is beginning to be recognized as the coming draughtsman of America, has contributed liberally to the embellishments of this ALMANAC. His set of twelve calendar borders is admirable, and entirely unique in their way.

THE SCHUYLKILL

is represented by a splendid full-page cut, from a drawing of Thomas Moran, the strongest landscape artist in America.

THE OUTCASTS OF FOKER FLAT.

A synopsis of Bret Harte's inimitable Western sketch accompanies three illustrations by Mr. Davis.

A TROPICAL SCENE.

One of the most exquisite pictures which it is possible to conceive is contributed by Mary Nemo, to illustrate lines from Joaquin Miller.

RIP VAN WINKLE.

A disquisition on this popular American legend is illustrated by four designs by Mr. Davis.

EVENING ON THE DELAWARE

is a most perfect picture, by Thomas Moran. It shows that American pastoral scenery has ample charms for poetical illustration, and needs only to be properly treated to have this fact fully recognized.

THE MELANCHOLY DAYS.

This picture is strong and full of poetic feeling, and is a very fine illustration of Bryant's well-known lines.

OLDEN TIME SOUTHERN LIFE.

Mr. Sheppard, a Virginian artist, gives us a glimpse of the patriarchal phase of American slavery. He has chosen a Christmas scene, when the "servants" present themselves for the usual presents, and good wishes and kindly feeling rule in every breast.

A 'COON HUNT

is a second contribution of Mr. Sheppard's, and one of the most striking in the work.

THE NEW ENGLAND SCHOOLMASTER.

another of Mr. Davis's designs, represents the old-time Yankee schoolhouse, with the master "so kind and so true."

THE ILLUMINATED COVER.

The cover of THE ALDINE ALMANAC is the richest specimen of the mediæval style of illumination ever produced in America. THE ALDINE ALMANAC will be sent to any address, in roller, by mail, post-paid, on receipt of the price, $40 cents.

JAS. SUTTON & CO.,

PUBLISHERS,

58 Maiden Lane, New York.

A CARD.—We desire to return our thanks to our patrons for the indulgent patience they have shown with our youth and inexperience in the book publishing business. To this inexperience is doubtless owing the fact that our prices failed by one month's time in fulfilling their contracts for the works of Underwood, Bickner and Frothingham were filled a week since, "The Essence of Religion," "The Childhood of the World," our Catalogue, and a most excellent criticism, by Frederic Harrison, mailed from the blinders before this paper leaves the press. We have in press a paper of great interest on "The Relation of Witchcraft to Religion." We have also in press Dr. L. Buchner's principal works, "Force and Matter" and "Man," which we intend to issue at a price greatly reduced from the English edition, and within the reach of every Liberal. When they are quite ready we will let the public know.

We also return thanks for some small donations of Liberal tracts, etc., to be gratuitously distributed among our patrons, as occasion may offer. We intend to keep any book which a Liberal, as such, may wish to see, constantly on hand. Respectfully,
ASA K. BUTTS & CO.,
38 Day Street, New York.

SEPTEMBER 30th

WE PRINTED A LARGE EDITION OF A

LECTURE ON

BUDDHIST NIHILISM,

BY

F. MAX MUELLER, M. A.,

Professor of Comparative Philology in the University of Oxford; Member of the French Institute, etc.

DELIVERED BEFORE THE GENERAL MEETING OF THE Association of German Philologists,
AT KIEL, 28th SEPTEMBER, 1869.

Translated from the German.

Price 10 cents
(The English Edition sells in New York at 50 cents.)

ASA K. BUTTS & CO.,
38 DAY STREET, NEW YORK.

On Trial at Half Price.

ONLY TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

THE SCIENCE OF HEALTH is offered to new subscribers "On Trial," for three months, for Twenty-five Cents. Now is the time to try it, or, three months free to new subscribers who send at once for 1874. $2 a year; single numbers 3 cents. Agents wanted. Address

S. H. WELLS, Publisher,

300 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

POPULAR BOOKS

AT SPECIAL WHOLESALE PRICES.

Mrs. Hill's New Cook Book $1.00
Hans Brinkman. By Mrs. M. E. Dodge 1.50
Little Pet Books. 3 vols. By Mrs. M. E. Dodge 1.50
Life in Death and Death in Life. By Matthew Howard 1.50
Boys of the Bible 1.50
Girls of the Bible 1.50
Robinson Crusoe 1.50
Swiss Family Robinson 1.50
Scottish Chiefs 1.50
Children of the Abbey 1.50
Life of the Empress Josephine 1.50
Lives of Celebrated Female Sovereigns 1.50
Romance of the Revolution 1.50
Arabian Nights 1.50
Don Quixote 1.50

Any of the above books, if ordered in lots of one hundred, one-half off. Also, a full line of books and stationery, at lowest trade prices.

We also have in stock Hilton's Ten-cent Song Books, twenty-five kinds.

Hilton's Ten-cent Novels, twelve kinds.

Hilton's Twenty-five cent Novels, fifteen kinds.

The trade supplied at current prices.

WILLIAM L. ALLISON.

123 NASSAU STREET, NEW YORK.

The Great Family Newspaper.

THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE.

Which publishes all the news.
Which is honest and independent in all things.
Which instructs and educates its readers at the same time that it gives them the news.
Which reports the best thoughts and opinions of leading men, as well as the actions of others.

Which published the only full and accurate reports of all the new and valuable scientific lectures of the past year, making a complete library at merely nominal cost.
Which gave a complete and adequate account of the transactions of the American Association for the Advancement of Science at its recent annual meeting at Portland, Me., and republished the same in a TRIBUNE Extra Sheet.

Which published, entire, Agassiz's great series of lectures on the Method of Creation, the final conclusive scientific answer to the Darwinian theory.

Which has reported fully and faithfully, during the past year, the lectures of Tyndall on Light, of John Wiles on Shakespeare; of Wendell Phillips on Art; of Prof. Young on Astronomy; of Youmans on Science; and of Bret Harte, Parton, and Mark Twain, on lighter subjects.

Which published Beecher's Yale theological lectures in full—eleven practical sermons to young ministers.

Which has the most complete and intelligent foreign correspondence of any paper in the United States.

Which carries on no quarrels with its rivals, and excludes mere personal issues from its columns, devoting the space thus rescued to news and more important matters.

Which recognizes agriculture as the foremost industry of the country, and prints more information of value to the farmers of the country than any other daily paper, if not more than any agricultural paper.

Which admits no impure or immoral advertisements to its columns, nor publishes anything which is not befitting a refined family circle.

Which is always the first, fullest, and most trustworthy in its news, sparing neither money, effort nor exertion to supply its readers complete information of every important event.

Which anticipated every other paper in the country, and the government itself, in the news of Custer's victories over the Sioux on the Yellowstone, and of the safety of the Polar survivors.

Which had the fullest, most graphic and intelligent accounts of the events of the recent great financial crisis.

Which disclosed the crimes and corruptions of the Brooklyn ring in advance of all other papers.

Which was never so prosperous and flourishing as at the present time, and which is erecting the finest newspaper office in the world.

THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE is published in three editions: Daily at $10 per year; Semi-Weekly at $5; and Weekly at $2 per year. For clubs the following low rates for the Weekly have been adopted:—

TO ONE ADDRESS. (All at one Post-office.)
5 copies.....	$1.50 each.
10 ".....	1.25 "
20 ".....	1.10 "
30 ".....	1.00 "

And an extra to each club.

TO NAMES OF SUBSCRIBERS. (All at one Post-office.)
5 copies.....	$1.50 each.
10 ".....	1.25 "
20 ".....	1.10 "
30 ".....	1.00 "

And an extra to each club.

For clubs of Fifty THE SEMI-WEEKLY TRIBUNE will be sent as an extra copy.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY TRIBUNE.

1 copy, one year, 104 numbers.....	$ 3.00
5 copies, or over, for each copy.....	2.50
10 copies (and one extra copy) for.....	25.00

SPECIAL NOTICE TO OLD SUBSCRIBERS OF THE TRIBUNE.—Any former subscriber to THE TRIBUNE, whose name has not been on our books since February, 1873, may obtain THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE from this or any subsequent date, in January, 1873, by sending $2—the price of subscription for one year—to this office.

TO CLERGYMEN.—THE DAILY TRIBUNE will be sent one year for $9; the SEMI-WEEKLY for $2.50, and the WEEKLY for $1.50. Address THE TRIBUNE, New York.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

Tribune Extra.

(Quadruple Sheet.)

The complete and unexampled reports in THE DAILY TRIBUNE of the papers, discussions and proceedings of the World's Evangelical Alliance at its recent meeting in New York, averaging twenty columns per day, for nearly two weeks, will soon appear in a Tribune Extra. This extra, which will be one of the largest papers ever issued in this country, will contain four full sheets of THE TRIBUNE size, and will form the only connected and authentic history of the entire session of the Alliance, at a price within reach of all. Many of the papers have been revised by their authors since they were presented, and others which were read in part only or not at all, are given by THE TRIBUNE in full. The Tribune Extra is thus of historic interest and permanent value, indispensable to every intelligent student of current history and the events of the religious world. Price by mail 25 cents; ten copies to any clergyman's address for $2. Address THE TRIBUNE, New York.

NELSON, MATTER & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF

FURNITURE.

SALESROOM, 29 and 31 Canal Street.

WAREHOUSE, 3, 5, 7 and 9 Haron Street.

FACTORY, Foot of Lyon Street.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN.

THE MYSTERY OF MATTER

AND OTHER ESSAYS.

By J. ALLANSON PICTOU.

500 pages. 12mo. Cloth. $1.50. Postage 30 cents.

CONTENTS.—I. The Mystery of Matter. II. The Philosophy of Ignorance. III. The Antithesis of Faith and Sight. IV. The Essential Nature of Religion. V. Christian Pantheism.

Address

A. K. BUTTS & CO.,

36 DEY STREET, NEW YORK.

A. K. Butts & Co.'s New Publications.

The Essence of Religion.

GOD THE IMAGE OF MAN.

Man's Dependence upon Nature the Last and Only Source of Religion.

Translated from the German of LUDWIG FEUERBACH, by Professor A. Loos. 12mo. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 60 cents.

To see man trembling and exulting at the sight of his own shadow touched Feuerbach to the soul. Feuerbach's Atheism was intended to restore man to himself. His Materialism was designed to prevent man's exalting in dreams. He denied the personal immortality of the soul—yes, he did, and for the same reason that he denied the personal existence of God. He wished to preserve the integrity of existence, to make mortality immortal, to breathe the spirit of eternity with time, to compress all humanity within human limits, and get the full benefit of this life while it lasted. He was jealous of the future life; he begrudged every drop of feeling that was spilled over the edge of the grave, and lost on the other side. This world was rich enough for him, and ought to be rich enough for anybody; and to see it neglected, misused, squandered, made him heart-sick. Frederingham's Horticultural Hall Lecture, Jan. 1873.

Materialism:

ITS ANCIENT HISTORY, ITS RECENT DEVELOPMENT, ITS PRACTICAL BENEFICENCE.

By Dr. L. BUCHNER, author of "Force and Matter," "Man in Nature," &c., &c.

Translated from the author's manuscript by Professor A. Loos. 32 cts.

The Childhood of the World;
A SIMPLE ACCOUNT OF MAN IN EARLY TIMES.

By EDWARD CLODD, F.R.S.

12mo. Paper, 50 cents. Cloth, 75 cents.

Extract from a letter from Professor Max Müller to the author:—"I read your book with great pleasure. I have no doubt it will do good, and hope you will continue your work. Nothing spoils our temper so much as having to unlearn in youth, manhood, and even old age, so many things which we were taught as children. A book like yours will prepare a far better soil in the child's mind, and I was delighted to have it read to my children."

E. B. Tylor, F.R.S., in "Nature" says:—"This genial little volume is a child's book as to shortness, cheapness, and simplicity of style, though the author reasonably hopes that older people will use it as a source of information not particularly accessible elsewhere, as to the life of Primitive Man and its relation to our own. . . . This book, if the time has come for the public to take to it, will have a certain effect in the world. It is not a mere compilation from the authors mentioned in the preface, but takes its own grounds, and stands by and for itself. Mr. Clodd has thought out his philosophy of life, and used his best skill to bring it into the range of a child's view."

The Religion of Humanity.

By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

Second Edition, with Fine Steel Portrait. 12mo. Cloth. Price, post-paid, $1.50.

Christianity and Materialism Contrasted.

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.

A handsome forty-five page pamphlet. 15 cents.

Mr. Underwood's best Lecture.

The Influence of Christianity on Civilization.

Eighty-eight page pamphlet. Price 25 cents.

Address the publishers.

Asa K. Butts & Co.,

36 DEY STREET, N. Y.

WORKERS WANTED!

For Wood's Household Magazine,

Which, with its premiums, is one of the most attractive in the country. Price of Magazine, ONE DOLLAR A YEAR.

COMMISSIONS LIBERAL, offering a lucrative and agreeable business to those willing to give it proper attention.

VOL. XIII. begins with July, 1873.

Examine our Clubbing and Premium Lists.

Two first-class periodicals for the price of one. For Specimen Magazine, and further information, address

WOOD'S HOUSEHOLD MAGAZINE,
Newburgh, New York.
S. K. SHUTES, Publisher.

The Commercial Review

—AND—

MANUFACTURERS' JOURNAL.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY BY

G. H. ADAMS & BRO., Publishers,
Cleveland, Ohio.

This is the only exclusively COMMERCIAL and TRADE JOURNAL in Northern Ohio, and it also devotes a great deal of space to

Manufacturing News,

Railroad Intelligence, Financial Facts, and everything of Interest to Business Men.

It is invaluable to

Merchants and Manufacturers

Who buy or sell in the Cleveland market; and it is the BEST

Advertising Medium

For business men of all classes in this section of the State.

SUBSCRIPTION, $3.00 PER YEAR.

Elegant Juvenile Books

FOR THE FALL TRADE.

I.

CHATTERBOX.

New volume for 1873. With a beautiful CHROMO LITHOGRAPH FRONTSPIECE.

Quarto. 48pp. Boards, Handsome Colored Cover, $1.20. Same in cloth, Full Gilt Side and Back, $7.50.

This publication has attained an unprecedented popularity, both in this country and in England. It is profusely and handsomely illustrated, and the stories, sketches, etc., are selected with the greatest care for the instruction as well as the amusement of children. It is sufficient to say to those who have seen the previous volumes that Vol. V. is fully equal to its predecessors.

Beautiful Illustrations on Every Page.

II.

LITTLE FOLKS.

NEW FALL VOLUME.

A Companion to CHATTERBOX. With Chromo Lithograph Frontispiece.

Quarto. 48pp. Boards, Colored Cover, $1.50. In cloth, sides and Back in Black and Gilt, Title in bright colors, Red, Blue and Gilt, $2.

One of the most attractive books for children ever published. It contains Funny Stories, interesting Narratives, Facts from Natural History, and other reading calculated to amuse, instruct, and make children happy.

Beautiful Illustrations on Every Page.

III.

SUNDAY.

Reading for the Young. With a beautiful Chromo Lithograph Frontispiece.

Quarto. Uniform with CHATTERBOX. Boards, Handsome Colored Cover, $1.50.

All who are interested in making the Sabbath a bright and happy day, as well as a sacred one, to children, will be pleased with this new publication. Sunday-school teachers and others who wish to secure wholesome Sunday literature for the young will find this book exactly suited to their purpose. It contains first-class engravings, original stories, poetry and readings suitable for use in the Sunday-school or at home.

IV.

THE CHILDREN'S PRIZE.

New Volume for 1873. With Chromo Lithograph Frontispiece.

Small Quarto. Boards, Colored Cover, 75 cents.

Full of rich engravings, stories, sketches, poetry, music, etc., suitable for the education and instruction of children.

The American News Co.,

Are the exclusive Agents for the above books.

LOUIS BLACK.

194 Jefferson Ave., Detroit, Michigan.
MANUFACTURING OPTICIAN
INVENTOR AND PROPRIETOR OF
Black's Patent Interchangeable Spectacles, and Self-Attaching Spring Eye-Glasses. Importer of all kinds of Optical Goods. The best Spectacles fitted to the Eyesight so as to improve it.

The Influence of Christianity on Civilization.

BY B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Popular fallacies concerning this question have had no more honest and fearless exposition than is given us in this handsome pamphlet. Mr. Underwood has treated this momentous theme with dignity, candor, and grace, yet with that rigor which has made him so popular on the platform among the Liberals of the West. Nor does he lack in erudition. He is profuse in quotations from standard histories, largely Christian, and shows conclusively but clearly from their own testimony what a drag upon civilization that stupendous fanaticism has been.

In paper covers; single copies, 25 cts. Address the publisher,

ASA K. BUTTS, 36 DEY STREET, N. Y.

For Plain and Fancy

JOB PRINTING,

IN ENGLISH OR GERMAN,

Such as

Business Cards.

Pamphlets.

Constitutions.

Invitations.

Ball-Cards.

Hand-Bills.

&c., &c., send your orders to the undersigned, where they will be filled promptly and at very low rates.

Waechter am Erie Printing Co.,

77 MICHIGAN STREET,

Cleveland, Ohio.

THE

SPIRIT OF REFORM.

COLBY & RICH,

14 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON, MASS.,

Issues weekly the

BANNER OF LIGHT.

An exponent of the Spiritual philosophy of the nineteenth century.

The above is a first-class, eight-page, family Newspaper, containing FORTY COLUMNS OF INTERESTING AND INSTRUCTIVE READING, classified as follows:—

LITERARY DEPARTMENT.—From French and German.

REPORTS OF SPIRITUAL LECTURES.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

MESSAGE DEPARTMENT.—Spirit-messages from the departed to their friends in earth-life, given through the mediumship of Mrs. J. H. Conant.

ORIGINAL CONTRIBUTIONS.—From the most talented writers in the world.

All which features render this journal a popular Family Paper, and at the same time the harbinger of a Glorious Scientific Religion.

Terms of Subscription in Advance:

Per year.....	$3.00
Six months.....	1.50
Three months.....	.75

Specimen copies sent free.

We confidently call the attention of the friends of progress and reform, whether in material or spiritual matters, to the self-respecting and dignified tone, and the liberal position assumed and maintained by the Banner of Light in the past, the same being the guarantee of future usefulness.

Colby & Rich also publish and offer for sale, at the Banner of Light Bookstore, many books and pamphlets of a spiritual and reformatory nature.

The complete works of Andrew Jackson Davis; also books by Judge J. W. Edmonds, Mrs. Emma Hardinge, William Hewitt, Hon. Robert Dale Owen, D. D. Home, Prof. William Denton, Miss Lizzie Doten, J. M. Peebles, Mrs. J. S. Adams, Prof. S. B. Brittan, Hudson and Emma Tuttle, Henry C. Wright, Warren Chase, Charles S. Woodruff, Dr. A. B. Child, Mrs. Lois Walsbrook, P. B. Randolph, Warren S. Barlow, George Stearns, and others will here be found.

1874. THE NURSERY. This famous pictorial will maintain its reputation as the best and most BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED MONTHLY MAGAZINE FOR CHILDREN. $1.50 a year. Send stamp for a sample number.
Address JOHN L. SHOREY,
36 Bromfield Street, Boston.

Newest and Best

MUSIC BOOKS!

DITSON & CO. publish 1000 Music Books suited to every taste and every occasion. Descriptive catalogues sent free. Among the most recent and best are:—

HOOR OF SINGING. $1.00
For High Schools and Seminaries.

CHOICE TRIOS. $1.50
For High Schools and Seminaries.

THE STANDARD. $1.50
The Banner Church Music Book of the season.

THE RIVER OF LIFE. 35
Unequaled in Variety. Unexcelled in Quality. A Sabbath-school Song Book by 40 Composers.

CHEERFUL VOICES. 50
L. O. Emerson's Latest School Song Book.

THE ORGAN AT HOME. $2.50
Undoubtedly the best Collection for Reed Organs.

DEVOTIONAL CHIMES. 75
Neat, Complete, Perfect. For Social Meetings.

All are Choice Books. Already in great demand. Sent, post-paid, for retail price.

Oliver Ditson & Co.,

BOSTON.

Charles H. Ditson & Co.,
711 Broadway, New York.

Important Scientific Works.

By PROF. J. CLERK MAXWELL.

(Ready To-day.)

A Treatise on Electricity and Magnetism. By J. Clerk Maxwell, M. A., F. R. S., Professor of Experimental Physics in the University of Cambridge. 2 vols., 8vo. With illustrations. $12.

The Depths of the Sea. An Account of the General Results of the Dredging Cruises of H. M. S. Lightning and Porcupine during the Summers of 1868, '69 and '70. By Prof. Wyvill Thompson, F. R. S. Medium 8vo., with nearly 100 exquisite wood-cuts and 8 colored maps. $9.

"It is impossible to read its fascinating pages without feeling awakened within us a desire to emulate the author in his efforts to obtain a knowledge of life beneath the waters, of which most of us know nothing."—Journal of Applied Chemistry.

"It is splendidly illustrated and popularly written, with much humor, and the treatment, like the subject, is anything but dry; it is a volume altogether worthy the interest and importance of its subject."—Popular Science Monthly.

"The volume, which forms one of the most important contributions of the season to the science of physical geography, is brought out in a style of rare typographical elegance, and is copiously illustrated with admirable drawings from Nature. It will fill a choice place in the library, both for the interest of its contents and the beauty of its execution."—N. Y. Tribune.

"Nothing can be more complete than the account of the scientific results of these voyages, which are fully illustrated by wood-cuts of the strange forms of life brought from the dark depths of the ocean, by charts of soundings and elaborate tables of the deep sea temperature. The book is another example of that mingling of literary interest with scientific completeness and value, which is the only true form of what is called the popularization of science."—Daily News (London).

Zoological Mythology Or, The Legends of Animals. By Angelo de Gubernatis, Professor of Sanscrit and Comparative Literature at Florence. 2 vols., 8vo., cloth, $3.

The Scientific Bases of Faith. By Joseph John Murphy, author of "Habit and Intelligence." 8vo., cloth, $3.

Old-Fashioned Ethics and Common-Sense Metaphysics, with Some of their Applications. By William Thomas Thornton, author of "A Treatise on Labor." 8vo., cloth, $3.50.

New Book by Amodeo Guillemin:

The Forces of Nature. A Popular Introduction to the Study of Physical Phenomena. By Amodeo Guillemin. Translated from the French by Mrs. Norman Lockyer, and edited, with Notes and Additions, by J. Norman Lockyer, F. R. S. Imperial 8vo., with 11 colored plates and 450 wood engravings, cloth, $12.50. [New ready.]

"This book is a luxurious introduction to the study of the physical sciences. M. Guillemin has found an excellent translator in Mrs. Norman Lockyer, while the editorship of Mr. Norman Lockyer, with his notes and additions, are guarantees not only of scientific accuracy but of the completeness and freshness of the information."—Daily News (London).

Address
ASA K. BUTTS, 38 Dey Street, N. Y.

THE COMMONWEALTH LIFE INSURANCE CO.

GENTLEMEN of standing and ability (either in professional or mercantile pursuits) are desired in all parts of the country to represent this reliable company. Our plans of Insurance are ample, popular, and honest.

Address 178 Broadway,
NEW YORK.

MANUALS

OF Mathematical Instruments,
Microscopes,
Magic Lanterns,
Meteorological Instruments.

Physical Apparatus,

Profusely Illustrated and priced, mailed to any address on receipt of 10 cents each.

JAMES W. QUEEN & CO., Opticians,
914 Chestnut St. 601 Broadway,
PHILADELPHIA. NEW YORK.

Mention that you saw this in THE INDEX.

Buchner, Dr. L. Man in the Past, Present, and Future. A Popular Account of the results of recent scientific Research as regards the Origin, Position, and Prospects of the Human Race. Translated by W. S. Dallas, F.L.S. Cloth. 12mo. $3.

CONTENTS: INTRODUCTION.—WHENCE DO WE COME? The Antiquity and Original State of the Human Race, and its development from a Barbarous beginning.—WHAT ARE WE?—Present Position of Man in Nature, his developmental history and production from the egg cell.—Origin and Genealogy of the Human Race.—WHERE ARE WE GOING?—Future of Man and of the Human Race.—Government.—Nationalities.—Society.—Capital.—Labor and Laborers.—The Family.—Education.—Woman.—Marriage.—Morals.—Religion.—Philosophy.

APPENDIX.—Scientific Evidence, containing Notes, Explanations, and additions of the text.

"This work, from its bold premises, and sweeping conclusions, will certainly be regarded as startling, in its defiance of received opinions."—Liverpool Albion.

"Whatever may be one's opinion as to the extreme views of the author, no one can read his book without feeling that he is in the presence of a man of fine intellect and of wide culture."—Daily Bristol Times.

"The important questions—'Whence do we come?' 'What are we?' and 'Where are we going?' are discussed by the author, and it is not the least of the merits of his work that to each of these questions a distinct and intelligible, if not wholly convincing, answer is given."—Scotsman.

"The most conspicuous merits of this volume are its terseness and its freedom from unpleasant dogmatism. It states with fairness the arguments which have been adduced in opposition to those which it supports."—Illustrated Review.

"This author's views have all the force and lucidity which flow from the entire consistency and simplicity."—Medical Times and Gazette.

"We approve of the effort to introduce into our language so fearless and out-spoken and honest a labor as that which Dr. Buchner has performed. The book contains nothing that will be new to those who have followed minutely anthropological science for the past ten years, though it certainly contains, in a plain and matterly style, everything that has been achieved by the English and foreign savants in that space of time; but to the general reader it offers a masterly summary of the facts, reflections, and ultimate conclusions that have been put forward in regard to Man's origin."—Popular Science Review.

"Dr. Buchner has the gift of easy exposition. His generalities are put with precise worthiness; his well-selected examples clinch them hard, and just in the right place."—Nature.

"He is eminently judicial, weighing carefully and fairly the arguments for and against, and delivering judgment after independent investigation."—Public Opinion.

NOW IN PRESS OF

A. K. BUTTS & CO.

Walt Whitman's Books.

LEAVES OF GRASS. New Edition. 50pp. Bound. $2.
AS A STRONG BIRD ON PINIONS FREE. Just out. 75 cents.
DEMOCRATIC VISTAS. Political Essay. Prose. 75 cents.
Also a few copies of John Burroughs's NOTES ON WALT WHITMAN AS POET AND PERSON, $1.
THOS. O'KANE, PUBLISHER, 130 Nassau Street, New York.

LADIES!

THE Eureka Machine Twist,
50 and 100 Yard Spools,
AND THE
Eureka Button-Hole Twist,
10 Yard Spools,
ARE THE BEST IN USE.
For Sale at all Trimming Stores.

Real Estate Securities,
paying 8 to 10 per cent. Interest, or
INVESTMENTS IN REAL ESTATE, IN CHICAGO AND VICINITY,
if judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The old

Real Estate and Loan Agency

OF

ERNST PRUSSING,
143 Randolph St., - - CHICAGO,
(Established 1863)

Guarantees perfect title and ample security in all its Real Estate Loans.
First-class securities always on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge. Real Estate Investments made on commission and on shares; taxes paid, &c.
Orders of capitalists and real estate owners respectfully solicited.

LETTER FROM

O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

"I have used THE HEALTH LIFT nearly every day for the past year, and with manifest advantage. A tendency to sleeplessness at night has been corrected, my animal spirits have been raised in tone, and my elasticity of frame increased. The sense of repose imparted is quite as great as the stimulus."—O. B. Frothingham.

For circulars descriptive of THE BUTLER HEALTH LIFT and its apparatus, address

LEWIS G. JAMES, Manager.

Principal Office, Park Bank Building, 214 Broadway, N. Y.

Brooklyn—158 Remsen St., connecting with Dr. Holbrook's Rooms, 130 Fifth Avenue.

Visitors always welcome.

HIS MARRIAGE VOW.

BY MRS. CAROLINE FAIRFIELD CORBIN,

AUTHOR OF

"Rebecca; or, A Woman's Secret."

One handsome 16mo. Volume. Price $1.50.

This story, as indicated by the title, is a presentation of certain phases of the questions now agitating many minds, concerning the prerogatives and limitations of love. It does not claim to treat the subject exhaustively or in detail, but simply to illustrate certain principles which must in the end have great weight in deciding the question of the perpetuity of the marriage relation.

Apart from this subject, or rather as a continuation of it, the claims of a rational Christianity, as founded upon faith and love, and as opposed to the Materialism of science and reason, are presented with force and clearness.

The bearing of modern spiritual phenomena upon the contest between faith and reason is also discussed.

The story has been pronounced by good critics to be one of the most powerful and interesting ever issued from the American press. The characters are well delineated, and the moral tone pure and elevating.

For sale by

ASA K. BUTTS & CO.,

38 DEY STREET, NEW YORK

"DOMESTIC" ELIGANT IN DESIGN!
PAPER FAULTLESS IN FIT!
Agents Wanted.
SEND FOR
FASHIONS. CATALOGUE.

"DOMESTIC" SEWING MACHINE COMPANY, New York.

A GREAT OFFER

Horace Waters & Son, 461 Broadway, New York, will dispose of 100 Pianos and Organs of first-class makers, including WATERS', at extremely low prices for cash, or part cash, and balance in small monthly payments. New 7-Octave first-class Pianos, all modern improvements, for $275 cash. Organs, $45 to $75. Double-Reed Organs, $100; 4-stop, $110; 8-stop, $125 and upwards.

AGENTS WANTED.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO., Bankers,
LEROY, MINNESOTA.

Money loaned on short time, or for a term of years, on unimproved improved farms, at 12 per cent. per annum interest net. Interest payable annually. All expense for abstract of title and recording mortgage paid by borrower. We collect and remit to any part of the United States free of charge.

REFERENCES.—First National Bank, McGregor, Iowa; Gilchrist & Co., McGregor, Iowa; First National Bank, Austin, Minnesota; C. National Bank, Chicago, Illinois; Allen, Stevens & Co., New York City.

All Interested in the Progress of Science Should Read

NATURE.

A Weekly Illustrated Journal of Science.

The attention of all interested in the general progress of knowledge is earnestly invited to this Journal, which has now become the accredited organ of the leading scientific men, in communicating their views to each other and to the public.

One of the leading objects of this periodical is to awaken in the public mind a more lively interest in science. With this end in view, it provides original articles and reviews, written by scientific men of the highest distinction in their various departments, expounding the Grand Results of Scientific Research, discussing the most recent scientific discoveries, and pointing out the bearing of science upon civilization and progress, and its claims to more general recognition, as well as to a higher place in the educational system of the country.

There will also be found in Nature complete abstracts of all important papers communicated to British, American, and Continental Scientific Societies and Periodicals, and Reports of the Meetings of Scientific Bodies.

Among the contributors to Nature will be found the names of almost every man of note in the various departments of scientific inquiry in England, America, and the Continent of Europe.

As questions of science compass all limits of nationality, and are of universal interest, a periodical devoted to them may find appeal to the intelligent classes in all countries where its language is read. The proprietors of Nature will aim so to conduct it that it shall bear a common claim upon all English-speaking peoples.

Nature is published in London; it asks, as it will be found to deserve, the liberal patronage of the thinking classes of the United States. Its articles are brief and condensed, and are thus suited to the circumstances of an active and busy people who have little time to read extended and elaborate treatises.

Every intelligent man is now expected to know something of what is going on in the scientific world; the columns of Nature will give a summary of it, varied, compressed, and authentic.

Yearly Subscription, $5. Single Numbers, price 12 cents. Sent for two months, as a trial subscription, on receipt of 75 cents.

THE PRACTITIONER

A Monthly Journal of Therapeutics.

Edited by

FRANCIS N. ANSTIE, M.D., F.R.C.P.

"To hard-worked medical men, in general country practice, with little time for reading, and few opportunities for professional conversation, such a journal as this, bringing every month the latest ideas in medical practice and the latest records of important cases, ought to be invaluable."—London Guardian.

Yearly Subscription, $4. Single numbers 40 cents. Sent two months as a trial subscription, on receipt of 60 cents.

Address

A. E. BUTTS & CO.,
38 DEY STREET, NEW YORK.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 4.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1873.

WHOLE No. 201.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for sectarian educational and charitable institutions shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformable to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

- ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF _____.
- ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in—
Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.
- ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.
- ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.
- ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.
- ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.
- ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

So far as I am concerned, the above is the platform of THE INDEX. I believe in it without reserve; I believe that it will yet be accepted universally by the American people, as the only platform consistent with religious liberty. A Liberal League ought to be formed to carry out its principles wherever half a dozen earnest and resolute Liberals can be got together. Being convinced that the movement to secure compliance with these just "Demands" must surely, even if slowly, spread, I hope to make THE INDEX a means of furthering it; and I ask the assistance and active co-operation of every man and every woman who believes in it. Multiply Liberal Leagues everywhere, and report promptly the names of their Presidents and Secretaries. Intolerance and bigotry will tremble in proportion as that list grows. If freedom, justice, and reason are right, let their organized voice be heard like the sound of many waters.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

Boston, Sept. 1, 1873.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
BOSTON, MASS.—J. S. Rogers, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
VINELAND, N. J.—L. Bristol, President; E. G. Blaisdell, Secretary.
JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
OLATH, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
BREDSDALE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

BY A. W. S.

CHARLES BRADLAUGH says that one person out of every twenty-three, in England, is a pauper.

THE Irish World, and other Catholic papers, are severely gripped by the late meeting of the Evangelical Alliance. Their ridicule and denunciation are ludicrously mingled.

SIR SAMUEL BAKER and wife have returned to England from Africa; but Dr. Livingston seems unable or unwilling to tear himself away from his dark-hued brethren.

AT THE semi-annual meeting of the American Oriental Society, recently held, Prof. Whitney read an elaborate paper on "The Han-lin, or Chinese Academy," which, the essay said, "has an age of many centuries."

PROF. TYNDALL has dedicated the profits of his lecturing tour in this country—some thirteen thousand dollars—to a project for "encouraging and aiding students of science, who devote themselves to original investigation."

MR. EMERSON thinks that Boston will now wish to annex Concord, since that noble old town has established so fine a Public Library. Meaning no disparagement of the Library, we should say that Mr. Emerson himself is the prize that would make annexation desirable.

THE FIRST RADICAL CLUB of Boston, met at the house of Mr. John T. Sargent, Monday A. M., Oct. 30. Rev. John Weiss read a paper on "Portia," which is one of a series that he has recently prepared on "Shakespeare's Women." Among the array of distinguished men and women present were Charles Sumner and Charles Bradlaugh.

THERE IS A "Flower Mission" in this city, which, we believe, originated with Rev. G. L. Chaney's (Unitarian) Society, in Hollis Street. The object of the "Mission" is to distribute flowers to the sick, the poor, the lonely, and suffering. Rides into the country have also been afforded to such as these. This is a noble and humane work, and we heartily wish it good speed.

WE DO NOT know much about finance, our experience with money never having been very extensive; but we venture to hope that chief among the results of the late panic will be the resumption of specie payments. We believe we have no prejudice against bank-bills, but we dislike to think that every one we have is a lie,—promising something it does not pretend to perform.

NEW YORK MINISTERS seem to delight in flourishing the editorial "we." Dr. Bellows is editor of the Liberal Christian (and a good one he is, too), Rev. Messrs. Tyng and Hepworth edit the Working Church, Mr. Beecher the Christian Union, Dr. Talmage the Christian at Work, Dr. Deems the Christian Age, and Dr. Fulton has a personal organ in the Christian in the World.

SOME of the members of the Evangelical Alliance went to see Gen. Grant. After they had arrived in the "Blue Parlor," and before they were introduced, the Dean of Canterbury made a "fervent prayer." They then made speeches, and shook hands all round. When the Indians meet to have "a talk," instead of a prayer they first take a smoke. It is only a difference of customs.

THOSE CATHOLICS who cannot make actual pilgrimages are "allowed" by the Pope to make "spiritual" ones. That is, they stay at home and imagine themselves going to this or that shrine, and think about the saints, and make prayers. As a cultivation of the imagination this is very good; and if, in addition, it shall make the "spiritual" pilgrims "hate sin and esteem virtue"—as the Archbishop of Dublin says it will—we shall be glad.

M. D. CONWAY, writing from London, says that several English lady artists, failing last year to sell their pictures under their own names, undertook to do so under feigned masculine names, and succeeded. We believe that ladies generally are not unwilling to assume masculine names; nevertheless, in every case where they prefer to keep their own, we deprecate any prejudice which stands in the way of their most deserved success.

THE ARMY CHAPLAIN made the following speech to Captain Jack and his fellow-murderers, just before they were hung: "I have to tell you all, that the great father in Washington has decided that to-morrow you must all die for your sins; and the Great Spirit tells you that, if you repent and show sorrow for the crimes you have committed, you will go to the happy land." Well, if those Indians were fit to go so straight to heaven, on repentance, why were they not fit to live with us poor sinners here? If the Great Spirit finds them worthy to be forgiven, how could we refuse to grant them pardon?

FREE SPEECH is one of the most precious jewels which a republic can cherish. There is no true radical but will always advocate it. Only a coward towards truth and true morality will, under any circumstances, be afraid of it. If any views be false and pernicious, nothing will so soon demonstrate this as unrestricted liberty to utter them. If a reformer advocate a bad cause, the public can be made aware of this in no way so well as by allowing him to appear before it with the free explanation of his aims and methods. With fair play all round, the truth can be trusted to win; if it cannot win with fair play, then it ought not to win at all. Let FREE SPEECH prevail!

"THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE only met together and talked," says the Independent; "it made no record of decrees, formulated no doctrine, and even recommended nothing." And yet, says the Independent, "such meeting and talking means a great deal. . . . Meeting—it is more than a proclamation, it is a realization, of unity. . . . And talking—it is the only force that moves the world. . . . Henceforth no scoffer, be he Romanist or atheist, can honestly prate of the divisions of Protestantism. Evangelical Protestantism is not an aggregate of segregates; it is a stout oak, vitally one." Very good. And yet the Free Religious Association has often been scoffed at, by Evangelical and other Christians, because its members "only met together and talked." "They believe nothing, they propose nothing, they do nothing, they have no common ground of union," has been said of them, time and again. But, according to the Independent, they are amply justified, even if they meet "only to talk," to compare notes, and "recommend nothing." At last, wisdom shall be justified of her children!

THE ADDRESS delivered before the American Association for the Advancement of Science, by its retiring President, J. L. Smith, at the session of that body, in Portland, Me., last August, seems to us, in some respects, to have been anything but a scientific address. Mr. Smith speaks contemptuously of those who "talk of reconciling science and religion, as if they have ever been unreconciled." "Science and religion," he thinks, have "never quarrelled." In the next breath he says: "I firmly believe that there is less connection between science and religion than there is between jurisprudence and astronomy,"—which means that there is none at all. If there is no connection between them, how then are they reconciled? "Religion," he says, "is based upon revelation as given to us in a book," and "is made so plain by the light of faith, that the wayfaring man, though a fool, cannot err therein." Science, he would have us to understand, has only to do with the physical and material; it fails to mind its own business when it interferes with faith; it travels towards truth by a "very different road" from that which religion takes. The existence of God, he says, "reason cannot prove, while it cannot disprove;" yet he thinks that both "religionists and scientists will one day see Him as He is, and they will see Him the sooner by keeping separate roads." It seems to us highly becoming, that Mr. Smith should have been allowed to retire.

The Religious Outlook in America.

OPENING ADDRESS

BY O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

At the Convention of the Free Religious Association,
New York, Oct. 14, 1873.

The Free Religious Association presents itself for the first time in New York, but by no means for the first time in the cities of America. Six years of existence entitle it to recognition as one of the organizations that exert an influence on the religious condition of the country. By frequent public conventions, by numerous printed reports, essays, addresses, it has endeavored faithfully to make its purposes and spirit understood. If there are any who do not understand, we trust that these meetings will enlighten them. We trust that all who attend will bear witness to our sincerity of conviction, our directness of aim, our clearness of perception, our generosity of spirit. It will be seen and acknowledged that we are not a company of speculative philosophers debating matters of no immediate or practical concern to mankind, or a band of dreamers anusing ourselves with the contemplation of certain inaccessible castles in Spain, or a clique of sentimentalists who mistake emotions for ideas, and feelings for facts, or a small army of iconoclasts, men without faith themselves, who are bent on destroying the faith of their neighbors—a group of godless "Materialists," "disciples of Voltaire," "followers of Volney or Paine," who, destitute of religion themselves, are anxious that religion should be banished from society. We hope to show that we are practical men, whose aim is to effect reform in the fashions of religion, in order that it may be more intelligently received. We are a religious, not an irreligious, association. We advance no false claims; we make no false pretences; we simply wish that our work should justify itself.

By general admission, the religious question is still foremost in modern society. It is debated in the highest places; it is the concern of empires: the gravest affairs of State hang upon it. It is the question which, at present, agitates Germany, convulses Italy, perplexes France, troubles England, threatens perpetual disturbance in America. It may be said, with entire truth, to lie beneath the political controversies that vex the Old World no less than the New; the social questions that are under debate all involve it, and imply some kind of answer to it. Science keeps it in view; literature betrays a consciousness of it, even in its highest productions; philosophy cannot escape from the consideration of it. More books are written about it still than are written about any other single subject. With the multitudes of people religion is yet the great theme of discussion, the great subject of interest, the great practical concern of life. With the few who are trained and cultivated, it is deeply interesting in the problems it brings forward, and the promises it holds out. No subject, therefore, ought to be more interesting to thoughtful people than the subject I propose to speak on—The Religious Outlook in America.

The religious sentiment of the race finds expression in several great religions, each of which covers a vast region of the planet, and is professed by millions of human beings.

The most primitive worship of all, known as Fetichism, Satanism, Chamanism, the lowest or most literal Nature-worship, is professed by more than 100,000,000. The religion of Zoroaster and Confucius 40,000,000. Brahmanism, the original faith of India 80,000,000. Buddhism, the reformed faith 170,000,000. Mohammedanism 90,000,000. Judaism 4,500,000. The Greek Church 65,000,000. The Roman Church 130,000,000. The sects of Protestantism 60,000,000.

These numbers profess to be approximations merely. They make no pretension to exactness. That is unattainable, except in small and compact sects: hardly in these. But they exhibit the proportionate distributions of belief. By these figures it may be seen that by far the larger part of the human race has not entered within the lines of Christianity. Christianity counts fewer adherents than Buddhism alone, and becomes almost insignificant when compared with all the rest together. None of the primitive cults have disappeared from the stage of history: star-worship survives; pure fetichism endures in Africa, notwithstanding the assaults of Mohammedanism on the one hand and of Christianity on the other. Tribes of men in Arabia, Africa, the islands of the Pacific, still cling to their puerile, grotesque, hideous idols, and annually propitiate them with human sacrifices. The strange incarnations of Brahmanism, its odd practices, its cruel or degrading institutions abide with the people who first cherished them, as masses of ice and snow abide in April in shady coverts, resisting the force of the vernal sun. Wild is the hope that either of these religions will conquer or expel the rest, and exercise sole sway over the modern world. Vain apparently is the expectation that either will so far prevail as to alter materially the proportions they now maintain in regard to one another. Christianity, in spite of the zeal of its missionaries, and the energy of its organizations for spreading its faith, makes no such impression on the outside religious world as to encourage the belief in its own ultimate supremacy. Religion is so much a matter of race and climate that, until these change, religion remains very much the same. And these do not change. Race holds its own, in spite of all. It may shift its dwelling places, may mingle its currents, but its character continues unaffected, and with its character its faith endures.

CHRISTIANITY ONLY TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT.

It is urged that considerations of this kind are out of place? In discussing the religious outlook in America, no religion but Christianity need be taken into account. Of Nature-worship, either in the lofty form of the ancient star-gazers, or the gross style of adoration paid to obscene beasts and reptiles, there is none. There are multitudes "whose God is their belly," but they are not organized into sects, and the places where they worship are not called temples. The disciples of Zoroaster are too few to count. The followers of the dignified Confucius might all be collected in a small room. Brahmanism is unknown here. Buddhism is confined to seventy thousand or eighty thousand Chinese, for the most part poor, humble strangers, the outscouring of the Celestial Empire. Mohammedanism has no mosque. The cry of the Muezzin is never heard. Judaism builds noble temples in our chief cities, and perpetuates the superb ritual of the Fathers. It is rich, and carries its head aloft in the New World, drawing crowds of curious people by the antique charm of its associations. But Judaism stands on its dignity, is careless of making proselytes, and is content to be a grand anomaly in a generation that seeks ever for new things. She looks for no dominion in the United States, throws down no challenge to her haughty child, but has a grimly serene satisfaction in letting her child see that her eye is not yet dim, nor her natural strength abated. In a survey of the religious field, that grand Oriental form cannot be overlooked; but she is not among the combatants in the arena. The faith that has survived the Middle Ages is not likely to die; having survived the persecutions of Europe, she will hardly perish in the promise of America. But neither can we think she is destined to any supremacy there. Her mission is rather the preservation of a simple, pure theism, amid the fascinating seductions to idolatry which the new ages hold out. Once more she will make her protest against the modern worship of Baal and Ashtar, but she will drop little by little the old Hebrew peculiarities—will lose something every decade of her Oriental costume, and will merge in the great current of rational thought, which is bearing the dividing barriers of faith away. The Greek Church has no power, and apparently no ambition with us. Indeed, its presence would not be known were it not for the occasional visit of a Russian dignitary, whom etiquette requires to worship after the manner of his country.

Religion in America finds expression in the Church of Rome and the sects of Protestantism. According to the Census of 1870, religion in the United States is organized as follows:—

Total population of the United States, 1870.....	38,558,371
Total religious enrollment.....	21,265,062
Total number of churches.....	63,082
Churches. Settings.
Methodists.....	21,337.....5,528,209
Baptists (all kinds).....	13,962.....4,360,135
Presbyterians.....	7,071.....2,698,244
Roman Catholics.....	3,806.....1,990,514
Congregationalists.....	2,716.....1,117,212
Episcopal Protestant.....	2,601.....981,651
Lutheran.....	2,770.....977,332
Reformed German.....	1,145.....431,700
"Christians".....	2,822.....865,602
United Brethren.....	937.....265,025
Reformed Dutch.....	468.....227,228
Friends.....	682.....224,664
Universalists.....	602.....210,884
Evangelical Associations.....	641.....193,790
Unitarians.....	510.....156,471
Mormons.....	171.....87,838

These figures do not tell the exact truth, nor do they pretend to tell it. The exact truth cannot be discovered; but they claim to be the nearest practicable approach to it. If the sects were as jealous of their efficiency as of their appearance of efficiency, there would be less uneasiness in regard to numbers. Spiritual power does not go with numbers; nor do numbers express it. The bulkiest sect may be the weakest. If size had been a measure of strength, there would never have been any Protestantism at all, for three hundred or four hundred years ago Rome was Christendom in the West.

The only people who have a right to complain of the above estimate are the people who are not mentioned in it: the rationalists, who are for the most part unorganized, but who possess a great force of intellectual power, and wield an extensive influence through literature and social intercourse; and the "Come Outers," as they used to be called, who, as their name imports, have abandoned the churches altogether, and formed associations more or less compact on the basis of mutual service and brotherly love. These cannot be counted, but any estimate of religion in America that omits these is defective. Mormonism makes a loud noise, but is a phenomenon of no moment. Rationalism makes no noise whatever, but exerts a subtle, deep, and mighty influence.

The religious strength of America is shared, then, we may say, among three divisions—the Catholics of the Church of Rome, the Protestant sects, including the Episcopalians at one extreme and the Unitarians at the other, and the Rationalists of all schools. The inquiry, then, limits itself to the question: Which of these, if either, is likely to command the future of religion in the United States? Let us weigh a few general probabilities.

The Church of Rome in America is very strong, and is destined probably to be stronger still. Its numbers increase. Its churches are handsome, its congregations are large, its priests are active, its pastors devoted. It has flourishing seminaries and colleges for men and women, religious houses in abundance, well placed, well endowed, well administered. It watches its opportunities, and improves them with admirable adroitness and courage. It has wealth and authority, the support of a massive though crude public opinion, the advantage of antiquity and traditions of empire.

THE POWER OF ROMANISM.

It is perfectly organized and officered. Romanism is a unit of force, compact and vital. Rome is an empire.

The Church is a dominion, a country, a fatherland. Catholicism is, in fact, in a very literal sense and to a very considerable extent the believer's country, even more so than is the land of his birth. It is conceivable that Romanism should quite destroy the love of country, for it is a distinct power, having worldly means at its command, and continually demanding concessions and privileges from the State. This is less the case here than in Europe, but it is still, to a certain extent, the case here. The Catholic is taught to look to Rome as the source of all his light and life. More than once already we have been made uneasy by the dread of political interference from the Roman hierarchy; indeed, we are perpetually uneasy on that score, and the contingency may come at any moment that will display the formidable power of the religion which has more than once endangered the peace of Europe.

It is now familiar information that the Catholic Church in America has received and does annually receive large endowments from the State. It has been described as the established church of America, a title which, if undeserved now, it is predicted will be deserved at no distant day. And why may not such a prediction come true? Why may not Romanism supplant Protestantism or conquer it piecemeal, reduce the smaller sects to insignificance, and become the prevailing faith of America?

Some will say, Because the Roman Catholic religion is incompatible with republican institutions. But in this there must be some confusion of thought. It can scarcely be said that the Catholic religion as a religion, as a form of faith, is incompatible with republican institutions. Why should it be, any more than the Protestant religion, any more than the Jewish religion, than the religion of theism? Religion as such has nothing to do with political institutions or forms of government. A polytheist may be as good a republican as a monotheist, an idolator as a spiritualist, a pantheist as a theist. Religion expresses the relation of the individual soul to the universal soul. Conceive of that relation as you will, civil affairs remain unaffected. Cannot a republican worship the Virgin, supplicate the saints, consult guardian angels, honor the sacrifice of the mass, confess his sins to a priest, avow the consecrated wafer? Where is the connection between faith in the Roman Church as the Body of Christ, and faith in men's ability to manage their own civil affairs? The Catholic religion inculcates devoutness, humility, gratitude, modesty, meekness, charity, aspiration, saintliness. Are such graces incompatible with republicanism? Must the republican be self-willed, rude, violent, unscrupulous? A republic composed of devout Catholics, men such as the Catholic religion has produced again and again in history, would be such a republic as we must wait long to see; a model republic in which all rule because all serve.

Nor is there force in the objection that Romanism cannot exist in an intellectual community. Were the Catholic communities of Italy, in the palm days of the Church, unintellectual? Were the great Catholics of Florence, Pisa, Padua, Cologne, unintellectual? The greatest universities of the modern world have been Catholic. Some of the greatest minds of the modern world have been Catholic; and then it is assuming a good deal to take for granted the intellectualty of the people of America. Quick-witted they are certainly, swift in apprehension, versatile, sympathetic; but they are fanciful and mercurial, impatient of toil or dullness, easily tired, indisposed to reflection, incapable of severe thought, disinclined to profound, speculative studies, content with superficial impressions, satisfied to let sentiments pass for ideas. They are knowing rather than thoughtful. Hence a liability to be suddenly fascinated, seized, carried away by any strong intellectual force, by a powerfully revived tradition, or a brilliant novelty. Knowledge is the only sufficient safeguard against such surprises, and knowledge is possessed by the very few. It would not be wonderful, therefore, if a religion possessing such singular attractions as the Catholic religion certainly has—in many respects so impressive, in many so winning, in many so beautiful, in many so genial and reasonable—a religion so adroitly administered, so skillfully expounded, so delicately applied—were to steal out of the shadow of its antiquity and carry captive the pleasure-seeking minds and undefended hearts of multitudes. Stranger things have happened. An able English writer remarks: "As the speculation of the age drifts further and further away from the too narrow contents of the ancient formularies, those who cling to those formularies cling to them all the more tightly, and interpret them all the more superstitiously. Twenty years ago you could not have found five hundred men in English orders to petition for auricular confession. To-day we have an eminent dignitary thanking the Almighty that priests by thousands are teaching and preaching it. The old-fashioned moderation of doctrine is changed into enthusiasm and excess, and our age of science is also the age of deepening superstition and sacerdotalism."

For an illustration of this point the prodigious growth of Spiritualism may be cited. Who, twenty years ago, could have supposed that now hundreds of thousands of people would be living on the faith of an intimate conscious connection between the visible and the invisible worlds?

We speak of the spirit of the age as being opposed to the religion of Rome. So it is. The powers of Rome confess it. The Pope himself admits it. But the spirit of this age will not, of necessity, be the spirit of the next. The ages fluctuate like the tides, ebbing and flowing according to uncontrolled laws. Progress moves in circles, not in straight lines. It is subject to action and reaction. A hundred years ago it seemed as if France was destined to be rationalist. Now, it is Catholic again. Then, the great names were Voltaire and Rousseau; now those names are rarely spoken.

The tendency of the age toward materialism, love of the things of this life, the making of money, outward show, luxury, pleasure, is no more inconsistent with Romanism than with Protestantism. It is inconsistent with all spiritual religion, and is sure to be followed, if pushed too far, by powerful reactions which swing men far backward. Why not as far as to Rome? What are we witnessing now in France but a tremendous revival of the Catholic religion, under the same impulse precisely that produces revivals of Protestant religion? The Romish priests watch their opportunity as closely as the Protestant pastors watch theirs, and like causes produce like effects.

ROMANISM ANTAGONISTIC TO THE REPUBLIC.

Why, then, may not Romanism ultimately become the religion of the American people? For several reasons, these among others:—

1. In the first place, having once held all but supreme sway in Christendom, it lost it three hundred years ago, and has never been able to regain it even in its own subject lands. No power ever succeeds in ruling the globe twice.

2. In the next place, Rome is not a religion so much as an empire, a dominion, a State. The head of the Church is the king of kings; his subordinates are princes; the members are subjects; the cardinals are statesmen; the priests are politicians. Rome claims authority to rule in temporal affairs, to control the education of the people. She treats with foreign States on terms of equality, as their peer, even their superior; would share their counsels, dictate their policy. Her passion for supremacy is boundless. She is imperial. By a fatal instinct her sympathies are with monarchies. A fatal logic leads her to strengthen her centre more and more, and to make all power converge thither. When she does not rule, she declares herself persecuted. It is easy to see that such a pretension is wholly incompatible with republicanism. Republicanism means self-reliance, self-assertion, the kingship and priesthood of the individual, common education, equality of privilege, self-government, liberty of conscience, freedom of belief and worship, the Church independent of the State. Against all these things Rome, as a power, protests. Republicanism is utterly irreconcilable with a State Church—a Church that claims the right to interfere with public affairs, or demands support from the secular arm. In a republic, religion must confine itself to spiritualities. In a word, it must be purely and simply religion.

I am well aware that the alleged necessary complicity of Rome with despotism is denied, and on high authority. It is asserted that the alliance between Catholicism and tyranny is an accident arising out of the peculiar circumstances of European politics. Catholicism, it is declared, simply loves order, and is quite indifferent whether it finds order under a monarchy or under a republic. In Europe, republicanism means socialism and anarchy, which the Church detests. In America, it means no such thing. In America, it is associated with obedience to social rules and respect for institutions. In America, therefore, the old traditional connection, being serviceable no longer, is disregarded. The Romanist is sincerely a republican—loves the republic, and never wishes to change it. This may be true, but we in America have not discovered it. It is a simple fact that republicans in America do dread the Catholic Church, and not without cause.

But what guarantee have we that the republic will endure in America? All the guarantee it is possible that men should have. The devoted attachment of the universal people to republican institutions; an attachment not shown in Fourth of July orations, but in the fearful sacrifices of the most terrible civil war on record, in an expenditure of treasure and life almost fabulous to consider; in a watchful jealousy of its rulers which runs to unreasonable lengths of suspicion; in a morbid dread of Caesarism; in a hatred of assumption, a detestation of monopoly, a self-assertion of the common people, an ambition on the part of the toilers, an aspiration on the part of women that makes all thought of monarchy no less than ridiculous. The monarchists in sentiment among us are of no account whatever, have no influence whatever, and never can have any, for they belong to the dilettante portion of the community, the show portion who would be too idle to exert influence, if they were not too weak. Republicanism decline in the United States! You might as well talk of its spread in Persia! Hitherto, Rome has appeared chiefly as a religion in the United States, and her aspect is alluring. Let her show herself as a dominion, and she will look a monster. And as a dominion, she must show herself a dominion spiritual, if not temporal. Catholicism, if not an empire, is a church. Romanism is a religion of authority. The liberty she grants is liberty to profess the true religion, which is her own. She professes to hold lawful dominion over souls—to hold the keys of the kingdom, to dispense the grace of God. The pretension is inconsistent, with that rational freedom of thought, that full emancipation of intellect, which republicanism demands in her adherents. A free State without a free mind is a thing inconceivable. Free education, free judiciary, free press, free criticism of institutions, free modification of social usages in accordance with enlightened or altered convictions, suppose a reason emancipated from control of authority. And this the Romanist cannot allow; he claims authority over conscience; but as conscience enters into everything, his authority extends to everything, and the sway that calls itself spiritual insensibly is extended over temporal affairs.

3. But there is still another reason why Romanism cannot be the religion of America. It is the religion of a race, and America is the land of many races. The Latin races, as they are called, are Catholic—the Italians, Spaniards, French. The Celts are Catholic always, without a significant exception. The English are Protestant. The mighty Germanic race which is coming up, which has made such prodigious strides in the last ten years, and is destined to rule in the immediate future, is Protestant. Rome can no more rule St. Petersburg than St. Petersburg can rule Rome. That England should ever become Catholic is an impossibility. Her conversion, could it be effected, would be nominal merely. Beneath the surface, the people would be Protestant. Fancy England submitting to the Pope!

The strength of Rome in America lies in the descendants of the Latin ancestors and the number of the Celtic populations. Its ranks were enormously swelled by the annexation of New Mexico; but that cannot be done again. Its hope is in the Irish emigration; but that is already matched by the German, and will soon be surpassed.

DIVISIONS OF PROTESTANTISM.

Dismissing, then, the claims of Romanism, the claims of Protestantism present themselves—meaning by Protestantism the actually organized sects. They need not detain us long. Protestantism is a group of sects, some of them very powerful, some of them very weak; but the strongest unable to annihilate, conquer, or absorb the weakest. Their proportions do not materially change from generation to generation. Of course, they make reprisals one on another, a few scores of people go annually from one camp into the opposite; but neither camp experiences any considerable difference from the defections or acquisitions. For the most part it is merely a change of uniform, the adoption of a new button. Of interior conversion there is little. The Methodist calls himself a Unitarian, but is a Methodist still. The Unitarian joins the Episcopal Church, but remains, except as to a few externals, as good a Unitarian as he was before. He holds the same creed, but lays emphasis on a different word. The born Calvinist will still be a Calvinist in spite of his passing over to the Liberal ranks. "Blood is stronger than water." The sects describe classes of mind, and have as many sincere members as they have sympathetic natures. The flaming-hearted are Evangelical; the cool, proper, moralizing are Unitarians; the sentimental are Universalists; the formal are Episcopalians; the theological are Presbyterians. It is quite out of the question that the emotional people should carry the day over all the rest; that the formalists should gather the vast multitude into their communion. The rational will always be the few. The sects grow as the population grows. They preserve their relative proportions because the population preserves its relative proportions. But no one can dream for a moment of Methodism or Congregationalism as the destined religion of America.

But why may not the sects combine in an alliance, offensive and defensive, and so throw their united power against their adversaries? Why should they not drop non-essentials and fall back on essentials? Why should they not accept the differences of uniform, but affirm the substance of doctrine? And is not this precisely what they are doing—seeking unity, breaking down barriers, obliterating dividing lines, shaking hands across the bloody gulf? What is the meaning of the Christian Unions but this? What, if not this, is the significance of the Evangelical Alliance? But how many can they combine, and how sincere is the combination? The union does not embrace all Protestants. The famous Alliance which has been more than twenty-five years a-forming, is still a very imperfect league, chiefly among Methodists and Presbyterians. Great sects like the Episcopalians, Baptists, Campbellites, Christians, are represented partially, if at all. The Moravians have more than their share. The Mennonites do not come in. The Swedenborgians do not participate. The Universalists and Unitarians are excluded. The Friends are uninvited. The show is imposing but illusive. The same troops reappear again and again, as on the stage of a theatre. The Hindu, with his bronze face and his white turban, is a Scotch Presbyterian in disguise. The diversity is not brought in and reconciled; it is left out.

In abolishing sectarianism, Protestantism abolishes its peculiarity; heretofore it has lived and flourished on its diversities. The jarring of its parties has been its life; the incessant ferment, the fever of controversy, the zeal for doctrine, the enthusiasm of faith, the missionary spirit with its peril, the theological hates of rivalries, the alternating paroxysms of fear and hope, kept up the energies of the Protestant world. They were Protestants; discourage all that, rebuke it, allow the theological fervor to cool, bid controversy cease, change the polemics into ironics, and what remains? The experience of sin and grace, the mystical union of the soul with its Redeemer, which substitutes sentiment for idea, heart for head, and converts the grand army of reformers into a band of mystics.

DECLINE OF PROTESTANTISM CONFESSED.

The Evangelical Alliance, partial as it was, dared not enunciate the Evangelical creed. It began by doing that, but made no point of it since the commencement of its existence. The proposition to do so would lead to endless discussion, which would break up the body. No definition of terms could be agreed on. Every article would be a hidden rock on which the ship might go to pieces. It was proposed to adopt the Nicene creed, but how many Protestants could fervently recite it? The only creed recited was the Apostles' creed, which may mean much or nothing. One member of the Conference gravely asked wherein lay the difficulty of reconciling Darwinism with Christianity, and then suggested that the unity should be enlarged by admitting all who were willing to accept the test of Jesus—love of God and love of men. But under such modifications Protestantism dies; for Protestantism is a doctrine, and if the doctrine is given up, Protestantism, as a power, is ended; its triumph, under these circumstances, would not be the triumph of Protestantism at all, but of something very different. It would be the triumph of intellectual liberty. Calvin, Luther, Wesley will be mere names, no more. The truth is, Protestantism is not a unit, either in doctrine or organization. It is a unit only in sentiment. But the religion of America must be intellectual. Its basis must be thought. If the thought crumbles, the building falls. The Evangelical Alliance is a confession that Protestantism is declining; that its foes—Romanism on the one hand and Rationalism on the other—are pressing it hard, and that special effort must be made to meet them. That is a confession of weakness. A more signal confession is this, that when the tribes assemble they are told to disarm; that they shall best conquer the enemy by throwing down their weapons, and resorting to exhortation and prayer. If the Alliance had rung out a trumpet call like Luther's, had boldly proclaimed its ancient faith, had emblazoned on its banner the stern confession of the Fathers, had reaffirmed the cardinal ideas of its theology, had vindicated them in the light of science and philosophy, had claimed their harmony with the wants of humanity and the needs of the hour, had shown or tried to show their indispensableness to human society, had rallied its lukewarm confederates to the flag of the old gospel, it would have at least evinced courage if not wisdom. In declining to do this, in putting forth cloudy generalities in place of sharp dogmas, it admitted its feebleness, and fell in with the most fatal tendency it has to contend against—the tendency to drop theology altogether, and in its place substitute feeling. When it comes to that, the feeling of the natural man will carry the day over the feelings of the "Evangelical" man. And the result will be a gospel of kindness, a religion of humanity, natural philanthropy, social reform, social science, the deification of charity, the worship of culture, reports instead of liturgies, politics in place of prayers. The hopeless decline of the theological spirit shows that the future is not for Protestantism, at least as organized at present.

It were folly to affirm that Protestantism has run its course, lived through its period of usefulness, and must henceforth visibly decline. It has by no means finished its course; its period of usefulness is not ended; its decline is far off. Protestantism is rich and influential; its churches are numerous, its constituencies large, its sects ambitious, its preachers eloquent, its appliances admirable, its traditions noble, its aims high, its hopes confident. But the future is long; the country grows fast; the American mind is elastic, and it would be foolishness to overlook the forces that are working against it. Both Romanism and Protestantism have done glorious work, and will do much more before they are dismissed to their reward. But the work that religion requires to be done in America we cannot believe will be done by either of them.

SPIRITUALISM AND ITS PECULIARITIES.

Religion in America embraces a vast number of people who are neither Romanists nor Protestants, nor Christians of any defined name, but who, in business, politics, society, literature, journalism, represent the intellectual force of the American mind. First of all must be mentioned the Spiritualists. Spiritualism is rapidly becoming a distinct form of religion. It is not all of a piece. There are different schools of it—a school of Necromancy and a school that is devoted to Truth. It has different philosophies—a philosophy of instinct, which legitimates passion, sanctifies appetite, and encourages the low kind of individualism that seeks development through the generous indulgence of what it calls nature; and a philosophy of faith which lays great stress on the moral and spiritual intuitions, and indulges the brightest hopes for man, on the ground of culture and charity. The lower school, though loud and vehement, is rapidly sinking in esteem, and declining in influence. The higher is gaining in strength and in dignity. The older Spiritualism grows the calmer, the more intellectual it becomes, the clearer its view, the loftier its range of aspirations. As scholars, thinkers, teachers, come to profess it, it takes on a noble character, and exerts a wide influence through the upper classes of society statistics. Its existence as a fact in the religious world, and a fact of vast moment, is unquestionable. In his private journal of the year 1866, Theodore Parker, an impartial and keen observer of the signs of the times, wrote: "It seems now more likely that Spiritualism will become the religion of America than in 156 it did that Christianity would become the religion of the Roman Empire, or in 856 that Mohammedanism would be that of the Arabian populations. 1. It has more evidence for its wonders than any historic form of religion hitherto. 2. It is throughout democratic, with no hierarchy, but inspiration open to all. 3. It does not claim to be a finality; it is not a punctum stans, but a punctum fluens. 4. It admits all the truths of morality and religion in all the world's sects."

That is strong testimony from one who was not himself technically a Spiritualist. By the truths of religion and morality, Parker meant the essential truths, the divine rule of the world, the immortal development of man, the supremacy of moral law, and the moral oneness of the human race. That prophecy was made nearly twenty years ago. Mark what twenty years have done toward its fulfillment.

Now, Spiritualism has nothing in common with either Romanism or Protestantism, in any recognized form. The Christian theology it rejects entirely, whether its doctrines be taken as a system, or singly, one by one. The scheme of salvation it has no concern with; the drama of redemption it never attends. It has a horror of priests and priestcraft; the idea of a church as a depository of the divine life and the source of inspiration is utterly foreign to its modes of thought. It discards the authority of the Bible, sinks the claims of Jesus to the level of plain humanity, is indifferent to the accepted version of Christian history, distrusts the records of ecclesiastical pens, believes in development as opposed to fall, in progress as opposed to conversion, in character as opposed to regeneration, in human sufficiency as against human depravity, in natural goodness as against supernatural grace, in universal reason as against partial inspiration, in ultimate beatitude for all as against ultimate beatitude for a few. In a word, it takes a new departure and follows a new path toward a new goal.

And this it does necessarily in obedience to its first principle, in accordance with its inevitable logic. This it does for all who receive it, whether they have left the churches or not, by whatever names they still call themselves, whatever they may still persist in thinking themselves. This it does within the bosom of Christian communions innumerable.

For the peculiarity of Spiritualism is that it has broken down the wall of separation between this world and the next. In so doing it has made both worlds cordially one; it has called into view one spiritual universe; it has revealed the fact that peace between earth and heaven, the mortal and the immortal, the human and the divine, the creature and the Creator, the sinner and the saint, is not something to be effected, but something already made, something established in the constitution of things, established from the beginning. This revelation revolutionizes religious faith, effects a complete transformation in the character of religious ideas—in fact, makes religion in every sense a new thing. Religion hitherto has been and still is regarded as a device for reconciling the here and the hereafter—for making communication between heaven and earth possible. Now, the first word spoken by Spiritualism declares that the unity never was broken, and consequently that all devices for restoring it may be dropped as unnecessary. The priest is an impertinence; the Church is an institution without an object; the Bible is a noble collection of human literature, not the record of a special revelation; creeds and confessions take their place with other party manifestoes. Mediation of every kind is dispensed with, summarily, as being outworn machinery that cumbars the engine-room.

SPIRITUALISM OUTSIDE OF CHRISTIANITY.

Thus Spiritualism is not another form of Christianity. It is another thing. It has nothing in common with Christianity. It has no connection with it. The two systems do not understand one another. They may seem to co-exist in the minds of many unsuspecting people who are church members, and they fancy perhaps, all the devout church members for the new and beautiful faith they cherish, but the intrinsic incompatibility of the two schemes becomes manifest the moment account is made of the mind's contents. Spiritualism is perpetually taking people out of the churches. We do not hear of its bringing any in. It has already demoralized orthodox Protestantism beyond repair. If it has exerted less effect on Romanism, it is merely because Romanism does allow intercourse between this world and the other, and therefore seems to grant all that Spiritualists desire; namely, evidence of personal immortality. But when it is understood, as it must be soon and ought to be immediately, that Romanism does not grant in any degree what Spiritualists desire; that it concedes no cordial sympathy between the two worlds, but leaves the moral gulf between them as wide as ever, and as hopeless of overcoming except by the Mediator's help; when it comes to be felt that the intercourse Rome allows is an intercourse purely of condescension, patronage, pity, and grace—a privilege accorded to the saints below by the saints above—that the wall is not broken down, but overlapped by the celestial angels for certain ecclesiastical purposes,—Spiritualism will effect the same demoralization in the religion of the Romanist that it has effected in the religion of the Protestant.

Spiritualism lets the soul of man out of a cage. The freed bird, unaccustomed by long confinement to the use of its wings, flutters feebly at first, and perhaps drops helpless to the ground. The air and space bewilder it; but the wings in a little time will recover their strength, and then the creature will revel in the width that appeals it, and fly toward the sun it fears.

POWERS IN LEAGUE WITH SPIRITUALISM.

In unavowed league with the general purpose and drift of Spiritualism are other powers less conscious of their mission, less compact in their array, but in their tendency no less significant, to which a word must be given.

The first in importance is literature, which, in its different forms, gives expression to the mind of the age. Whether literature be the power it is reputed to be, we need not undertake to judge; but as a demonstration of the actually existing state of thought it is of vast significance. It is a popular confession of faith which, if it could be interpreted, as of course it cannot be clearly, would be decisive of the people's faith. One thing literature attests by its very existence, and that is faith in the capacity of the human mind. Where this faith does not exist, literature is impossible. There have been ages when there was no literature, when no books were written but books of piety, which constitute a small department of literature, but which taken by themselves would not deserve the name. Literature in the modern sense of the term is not a Christian product. The revival of letters was Greek and Roman, not Catholic or Protestant. The models of literature are pagan; the spirit of literature is pagan. Its soul is the soul of liberty. In an atmosphere that is not of liberty it cannot breathe. Literature brooks no restriction, endures no dictation, resents the inspection of authority, demands the right to print and speak its full thought.

This faith in the natural human mind assumes the validity of the mind's passport to all the realms of thought. Literature acknowledges no privileged classes, admits no specially inspired books, disregards the warning high boards that are set up over the gates of theological systems, but walks with bold step in the ways which faith alone once trod.

Is it any marvel, then, that both Romanism and Protestantism contemplate with no great favor the increasing dominion of literature? It certainly is not on their side, and the essential spirit of it is in antagonism with theirs. Literature bears no distinctively religious character; it merely reflects the minds that make it. If they are religious, it is; if they are unreligious, so is it. But whether religious, unreligious, or irreligious, it asserts its own validity as a product of the human mind. If unreligious, it makes no apology; if irreligious, it goes into no humiliation; if religious, it accepts no bonds and confesses no allegiance. That literature has departed from Orthodoxy is evident. Its faith is in freedom. Above all it dislikes tradition. Its laws are not clerical or priestly. No doubt certain great beliefs underlie all literature properly so called. It may not be easy to say what they are; but it is easy to say what they are not. They are not beliefs in special revelations that put it in a subordinate position, in the depravity of the natural heart, or the inadequacy of the natural reason, or the less than worthlessness of the sentiment, fancy, imagination, inventiveness, which are the staple of its own resources. It does not believe in the fact of a fall or the need of a regeneration. Its sympathies are entirely with that species of philosophy which eulogizes mankind, takes it as it is, and believes that all this in it is worth coming out. It is well enough to talk as Dr. Simpson of Derby did before the Evangelical Alliance of the importance of converting literature into an instrumentality for promoting the Gospel; but literature itself is a stubborn protest against such conversion. Literature is at present the more tremendous fact of the two, and if either is to be converted by the other, it is the Gospel that is likely to be converted to literature; and in a singular fashion, too, if such books as "Gates Ajar" and the "Prince of the House of David" are samples.

Were literature simply to voice the gospel it would lose its character as literature, for its voices are multitudinous. Technically, Dickens was not a Christian, Thackeray was not a Christian, though both were great lights in literature. If Dr. Simpson's prayer were granted, literature would be forced to abandon the only principle that gives it existence; namely, faith in the human mind, that principle which is the ground of a philosophy, and the substance of a faith at the same time. To destroy it would be to destroy the central belief of the modern world, a belief that has hardly yet begun its course. That literature is not, in many respects, what it is desirable it should be, is owing to the condition in which the human mind at present is. But that condition will be improved only when the faith in it becomes nobler; certainly not when it declines altogether. The contribution that literature makes to the religion of the future may be small enough; but it at all events makes this one in book, magazine, newspaper, work of history, work of philosophy, work of fiction, in poem, essay, letter, which the reading world devours.

SCIENCE AND THE RELIGION OF THE FUTURE.

Another factor in the religion of the future is science. Not that the results of scientific investigation are yet widely diffused or firmly established; not that scientific doctrines are popularly received, or scientific books generally studied—scientific men wish they were—not that the professed teachers of science are so numerous, or so highly revered. Science is as yet in its infancy, and has no system to put forward as distinctively its own. Scientific men disagree among themselves, and dispute among themselves, as vehemently as the unscientific do. There is no church or creed of science, but there is a feeling abroad that the method of science is the true method, and it is felt that the method of science is opposed to the method of theology; that while theology starts with the assumption of truth, science seeks truth in the region of fact; and from this feeling arises an uneasy spirit of scepticism which makes people who know nothing about science distrustful of religion. The scepticism is in the air, an intangible thing, many-colored, many-shaped, but for that very reason all the more pervading and powerful. Science prevails thus far rather by the apprehension it causes than by the blow it strikes.

Science by its method is directly opposed to theology. Its primary assumptions are fatal to theology's usual pretensions. The "Christian" theology starts with the position that Nature is crooked, distorted, evil. Science starts with the position that Nature is the solid work of truth, and must be studied in order to find truth. The Protestant theology lays down with emphasis that the mind that studies Nature is not an adequate organ. Science lays down with equal emphasis that the mind which studies Nature is a perfect organ, the appointed organ—in fact, the only organ conceivable. On these very opposite foundations similar structures cannot be built. The religion of science must be a very different thing from the religion of either Romanism or Protestantism.

Then outside of Spiritualism, outside of literature, outside of science, is an immense mass of active mind, wholly unorganized as yet, which is groping about after faith, but not groping in the direction of professed Christianity, groping rather in every other direction, in order to avoid that. It may not be religious, but certainly it is not Christian, and it is not conceivable that anything short of a convulsion of Nature will make it so. It proposes the wildest vagaries of faith, but its effort is to reconcile the facts of the world with faith of any kind. It is loosely fancied that Christendom, with its various communications, covers modern society. But not two-thirds of the people of the United States profess any religion whatever. And of these two-thirds a very large proportion is composed of people who merely profess, who, for one or another reason, call themselves by a religious name, but are at heart of no creed and no character. If Christendom were sifted, and only wheat gathered into the barns, it would be very apparent that whatever the religion of America might be, it was not that.

CONCLUSION.

The religious outlook in America is therefore uncertain and dim; but from what has been said, a few points may be presented as clear:—

1. Religion in America will be neither Romanist nor Protestant. It will not be "Christian" in any recognized sense of the term.
2. The religion of America will be scientific—that is, will rest on a foundation of solid fact, not on a foundation of tradition.
3. Religion in America will be unsectarian, undogmatical, unecclasiastical; not a matter of denomination or party any more, but a matter of free opinion, vindicating itself by its intrinsic worth.
4. Religion in America will be practical, not merely in the ordinary sense of doing good, but in the grander sense of being humane, being a part of human society, a constituent element in the community's daily welfare.

5. Again, and above all, religion in America will be free. Its spirit will be the spirit of liberty. It will consecrate the human mind to its high uses of discovering the truth, and will count as fellow-workers all truth-seekers, in any and every field—literary, scientific, philosophical—careless how they call themselves, incurious as to what name they are baptized in; admitting, welcoming, claiming the utmost liberty of discussion and definition; knowing no distinction of persons, professions, or races; hospitable to Greek, Roman, Persian, Hindu, Mussulman, Jew; hospitable also to the professors of no faith whatever, only asking that the mind shall be set toward what is sincerely regarded as true. This spirit of liberty will be in the new religion what the spirit of faith was in the old. Liberty is the very soul of religion. Religion is liberty, the freedom of the soul, the mind's emancipation from narrow thoughts. It is a help toward this condition of liberty that the Free Religious Association has been organized. It illustrates the liberty as well as it can; it institutes it as well as it is able.

That man will be less religious as he grows older I cannot believe. That he will be less religious under liberty seems to my mind impossible. As the human mind enlarges, its ideas multiply and expand, its hopes gain in grandeur, its vision becomes transcendent. Knowledge broadens the world, intelligence reveals the laws by which it is conducted, culture extends the relationships of being and multiplies the bonds of sympathy. The better creation is understood, the clearer its divinity is recognized, the more faithfully is its order venerated, the more profoundly are its beauty and goodness adored. The perfectly free, that is, the perfectly enlightened, the perfectly normal man will worship in a temple of thought as much grander than St. Peter's, as St. Peter's is grander than a Methodist chapel. He will lift up an aspiration that makes the Litany of the Church seem cold and broken. He will bend before a Deity as much superior to that of Christendom, as that is to a Pacific Islander's idol. The larger the mind, the larger the Deity, the sweeter the hope. The poet said: "An honest man's the noblest work of God." The philosopher replies: "An honest God's the noblest work of man." Give us, then, the honest man, and we will have the honest Deity. Give us the man of integrity, the whole man round and complete, and his worship will also be full and adequate, a worship as glorious in spirit as it is clear in truth.—New York Tribune.

THE FACT is that scientific education, as the phrase is usually employed, has been rather overdone than neglected; we do not mean in colleges simply, but in society at large. We have been devoting ourselves too much to the extraction of comfort from natural laws to the neglect of our social relations; and the consequence has been a decline in the art of government, which begins already to inflict paralysis on our material industry. Scientists are very valuable, but they are neither jurists nor administrators; and jurists and administrators are not made by laboratories or museums, but by the diligent study of man, both past and present. Far from occupying themselves too much with what "dead men" have said and done, colleges do not, in our opinion, occupy themselves nearly enough. If they do not manage to put our young men more thoroughly in possession of the efforts, failures, and successes of our forefathers, in all fields of human activity, we shall find our scientific achievements at the present day taking more and more of the character of Dead Sea fruit, and shall ourselves more and more sink into the position of well-fed operatives, superintended and paid by luxurious sharpers. It is well to know how the orbit of the planets was discovered, how the binomial theorem was worked out, and how the constitution of the sun was revealed; but all this is useless, or will prove so before long, unless we know also by what struggles and devices and labors we, "the heirs of all the ages," have come to be what we are; by what arts nations have been built up and maintained; by what passions, and hopes, and fears, and aspirations, and temptations the generations that have gone before us have been sustained or harassed in their brief march through the sunlight.—Nation.

THE DEATH of John Stuart Mill brings up the anecdote of the Philadelphia publisher who advertised certain new books, as follows: "Mill on Political Economy; Ditto on the Floss."

[Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1873, by P. E. ANNOT, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.]

PAUL GOWER.

A NATIONALISTIC STORY

OF
ENGLISH AND AMERICAN LIFE.

CHAPTER XXXIV. (Concluded.)

For the space of about twenty-four hours it seemed dubious whether the Porcupine would survive the bereavement; or, in the words of Mr. Brough, "whether the d-d animal was worth his keep." There was a great deal of talk about "rallying round Jim" on the part of the artists and contributors—which they certainly did at Crook and Duff's—an inquiry into existing liabilities, which only amounted to three hundred dollars, and a consultation with Dr. Ritchings; who, engrossed in the Pepperpot, would have nothing to do with the Porcupine, but thought it might be made to pay, if properly conducted. Ultimately, in a sort of jovial desperation, Mr. Brough resolved on continuing it, at his own risk, and announced that intention in a ten-minute speech to as many gentlemen as could crowd into the office, the rest standing on the stairs, and all cheering vociferously towards the conclusion. Forthwith a reduced scale of prices for articles and drawings was agreed upon, a new and much larger office taken, and a sub-editor installed therein; which personage, both on account of his idiosyncrasies and manner of conducting the paper, merits a special and particular description.

He was an Englishman of whom there existed a curious tradition in the ranks of New York journalism; namely, that he had involuntarily set Mr. Dickens for the portrait of Wilkins Micawber, or rather supplied the raw material for that immortal character; which belief his appearance, antecedents, and personal peculiarities seemed in many respects to justify; though we always declared (and, as Mr. Forster's biography has since informed us, at least half truthfully) that the novelist had drawn upon his own family, and though it was evident, if the presumption were founded in fact, that the wonderful humanity and mirthfulness of our great storyteller had so refined upon his model as to render the character as original a creation as it is irresistible. For Mr. Bowles (people said he had altered his name to that, from Bowells, for personal reasons) was, emphatically, a bad version of his illustrious prototype. But the reader shall, generally, be left to make his own comparison.

Mr. Bowles, then, was a corpulent, burly man of fifty, with an oval head, bald in the fore part, and fleshy about the double chin and jaw; he ordinarily carried it in advance of his body, and slightly bowed, as if in jocular propitiation of everybody. His countenance was not prepossessing, being too large, too red, and decidedly vulgar, besides expressive of assurance and cunning, overlaid with oily familiarity. It looked treacherous, also, and as if it might easily become truculent whenever he wanted to bully you. His speech possessed a kind of oratorical unctuousness, which, taken in conjunction with his extreme volubility, and a trick he had of becoming very confidential on small or no provocation, was certainly suggestive of the friend and companion of the youth of David Copperfield. Then he was dirty—decidedly so—and shabby, and loved punch—indeed, all kinds of fermented liquors. His habits and characteristics, however, afforded still stronger points of distorted resemblance.

For instance, he had a perfect mania for writing letters, even to people in the same room—to Mr. Brough on the other side of the table—for no adequate reason, and requiring no reply. That gentleman also deposed that on visiting Mr. Bowles, one Sunday afternoon, at Brooklyn, he had discovered that his domestic economy was of an eminently Micawberish description. He found his sub-editor in a genteel undress of jacket and trousers (but no shirt), at work amid an extraordinary litter of defunct periodicals with which he had been connected, in an otherwise almost totally unfurnished back-parlor, while Mrs. Bowles was frying steak in a warming-pan, and her baby lay encradled in a coal-scuttle. Being pressed to stay and dine, Mr. Brough likewise remarked that his host used a razor for the purpose of carving, drank porter out of a hyacinth-glass, and subsequently compounded a very excellent bowl of whiskey-punch in a soup-tureen, over which he became vastly chatty, convivial, and amusing, firing off a great many puns, good, bad, and atrocious, telling stories, scandalizing his friends and acquaintances, and perpetually rallying Mrs. Bowles—who unquestionably reminded the guest of the inestimable woman who, in spite of misfortune, would "never desert Mr. Micawber." It appeared, too, that she was related to a deceased poet-laureate, which seemed to suggest an additional meaning to the allusions to "her family." Altogether, there existed quite enough facts to make out a case; the pity was that the male characters were not more identical.

For, engaged upon the Porcupine, and virtually obtaining the control of it, in consequence of Mr. Brough's infrequent attendance, Mr. Bowles soon proved himself the shiftest of mortals, the artfullest of artful dodgers, the trickiest, most unscrupulous, and most impracticable of debtors. He never paid anybody as long as he could avoid it, and then only in part, resorting to all kinds of devices, schemes, and stratagems to stave off creditors. At first, like a skillful general, he availed himself of existing circumstances; "Mr. Woodruff's departure had left things at sixes and sevens—he really didn't know how the paper stood—gentlemen must give him time —would they be kind enough to hand in their accounts?"—which they did, again and again; their perseverance in that respect being only eclipsed by his own in neglecting them. Such documents always had an unfortunate tendency to get lost while in Mr. Bowles' possession. This pretext he actually extended over many weeks, before taking refuge in others. Then all settlements required the editor's signature—when he was out of the way. Then advertisers and newspaper agents were behindhand with their payments; and he appealed to your gentlemanly feeling and regard for Brough—"the best fellow in the world, you know, but bothered to death with that d-d theatre, but he'll come out of it all right yet!"—not to press your demand. His feints and expedients in avoidance of dues were extraordinary, and apparently inexhaustible. If he could not talk a creditor over, or browbeat him, or joke or "chaff" him out of his purpose—and he was, by turns, friendly, important, or insulting, as the emergency seemed to require—he would promise ad infinitum, make and break no end of appointments, being always ready with some new excuse or palliation; or ask you out to drink and, suddenly seeing a friend in the street or bar-room, dart away and so escape for that time. He had been known to get rid of an importunate contributor by giving him an order on a perfect stranger, in no pecuniary relations whatever to the Porcupine, or an hypothetical news agent; to leave another in the office, "while he stepped out and got a bill cashed," and, of course, didn't return; to "do" a third by pretending to collect a bill at a shop and decamping by its back door, the victim meanwhile cooling his heels in the street. There never was such an old rogue, such an inveterate, unmitigated, incurable, dyed-in-the-grain old humbug and impostor. When detected, he made a joke of everything.

It soon became evident that his ruling idea was to take care of Tom Bowles—to get as much as he could out of the Porcupine for himself and his family. (He had a large one—another point of resemblance to Mr. Micawber.) This he contrived to do with positively superfluous ingenuity; for, as it is said that a man may go to heaven with half the pains which it costs him to purchase hell, so half the ability which old Bowles expended in indirect tricks and devices would certainly have sufficed to procure him an honorable maintenance—but he liked stratagem for its own sake. Lacking contributions, which naturally fell off under his management, he "wrote up" two-thirds of the paper himself, inserted anything that was sent in gratuitously, or supplied what was wanting from the deceased comic journals which Mr. Brough had seen at Brooklyn, altering and adapting his thefts to suit modern occasions. Also, he revamped celebrated jokes by Charles Lamb, Sydney Smith, and Hood, damaged their points, and attributed them to prominent New Yorkers. What sort of a paper the Porcupine presently became under such editorship, the reader may imagine. Mr. Bowles' style of composition was windy and verbose in the extreme—to use a slangy but expressive epithet, "baggy." Having really little or nothing to say, he wobbled into endless digressions, wretched, inevitable puns, cumbrous familiarities, old stories and Joe Millerisms, which he repeated again and again, ad nauseam. When he wished to be forcible, he was simply blackguardly and abusive—and, by the way, devoted much of this kind of writing to the late Mr. Charles Dickens, whom he not only traduced and maligned through a score of obscure publications, but also slandered indirectly after his death. Finally—and herein lay the secret of his peculiar mode of subsistence—in almost all that he produced he contrived to insert numerous puffs and advertisements of New York tradesmen and shopkeepers; always obtaining an equivalent from them, either in money or in kind. He would call in at the stores of his victims, brag about the Porcupine's prosperity and influence, exhibit his "notices," and depart in triumph with a hat, a new pair of boots, a leg of mutton, or a load of coals or potatoes, for Brooklyn. It was said that he had clothed his eldest boy (perhaps the original of Wilkins Junior) from head to foot, by means of a copy of verses coaxed out of Golding, when drunk, at Mataran's, and subsequently discharged the bill for dinner by a dexterous puff of the restaurant, conveyed in the words to a cut of Dick Sabin's. Also, that he had raised a loan by a dolorous account of his youngest but one having dislocated his ankle, while his poor mother was down with the fever and ague, and in urgent need of medical attendance; being met, next day, in the Hoboken Elysian Fields, in company with both wife and child, in the best of health and spirits. The artists were the only persons among the corps of contributors whom he felt obliged to conciliate—he could not "run" the paper without some original illustrations. In Mr. Bowles' hands, for the present, I leave it, having devoted sufficient space to a characteristic, if ludicrous, phase of American journalism.

NO CHURCH can wholly protect itself from fools who, while professing its principles, outrage its spirit. The English church is afflicted with one of these, who edits the Church Herald, and who says of the late Mr. Mill:

"His 'philosophy,' so called, was thoroughly anti-Christian; his sentiments daringly mischievous and outrageously wild. As a member of Parliament he was a signal failure, and his insolence to, and contempt for, the great Conservative party was well known. His death is no loss to anybody, for he was a rank but amiable infidel, and a most dangerous person. The sooner those 'lights of thought' who agree with him go to the same place, the better will it be for both Church and State. We can well spare the whole crew of them, and shall hear of their departure, whether one by one, or in a body, with calm satisfaction."

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

MY BIRTHDAY GIFT.

Dear heart! the world holds splendid things;
I like the diamond's trembling light,
The mystic opal's changing glow,
The ruby flashing warm and bright,—
And milk-white pearls in crusted gold,
And (dearer still) the sapphire blue,
That speaks to me of blessed eyes
Whose every glance is kind and true,—
The lustrous sheen of India's looms,
The foamy loveliness of lace,
And 'brodered robes and curling plumes,
And velvet's softly royal grace,—
And statues, fair as frozen dreams,
And flowers that hold the Southland's glow,—
The world is full of splendid things,
And hearts that ache for love, I know!
So, if you searched through all the land
With gold-filled hands, you could not see
One gift so rich, so priceless, Dear,
As this which you have given to me.
I feel it on my forehead still;
It fills my soul with trustful bliss;
And I am richer than a queen,
Because I wear my True Love's kiss.

EMILY H. LELAND.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS TO INDEX STOCK.

Mrs. F. W. Christern,	New York City,	One share, $100
Richard B. Westbrook,	Somerset, Pa.	" 100
R. C. Spencer,	Milwaukee, Wis.	" 200
R. W. Bowles,	Boston, Mass.	" 100
Chas. W. Story,	Boston, Mass.	" 100
E. W. Meddaugh,	Detroit, Mich.	Five " 500
Jacob Hoffner,	Cumminsville, O.	" 100
John Weiss,	Boston, Mass.	" 100
W. C. Russell,	Ithaca, N. Y.	" 100
A. W. Leggett,	Detroit, Mich.	" 100
B. F. Dyer,	Boston, Mass.	" 100
James Furinton,	Lynn, Mass.	" 100
F. A. Nichols,	Lowell, Mass.	" 100
J. S. Palmer,	Portland, Me.	" 100
Robt. Ormiston,	Brooklyn, N. Y.	" 100

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The following rule has been adopted with reference to subscriptions to THE INDEX, and will be observed on and after December 1, 1873:

THE INDEX will be discontinued to each subscriber immediately on the expiration of his term of subscription as marked by the printed mail-tag, unless the subscription is renewed in advance, or unless direct notice is received that the subscriber intends soon to renew it. But a bill will be sent to each subscriber a few weeks previous to the expiration of his term, in order that he may have an opportunity of renewing without suffering any interruption in the receipt of his papers.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING OCTOBER 25.

James S. Rogers, $3; R. P. Johnson, $3; H. E. Parsons, $3; Geo. A. Dudley, $3; Rimbberger, $3; Herbert Fletcher, $1.50; W. H. Rumpf, $3; J. H. Howland, $3; Worthy Putnam, $1; A. D. Newcomb, $3; J. B. Chesney, $3; R. F. Halliwell, $3; Rachel Campbell, 50 cents; Wm. U. Dame, 10 cents; Phoebe L. White, 10 cents; Milton Dimmock, 25 cents; Elias T. Talbot, $2.50; M. E. Bagg, $1; 25 cents; Lewis Snyder, $3; Geo. Graham, $1.50; M. E. Zakrzewski, $1.50; Wm. R. Grow, $3; Louise Dietrich, $2.25; Marcus T. Jones, $3; B. B. Smith, $4; R. D. Israel, $4.25; Edward Flynn, $3; Thos. G. Barnard, $3; David E. Cronin, $3; Thos. Slade, $3; E. F. Hill, $3; Wm. P. Thornton, $2.50; Fred Reising, $3; B. Gardner, $3; W. L. Heberling, 75 cents; W. H. Colcord, $3; C. M. Lawler, 25 cents; S. T. Gilmore, 25 cents; —, $1.50.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Postage on THE INDEX is five cents per quarter, dating from receipt of the first number, payable in advance at the place of delivery.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

RECEIVED.

Books.

LITERARY AND SOCIAL JUDGMENTS. By W. R. Greg. Boston: James R. Osgood & Co. 1873. [Price $2.00.]
SEX IN EDUCATION; or, A Fair Chance for the Girls. By Edward H. Clarke, M.D., Member of the Massachusetts Medical Society, etc. Boston: James R. Osgood & Co. 1873. [Price $1.25.]

BY AND BY: An Historical Romance of the Future. By Edward Maitland, Author of "The Pilgrim and the Shrine," "Higher Law," etc. New York: G. F. Putnam's Sons. 1873.

RECORDS OF A QUIET LIFE. By Augustus J. C. Hare, Author of "Walks in Rome," etc. Revised for American Readers by William L. Gage. Boston: Roberts Brothers. 1873.

SONGS OF THE SUN-LANDS. By Joaquin Miller, Author of "Songs of the Sierras." Boston: Roberts Brothers. 1873.

PAMPHLETS AND PERIODICALS.
MODERN IDOLATRY. A Sermon by O. B. Frothingham, preached in Lyric Hall, September 28, 1873. New York: D. G. Francis, 17 Astor Place. 1873.

OLD AND NEW. November, 1873. Boston: Roberts Brothers.

HERALD OF HEALTH. November, 1873. New York: Wood & Lothrop.

THE SANATARIAN. November, 1873. New York: A. S. Barnes.

New Music.

FROM OLIVER DITTON & CO.—Give—Carnival Scenes—La Danza—Bohemian Girl—Polonaise—Night in Venice.

The Index.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY

BY
THE INDEX ASSOCIATION.
AT

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Toledo Office: No. 35 MONROE STREET. Julius T. Frey,
Agent and Clerk.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, THOMAS WESTWORTH HIGGINSON, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), REV. MONSIEUR D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 30, 1873.

NOTICE.

On and after September 1, the publication office of THE INDEX will be at No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. All letters, papers, and other communications should be henceforth addressed to "THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass."

Correspondents and Exchanges will please take notice.

GLIMPSES.

JAY COOKE, says Rev. Mr. Talmage, is "one of God's picked men." Is the encomiast aware that he satirizes the Almighty's taste?

REV. MR. HEPWORTH says in the Independent: "We [ministers] tire of our own voices sometimes." Laymen can be found who are tired of his.

"THAT MARROW-BONE confession of Dr. Holland's from Scribner's Monthly," says a bright correspondent, "should be re-named, Impeachment of Christianity No. 2."

A KEEN CORRESPONDENT inquires: "How do you reconcile so many of those sickle-edged 'Notes and Comments' with the innocent notice to everybody in the advertising columns, 'No cuts admitted'?"

WHY DID THE Evangelical Alliance fawn upon the Emperor William, though convened in a land of republican ideas? Because monarchical ideas are stronger than republican ideas in Christianity itself.

THERE ARE "thirty Roman Catholic parochial schools in Brooklyn, all established to withdraw the children of Romanists from our public schools." For this statement the New York Methodist is responsible.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL COMMISSION of Michigan has submitted to the people an amendment prohibiting the exemption of church property from taxation. This fairly opens the question in that State. We trust the wise recommendation of the Commission will be adopted.

BISHOP DUPANLOUP, of Paris, has charged the curé of his diocese to pray for the restoration of the Bourbon monarchy. It would be hard to pick out a better sample of Bourbonism than the bishop's charge. But his curés will not seriously modify the course of events.

THE BROOKLYN Argus, referring to Rev. Dr. Fulton, after declaring that "his tongue is the most unruly member connected with the Hanson Place Church," adds: "There are acres of prejudices coiled under his hat, but not a bit of humbug." What a lovely metaphor! How would those coiled acres look, if the Doctor should braid them into a chignon?

THOSE of our readers who believe that it is wicked to take interest will relish the following epitaph, which the Oxford Press says will some day adorn a Westchester cemetery:—

"Here lies old thirty-five per cent,
The more he made, the more he lent;
The more he got, the more he craved;
The more he made, the more he shaved;
Great God! can such a soul be saved?"

THE NEW YORK Independent, referring to her paper on missions at the late convention in that city, says: "The main point made by him was the expensiveness of missions." Not at all. Our main point was the impossibility of accomplishing a task imposed upon Christians by command of their acknowledged Master; and the exposure of the "expensive-ness of missions" was subsidiary to this. The task of Sisyphus was child's-play compared with that laid upon Christendom by the supposed command of God. Is the Independent too blind or too discreet to draw the necessary inference?

AT A REGULAR meeting of the Lone Star Lodge, No. 28, of the American Protestant Association, held in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., on the evening of September 28, 1873, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:—

Seeing that the first blow has been struck, not only at the foundation of our society, but that of all social and religious liberty,

Resolved, That we, as a body, composed of English, Irish, American, and German Protestants, will not vote for any man at the coming election who will not support, uphold, and sustain the Bible, not only in our common schools, but in every place of public trust. Furthermore, it is

Resolved, That we will not send our children to any school where the Bible is not read, and we trust that all who love the Bible will form the same resolution.

Signed, A. P. A.

Yet thousands of liberals are incredulous as to the revival of bigotry now going on all over the country.

"THE SALOON-KEEPERS of Madison, Wis., have suggested to the Mayor that they appoint a committee of twenty to enforce all Sunday laws against livery stables, stages, and steamboats, as well as saloons. The Mayor promises to commission them, and says the temperance and religious societies will also assist. Let the good work go on, and the saloon-keepers will get more than they bargained for." Here lies the special objection to Sunday temperance laws. They are based, after all, on Sabbath observance; and the same principle, if carried out, must require the closing of livery stables, railway stations, public libraries, public gardens, and public parks. If it is right to close liquor saloons by law on Sunday, it is equally right to close them on Saturday. To pursue any other policy, even for the sake of temperance, is to countenance the whole system of Sabbath legislation.

T. W. H.

THIS is what Father McDonald, of Williamsburgh, N. Y., says on the school question: "You must not send your children to godless schools, to those schools into which a priest never enters, and where the name of God is never uttered. Rome had thus spoken, and Catholics would hearken to its voice. It is in vain for governments to oppose them. It is in vain that our rulers cut off the supplies given to Catholic institutions in the hope to close their doors. The people say to the tyrants, we will not submit. We demand that civil and religious liberty for which our fathers shed their blood. We deny the right of any man or body of men to rob our children of their faith." That is, the Catholics are determined to get the "supplies" for "Catholic institutions" from "our rulers,"—in other words, the public treasury,—and at the same time to tolerate no schools in which Catholic priests cannot teach Catholicism. Such outspoken words indicate a settled policy on the part of the Church.

AT THE LAST meeting of the Unitarian "New York and Hudson River Conference," Rev. Henry Powers, of Brooklyn, as reported in the Liberal Christian, referred very generously to the recent convention of the Free Religious Association in New York: "Without uncharitableness, Mr. Powers said he felt it his duty to say that of the two important religious congresses held recently in New York, the Free Religious Association, however open to criticism many of its utterances might be, had manifested the more substantial faith, for, practically, the Evangelical Alliance had only renewed its vows of everlasting fidelity to certain ancient theological propositions, while the Free Religious Association stood for uncompromising fidelity to the whole truth of to-day, always and everywhere, without regard to consequences." Whether this is a "more substantial faith" than that of the Evangelical Alliance, or not, we cannot say; for we doubt not the intensity, sincerity, or depth of the faith cherished by the Alliance. But Mr. Powers does no more than justice to the Association in his statement of what it stands for; and experience has taught us to be grateful to every one who does the Association simple justice.

THE CHICAGO Post has a fling at the Free Religious Association: "The Free Religionists, now in session in New York, seem decided in the faith that nobody is free to controvert their views except at his own expense—a clergyman who yesterday asked leave to reply to some attack on the Evangelicals being informed that they had hired the hall to express therein their own views, and did not propose to listen to arguments from anybody else. The gentleman thereupon took his seat, and sharp criticism of the Evangelicals for their illiberality was resumed." The reasons for not yielding the platform to the gentleman referred to are very inaccurately reported. But if the Post thinks they included any unwillingness to hear Orthodox objections, or to let them be heard, it is mightily mistaken. For proof, we invite attention to some Orthodox articles among our "Communications" of this week, as well as to multitudes of similar articles in former issues. Our chief disappointment in editing THE INDEX has come from the impossibility of getting Orthodox writers to face in our own columns the points we make. Nothing would be more welcome to us than articles of real ability opposing Free Religion.

PEOPLE WHO THINK it preposterous to suppose that the Catholics can seriously intend to make war on our public schools are invited to read carefully the following despatch, which is copied from the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser, of October 18:—

A CATHOLIC ATTACK ON PUBLIC SCHOOLS.—St. Louis, October 17. In the Irish Benevolent Societies' convention to-day the following resolution, among others, was introduced:—

Resolved, That the present system of public schools, ignoring all supernatural authority, and making God, the first knowledge, the last thing to be learned, is a curse to our country, and a floodgate of atheism and sensuality, and a cause of civil, social, and national corruption.

A long, spirited, and somewhat acrimonious, debate ensued on the resolution.

Mr. Kelley, of Virginia, thought the resolution should be recommitted with instruction to modify it. He was, by virtue of his office as Mayor of Richmond, President of the Board of Public Schools. He had been elected Mayor by a constituency which was about eighty per cent. Protestant. The Bible was not read in the schools in Richmond, and he had the assurance of the board that no religious instruction was taught in them. He was not in sympathy with the resolution, nor could he vote for it without stultifying himself, which he did not propose to do.

Father Phelan, of St. Louis, defended the resolution and said: "We have nothing to do with Richmond or its schools. If religious instruction was excluded from them, as Mr. Kelley said, they were the most objectionable of all schools. The public men of America were educated in public schools, and were exponents of the system, and they were the most corrupt and dishonest of any country in the world. Men can steal in this country with impunity, provided the amount is large enough. That the children of the country go heels over head to the devil must be attributed to the education they receive in the public schools, which does not fit them to resist the temptations of the world. In these schools men of science are honored and eulogized, but the name of Jesus Christ is not allowed to be mentioned with reverence. These children turn out to be learned horse-thieves, scholastic counterfeiters, and well posted in all schemes of devilry."

Mr. Harley said that Catholics had gained a great victory in driving the Bible out of the public schools.

